and character until such point — in the Qur'anic presentation — that the atheists are enraged) — thus, we identify for the injīl the characteristic of a potent but initially imperceptible force which, given right cultivation, may grow within the soul of a man to such a point that it supersedes previous concerns and comes to thwart attempts by atheists to quell or crush it; at 57:27 there is mention of the injīl as something given to 'Īsā and of compassion and mercy placed in the hearts of those who followed it (or, possibly, him). We need now a fuller understanding of what the Gospel means to Christians. Wikipedia tells us: In Christianity, the gospel (Greek: εὐαγγέλιον euangélion; Old English: gospel), or the Good News, is the news of the coming of the Kingdom of God (Mark 1:14-15), and of Jesus' death on the cross and resurrection to restore people's relationship with God. It may also include the descent of the Holy Spirit upon believers and the second coming of Jesus. This is a fair summary of what the majority of those who claim the Gospel today mean by the term, although most of it derives, as we have said, from Paul, not Jesus. We will now consider the components we have garnered from the Qur'anic statements here and what we understand of the Christian position vis-à-vis the Gospel or injīl in sum to place before us all facets of what is meant by the term: 1. Some part of the Torah teachings (and confirmation thereof) or, at least, something related to the Torah. 2. A guidance and admonition for those of prudent fear. 3. A doctrine predicated upon the coming Kingdom of God; one which imbues the believer with increasing strength. 4. Something which is — or at least was — written down. 5. Jesus' death and resurrection as an act which reconciles man to God and forgives sin. 6. The descent of the Holy Spirit upon believers (understood to be an event auguring non-natural, supernatural or pseudo-supernatural abilities). 7. The Second Coming of Jesus (as the event marking the end of the Age). The Qur'anic position is, then, that points 1, 2, 3 and 4 either represent — or, at least, comport with — what injīl means. Points 5, 6 and 7 either find no support in the Qur'an or are directly repugnant to it. On the basis of the above, the working definition suggested here for what the Qur'an means by injīl (Gospel) is: a Torah-related guidance given to 'Īsā orientated towards a reward in the Kingdom of Heaven found in written form and which increases the aspirant in piety. Under the Christian extension of the dominant Egypt-Palestine thesis the Qur'an's presentation of 'Īsā is regarded exclusively in terms of a one-to-one correlation between 'Īsā and the Jesus of the 1st century CE. Both the 'Asīr-Ḥejāz and Arabia Felix theses begin from points which reject that assumption. I refer the interested reader to Notepad XVI and Notepad XVIII. All instances appear in the notes and reference this verse.

5:48[8] Arabic: sharīʿa. This word and its synonym at 45:18 (sharīʿa) enter English as the Sharia. The Traditionalist assumes the Sharia to reference a holy and extensive legal system built substantively on the Qur'an and only secondarily on the sayings and actions attributed to Muḥammad (the most 'authoritative' compilations of which were written down by representatives of a nation with every reason to resent Arabs — namely, the Persians) centuries after Muḥammad's death. The Orientalist for his part accepts this assessment, and the popular media bandies the same about in simplified form. The only problem with this cosy consensus is that the Qur'an itself claims no such thing for shirʿa, sharīʿa or any other word. Certainly, each of the peoples under monotheistic faiths has its own set of legal principles in the revelations which are the foundation of those religions — and this is the point being made here at 5:48. But there is no sense in which there exists a holy and specially sanctified legal system which should be imposed wholesale upon a people to make it 'Islamic' — at least no such concept exists in the Qur'an. The notion of a single, universally correct 'Sharia' of any sort (in the popular sense in which I am now using the term) is refuted by the remainder of the verse. The only legal system to which the Qur'an calls and enjoins upon the Messenger is identified both in this verse and the next as what God sent down. This can only refer, in the context of the Qur'an, to that small number of verses which treats of legal matters and which provides the bones of a legal constitution, and to nothing more. The word shirʿa occurs just once in the text, has no definite article and applies to a broad mass of humanity. The word sharīʿa occurs once at 45:18 and is a common noun with a primary or original sense of watering-place. The idea of an entire jurisprudence built on multiple sources (i.e. the Qur'an and anything besides it) is nowhere found in the Qur'anic revelation.

5:48[9] Arabic: minhāj. This is the only occurrence of this noun or of the root on which it is based. Its meanings are: a well-trodden trail; manner, procedure; course. In order to convey the concept of something established over time which is implicit in the word, I have opted for procedure which, in the context, is a right fit.

5:83[1] The Traditionalist naturally assumes this to reference the recipient of the Qur'an; however, a more thoughtful reading through to 5:86 inclines one to the view that 'the Messenger' is meant here in a broader sense since non-acceptance of the Qur'an by those who follow the Torah and the Gospel does not damn them to Hell.

Muhammad Asad notes here: According to all the lexicographers, the word khamr (derived from the verb khamara, "he concealed" or "obscured") denotes every substance the use of which obscures the intellect, i.e., intoxicates. Hence, the prohibition of intoxicants laid down in this verse comprises not merely alcoholic drinks, but also drugs which have a similar effect. The only exception from this total prohibition arises in cases of "dire necessity" (in the strictest sense of these words), as stipulated in the last sentence of verse 3 of this surah: that is to say, in cases where illness or a bodily accident makes the administration of intoxicating drugs or of alcohol imperative and unavoidable.

5:93[5] While I have placed the English in the present tense (which happens to correspond with A. J. Arberry's rendering, and which I consider most appropriate given the preponderance of similar contexts) I believe the allusion up to this point in the verse treats of the past but with an eye to the present. It is difficult for anyone to see past his indoctrination, and the Traditionalist is no exception; but the fact remains that the categories of men cited here pre-existed the Qur'anic revelation, and 5:83-85 above specifically treat of righteous men among recipients of previous revelation. Additionally, stripped of its sectarian values, 5:86-92 can be seen as appealing to the broader reach of believers, not only to a particular sect called today Muslims. Not all translators see the text in the same light, however. With justification (given the liquid nature of tense in Classical Arabic), non-sectarian Arabist A. J. Arberry renders the whole verse in the present: There is no fault in those who believe and do deeds of righteousness what they may eat, if they are godfearing, and believe, and do deeds of righteousness, and then are godfearing and believe, and then are godfearing and do good; God loves the good-doers; staunch Traditionalists Hilali & Khan take a hybrid approach: Those who believe and do righteous good deeds, there is no sin on them for what they ate (in the past), if they fear Allah (by keeping away from His forbidden things), and believe and do righteous good deeds, and again fear Allah and believe, and once again fear Allah and do good deeds with Ihsan (perfection). And Allah loves the good-doers. Lastly, Traditionalist Saheeh International renders, like Hilali & Khan, to imply a cut-off for previous sins given a believing present: There is not upon those who believe and do righteousness [any] blame concerning what they have eaten [in the past] if they [now] fear Allāh and believe and do righteous deeds, and then fear Allāh and believe, and then fear Allāh and do good; and Allāh loves the doers of good. One could make arguments for all the readings listed; it is a matter of interpretation rather than of grammar.

5:95[3] While I concede most points to the Traditionalist in the translation in this and related sections, and confine my dissent to my notes, I need to add that occasionally translators render naʿam here (sg. of anʿām) sacrificial animals. Addition of sacrificial here is obvious deceit, as consideration of all 50 instances of the noun makes clear: 2:40, 2:47, 2:122, 2:150, 2:211, 2:231, 3:103, 3:103, 3:171, 3:174, 5:3, 5:6, 5:7, 5:11, 5:20, 5:110, 8:53, 12:6, 14:6, 14:28, 14:34, 16:18, 16:53, 16:71, 16:72, 16:81, 16:83, 16:112, 16:114, 16:121, 26:22, 27:19, 29:67, 31:20, 31:31, 33:9, 35:3, 37:57, 39:8, 39:49, 43:13, 46:15, 48:2, 49:8, 52:29, 54:35, 68:2, 68:49, 92:19, 93:11.

Here I take the collocation as meaning reaching (i.e. including the inspection of) the leg-joint. In this edition, I give the point to the Traditionalist in my translation, and confine my dissent to the notes. The broader question is entirely moot since al masjid al ḥarām was closed to believers within the time of the revelation (see note to 9:28, and my book The God Protocol). All instances appear in the notes and reference this verse.

5:95[6] Arabic: kaʿba. At 5:6 the word kaʿba (in the dual) has the uncontested sense of ankles or leg-joints. The Traditionalist himself translates thus there. The word kaʿba — admittedly ending with tāʾ marbūṭa (ة) occurs also at 5:95 and 5:97. Here, however, the Traditionalist claims — on the basis of no Qur'anic evidence — that the value at these two locations is a box-shaped structure in Mecca to which one should prostrate himself. It is a quantum leap from the proven, known value of the word at 5:6 to what the Traditionalist claims for 5:95 and 5:97, and given that he expects one to practice on the basis of his claim what he himself would call idolatry did he himself not practice it, I think we should stop and consider the facts. Firstly, the verses at 5:95 and 5:97 are his primary points of purchase within the Qur'an for his beloved structure at Mecca. Secondly, structures of this type were found all over Arabia, and have pagan origins (thus, the notion that his box is unique is erroneous). Thirdly, the Qur'an contains multiple explicit warnings against worshipping anything but God, yet here the Traditionalist wishes one to ignore those and bow down to his box (cf. 3:7 and notes thereto). Naturally, I cannot prove on the basis of the Qur'an that kaʿba never meant what the Traditionalist claims for it, just as the Traditionalist cannot prove on the same basis that it did. What I can point to is the only explicit, clear value of a comparable word — one with which the Traditionalist agrees — and say that I accept that meaning. And on that basis, I incline towards an approximately equal value here also — not least because it makes sense. The scenario as I read it is this: an animal is killed when hunting is forbidden, the only remaining evidence of which is a corpse or skeleton. The condition of an animal may be ascertained by inspection of the leg-joints (lameness in animals being the primary threat to their economic viability — especially among nomadic or semi-nomadic peoples). In order to form their judgment, two just men should inspect the joints of the animal to ensure that what is given in payment is no worse than what was illegally killed. (This point was developed from an original insight by Aidid Safar to whom I am indebted here.) In this edition, I give the point to the Traditionalist in my translation, and confine my dissent to the notes. Were I to capitalise this word and remove italics, it would imply an endorsement for a sense which I refuse to allow into my work; accordingly, I simply transliterate the Arabic and leave the word italicised. The broader question is entirely moot since al masjid al ḥarām was closed to believers within the time of the revelation (see note to 9:28, and my book The God Protocol). The instance at 5:97 appears in the notes and references this verse.

5:95[7] I.e. in the event that there is no proof or means to repay (see note above).

5:95[8] Lit.: affair; matter.

5:96[1] Arabic: ḥurum. See note to 5:1. According to the reading which follows from the note at 5:1, the text here is: But forbidden to you is the game of the land as long as you are forbidden.

5:96[2] See note to al muttaqūn at 2:2.

5:97[1] See note to kaʿba at 5:95.

5:97[2] Arabic: qiyām. This segment is so loaded with values which the Traditionalist bends to his requirements that it is tiresome to list them all. However, in the interests of thoroughness, we should note that this word also is hammered here into service on the basis of various agendas. The Traditionalist translators at Saheeh International render here: standing for the people (by which they mean standing as a sign confirming the Traditionalist's religion); Hilali & Khan have here: an asylum of security and Hajj and 'Umrah (pilgrimage) for mankind — for which rendering I can find little correlation in the text; to be charitable, we will assume it is a mistake on their part; A. J. Arberry has here: as an establishment for men; N. J. Dawood has: eternal values for mankind; and Muhammad Asad has: shall be a symbol for all mankind. Frankly, I don't think any of the translators cited could form a strong argument for their decision here. And nor can I. I follow Saheeh International in my translation since standing has a foundation in the broader text (3:18, 3:39, 3:75, 3:191, 4:5, 4:103, 5:97, 10:12, 11:100, 13:33, 22:26, 25:64, 39:9, 39:68, 51:45, 62:11, 70:33), though this does not imply agreement with their claims for the segment. As usual, the broader question is entirely moot since al masjid al ḥarām was closed to believers within the time of the revelation (see note to 9:28, and my book The God Protocol).

5:101[2] Arabic: qurʾān — reading, recital, recitation, something which is read out.

5:101[3] I.e. things which were asked in the past which fit the description here.

5:103[1] Muhammad Mohar Ali writes: An eleventh female calf born to a she-camel after she had given birth consecutively to ten female calves without the intervention of a male calf was tabooed and called baḥīrah. She was not to be used for riding or carrying any load, her hair was not to be trimmed and her milk was not to be drunk except by a guest. I cannot vouch for his sources or the historical veracity thereof; however, one thing is clear: the Arabs at the time of the revelation lived by a series of fabricated injunctions, things they and their fathers had invented and ascribed to God. The argument being made is against 'religion'. The correlation between that time and this is painfully obvious.

5:103[2] Muhammad Mohar Ali writes: a she-camel consecutively giving birth to ten female camels.

5:103[3] Muhammad Mohar Ali writes: a she-goat similarly giving birth consecutively to ten females in five conceptions was tabooed and called waṣīlah.

5:103[4] Muhammad Mohar Ali writes: a bull fathering consecutively ten female calves was also tabooed and called ḥāmin.

5:103[6] Lit.: the lie.

5:104[1] Any man who takes the Qur'an as his guide and endeavours to engage meaningfully even with those religionists who claim to subscribe to the Qur'an will experience for himself the truth of the words here before long.

5:105[1] Arabic: allaḏhīna āmanū. See note to 2:257 and Notepad II.iv.

5:105[2] I.e. you bear responsibility for yourselves.

5:106[1] Arabic: allaḏhīna āmanū. See note to 2:257 and Notepad II.iv.

5:106[2] Grammar: dual.

5:106[3] Arabic: al ṣalāt; i.e. such duty as is incumbent. See note to 2:3 and Article SZC. Generically, al ṣalāt denotes duty. Specifically, here what must be meant is the duty of burying the deceased. Believers are to detain the witnesses, get to know them, get a sense of their veracity. The value the Traditionalist ascribes here to al ṣalāt (i.e. of a specifically Islamic prayer ritual) is unsustainable in a context which clearly allows for circumstances in which the witnesses may be 'other than yourselves' — if by 'yourselves' one means those who hold to one's own religion.

5:106[4] Grammar: dual.

5:106[5] If as some cultures which call themselves Islamic assume there were no place for a personal will, none of this would be necessary.

¶5.15 5:110[1] Verses 5:110-118 are parenthetical — a point which is substantiated by a refreshing of the motif 'Thou art the Knower of the Unseen Realms' which appears at the end of 5:109 at 5:116. Verses 5:110-118, then, draw the arguments both for the parenthetical history itself and that which precedes it (the core subject of which is the bearing of true witness) to a common conclusion at 5:119.

5:117[1] Arabic: tawaffā. This form V verb in the active voice (as here) is consistently used in the Qur'an with the sense of to die, or to take (i.e. to cause to die). (All instances of tawaffā are found at: 2:234, 2:240, 3:193, 4:15, 4:97, 5:117, 6:60, 6:61, 7:37, 7:126, 8:50, 10:46, 10:104, 12:101, 13:40, 16:28, 16:32, 16:70, 22:5, 32:11, 39:42, 40:67, 40:77, 47:27.) The Qur'an is clear: God took ʿĪsā, son of Maryam (i.e. caused him to die). The narrative preferred by the Traditionalist in which ʿĪsā ascends to God and is expected on the Day of Judgment has no foundation in the Qur'an; it is, rather, based in the ḥadith literature and is a syncretic intrusion originating in Christian theological and eschatological notions. The Traditionalist's frequent rendering here of to raise or to take up (and synonyms) is a fudging of the facts — a workaround designed to bend the Qur'an to a pre-existing ideology originating outside it. This deceit is exposed in such a case by comparing how the same translator renders the same verb in all other contexts. Cf. 4:157-159 and notes thereto.

5:118[1] Arabic: al ʿazīz al ḥakīm. See note to 3:18.

5:119[1] This returns to the narrative thread left open at 5:109 and completes both it and the long parenthetical aside. Again, with Saheeh International, Hilali & Khan, and N. J. Dawood, I render here using the future tense (see note to 5:116).

6:9[1] I.e. the Messenger. Muhammad Asad comments here: Lit., "if We had made him an angel" - with the pronoun obviously referring to the bearer of God's message (Zamakhshari).
6:9[2] Some consider that this relates to mockery (see next verse); or possibly to confusion or doubt. Another view is more prosaic and is that it relates to clothing: were an angel — or angels given the shift into the plural — sent, they would take the form of men and be dressed like them (the verb here is typically used in this sense in the Qur'an). I include the latter part of Muhammad Asad's comment here for additional context: Since it is impossible for man to perceive angels as they really are, the hypothetical angelic message-bearer would have to assume the shape of a human being - and so their demand for a direct "verification" of the message would have remained unfulfilled, and their self-caused confusion unresolved.

¶6.2 6:12[1] Claims are made by some for this single phrase which, while emotionally attractive to those who make them, collapse in view of a sustained, broader reading of the Qur'an. On the basis of this broader reading, then, I see no option but to regard what follows this point through to the end of 6:15 as parenthetical. Cf. 6:54 and note thereto; and see also 6:147.

6:23[1] Arabic: fitnah. See note to 2:102. We remain constant in our value for this word here. Other translators are forced to modify their default values in order to achieve sense: N. J. Dawood has: They will have no case to argue; A. J. Arberry has: Then they shall have no proving; Saheeh International has: Then there will be no [excuse upon] examination; Muhammad Asad has: Whereupon, in their utter confusion; and Hilali & Khan have: There will then be (left) no Fitnah (excuses or statements or arguments) for them. A full comparison and analysis of all translators' rendering of this term is beyond the scope of this work.
6:23[2] See note to Arabic root: sẖ-r-k at 6:78 and Notepad VI. The context implies perhaps that this applies to some who consider themselves religious — even monotheists — in this life, and that their words damn them because they are not true.

6:37[4] Some close the speech marks here rather than at the end of the previous clause. One has to make a judgment call in such circumstances. I have opted to parse as does Muhammad Asad, and include his reasoning at this point: i.e., that God manifests Himself always - as the next verse points out - through the ever-recurring miracle of His creation.
6:38[1] Arabic: al kitāb. See Notepad IX.ii. I take this to mean that just as God's will encompasses all of Creation, so His will is stamped into those written communications He has given men to live by. Some Traditionalist's assume here another value (of a record in which all things are recorded); but they can point to no pan-textual support, and it requires them to deviate from their default value for al kitāb.

6:53[1] Arabic: wakaḏẖālika — and thus, and like this. This is the first instance of this convention in the textual order since 2:143 (the only preceding instance) — itself a pivotal verse. In this chapter, this convention occurs a total of nine times, the most of any chapter, and by a considerable margin. These facts indicate to me that this convention is of significance in this chapter. All instances within this chapter are: 6:53, 6:55, 6:75, 6:84, 6:105, 6:112, 6:123, 6:129, 6:137. Under the methodology here, this group of verses operates as a set, conveying insights as a group over and above the sum of the parts. See note to wakaḏẖālika at 6:55. All instances listed above reference this verse.

6:54[3] Cf. 6:12 and note thereto on mercy, as well as 6:16.
6:55[1] Arabic: wakaḏẖālika — and thus, and like this. The meaning of this verse is typically misunderstood — or simply not understood — by the Traditionalist, who considers the text either myopically, through the prism of his preferred literature, or not at all. However, the broader context — should we consider that — screams at us what is meant. In the preceding fifty-four verses we have met the imperative 'Say thou' a total of 17 times; by way of comparison, al baqarah — the longest chapter in the Qur'an — contains 18 instances of this imperative in total. The present chapter contains in total 44 instances of 'Say thou' — more imperatives to the Messenger to speak than any other, and by a considerable margin. Surely, then, the meaning of this clause at 6:55 is that God sets out and details the proofs 'thus' by means of a series of imperatives comprising 'Say thou'. Hence, the next clause points ahead to the following instances where 'Say thou' is present by means of which 'the path of the lawbreakers might be made manifest'. The remainder of the chapter (interspersed with pertinent asides, narratives, summaries and law) represents a collection of set statements and preaching methodologies by means of which the Messenger — and we, the believers, by extension — can expose the way of the lawbreakers. See note to wakaḏẖālika at 6:53.
6:55[2] Arabic: faṣṣala — to set out (present in a logical order, categorise) and to make plain or detail. This word operates as a characteristic marker in this chapter (see note to wakaḏẖālika at 6:53). This is the first occurrence of faṣṣala in the order of the text, and the word occurs 17 times across the entire text, but disproportionately in this chapter (6:55, 6:97, 6:98, 6:119, 6:126). Under the methodology here, this group of verses operates as a set, conveying insights as a group over and above the sum of the parts. All instances listed above reference this verse.
6:55[3] Arabic: āyāt. See Notepad VIII.
6:55[4] For the reasoning behind the use of a colon here, see note to wakaḏẖālika at 6:55.

¶6.7 6:56[1] Arabic: min dūni. See note to 2:23.
6:56[2] See vain desires at 2:78, 2:111, 2:120, 2:145, 4:123, 4:123, 5:48, 5:49, 5:77, 6:56, 6:119, 6:150, 13:37, 23:71, 28:50, 30:29, 42:15, 45:18, 47:14, 47:16, 54:3, 57:14.
6:57[1] I.e. any knowledge of the Hour, or power over it.
6:57[2] Arabic: al ḥaqq. See Notepad XVII (al ḥaqq i.).
6:57[3] Lit.: best of deciders.
6:58[1] Arabic: ẓālimūn. See note to 2:229.
6:59[1] Arabic: kitāb. See Notepad IX.iii.
6:60[1] Arabic: tawaffā. This form V verb is used throughout to mean to take in the sense of to take at death — sleep itself being a form of death.
6:60[2] I.e. by day.

¶6.8 6:61[1] Arabic: ḥattā iḏẖā. See note to 3:152.
6:61[2] I.e. the angels of death.
6:61[3] Or neglect.
6:62[1] Arabic: al ḥaqq. See Notepad XVII (al ḥaqq i.). Also rendered here the Just.
6:62[2] Arabic: alā. See note to 2:12.
6:64[1] Arabic: min kulli. See note to 2:164.
6:64[2] See note to Arabic root: sẖ-r-k at 6:78 and Notepad VI.
6:65[1] I.e. from any direction.
6:65[2] Arabic: āyāt. See Notepad VIII.
6:66[1] Arabic: al ḥaqq. See Notepad XVII (al ḥaqq i.).
6:67[1] I.e. each part of the message of God has its time of fulfilment.
6:68[1] See note to 4:140.
6:68[2] Arabic: āyāt. See Notepad VIII.
6:68[3] Arabic: ḥadīṯẖ — story; account; narrative, statement. Here: subject fits the English context better.
6:68[4] Or adversary (against the command of God). See Article SJC.
6:68[5] Arabic: ẓālimūn. See note to 2:229.
6:69[1] See note to al muttaqūn at 2:2.
6:69[2] The responsibility of those who are in prudent fear of God regarding the heedless is to remind, nothing more.
6:69[3] See note to al muttaqūn at 2:2.
6:70[1] Arabic: dīn. See Notepad V.
6:70[2] I.e. the Qur'an — and, perhaps, more specifically the series of 'Say thous' found here (see note to 6:55).
6:70[3] Arabic: absala. The active voice of this form IV verb is said to mean to consign to destruction; to give up to destruction — and I have rendered here according to that view. However, its root meaning is to debar, to prevent. It is possible that the value of to give up to destruction is a later explanation based on the context in which it is used in the Qur'an and that this later explanation itself found its way into the lexicons. The verb absala appears only twice, both times in this verse. There is no other instance of any word from the b-s-l root.
6:70[4] Arabic: min dūni. See note to 2:23.
6:70[5] Lit.: if.

¶6.9 6:71[1] Arabic: min dūni. See note to 2:23.
6:71[2] Or adversaries (against the command of God). See Article SJC.
6:71[3] The word guidance here can be taken ironically or not, depending on how one reads the verse.
6:72[1] Arabic: aqīmū al ṣalāt; i.e. uphold such duty as is incumbent. See note to 2:3 and Article SZC.
6:72[2] See note to al muttaqūn at 2:2.
6:73[1] Arabic: bil ḥaqqi. See Notepad XVII (bil ḥaqqi ii.).
6:73[2] Arabic: al ḥaqq. See Notepad XVII (al ḥaqq i.).
6:74[1] Arabic: āzar. Called Terah in the Hebrew Bible.
6:74[2] Arabic: (sg.) ṣanam, (pl.) aṣnām. See note to 14:35.
6:74[3] This is the first stage in awakening: questioning the status quo.
6:74[4] This is the second stage in awakening: understanding the emptiness of idolatry.
6:75[1] I.e. because Ibrāhīm was already moving sincerely in the direction of truth. See note to wakaḏẖālika at 6:53.
6:75[2] Arabic: yaqina. See note to 2:4.
6:76[1] Arabic: afala — to pass, become absent, hidden or concealed.
6:76[2] Arabic: afala — to pass, become absent, hidden or concealed.
6:77[1] Arabic: bazaghа — to emerge, to come forth (of sun, moon, a tooth, blood, etc.).
6:77[2] Arabic: afala — to pass, become absent, hidden or concealed.
6:77[3] Arabic: al ḍālūn. See note to 3:90. This usage recalls the word rendered error at 6:74.
6:78[1] Arabic: bazaghа — to emerge, to come forth (of sun, moon, a tooth, blood, etc.).
6:78[2] Arabic: akbar. Nowhere is God described as akbar in the Qur'an. Despite that fact, those whom we call Muslims endlessly proclaim him to be so.
6:78[3] Arabic: afala — to pass, become absent, hidden or concealed.
6:78[4] Qur'anic usage: Arabic root: ṣ-r-k. At 6:74 we have Ibrāhīm's rejection of what his people made as objects of worship. At 6:75 God shows Ibrāhīm his creation; by recognising its transient nature (6:75-78), Ibrāhīm understands that Creation, too, is not God. In summary, anything made — whether the fruit of our hands, our imaginations, or found in Creation — is not God. See Notepad VI.
6:79[1] Arabic: ḥanif — inclining to a right state or tendency; spurning falsehood. See note to 2:130.
6:79[2] See note to Arabic root: ṣ-r-k at 6:78 and Notepad VI.
6:80[1] An obvious point, but one which needs to be made forcefully, is that Ibrāhīm was guided. But he was not a Christian or a Jew. And he was certainly not a Muslim in anything close to the sense in which that term is used today.
6:80[2] See note to Arabic root: ṣ-r-k at 6:78 and Notepad VI.
6:80[3] Arabic: afalā. See Notepad XIV.
6:81[1] See note to Arabic root: ṣ-r-k at 6:78 and Notepad VI.
6:81[2] See note to Arabic root: ṣ-r-k at 6:78 and Notepad VI.
6:81[3] Arabic: aḥaqq-. See Notepad XVII.
6:82[1] Arabic: alladẖīna āmanū. See note to 2:257 and Notepad II.iv.

¶6.10 6:83[1] I.e. that argument which Ibrāhīm uses above against his people. On this basis, I extend Ibrāhīm's speech to the end of 6:82; which N. J. Dawood and Muhammad Asad do also.
6:83[2] Arabic: ḥujja — argument (as in justification or claim in court or elsewhere).
6:83[3] Lit.: degrees.
6:84[1] Arabic: ayyūb. Typically identified with the Job of the Hebrew scriptures. See Notepad XV.
6:84[2] Arabic: yūsuf. Typically identified with the Joseph of the Hebrew scriptures. See Notepad XV.
6:84[3] See note to wakaḏẖālika at 6:53.
6:84[4] I.e. by raising them in degree (cf. 6:83).
6:85[1] Typically identified with John of the Christian Bible, but see note to 3:39 and Notepad XV and Notepad XVIII. See Notepad XV.
6:85[2] See Notepad XVI and Notepad XVIII.
6:85[3] Arabic: ilyās. Typically identified with the Elijah of the Hebrew scriptures. See Notepad XV.
6:86a Arabic: alyasaʿ. Typically identified with the Elisha of the Hebrew scriptures. See Notepad XV.
6:86[1] Arabic: yūnus. Typically identified with the Jonah of the Hebrew scriptures. See Notepad XV.
6:86a Arabic: lūṭ Typically identified with the Lot of the Hebrew scriptures. See Notepad XV.
6:88[1] The righteous men and prophets just mentioned.
6:88[2] See note to Arabic root: ṣ-r-k at 6:78 and Notepad VI.
6:89[1] Arabic: alladẖīna ātaynāhum al kitāb. See Notepad IX.x.
6:89[2] Arabic: al kitāb. See Notepad IX.ii.
6:89[3] Indicating those to whom Muḥammad was preaching, and by extension recipients of the Qur'an's teaching today.
6:89[4] I.e. the Writ, judgment and prophethood.
6:90[1] Arabic: qadā. The form VIII of this verb means: to imitate, be guided by, follow, emulate.

¶6.11 6:91[1] Arabic: ḥaqqa. See Notepad XVII (ḥaqq- v.).
6:91[2] Arabic: al kitāb. See Notepad IX.ii.
6:91[3] See note to 4:140.
6:92[1] We can know that 'this' refers to the Qur'an on the basis of pan-textual analysis focusing on the key term in the phrase: we sent (it) down (Arabic: anzalnāhu) found in this statement. This element (anzalnāhu) occurs at: 6:92, 6:155, 10:24*, 12:2, 13:37, 14:1, 17:105, 18:45*, 20:113, 21:50, 22:16, 38:29, 44:3, 97:1. The asterisks indicate verses which compare the life of the World to water sent down creating (temporary) growth, and emphasise God's ultimate mastery, thus representing a minor subset. All other instances either overtly reference the Qur'anic revelation, or can be shown to reference it on a pan-textual basis. The minor subset provides a counterpoint to the major subset, with the temporary splendour of achievement in this world (in the similitude of the water God sends down to produce benefits) serving to accentuate the eternal benefits that can be had in the 'water' of the revelation God sent down. Across the major subset (6:92, 6:155, 12:2, 13:37, 14:1, 17:105, 20:113, 21:50, 22:16, 38:29, 44:3, 97:1), telling components are found locally (Arabic: kitāb, qur'ān, āyāt, 'arabiyy) in a number of these 12 instances (e.g. 6:92, 6:155, 12:2, 13:37, 14:1, 17:105, 20:113, 22:16, 38:29) which, taken together, leave us in no doubt that it is precisely the Qur'an which is meant. In the remaining three instances (21:50, 44:3, 97:1) these components are not found locally, but we can know that the reference is to the whole Qur'an in these cases by the principle of applying what we can prove to what we cannot. All instances of the major subset reference this verse.
6:92[2] Arabic: kitāb. See Notepad IX.iii.
6:92[3] Arabic: kitābun anzalnāhu mubārakun. See Notepad IX.vii.
6:92[4] Lit.: between its hands. I understand this to mean here: what was within its scope; i.e. that which it treated of or concerned itself with. See note to 2:66.
6:92[5] Taken by the Traditionalist — on the basis of no genuine historical data — to be the place known today as Mecca.

According to Dan Gibson (Quranic Geography, 2011), no objective data exists to suggest that Mecca was a great trading centre or place of pilgrimage at any time prior to 900 CE. Cases can be advanced for both the Petra thesis and the Arabia Felix thesis, however. See Notepad XVI. See also my book The God Protocol.
6:92[6] See note to 58:4 for Qur'anic usage of to believe in.
6:92[7] See note to 58:4 for Qur'anic usage of to believe in.
6:92[8] Arabic: ṣalāt; i.e. such duty as is incumbent. See note to 2:3 and Article SZC. Generically, ṣalāt denotes duty. In its primary sense it is the duty both to serve and seek help from God alone as per the covenant at 1:1-7 of which the statement at 1:5 forms our part — commitment to which also satisfies the pre-existing obligation every man has to acknowledge God's authority (see 7:172). In the present context it indicates, surely, the duty to reason with and warn those in the society in which one lives using the Qur'anic arguments listed in this chapter; see note to 6:55.

6:93[4] Arabic: al ḥaqq. See Notepad XVII (al ḥaqq i.).
6:93[5] Sc. thou wouldst know the end of those who ascribe lies to God. Arabic: āyāt. See Notepad VIII.
6:94[1] See note to Arabic root: ṣ-r-k at 6:78 and Notepad VI. The concept of partners is said by the Traditionalist to refer only to fraudulent gods. I think the connotation is much wider than that and includes authorities of any kind (today: government, heavily promoted 'scientists', opinion-makers such as actors and other semi-fictitious personas) and all fiction-based belief systems, including most of what today passes for religion.
6:94[2] I.e. all connections relating to the World (position, favour, kin, etc.), and claims upon other than God as intercessor (all man-god cults, claimed propitiations, and other inventions).

¶6.12 6:96[1] The sense of reckoning or calculation here pertains perhaps not only to the intended use of the sun and moon as means of measuring time, but also to the fact that the totality of their courses is a determination of God, as stated in the following phrase (cf. 36:38; also 41:12).
6:97[1] Arabic: faṣṣala — to set out (present in a logical order, categorise) and to make plain or detail. See note to faṣṣala at 6:55.

6:110[2] Cf. 6:124-125.
6:110[3] Cf. 2:15.

¶6.14 6:111[1] I.e. of this fact.
6:112[1] This logically references the preceding point: that men believe only by the will of God. See note to wakaḏẖālika at 6:53.
6:112[2] Cf. 25:31.
6:112[3] Or adversaries (against the command of God). See Article SJC.

6:112[7] Muḥammad was a prophet; naturally, what is indicated in this verse applied to him as well. The way in which this has manifested itself will be obvious to the objective investigator.
6:113[1] See note to 58:4 for Qur'anic usage of to believe in.
6:113[2] Or gain what they are gaining; i.e. crimes worthy of punishment.
6:114[1] I.e. other than what God gave in the form of revelation, such as isms and religions and mythologies created by men.
6:114[2] Arabic: al kitāb. See Notepad IX.ii.
6:114[3] Arabic: faṣṣala — to set out (that is, present in a logical order, categorise) and to make plain or detail. See note to faṣṣala at 6:55.
6:114[4] Arabic: al kitāb. See Notepad IX.ii.
6:114[5] Arabic: bil ḥaqqi. See Notepad XVII (bil ḥaqqi ii.).
6:115[1] Or fulfilled.
6:115[2] The Traditionalist, who makes much of assigning great virtue and scrupulosity to the compilers (I would say inventors) of ḥadīṯ, would do well to consider this statement. This formula connects this verse with 18:27.
6:116[1] Traditionalist Muslims typically assert — on the basis of their extraneous literature — that God will never allow the majority of Muslims to go astray; that if they stay with what most of their co-religionists think, say and do, they will be rightly guided.
6:118[1] See note to 58:4 for Qur'anic usage of to believe in.
6:118[2] Arabic: āyāt. See Notepad VIII.
6:119[1] Arabic: faṣṣala — to set out (that is, present in a logical order, categorise) and to make plain or detail. See note to faṣṣala

6:119[3] This description includes the Traditionalist who is not satisfied with the clear dietary laws in the Qur'an, and has a plethora of additional and complicated rules he seeks to make binding upon himself and others.

6:124[1] Arabic: āya. See Notepad VIII.

6:124[2] I.e. they expect God to deliver his message personally to them before they will listen.

6:125[1] Arabic: al islām. This is an abstract noun and means peace or submission (to God). By way of confirmation, the broadly Traditionalist Muhammad Asad translates here (though a little more expansively than do I) both correctly and honestly: And whomsoever God wills to guide, his bosom He opens wide with willingness towards self-surrender [unto Him]. Not all translators are so honest. And, clearly, this word is employed by both the ignorant and the deceitful as though its Qur'anic usage signalled a religion comprising the myriad dogmas created by men subsequent to the Qur'anic revelation and called today by the catch-all term 'Islam'. The absence of Qur'anic support for this assertion will be grasped once islām and other derivatives of the same root across the broader Qur'anic text are taken into account. Additionally, the reader would do well to consider the surrounding context: what leads up to 6:125 (and much of what follows) describes those who insinuate themselves and their lies into the business of serving God, and attempt to overturn what God himself revealed. The entire point is that God — not a 'religion' — guides. See 3:18-19 and notes thereto.

6:125[2] Arabic: lā yu'minūn. Qur'anic usage implies: (are those) lost in darkness. See note to 2:6 and Notepad II.ii.

6:126[1] Arabic: faṣṣala — to set out (that is, present in a logical order, categorise) and to make plain or detail. See note to faṣṣala at 6:55.

6:126[2] Arabic: āyāt. See Notepad VIII.

6:128[1] Arabic: al jinn. See Article SJC.

6:128[2] Arabic: istakthara min. This form X verb with an object in min means: to desire or to wish for much (of a thing). An example Lane gives (p. 2651) is: He desired of him for himself much of the water that he might drink it. The second meaning Lane gives is to reckon something much, abundant or many. Before considering which of these options is more likely, we will look at how this collocation is typically rendered. We will remember, of course, that historically Muslims have conflated a number of Qur'anic conventions, considering them all to mean non-human entities, generally called Jinn. This subject is unpicked at Article SJC. The salient point for us here is that al jinn means dominant human beings (rendered here by the Latin term domini), and that it is this dominant minority which rules the affairs of men. But it is natural that translations should be directed by understanding and, historically, the understanding of al jinn has been that summarised above. Accordingly, N. J. Dawood renders here: He will say: 'Jinn, you have seduced mankind in great numbers.' A. J. Arberry has: 'Company of jinn, you have made much of mankind.' Saheeh International has: "O company of jinn, you have [misled] many of mankind." Muhammad Asad, ever expansive, has: "O you who have lived in close communion with [evil] invisible beings! A great many [other] human beings have you ensnared!" And Hilali & Khan have: "O you assembly of jinns! Many did you mislead of men". The common denominator here is the notion of much — which is the core sense of the verb root; beyond that, the translators have embellished on the basis of their understanding. The plain senses provided by Lane do not suit them because they do not fit with the notion of non-human entities. But if al jinn means simply that coterie of dominant men (the domini) which directs the masses (the servi), then the psychological resistance to a plain reading falls away. There remains only the question of which of the two senses Lane provides is more likely, and given the context — an address to the rulers concerning the ruled — the more likely case is the one I have used.

6:128[3] Arabic: al ins. See Article SJC.

6:128[4] It is an interesting point — one easily elided in reading — that the domini have allies (helpers, protectors) from among the servi. It is a fact that the ruling elite operate through a network of organisations (military, scientific, educational, media, financial, religious, etc.) which they use as their tools of control. The men at the top of those structures are the house Negroes as it were of the plantation masters. For an archetypal example see 7:113-114.

6:130[4] Arabic: (al) kāfirūn. Typically rendered (the) unbelievers. See note to 2:19 and Notepad II.iii.

6:131[1] The wording here may be claimed in support of our view that both the domini and the servi (Arabic: al jinn wa al ins) are categories of human being. See Article SJC.

6:134[1] Or cause failure (to God) or frustrate (God).

6:135[1] In modern English parlance: do your worst.

6:135[2] Arabic: ẓālimūn. See note to 2:229.

6:136[1] Arabic: dhara'a. This verb has connotations of to sow (many or different things); to seed; to create; to produce. Occurs at 6:136, 7:179, 16:13, 23:79, 42:11, 67:24.

6:137[3] See note to Arabic root: sh-r-k at 6:78 and Notepad VI. The concept of partners is said by the Traditionalist to refer only to fraudulent gods. I think the connotation is much wider than that and includes authorities of any kind (today: government, heavily promoted 'scientists', opinion-makers such as actors and other semi-fictitious personas) and all fiction-based belief systems, including most of what today passes for religion.

6:137[4] Or confuse, clothe, or cover.

6:138[1] I.e. which should not be ridden.

6:139[2] See note to Arabic root: sh-r-k at 6:78 and Notepad VI.

6:140[1] Verses 6:136-140 perfectly describe the activities of the religionist: he creates complicated, spurious rules which he ascribes to God. Such people abound in every age. We are to ignore them and follow what God made binding upon us.

6:141[1] God has created a myriad of variation within each type of fruit and crop. One implication, surely, is that there are many good ways of doing things. This flies in the face of the idea popular among many religionists — and certainly favoured by the Traditionalist — which is that there is only one correct way of doing things, and that he, naturally, is the arbiter of what that way is.

6:141[2] Arabic: ḥaqqa. See Notepad XVII (ḥaqq- v.). We are to give what we can afford of everything we earn. There is no such thing as a fixed tax on produce or earnings (see note to 2:43 and Article SZC).

6:142[1] Arabic: farsh. This is rendered slaughter by the non-sectarian A. J. Arberry. The root meanings are carpet, furnishing, mat, bedding and to spread, and the root is used in this range of meanings at 2:22, 51:48, 55:54, 56:34. I accept that farsh has the meaning of slaughter also (since slaughter is a necessary step in the process of obtaining skin — something upon which one lies — that is likely the connection). My instinct always is to stay with what has a genuine basis in Qur'anic usage, and have rendered accordingly. Additionally, the Traditionalist tends also to regard this word as indicating smaller animals such as sheep and goats. Again, the connection here is likely the fact that such animals are frequently slaughtered, unlike beasts of burden, and therefore provide skins.

6:142[2] Or adversary (against the command of God). See Article SJC.

6:143[1] Instances where speech either trails off or is clipped through interruption are found at 2:138, 6:143, 6:144, 10:22, 12:94, 26:24, 26:26, 26:28, 43:9, 58:22, 77:11, 84:5. Here the clear function is to illustrate the continued efforts of those who invent lies and ascribe them to God to insinuate their fabrications into the narrative. Such people, naturally, abound today. The chapter as a whole serves as a template and outline on how best to bear the message of the Qur'an to the world, what to expect, and how rightly to respond to various strategies. Here we have the archetypal religionist with his invented foolishness which he insinuates into the business of serving God. The right response — as modelled here — is to call him out on his claims by means of questions, thus forcing him to admit that he personally has no knowledge of such things, and leading him thereby to correct conclusions.

6:149[2] Arabic: ḥujja — argument (as in justification or claim in court or elsewhere). The Traditionalist typically misses the point here entirely, and wanders off over the hills of his own creation; Hilali & Khan's translation of this clause is typical: Say: "With Allah is the perfect proof and argument, (i.e. the Oneness of Allah, the sending of His Messengers and His Holy Books, etc. to mankind). The point is simpler and more obvious, though fatal to the Traditionalist and his doctrines, God's 'conclusive argument' is: had He willed, He would have guided you all together. Thus, guidance comes not from the Traditionalist, or from his religion, or from any particular prophet or messenger. It comes from God. True faith is not worship of a religion about God, but worship of God; God alone guides to the path.

7:27[11] Arabic: lā yu'minūn. Qur'anic usage implies: (are those) lost in darkness. See note to 2:6 and Notepad II.ii.
7:28[1] In the context, this can logically refer only to 'those who do not believe' at 7:27. Sexual immorality is inherent to rejection of God in deed, if not in what one claims for oneself.
7:28[2] Arabic: fāḥishat, faḥshā'. See Notepad XI.iii. Here the subject continues to be lā yu'minūn (i.e. those who do not believe). It is interesting that sexual immorality is mentioned here since it is the misuse of sex — and the abuse of minors in particular — which is integral to the practices of those cults which are at the helm of the power matrix today. These practices and the cults which justify them go back millennia and are passed down from generation to generation, typically within family lines.

7:28[3] Lit.: upon it; i.e. it is a cultural norm or tradition.
7:28[4] I.e. meaning either God told us to do it, or God made us this way — therefore we have no control over the matter. Worthy of note is the fact that those who support male sodomy and heterosexual philandering of any type (which together with marrying the wives of one's father comprise the sins covered by fāḥishat or sexual immorality) are presented here claiming that their inclinations are either genetic or beyond their control (i.e. that God enjoined them upon them) — a claim the Qur'an refutes. See Notepad XI.iii.
7:28[5] Arabic: fāḥishat, faḥshā'. See Notepad XI.iii.
7:29[1] See note to 3:18.
7:29[2] Arabic: aqāma. Wherever this verb occurs with al ṣalāt as the object the Traditionalist says it means to uphold or to establish the [five daily] prayer[s] (a regimen found nowhere in the Qur'an). Here it takes wujūhakum (your faces or your countenances). Now that he needs it to mean something completely different, the verb is bent into the necessary shape; the Hilali & Khan translation, for example, has here: that you should face Him only (i.e. worship none but Allah and face the Qiblah, i.e. the Ka'bah at Makkah during prayers) in each and every place of worship. The serious student of the Qur'an should understand that this type of bait-and-switch is typical of the Traditionalist's treatment of the Qur'an: his job is to impose his religion upon the text no matter what the words say or mean. Additionally, his sectarian value for masjid collapses if one considers 7:31, for example, which also employs masjid and is directed to all mankind.
7:29[3] Arabic: wajh — face, countenance, personality, true self. I take the collocation to uphold one's countenance to mean to (be able to) hold one's head up high in English. The preceding context is the key: by staying sexually clean, observing equity (which means integrity and consistency with inner convictions on the one hand, and faith in God alone on the other — see 3:18 and note thereto) one may come before God in prayer and worship in an effective manner. Without sexual purity, it is not possible. This is why all Satanic systems promote illicit sex as virtue.
7:29[4] Arabic: masjid, masājid. See Notepad VII.i. Naturally, the Traditionalist would have the reader infer the Islamic mosque at this juncture, but this deceit does not survive a review of the usage of the word across the broader text. Consider 7:31, for example, which employs masjid and is directed to all mankind.
7:29[5] Arabic: dīn. See Notepad V.
7:30[1] Arabic: ḥaqqa 'alā. See Notepad XVII (ḥaqq- ix).
7:30[2] Or adversary (against the command of God). See Article SJC.
7:30[3] Arabic: min dūni. See note to 2:23.
7:30[4] Both non-sectarian A. J. Arberry and Traditionalist Muhammad Asad close the speech marks opened at 7:29 at this point.

¶7.4 7:31[1] Arabic: masjid, masājid. See Notepad VII.i. It is, naturally, impossible for a one-to-one correlation between this word and 'Islamic mosques' to be sustained, no matter how the Traditionalist tries to impose one on the text. The address is to the children of Ādam, not to adherents of a particular creed.
7:31[2] The formula eat and drink as used in the Qur'an has a secondary meaning which is seen by comparing all instances of do as you like or feel at home (see 2:60, 2:187, 7:31, 19:26, 52:19, 69:24, 77:43).

7:39[1] Lit.: you had not over us any bounty.

¶7.5 7:40[1] Arabic: āyāt. See Notepad VIII.
7:40[2] While I neither share Muhammad Asad's confidence that the ḥadīth literature corresponds in any meaningful way to actual history nor accept uncritically his assumption that 'Īsā and Jesus are necessarily the same person, his comments here are insightful and valuable and repeated in full: Lit., "until (hatta) a twisted rope passes through a needle's eye"; since this phrase is meant to express an impossibility, the rendering of hatta as "any more than" seems to be appropriate here. As for the word jamal occurring in this sentence, there is hardly any doubt that its translation, in this context, as "camel" is erroneous. As pointed out by Zamakhshari (and confirmed by other classical commentators, including Razi), Ibn 'Abbas used to read the word in the spelling jummal, which signifies "a thick rope" or "a twisted cable"; and the same reading is attributed to 'Ali ibn Abi Talib (Taj al-'Arus). It is to be noted that there are also several other dialectical spellings of this word, namely, jumal, juml, jumul and, finally, jamal (as in the generally-accepted version of the Qur'an) - all of them signifying "a thick, twisted rope" (Jawhari), and all of them used in this sense by some of the Prophet's Companions or their immediate successors (tabi'un). Ibn 'Abbas is also quoted by Zamakhshari as having said that God could not have coined so inappropriate a metaphor as "a camel passing through a needle's eye" - meaning that there is no relationship whatever between a camel and a needle's eye whereas, on the other hand, there is a definite relationship between the latter and a rope (which, after all, is but an extremely thick thread). On all accounts, therefore, the rendering of jamal as "a twisted rope" is, in this context, infinitely preferable to that of "a camel". The fact that the latter rendering occurs in a somewhat similar phrase in the Greek version of the Synoptic Gospels (Matthew xix, 24, Mark x, 25 and Luke xviii, 25) does not affect this contention. One should remember that the Gospels were originally composed in Aramaic, the language of Palestine at the time of Jesus, and that those Aramaic texts are now lost. It is more than probable that, owing to the customary absence of vowel signs in Aramaic writing, the Greek translator misunderstood the consonant spelling g-m-l (corresponding to the Arabic j-m-l), and took it to mean "a camel": a mistake repeated since, with regard to the above Qur'anic verse, by many Muslims and all, non-Muslim orientalists as well.

7:44[3] Arabic: ẓālimūn. See note to 2:229.

7:45[1] Arabic: ṣadda + ʿan. See note to 8:47.

7:46[1] Grammar: dual; i.e. the two groups.

7:46[2] I.e. distinguishing mark. Arabic: sīmā — mark, sign, characteristic; mien, expression. Occurs at 2:273, 7:46, 7:48, 47:30, 48:29, 55:41.

7:47[1] Arabic: ẓālimūn. See note to 2:229.

¶7.6 7:48[1] I.e. distinguishing mark. Arabic: sīmā — mark, sign, characteristic; mien, expression. Occurs at 2:273, 7:46, 7:48, 47:30, 48:29, 55:41.

7:49[1] I.e. the believers about to be admitted to the Garden.

7:49[2] Thought by some to be an aside spoken by God. My own view is that it is more likely a reproach by the unbelievers among themselves with reference to the believers in the new context.

7:50[1] Arabic: ʿafāḍa. See note to 2:198.

7:50[2] Arabic: al kāfirūn. See note to 2:19 and Notepad II.iii.

7:52[2] Arabic: faṣṣala — to set out (that is, present in a logical order, categorise) and to make plain or detail.

7:53[1] Lit.: interpretation.

7:53[2] Lit.: interpretation.

7:53[3] Arabic: bil ḥaqqi. See Notepad XVII (bil ḥaqqi i.).

¶7.7 7:54[1] Arabic: ʿayyām — days; aeons, eras.

7:54[2] Arabic: alā. See note to 2:12.

7:57[1] Lit.: between the two hands. I understand this to mean here: at the time of. Typically either translated before or elided by means of non-literal constructions. See note to 2:66.

7:57[2] Arabic: ḥattā id̲hā. See note to 3:152.

7:57[3] This form IV verb occurs only once. I am indebted to N. J. Dawood for this nuance.

7:57[4] Clouds look light. Modern researchers estimate that the average cumulus cloud — the white, fluffy clouds such as one might see on a sunny day — weighs around 500,000 kilograms or 1.1 million pounds.

7:57[5] Or thereby, therewith.

7:57[6] Arabic: min kulli. See note to 2:164.

7:58[1] Arabic: āyāt. See Notepad VIII.

¶7.8 7:63[1] Arabic: d̲hikr — calling to mind, recalling, reminding; remembrance (of something past); history.

7:63[2] See note to al muttaqūn at 2:2.

7:64[1] Cf. 7:64, 10:73, 16:113, 26:139, 26:189, 29:37, 37:127, 91:14.

7:65[2] See note to al muttaqūn at 2:2.

7:66[1] Arabic: alladh̲īna kafarū. See note to 2:6 and Notepad II.i.

7:66[2] Lit.: among the liars.

7:69[1] Arabic: d̲hikr — calling to mind, recalling, reminding; remembrance (of something past); history.

7:69[2] Arabic: k̲halq — creation. It is true that k̲halq encompasses values other than creation. However, it is also true that k̲halq occurs 52 times in the text and in the remaining 51 instances the Traditionalist is, as a rule, content to render it creation, as am I. At this verse he tends to employ alternatives such as stature, whereas I stay with creation. All 52 instances are found here: 2:164, 3:190, 3:191, 4:119, 7:54, 7:69, 10:4, 10:34, 10:34, 13:5, 13:16, 13:16, 14:19, 17:49, 17:51, 17:98, 18:51, 18:51, 20:50, 21:104, 23:14, 23:17, 27:64, 29:19, 29:20, 30:11, 30:22, 30:27, 30:30, 31:11, 31:28, 32:7, 32:10, 34:7, 35:1, 35:16, 36:68, 36:78, 36:79, 37:11, 39:6, 39:6, 40:57, 40:57, 42:29, 43:19, 45:4, 46:33, 50:15, 50:15, 67:3, 79:27.

7:70[1] I.e. the punishment of God.

7:71[1] Today, such names would include Evolution and Big Bang and — the god of all modern gods — Gravity. God created the heavens and the earth; attempting to disguise that fact by means of invented names serves to divert from God what is due to him alone: recognition as the creator and sustainer of all things.

7:71[2] Lit.: of those waiting.

7:72[1] An expression meaning utterly cut off or destroyed. Occurs at 6:45, 7:72, 8:7, 15:66.

7:72[2] Arabic: āyāt. See Notepad VIII.

7:72[3] See note to (al) mu'minūn at 8:2.

¶7.10 7:73[1] Does not correspond with any figure of the Hebrew scriptures.

7:73[2] Arabic: āya. See Notepad VIII.

7:73[3] Arabic: sū' (sg.), aswā' (pl.). See Notepad XI.v.

7:75[1] I.e. as a fact.

7:75[2] See note to 58:4 for Qur'anic usage of to believe in.

7:77[1] Muhammad Asad comments here: The verb ʿaqara primarily denotes "he hamstrung [an animal]"- i.e., before slaughtering it, so that it might not run away. This barbarous custom was widely practiced in pre-Islamic Arabia, so that ʿaqr ("hamstringing") gradually became synonymous with slaughtering in a cruel manner (Razi; see also Lane V, 2107 f).

7:80[1] Under the dominant Egypt-Palestine thesis, and the typical Islamic extension to the dominant Egypt-Palestine thesis, the location of Lūṭ's city is taken to be in the region of the Dead Sea. Under either of the Petra theses ʿĀd and Thamūd may be claimed for the same general region. The ʿAsīr-Ḥejāz and Arabia Felix theses forward other locations. See Notepad XVI and Notepad XVIII.

7:80[2] Arabic: fāḥiṯ̲ah̲at, faḥ̲sh̲ā'. See Notepad XI.iii and Notepad XXII and note to 26:166.

7:81[1] Arabic: min dūni. See note to 2:23.

7:81[2] Arabic: bal. See note to 2:88.

7:84[1] I.e. of destruction.

¶7.11 7:85[1] Typically identified (under the Egypt-Palestine thesis) with Midian, the land east of the Sinai Peninsula; under the Arabia Felix thesis it is further south into the Arabian Peninsula. The Qur'anic usage at 28:45 (ahl madyan) is suggestive of a tribe rather than a place (although, naturally, tribes give their names to locations). All instances appear in the notes and reference this verse. See Notepad XVI and Notepad XVIII. See Notepad XV.

7:85[2] Sometimes identified with the Jethro of the Hebrew scriptures, but neither conclusively nor convincingly in my view.

7:85[3] Lit.: things.

7:85[4] See note to (al) mu'minūn at 8:2. See grammar note to 2:91.

7:86[1] Cf. 7:16.

7:86[2] Arabic: ṣadda + ʿan. See note to 8:47.

7:90[1] Arabic: alladh̲īna kafarū. See note to 2:6 and Notepad II.i.

7:92[1] Or prospered.

7:93[1] Arabic: (al) kāfirūn. Typically rendered (the) unbelievers. See note to 2:19 and Notepad II.iii.

¶7.12 7:95[1] Arabic: sayyi'a. See Notepad XI.ix.

7:95[2] Or forgot (i.e. overlooked the reality of things); Lane (p. 2145) notes that, in addition to its common senses of forgiving and pardoning ''afā signifies also It was, or became, much in quantity, or many in number[...] And عَفَـوا in the Kur vii 93 [sic] means They became many, or numerous.' Translators tend to render here along the lines of increased in number, and I have followed that convention. However, we should note that in all remaining twenty-six instances the dominant sense is of forgiving or pardoning. This thread of a lack of mindfulness carries over into the latter portion of the verse. All instances occur here: 2:52, 2:109, 2:178, 2:187, 2:237, 2:237, 2:237, 2:286, 3:152, 3:155, 3:159, 4:99, 4:149, 4:153, 5:13, 5:15, 5:95, 5:101, 7:95, 9:43, 9:66, 24:22, 42:25, 42:30, 42:34, 42:40, 64:14.

7:95[3] I.e. they became degenerate and blind to the lessons of life, seeing the events which had befallen their forebears as nothing more than chance or luck.

7:96[1] See note to al muttaqūn at 2:2.

¶7.13 7:100[1] For some reason a value of become clear (and equivalents) is found here with N. J. Dawood, Saheeh International, Muhammad Asad, and Hilali & Khan. A. J. Arberry, however, remains true to the word's dominant sense in the text, and I do the same. The interested student may compare all 144 instances of this verb: 1:6, 2:26, 2:142, 2:143, 2:185, 2:198, 2:213, 2:213, 2:258, 2:264, 2:272, 3:8, 3:86, 3:86, 3:101, 4:26, 4:68, 4:88, 4:137, 4:168, 4:175, 5:16, 5:16, 5:51, 5:67, 5:108, 6:71, 6:77, 6:80, 6:84, 6:84, 6:87, 6:88, 6:90, 6:125, 6:144, 6:149, 6:161, 7:30, 7:43, 7:43, 7:100, 7:148, 7:155, 7:159, 7:178, 7:181, 9:19, 9:24, 9:37, 9:80, 9:109, 9:115, 10:9, 10:25, 10:35, 10:35, 10:35, 10:35, 10:43, 12:52, 13:27, 13:31, 14:4, 14:12, 14:21, 14:21, 16:9, 16:36, 16:37, 16:93, 16:104, 16:107, 16:121, 17:9, 17:97, 18:17, 18:24, 19:43, 19:58, 20:50, 20:79, 20:122, 20:128, 21:73, 22:4, 22:16, 22:24, 22:24, 22:37, 24:35, 24:46, 26:62, 26:78, 27:63, 28:22, 28:50, 28:56, 28:56, 29:69, 30:29, 32:24, 32:26, 33:4, 34:6, 35:8, 37:23, 37:99, 37:118, 38:22, 39:3, 39:18, 39:23, 39:37, 39:57, 40:28, 40:29, 40:38, 41:17, 42:13, 42:52, 42:52, 43:27, 43:40, 45:23, 46:10, 46:30, 47:5, 48:2, 48:20, 49:17, 61:5, 61:7, 62:5, 63:6, 64:6, 64:11, 72:2, 74:31, 76:3, 79:19, 87:3, 90:10, 93:7.

7:123[3] Muhammad Asad demonstrates here the type of process which is the cornerstone of the present work; I repeat his comment in full: This personal pronoun may refer either to God or to Moses; but a similar expression in 20:71 and 26:49 makes it obvious that it refers here to Moses.

7:127[3] Lit.: we are over them subjugators.

7:128[1] See note to al muttaqūn at 2:2.

7:129[1] Arabic root: -d̲h-y. See Notepad X.

7:129[2] I.e. your presence has not benefited us in any way.

7:129[3] The statements at 7:128-129 and then at 7:137 (also: 17:103-104) appear to serve the Arabia Felix thesis or ʿAsīr-Ḥejāz thesis against the Egypt-Palestine thesis since the Qur'an suggests that the children of Israel inherited the land held by Fir'awn — a position incompatible with the Egypt-Palestine thesis. See Notepad XVI and Notepad XVIII.

¶7.16 7:130[1] Arabic: fir'awn. See note to 2:49.

7:130[2] Lit.: fruits.

7:133[2] Arabic: faṣṣala — to set out (that is, present in a logical order, categorise) and to make plain or detail.
7:136[1] I.e. Firʿawn and his house. This scenario is problematical for the dominant Egypt-Palestine thesis; a ruler personally pursuing an enemy accompanied by his kin better fits a small tribal scenario. See Notepad XVI and my book The God Protocol.
7:136[2] Arabic: yamm — wide expanse of water, either river or sea.
7:136[3] Arabic: āyāt. See Notepad VIII.
7:137[1] See note to 7:129. The Arabia Felix thesis reminds us here that Yemen is the Arabian peninsula's most fertile part, a fact which the Romans noted when giving the region the name Arabia Felix (i.e. happy or fortunate Arabia). The Yemen region has two main fertile regions, a lesser one in the east and a much greater one in the west. See Notepad XVI.
7:137[2] Arabic: firʿawn. See note to 2:49.
7:137[3] This presents an awkward fit with the dominant Egypt-Palestine thesis since the buildings and works of many pharaohs not only remain, but are on public display. See Notepad XVI.
7:138[1] Arabic: ʿakafa — to be devoted (to), to remain (in or at).
7:138[2] Arabic: (sg.) ṣanam, (pl.) aṣnām. See note to 14:35.
7:141[1] Arabic: firʿawn. See note to 2:49.

¶7.17 7:142[1] I.e. Hārūn was to take Mūsā's place while he was gone.
7:143[1] Lit.: When his Lord revealed Him.
7:143[2] I.e. crumbled to dust.
7:143[3] Arabic: ṣaʿiq. This noun occurs just once. Its related noun occurs at 2:19, 2:55, 4:153, 13:13, 41:13, 41:13, 41:17, 51:44 and is rendered by me and (usually) by the Traditionalist as thunderbolt. Here, however, he usually renders as faint or unconscious and synonyms. Clearly, thunderbolt is the root concept to which ideas such as faint have been attached. I render here thunderstruck as it retains something of the original sense. Where the verb occurs (at 39:68 and 52:45) I have rendered in like manner, and both instances have notes which reference this verse.
7:143[4] See note to ṣ-b-ḥ root at 2:30.
7:143[5] See note to (al) muʿminūn at 8:2.
7:145[1] Arabic: min kulli. See note to 2:164.
7:145[2] The point implicit here is that there was no oral tradition; everything Mūsā received from God found in written form at that time. The Talmud (which the person named Jesus refers to and condemns in the Christian Bible as the traditions of the elders) is anathema to the Torah; much the same can be said of the ḥadīṯh literature vis-à-vis the Qur'an.
7:145[3] Arabic root: f-s-q. See note to 2:26 and Notepad XI.vii.
7:146[1] Arabic: āyāt. See Notepad VIII.

7:147[2] Cf. 34:33.

¶7.18 7:148[1] Lit.: after him.
7:148[2] Arabic: ẓālimūn. See note to 2:229.
7:149[1] Lit.: when their hands were descended upon — an idiom meaning when they were overcome with regret.
7:150[1] Lit.: after me.
7:150[2] I.e. over my misfortune. Arabic: shamata — to rejoice at the misfortune of; to gloat over the misfortune of. This is the only occurrence of this root.
7:150[3] Arabic: ẓālimūn. See note to 2:229.

¶7.19 7:152[1] The construction of this verse allows the possibility that 'those who took up the calf' has an application broader than its original setting, and applies to anyone who constructs his own cult in derogation of what God has sent down.
7:153[1] Arabic: sayyiʿāt. See Notepad XI.x.
7:154[1] Lit.: off, away, or from.
7:155[1] Arabic: fitnah. See note to 2:102.
7:156[1] Arabic: hāda. Said in this instance to mean to repent or to return by the Traditionalist — with which assessment I have concurred. This form I verb occurs 11 times in the text (2:62, 4:46, 4:160, 5:41, 5:44, 5:69, 6:146, 7:156, 16:118, 22:17, 62:6) and in all cases other than this one it refers to those who hold to Judaism).
7:156[2] I.e. mercy.

7:156[6] Arabic: āyāt. See Notepad VIII.
7:157[1] Arabic: ummiyyun. See note to 2:78.
7:157[2] The Traditionalist view is that the expression al nabī al ummiyy (the unschooled or heathen prophet) is an epithet used exclusively for the Prophet Muḥammad. I do not agree with that view, and these are my reasons: from 7:103 to this point (over 50 verses), the narrative is focused solely on the history of Mūsā. Mūsā was not schooled in the Writ; rather, he received the Writ by means of revelation. Under the dominant Egypt-Palestine thesis, he was brought up as an Egyptian; under the Arabia Felix and ʿAsīr-Ḥejāz theses, he was brought up in the house of a tribal chief named Firʿawn. In any event, by the standard we use here to judge ummiyy (i.e. one outside or ignorant of the Writ) Mūsā was — at least until he received the Writ — fully ummiyy. The expression al nabī al ummiyy (the unschooled or heathen prophet) occurs just twice in the Qur'an — here and in the next verse. Due to his disproportionate emphasis on Muḥammad, the Traditionalist, in my opinion, has missed the point being made here. The point is not that Muḥammad was unlearned and therefore the Qur'an is all the more a miracle (which is the version the Traditionalist promulgates); it is that Mūsā was unschooled in the Writ and so was Muḥammad. The Traditionalist view places the narrative pivot after the long account of Mūsā here at 7:157. But it is simply not there. It comes in the next verse (Say thou[...]). Logically speaking, at 7:157 the person being described is the same individual the previous 53 verses were dedicated to; namely: Mūsā. It is Mūsā who is [...]the unschooled prophet — whom they find written with them in the Torah and the Gospel[...] (to the end of the verse). It is only at 7:158 that the narrative shifts to Muḥammad. The point of this device, in my opinion, is to establish a correlation between the first unschooled prophet Mūsā (who brought his people out of bondage and gave them a Writ) and Muḥammad who had a comparable mission for the whole of humanity. Having established this correlation, the narrative then returns to the story of Mūsā.
7:157[3] At this juncture the Traditionalist often points at Deut. 18:15 which reads: The LORD thy God will raise up unto thee a Prophet from the midst of thee, of thy brethren, like unto me; unto him ye shall hearken. Since they typically have a grasp on the Hebrew scriptures no broader than this single verse, the Traditionalist's students are impressed. What they probably don't know is that Christians also claim this verse for Jesus. And what they almost certainly don't know is that, were one to read the Torah free of the later claims made against it by Muslims and Christians, Deut. 18:15 comports most convincingly with neither Jesus nor Muḥammad, but with Mūsā's immediate successor, Joshua. See note to 7:157 above.

7:157[4] Arabic: injīl. See note to 5:46. Pursuant to the notes to the present verse treating of Mūsā: it is a fact that the personality of Mūsā is found in those accounts of the life of Jesus which the Christian holds as canonical. The Traditionalist, predictably, tries to insert Muḥammad into the Christians' text, and he does so by means of inventive claims around the word paraclete as found at John 14:14-17. However, those claims have both linguistic and contextual problems and do not stand up to scrutiny. The Traditionalist makes additional, related claims on the basis of the word aḥmad at 61:6 (see that verse and note thereto).

7:171[1] Arabic: nataqa. This is the only occurrence of this verb so there is nothing to cross-reference it with. It is not found in Wehr and almost ignored by Lane. I found it in an Arabic-Russian dictionary defined as реамъ (tear, break, rip). However, the context is clear: the mountain was placed above them like a canopy, the requisite action for which is lift. This also comports with the expression raise (above them) the mount which occurs several times. In that construction the noun is always ṭūr (which I render mount throughout).
7:171[2] See note to al muttaqūn at 2:2.

¶7.22 7:172[1] Arabic: ẓuhūr. Non-sectarian lexicons list ẓuhūr as backs and related terms — such as the word is rendered in all remaining cases both by me and, generally, by the Traditionalist (the full set comprises 2:101, 2:189, 3:187, 6:31, 6:94, 6:138, 6:146, 7:172, 9:35, 21:39, 35:45, 42:33, 43:13, 84:10, 94:3). Sectarian dictionaries (such as Badawi-Haleem) list loins as the value; however, sectarian dictionaries are highly unreliable; they tend to list as objective fact their own later conclusions and assumptions. While I agree that loins fits the case here, that is not what it says. It says backs. Most Traditionalists render loins — despite the incongruity and lack of true linguistic purchase. However, among them, I found that M.H. Shakir renders backs as have I. The scenario in the narrative is that of a gathering of all humanity predating life in the World. It sounds as though the progeny of Ādam is being called forward from behind other children of Ādam to bear witness against themselves; but God knows best.

7:176[1] I.e. by means of proofs.
7:176[2] Arabic: ḥamala +ʿalā. As per most translators' rendering, this combination of verb and preposition does mean to attack. However, one does not — even were one so inclined — attack a dog. One beats or kicks a dog. And in such a case the dog either runs away or fights back – it does not 'pant'. This combination of verb and preposition also means to win over. And since it is precisely what the sane among us generally try to do when we interact with new dogs — and since it fits the context — I render here according to that logic. This line of thought finds support in the phrase following also since one does not 'attack' those who repudiate God's proofs; one either tries to convince them (i.e. to win them over) or one leaves them alone.
7:176[3] Muhammad Asad comments here: Because his attitudes are influenced only by what his earth-bound desires represent to him as his immediate "advantages" or "disadvantages", the type of man alluded to in this passage is always - whatever the outward circumstances - a prey to a conflict between his reason and his base urges and, thus, to inner disquiet and imaginary fears and cannot attain to that peace of mind which a believer achieves through his faith.

7:180[1] At this juncture I will say the following: the Traditionalist insists on crying allahu akbar! (God is greater!) at every opportunity — so much so that it has become his defining catch-phrase. The reader may be interested to note that allahu akbar — where akbar references grammatically allahu — is nowhere found in the Qur'an. According to the Qur'an, God is not akbar (greater or greatest) but kabīr (great).

7:181[1] Arabic: bil ḥaqqi. See Notepad XVII (bil ḥaqqi ii.).

7:181[2] Cf. 7:159.

¶7.23 7:182[1] Arabic: āyāt. See Notepad VIII.

7:182[2] Arabic: min ḥaythu. See note to 2:149.

7:183[1] Cf. 68:45.

7:184[1] Lit.: There is not in their companion any possession (cf. 34:46). Arabic: jinna. See Article SJC.

7:185[1] Arabic: ḥadīth — story; account; narrative, narration. The Qur'an's usage of this term appears at times to anticipate the later abuse of it by Muslims.

7:187[1] Lit.: resting or establishment. Cf. 79:42.

7:187[2] While I have rendered here using privy (as does N. J. Dawood), I include Muhammad Asad's comment here for interest: The verb ahfa means "he did [a thing] in an excessive measure" or "he exceeded the usual bounds in doing [something]". In connection with an inquiry, and especially when followed by 'anhu or 'anha ("about it"), it signifies "he tried hard to gain insight [into something] by persistently inquiring about it". Thus, used as a participle, it means "one who has gained insight [into something] through persistent inquiry". In the above context, the implication is that no amount of inquiry or speculation can reveal to man - the prophets included - the coming of the Last Hour before its actual manifestation.

7:187[3] I refer the interested reader to compare this statement with the non-Qur'anic literature preferred by the Traditionalist to the Qur'an itself in which Muḥammad is portrayed as a man with extensive knowledge on such questions. Additionally, this statement refutes the thousands of books and doctrines composed by Christians and others calculating and prognosticating on the time of the End.

¶7.24 7:189[1] Arabic: zawj is a common word for spouse, can refer to either a male or female, and signifies something which makes up one half of a whole, a whole which itself is incomplete without the second half (e.g. a shoe). This word has a feminine possessive object agreeing with the feminine noun nafs (soul) above.

7:189[2] Arabic: sakana + ilā — to be reassured by, trust in. Cf. 30:21.

7:189[3] I.e. he lies with her.

7:189[4] I.e. does not notice it.

7:189[5] Grammar: dual.

7:189[6] Arabic root: ṣ-l-ḥ. This root is rendered by me as righteous or right throughout. However, it is unlikely (given how quickly they turn from God alone) that these parents would primarily be concerned with spiritual qualities. Clearly, the meaning is whole, healthy, right, properly formed, without defect, sound. This usage grants us some insight into the broader meaning of righteous as used in the Qur'an.

7:190[1] Grammar: dual.

7:190[2] Grammar: dual.

7:190[3] See note to Arabic root: sh-r-k at 6:78 and Notepad VI; i.e. causes other than God.

7:190[4] Grammar: dual.

7:190[5] See note to Arabic root: sh-r-k at 6:78 and Notepad VI.

7:191[1] I.e. people in general (this is now in the plural rather than the dual).

7:191[2] See note to Arabic root: sh-r-k at 6:78 and Notepad VI.

7:191[3] I.e. people in general (such as those who ascribe a partnership as evinced above at 7:189-190).

7:192[1] I.e. those to whom they ascribe a partnership.

7:192[2] I.e. people in general (such as those who ascribe a partnership as evinced above at 7:189-190).

7:193[1] To the Traditionalist the passage following treats of calling to false deities and the futility thereof. I disagree; rather, it comprises a taut argument and template for calling people to guidance. His confusion on this point arises due to a characteristic of Arabic usage. The verb to call in Arabic means both to summon and to supplicate. (In addition, where the verb is found with ilā the sense is to invite to, and I render thus throughout.) This in some part explains the Traditionalist's reading of 7:194 which he takes to be a challenge to the idolaters to supplicate to their false gods. It is, rather, an exhortation to the believers to invite others to guidance. The stages in the formula are: 1. invite them; 2. let them respond; 3. challenge them to do their worst while stating one's own faith in God and his Writ as one's only defence (i.e. to lay down the gauntlet). The emphasis is on putting one's faith in God alone; in cutting ties with — and realising the futility of trusting in — anything other than God. I provide comments throughout to guide the reader through the passage and to draw his attention to salient points.

7:193[2] This is in the plural and thus does not address the Messenger as in individual. The object of the Qur'an is not for one to join an organised religion, or to outsource responsibility for using one's brain to people who can point to scant intellectual or cultural success in the last thousand years and thereby become 'a Muslim'; rather, it is to lead a life which is righteous, and to call others to guidance.

7:193[3] I.e. those people who ascribe a partnership (as evinced above at 7:189-190).

7:194[1] I.e. the believers. See note to 7:193.

7:194[2] Arabic: min dūni. See note to 2:23.

7:194[3] I.e. you are not responsible for the results; they are humans just like you and possess the same general functional abilities.

7:194[4] I.e. so you (believers) call them (those who ascribe a partnership). Stage 1 in the formula (see note to 7:193).

7:194[5] Stage 2 in the formula (see note to 7:193).

7:194[6] I.e. the believers.

7:195[1] I.e. those to whom you call. Each of the things in the list which follows is created by God in the womb, which fact refers the reader back to the segment beginning at 7:189; cf. also 7:179.

7:195[2] Implication: yes, they do because they are created like you, but if they choose not to use their legs they will not respond.

7:195[3] Implication: yes, they do because they are created like you, but if they choose not to use their hands they will not help themselves.

7:195[4] Implication: yes, they do because they are created like you, but if they choose not to use their eyes they will not see (cf. 7:198).

7:195[5] Implication: yes, they do because they are created like you, but if they choose not to use their ears they will not hear when called to guidance (cf. 7:198).

7:195[6] See note to Arabic root: sh-r-k at 6:78 and Notepad VI. The concept of partners is said by the Traditionalist to refer only to fraudulent gods. I think the connotation is much wider than that and includes authorities of any kind (today: government, heavily promoted 'scientists', opinion-makers such as actors and other semi-fictitious personas) and all fiction-based belief systems, including most of what today passes for religion.

7:196[1] Lit.: the God. The point lost in English is that the Arabic noun for the eternal deity is the God (allāh) — as a point of interest, Arabic-speaking Christians use allāh. Arabic uses no capital letters. In the Arabic, this phrase looks something like: my ally is the god who sent down the writ.

7:196[2] Arabic: al kitāb. See Notepad IX.ii.

7:196[3] The last two clauses of 7:195 and the whole of 7:196 comprise Stage 3 in the formula (see note to 7:193).

7:197[1] I.e. the believers. See note to 7:193.

7:197[2] Arabic: min dūni. See note to 2:23.

7:197[3] The point here is not — as the Traditionalist has it — the futility of calling to false gods as opposed to calling to God; it is that all those to whom we believers call besides God (i.e. those whom we call to guidance) cannot help us, nor can they help themselves. See note to 7:193.

7:197[4] I.e. those who ascribe a partnership (who are now also the object in the next clause). Cf. 7:192.

7:198[1] I.e. those people who ascribe a partnership. Cf. 7:193.

7:198[2] Cf. 7:195.

7:198[3] Cf. 7:195.

7:199[1] Cf. 2:219. I understand this phrase to mean Take thou what of men's surplus is freely given. However, it is treated variously by translators. A. J. Arberry has Take the abundance, while Saheeh International has Take what is given freely supported by a note: From the dispositions of men or from their wealth. In other words, be easy in dealing with them and avoid causing them difficulty. Meanwhile both N. J. Dawood and Hilali & Khan have Show forgiveness.

7:199[2] Arabic: 'urf — kindness, beneficence; what is customary, known to be good and right; what is approved. We can take the sense to be what is known to be right or what is customary in relation to that revelation received by the Prophet. The only other instance of this word is at 77:1.

7:199[3] I.e. do not rise to vain or empty provocations (see next verse).

7:200[1] I take this to indicate fear or anger in dealing with those who prefer ignorance.

7:200[2] Or adversary (against the command of God). See Article SJC.

7:201[2] Arabic: ṭawafa. Lit.: one who moves about. See note to 2:125.

7:201[3] Or adversary (against the command of God). See Article SJC.

7:201[4] I.e. they seek protection in God (cf. 7:200).

7:202[1] I take this to indicate those whom the believers have called to guidance as per 7:193-199.

7:202[2] I take this to mean that when the ignorant among whom those in prudent fear live act as additional agents for the shayṭān, then those in prudent fear cease not seeking protection in God (cf. 7:200). That shayṭān treats of an adversary (against the command of God). See Article SJC.

7:204[1] Arabic: qur'ān — reading, recital, recitation, something which is read out.

8:1[2] I.e. what God sent through his messenger.

8:1[3] See note to (al) mu'minūn at 8:2. See grammar note to 2:91.

8:2[1] Qur'anic definition: (al) mu'minūn (sg.: mu'min) (ḥaqqan) — the believers (in truth). The term al mu'minūn is generally translated (which convention I follow) as the believers. The problem with the idea of belief in English is that it can be associated either with gullibility or with opinion based upon nothing concrete, or it invites the assumption that one who has it has something which defies any analysis. Happily, we have the Qur'an's definition of the term by which a believer — more specifically 'a believer in truth' — can identify himself as such to himself on the basis of set criteria as straightforwardly as can a mechanic or a nurse. Such people, then, have certain qualities: 1. Their hearts fear when God is remembered 2. The reading of God's proofs (i.e. scripture) increases them in faith 3. They place their trust in God 4. They uphold the duty (to serve him alone, seek help from him alone, and obey his laws) 5. They spend out of what God gives them. The second half of this definition is found at 8:74 and it comprises: 6. Those who believe 7. Those who emigrate 8. Those who strive in the cause of God 9. Those who give shelter 10. Those who help. Thus the equation is quite simple. If a man has qualities 1 through 10 he is a believer in truth. This indicates that there are believers other than those who are believers in truth (as the segment 8:1-14 indicates, since — despite the fact that this insight has eluded the Traditionalist — al kāfirūn is a group which attaches itself to the believers, and found more generally inside the gate than outside it). However, if a man has none of these qualities (or is deficient in one or more of them) and has no desire to acquire them, he may be many things but a believer in truth is not one of them. It will be noted that the qualities which define a believer are not dependent upon (and in fact require no mention of) a religion of any stripe. All instances of the participle form of this verb which do not take a direct object appear in the notes and reference this verse.

8:4[2] Arabic: ḥaqqan. See Notepad XVII (ḥaqq- ii.).

8:5[1] Here kamā (like, like as, as) serves to connect what precedes to what follows. What follows treats of and expands upon each of the subjects mentioned in 8:1-4 (namely: what constitutes a true believer; those whose faith comes from hearing God's word; those who fear him and uphold their duty; and among whom are degrees of honour or achievement). This instance of kamā (like, like as, as) is retrospectively referenced by idh (when) in that series of points which follows (8:7, 8:9, 8:11, 8:12, 8:30, 8:32, 8:42, 8:43, 8:44) the argument of which is brought to a set of conclusions and directives at 8:45-47, and followed by two more points (8:48, 8:49). The Traditionalist has some extraneous stories which he insinuates into the narrative by which means he hampers any serious study of the Qur'an and supplants its lessons with things other than that which God sent down.

8:12[3] Arabic: alladhīna āmanū. See note to 2:257 and Notepad II.iv.

8:12[4] Arabic: alladhīna kafarū. See note to 2:6 and Notepad II.i.

8:12[5] The expression strike above the necks, and strike from them every fingertip in my opinion is an imperative directed to the angels mentioned in the opening clause of 8:12 (When thy Lord instructed the angels), and indicates the confounding of human effort, making the mind foggy and slow and the hands fumbling and weak, but opinions on this matter differ, and God knows best.

8:13[1] Arabic: dhālika bianna. See note to 22:6 and Notepad XIV.

8:14[1] I.e. that is the reality, so deal with it.

8:14[2] This continues the dhālika bianna statement at 8:13.

8:14[3] Arabic: al kāfirūn. See note to 2:19 and Notepad II.iii. The point the Traditionalist does not — or perhaps will not — grasp is that al kāfirūn are not an external enemy, but an internal one; a subset of those who claim to believe.

8:15[1] Arabic: alladhīna āmanū. See note to 2:257 and Notepad II.iv.

8:15[2] Arabic: alladhīna kafarū. See note to 2:6 and Notepad II.i.

8:15[3] Lit.: the backs.

8:16[1] Lit.: swerving; i.e. as part of a stratagem focused on victory.

8:17[1] See note to (al) mu'minūn at 8:2.

8:17[2] Sc. he required you to fight.

8:18[1] Sc. "Taste it!" Cf. 8:14.

8:18[2] Arabic: al kāfirūn. See note to 2:19 and Notepad II.iii.

8:19[1] I.e. those who ignore warning (cf. 8:15).

8:19[2] I.e. the Arabic makes clear that victory is implied here.

8:19[3] I.e. the believers will fight you.

8:19[4] See note to (al) mu'minūn at 8:2.

¶8.3 8:20[1] Arabic: alladhīna āmanū. See note to 2:257 and Notepad II.iv.

8:20[2] I.e. what God sent through his messenger.

8:20[3] Some translators render here him and others Him, the Arabic being ambiguous. The context, however, is not; given mention of a messenger, one must infer a message.

8:24[1] Arabic: alladhīna āmanū. See note to 2:257 and Notepad II.iv.

8:24[2] Some translators render here him and others Him, the Arabic being ambiguous. The context, however, is not; given mention of a messenger, one must infer a message.

8:24[3] Arabic: ḥāla. This verb has a connotation of interfere, or come between.

8:25[1] See note to al muttaqūn at 2:2.

8:25[2] Arabic: fitnah. See note to 2:102. In this case: death and what follows, for we are all to die.

8:25[3] Cf. 8:13.

8:26[1] Or victory.

8:27[1] Arabic: alladhīna āmanū. See note to 2:257 and Notepad II.iv.

8:27[2] Lit.: and.

8:27[3] I.e. you know this to be the case (cf. 2:22, 2:42, 2:75, 2:146, 2:188, 3:71, 3:75, 3:78, 3:135, 8:27, 43:86, 58:14).

8:28[1] Arabic: fitnah. See note to 2:102.

¶8.4 8:29[1] Arabic: alladhīna āmanū. See note to 2:257 and Notepad II.iv.

8:29[2] See note to al muttaqūn at 2:2. See grammar note to 2:91.

8:29[3] Arabic: furqān. In the Qur'an, furqān has a connotation of division between the people of God and the world at large; those who believe and those who reject. See note to 2:53.

8:29[4] Arabic: sayyi'āt. See Notepad XI.x.

8:30[1] I.e. And like when. This instance of idh refers back to 8:5 (see also note thereto).

8:30[2] Arabic: alladhīna kafarū. See note to 2:6 and Notepad II.i.

8:31[1] Arabic: āyāt. See Notepad VIII.

8:32[1] I.e. And like when. This instance of idh refers back to 8:5 (see also note thereto).

8:32[2] Arabic: al ḥaqq. See Notepad XVII (al ḥaqq i.).

8:33[1] I have rendered close to both N. J. Dawood and A. J. Arberry here. Acceptably rendered also by Saheeh International while they seek forgiveness.

8:34[1] This clause is in the active voice in Arabic, a fact which is impossible to marry satisfactorily in English while preserving the opening convention (how can they not[...]?).

8:34[2] Arabic: ṣadda + ʿan. See note to 8:47.

8:34[3] Arabic: al masjid al ḥarām. See Notepad VII.ii. This was the forum in which debate concerning the creator of the universe took place under the nomadic system of Arabia.

8:34[4] See note to al muttaqūn at 2:2.

8:35[1] Arabic: ṣalāt. Generically, ṣalāt denotes duty. Here it refers to those who ignore warning (8:30). They are reproached since their duty consisted in nothing more than whistling and clapping (i.e. in forming an audience to hear out arguments concerning God) at that place at which by convention such questions were debated. (The site at Petra features a large Roman outdoor theatre capable of seating many hundreds of spectators.) However, the site at Petra is now closed to the believers (see 9:28 and Notepad XVI). Refusing to listen does not absolve one of culpability. See note to 2:3 and Article SZC.

8:35[2] Arabic: bayt. The Traditionalist claims that this instance of the common noun bayt (house or household) indicates a special house of religious significance. That is not what the Qur'an says; but I cannot prove him wrong, so I give him the benefit of the doubt. I can provide evidence, however, that Mecca fails as the location for al masjid al ḥarām (see my book The God Protocol). Additionally, the verse treats of a former people — a people for whom al masjid al ḥarām was of religious significance. That time has now passed (see note to 9:28 and Notepad XVI). In such a case all that remains to us is the principal moral lesson.

8:36[1] Arabic: alladhīna kafarū. See note to 2:6 and Notepad II.i.

8:36[2] Arabic: ṣadda + ʿan. See note to 8:47.

8:36[3] Arabic: alladhīna kafarū. See note to 2:6 and Notepad II.i.

¶8.5 8:38[1] Arabic: alladhīna kafarū. See note to 2:6 and Notepad II.i.

8:38[2] Arabic: sunnah. See note to 3:137. See also 17:77, 33:62, 35:43, 48:23.

8:38[3] And should be a warning to them. Cf. 33:62, 35:43, 48:23.

8:39[1] Given a complete reading of verses 8:38-39, this imperative can only imply those who fight you.

8:39[2] Arabic: fitnah. See note to 2:102.

8:39[3] Arabic: dīn. See Notepad V.

8:41[1] See note to 4:2.

8:41[2] Lit.: son of the road. See note to 2:177.

8:41[3] Arabic: furqān. In the Qur'an, furqān has a connotation of division between the people of God and the world at large; those who believe and those who reject. See note to 2:53.

8:42[1] I.e. Like when. This instance of idh refers back to 8:5 (see also note thereto).

8:43[1] I.e. Like when. This instance of idh refers back to 8:5 (see also note thereto).

8:44[1] I.e. And like when. This instance of idh refers back to 8:5 (see also note thereto).

8:44[2] Lit.: the matters.

¶8.6 8:45[1] Arabic: alladhīna āmanū. See note to 2:257 and Notepad II.iv.

8:46[1] I.e. what God sent through his messenger.

8:46[2] Arabic: rīḥ - spirit, wind. I understand it here in the sense of esprit de corps. Muhammad Asad comments here: The relevant word is rih, which literally signifies "wind"; it is used metaphorically to denote "spirit" or "moral strength".

8:46[3] Arabic: al ṣābirūn. See note to 2:155.

8:47[1] Arabic: ṣadda + ʿan — forsake, turn away from; to hinder, prevent, divert, to turn away. A difficulty in understanding this verb is due to the fact that it has two related applications. It can mean to divert (e.g. a person turns away another person from something). But it can also mean to forsake (e.g. a person himself turns away from something). For more on this ambiguity in the Arabic see Lane (p. 1668) where we find that the preposition ʿan offers nothing by way of concrete guidance. The Traditionalist typically renders in both senses but without any discernible system. My own understanding is: where there exists a human object I regard the verb in its first application (e.g. he diverts his friend from the road); where there is no human object I see the verb its second application (e.g. he forsakes the road). This approach fits all contexts and requires none of the interpolation which typifies Traditionalist translations, which is why I believe it to be correct. The complete set is found at 2:217, 3:99, 4:55, 4:61, 4:167, 5:2, 5:91, 7:45, 7:86, 8:34, 8:36, 8:47, 9:9, 9:34, 11:19, 14:3, 14:10, 16:88, 16:94, 20:16, 22:25, 27:24, 28:87, 29:38, 34:32, 34:43, 40:37, 43:37, 47:1, 47:32, 47:34, 48:25, 58:16, 63:2. In this edition, I render in the translation 'to turn away from' which allows the same ambiguity in the English as is in the Arabic, and I supply notes which reference this verse for all instances. The instances at 27:43, 43:57, 43:62, 63:5 do not use ʿan.

8:48[1] I.e. Like when. This instance of idh refers back to 8:5 (see also note thereto).

8:48[2] Or adversary (against the command of God). See Article SJC.

8:48[3] Lit.: your neighbour — the implication being that he is duty-bound to aid and protect.

8:48[4] Cf. 8:13 and 8:25.

¶8.7 8:49[1] I.e. Like when. This instance of idh refers back to 8:5 (see also note thereto).

8:49[2] Arabic: munāfiqūn. See note to 4:138.

8:49[3] Arabic: dīn. See Notepad V.

8:50[1] Cf. 8:12 and note to 8:13.

8:50[2] Arabic: alladhīna kafarū. See note to 2:6 and Notepad II.i.

8:50[3] Sc. it would be a terrible sight indeed!

8:51[1] Arabic: dhālika bimā. See note to 22:10 and Notepad XIV.

8:51[2] Those who do wrong in this life do not simply pass away into oblivion or bliss; God is just.

8:51[3] Lit. the servants. See note to 2:207.

8:52[1] Arabic: da'b — custom, wont, habit; case, affair; persistence, eagerness, perseverance.

8:52[2] Arabic: fir'awn. See note to 2:49.

8:52[3] Arabic: āyāt. See Notepad VIII.

8:52[4] Arabic: dhunūb. See Notepad XI.iv.

8:53[1] Arabic: dhālika bianna. See note to 22:6 and Notepad XIV.

8:54[1] Arabic: da'b — custom, wont, habit; case, affair; persistence, eagerness, perseverance.

8:54[2] Arabic: fir'awn. See note to 2:49.

8:54[3] Arabic: āyāt. See Notepad VIII.

8:54[4] Arabic: dhunūb. See Notepad XI.iv.

8:54[5] Arabic: fir'awn. See note to 2:49. This and similar statements make clear that the house — that is, the tribal family — of Fir'awn was drowned along with Fir'awn himself. This scenario defies reasonable identification with the dominant Egypt-Palestine thesis. A ruler personally pursuing an enemy accompanied by his kin better fits a small tribal scenario. See Notepad XVI and my book The God Protocol.

8:54[6] Arabic: ẓālimūn. See note to 2:229.

8:55[1] Arabic: alladhīna kafarū. See note to 2:6 and Notepad II.i.

8:55[2] Arabic: lā yu'minūn. Qur'anic usage implies: (are those) lost in darkness. See note to 2:6 and Notepad II.ii.

8:56[1] See note to al muttaqūn at 2:2.

8:57[1] I.e. those who renege on their agreement.

8:58[1] I.e. have reason to fear. See note to 2:182. Muhammad Asad has a similar thought here: The "reason to fear treachery" must not, of course, be based on mere surmise but on clear, objective evidence (Tabari, Baghawi, Razi; also Manar X, 58).

8:58[2] I include Muhammad Asad's comment here for interest: I.e., "renounce the covenant in an equitable manner ('ald sawa')", Tabari explains this sentence thus: "Before making war on them, inform them that because of the clear evidence of their treachery thou hast renounced the treaty which existed between thee and them, so that both thou and they should know that thou art at war with them." Baghawi, in his commentary on this verse, gives an almost identical interpretation and adds, "so that they should not be under the false impression that thou hast renounced the treaty after having started the war." Thus the concluding sentence of this verse - "God does not love the treacherous" - is a warning to the believers as well as to their enemies (Manor X, 58 f.).

8:59[2] Lit.: outstripped, anticipated, come out ahead.

8:59[3] Or frustrate, cause failure to.

8:60[1] Arabic: min dūni. See note to 2:23.

8:62[1] See note to (al) mu'minūn at 8:2.

8:64[1] See note to (al) mu'minūn at 8:2. The usage here indicates that there exist believers (mu'minūn) other than those who follow the Prophet and, conversely, that the Prophet was accompanied also by those who were not mu'minūn (for example al kāfirūn and al munāfiqūn).

¶8.9 8:65[1] See note to (al) mu'minūn at 8:2.

8:65[2] Arabic: alladhīna kafarū. See note to 2:6 and Notepad II.i.

8:65[3] Muhammad Asad provides a helpful comment here: Some of the commentators see in this verse a divine prediction, thus: "If there be twenty of you .... they shall overcome two hundred ...", etc. Since, however, history shows that the believers, even at the time of the Prophet, were not always victorious against such odds, the above view is not tenable. In order to understand this passage correctly, we must read it in close conjunction with the opening sentence, "Inspire the believers to conquer all fear of death", whereupon we arrive at the meaning given in my rendering: namely, an exhortation to the believers to conquer all fear of death and to be so patient in adversity that they might be able to overcome an enemy many times their number (Razi: see also Manar X, 87). The concluding words of this verse --because they are people who cannot grasp it [i.e. the truth]" - can be understood in either of two ways: (a) as giving an additional reason of the true believers' superiority over "those who are bent on denying the truth" (alladhina kafaru), inasmuch as the latter, not believing in the eternal verities and in life after death cannot rise to that enthusiasm and readiness for self-sacrifice which distinguishes the true believers: or (b) as explaining that "those who are bent on denying the truth" deny it simply because their spiritual deafness and blindness prevents them from grasping it. To my mind, the second of these two interpretations is preferable, and particularly so in view of the fact that the Qur'an often explains in these terms the attitude of "those who deny the truth" (e.g., in 6:25, 7:179, 9:87, etc.).

8:66[1] Arabic: al ṣābirūn. See note to 2:155.

8:67[1] Arabic: athkuna — to wear out, exhaust; defeat, thrash. Typically rendered with an emphasis on general slaughter, I have rendered after Muhammad Asad using battled strenuously, and include Abdullah Yusuf Ali's note with some light editing: An ordinary war may be for territory or trade, revenge or military glory — all "temporal goods of this world." Such a war is condemned. But a Jihad is fought under strict conditions and solely for the cause of God. All baser motives, therefore are strictly excluded. The greed of gain in the shape of ransom from captives has no place in such warfare.

8:68[1] Arabic: kitāb. See Notepad IX.iii.

8:69[1] See note to al muttaqūn at 2:2.

¶8.10 8:71[1] Lit.: enabled them (i.e. to be defeated) or gave power (i.e. over them).

8:72[1] Arabic: alladhīna āmanū. See note to 2:257 and Notepad II.iv.

8:72[2] Arabic: alladhīna āmanū. See note to 2:257 and Notepad II.iv.

8:72[3] Arabic: dīn. See Notepad V. See 4:75-4:104 and notes; that segment treats of rescuing people of faith who seek liberty.

8:73[1] Arabic: alladhīna kafarū. See note to 2:6 and Notepad II.i.

8:73[2] This is a crucial point in the Traditionalist's presentation, and by reviewing the translation of the present clause by the staunchly Traditionalist Hilali & Khan, we can understand quite how crucial it is; it reads as follows: (and) if you (Muslims of the whole world collectively) do not do so (i.e. become allies, as one united block with one Khalifah - chief Muslim ruler for the whole Muslim world to make victorious Allah's Religion of Islamic Monotheism). By his own lights, only six of these words are in the text. And to have any sort of scriptural justification, his reading requires that the following be found in the Qur'an: 1. 'Allah's Religion of Islamic Monotheism' as intoned by the Traditionalist; 2. an instruction to have a single king ('Khalifah - chief Muslim ruler for the whole Muslim world'); 3. an instruction to make 'Allah's Religion of Islamic Monotheism' binding upon others. But none of this is in the Qur'an, and can only be made to seem to be in it given much deceit on the part of the Traditionalist teacher, and much ignorance of the Qur'an on the part of his student. These values are entirely the product of the Traditionalist's own efforts, and are imported into the Qur'an as assumed conclusions, ones which defy objective analysis in that context. And in those recent cases where he has managed to apply his psychosis on people as a political reality, no one has wanted to live in the result — not even the Traditionalist himself. He has been much happier to move to nominally Christian countries, and to avail himself of their generosity, tolerance, and fascination with promoting anything which is inimical to their own interests. The Traditionalist's understanding then, is proven not to work. That could mean that the Qur'an is wrong; or it could mean that the Traditionalist simply does not understand the Qur'an. Certainly, the Traditionalist has failed to grasp the core thread which runs through the Qur'an of warning; any military or society-building efforts — at least according to the Qur'an — coming only subsequent to that. See my work The God Protocol.

9:5[1] Arabic: al shahr al ḥarām (here plural: al ashhur). See note to 2:194. The Traditionalist makes much of this expression and claims to know when such months occur. However, the Qur'anic context indicates that these were simply months in which fighting was prohibited by treaty in this historical case.

9:5[2] See note to Arabic root: sh-r-k at 6:78 and Notepad VI.

9:5[3] Or lay siege to. Arabic: ḥaṣara. The Traditionalist typically renders this instance as lay siege to and synonyms. This form I verb occurs only twice, here and at 4:90. At 4:90 it unquestionably means constrain (and synonyms). While I accept that a siege is a form of restraint and that the typical rendering is correct, I apply the known value here as per my dominant methodology. A. J. Arberry renders similarly here.

9:5[4] I.e. of their idolatry.

9:5[5] Arabic: al ṣalāt; i.e. such duty as is incumbent. Here, the context suggests that the duty is to cease worshipping vanity and to turn to God alone. See note to 2:3 and Article SZC.

9:5[6] Arabic: al zakāt. It is interesting to note that the subject here is the idolaters. Idolatry has historically been associated with immoral sexual practices. In our day, it is precisely sexual immorality which the idolatrous world system promotes via all media and (now) state education. Additionally, where an idolatrous system is allowed to proliferate, it subjects the believers — especially the young — to harassment and assault by libertines and sexual deviants. Checking sexual deviancy and protecting the core society from it is a vital step in moving any society from a pathway of degradation to a pathway of social and moral health. Dawood has to visit and A. J. Arberry has to inhabit. Arabic: ʿamara. This form I verb occurs four times (9:17, 9:18, 30:9, 30:9); as a transitive verb it has two core senses: to maintain or to build, and to inhabit, fill with life or populate. ¶9.4 9:25[1] Or given you victory.

9:25[2] The only other instance of this root occurs at 19:13 (ḥanān — sympathy, tenderness). The Traditionalist assigns the instance here at 9:25 the value of a proper noun (that of a name he claims for a specific valley near Mecca which he asserts as the name of the precise location of the battle described here). The attentive reader will have noted the Traditionalist's habit of claiming implausible levels of specificity — ones which defy any sort of verification on the basis of the Qur'anic data — which tend towards a single end: to make him and his preferred literature the arbiter in the reading of God's revelation. Mecca as the locus for any portion of the Qur'anic narrative is here rejected (see Notepad XVI and note to 9:28 as well as my book The God Protocol), so claims for a location of any kind in that vicinity may be safely ignored. The ḥ-n-n root covers senses of longing, yearning, nostalgia, craving, desire. A plausible sense is — given a marking of ḥanayn rather than ḥunayn — is, perhaps, (two) desires; meanwhile, Lane (p. 657) notes that the Arabs called a particular month ḥunayn (cf. ramaḍān at 2:185). Since I cannot prove either case definitively, I have elected to leave the word untranslated, and to capitalise it (thereby treating it as a proper noun, and conceding the point to the Traditionalist in my translation). While I do not accept any of what Muhammad Asad writes here, I include it for the broader understanding of the interested student: The battle of Hunayn, a valley situated on one of the roads leading from Mecca to Ta'if, took place in the year 8 H., shortly after the conquest of Mecca by the Muslims. The latters' opponents were the pagan tribes of Hawazin (in whose territory the valley lay) and their allies, the Band Thaqif. The Muslim army - reinforced by many newly-converted Meccans - comprised about twelve thousand men, whereas the Hawazin and Thaqif had only one-third of that number at their disposal. Relying on their great numerical superiority, the Muslims were over-confident and, apparently, careless. In the narrow defiles beyond the oasis of Hunayn they fell into an ambush prepared by the tribesmen and began to retreat in disorder after heavy losses had been inflicted on them by the bedouin archers. It was only the example of the Prophet and his early adherents (the Meccan muhajirun and the ansar from Medina) that saved the day and turned the initial rout of the Muslims into a decisive victory. It is to this battle that verses 25 and 26 refer, pointing out that true succour can come only from God, and that great numbers, ties of kinship and worldly wealth are of no avail if they are "dearer to you than God and His Apostle and the struggle in His cause" (see preceding verse). As usual, the broader question is entirely moot since al masjid al ḥarām was closed to believers within the time of the revelation (see note to 9:28, and my book The God Protocol).

9:26[1] See note to (al) mu'minūn at 8:2.

9:26[2] Arabic: alladhīna kafarū. See note to 2:6 and Notepad II.i.

9:26[3] It is my understanding that this refers to the undesirable turn of events outlined at 9:25, a view which is supported at 9:27 also. It bears repeating that the term al kāfirūn does not apply exclusively to an external force of 'unbelievers'; it is how the Qur'an identifies those who claim virtue but fail to meet its requirements.

9:26[4] Arabic: al kāfirūn. See note to 2:19 and Notepad II.iii.

9:28[1] Arabic: alladhīna āmanū. See note to 2:257 and Notepad II.iv.

9:28[2] See note to Arabic root: sh-r-k at 6:78 and Notepad VI.

9:28[3] Typically read So let them not approach, the textual justification for reading lā taqrabū rather than lā yaqrabū follows. The Traditionalist's reading of this verse (provided here by Saheeh International, which is typical) is as: O you who have believed, indeed the polytheists are unclean, so let them not approach al-Masjid al-Ḥarām after this, their [final] year. And if you fear privation, Allāh will enrich you from His bounty if He wills. Indeed, Allāh is Knowing and Wise. The underlined portion of the verse above indicates that part of the text which is rendered by the form I verb qaraba — to approach, draw near. There are 11 instances of the form I of this verb in the Qur'an (2:35, 2:187, 2:222, 4:43, 6:151, 6:152, 7:19, 9:28, 12:60, 17:32, 17:34). All instances are preceded by the negative particle lā. In 10 of the 11 instances we find qaraba + lā + the jussive mood, and one case (12:60) lā is followed by the imperfective. In all cases it provides a direct warning against approaching something or, as in the case of 12:60, provides a statement of limitation of access to something. The verse at 9:28 is immediately conspicuous because only here has the Traditionalist pointed the text not in the second person (approach you not), but in the third person (let them not approach) — the difference here being merely that of placing two dots below the stem rather than above it — such dots not being intrinsic to the text in any case. However, this pointing of the verb here at 9:28 — one which is conspicuously anomalous across all other instances of this verb — requires that we accept a form of imperative in this single instance found nowhere else in the text. The force which is imputed to this word by the Traditionalist's reading is 'let them not approach'. This type of exhortation certainly exists in the Qur'an (e.g. 'let not such-and-such think that[...]'). But this convention, where it occurs — and especially where it appeals to a third-person plural subject — is a rhetorical device, and operates as an exhortation, or as strong advice. (Consider, for example, 51:59 — 'so let them not seek to hasten Me!') It nowhere operates as a literal imperative (there is no expectation that the hearer will literally prevent such-and-such from thinking anything whatever — although it is recommended that they comply). But at 9:28, the Traditionalist's pointing of this one word requires that we accept a form of imperative found nowhere else in the Qur'an: it requires that the reader take this rhetorical construction directed to a third-person plural subject as a binding, literal imperative upon himself. In summary, in order for the Traditionalist's pointing of this word to be valid, it requires — in this single instance — firstly, that we allow that, while all remaining instances of this verb are negative constructions which treat of second-person subjects, here it does so with a third-person subject; and secondly, that — in a case unique to the entire Qur'an — a negative jussive exhortation treating of a third-person plural subject has a literal imperative force binding upon the hearer. I do not accept this as a rational or reasonable position. The case I accept, is that this word is as I have translated it — 'approach not' — which reading does not require aberrant handling of the verb under discussion (given an otherwise uniform set across the Qur'an), and does not require that we impose upon the Qur'an a uniquely anomalous instance of a rhetorical device as a literal, binding imperative. During the final editing phase of this work, I was sent an objection to this thesis which, despite the objection's obvious weaknesses, I will address here. The critic (who referenced his own fluency in Arabic in support of his argument) asserted that the verb cannot refer to the believers since God addresses the believers directly in the beginning of the verse (the idea being that some sort of tautology results when an address to a particular party is followed directly by an imperative to the same party). However, the Qur'an is full of such constructions (9:23 and 9:119 being merely two which are close to hand). Additionally, the critic's point is not only incorrect in its assertion, it is also at least partly wrong in its premise, since the verb at 9:28 as read by him implies an imperative to those addressed in any case for who is to prevent 'those who ascribe a partnership' from approaching 'the inviolable place of worship' if not those addressed in the verse?

9:28[4] Arabic: al masjid al ḥarām. See Notepad VII.ii.

9:28[5] The context is clear. It was 'their year' because the idolaters had won the battle and taken al masjid al ḥarām leaving the believers shut out. The conclusion based on the reading here is inescapable: al masjid al ḥarām is now closed to the believers. Its purpose was as a platform from which the Messenger and the believers were to deliver the message of repentance to the One God; it was not to form a centre of 'religion'. The centre of ḥajj which stands up to the light of objective, non-sectarian historical investigation was located at Petra, and that was destroyed by the earliest Muslims. The religion known as Islam was created later.

9:28[6] I.e. have reason to fear. See note to 2:182.

9:28[7] The pilgrimage provided a major opportunity for trade.

9:29[1] I.e. in the event that they fight you. Muhammad Asad comments here: Lit., [...]In accordance with the fundamental principle - observed throughout my interpretation of the Qur'an - that all of its statements and ordinances are mutually complementary and cannot, therefore, be correctly understood unless they are considered as parts of one integral whole, this verse, too must be read in the context of the clear-cut Quranic rule that war is permitted only in self-defence (see 2:190-194, and the corresponding notes). In other words, the above injunction to fight is relevant only in the event of aggression committed against the Muslim community or state, or in the presence of an unmistakable threat to its security: a view which has been shared by that great Islamic thinker, Muhammad 'Abduh. Commenting on this verse, he declared: "Fighting has been made obligatory in Islam only for the sake of defending the truth and its followers... All the campaigns of the Prophet were defensive in character; and so were the wars undertaken by the Companions in the earliest period [of Islam]" (Manar X, 332).

9:29[7] Arabic: al kitāb. See Notepad IX.ii.

9:29[8] Lit.: give.

9:29[9] Arabic: jizyah — compensation, reparation, recompense. New meanings were attached to this word as the Arab Muslims abandoned the Qur'anic injunctions against proportional taxation. Since this noun occurs once only it was an obvious candidate for later manipulations. See Notepad XX for a detailed analysis.

9:29[10] This is a moot point generally among the lexicons. The Traditionalist translators latch on to meanings which have evolved for political and historical reasons such as with a ready hand (meanings one fails to find on the page). Since it is the only instance in the text we can gain no further clues by means of comparison. The only clear guidance on this point comes from Wehr who notes that 'an yad + object pronoun means by or through someone, by the effort of someone; with the help of someone which I have summarised as under supervision. For more see Notepad XX.

9:30[1] Arabic: al yahūd. See Notepad XIII.i.

9:30[2] Typically identified with the Ezra of the Hebrew scriptures. See Notepad XV.

9:30[3] This verse often provokes howls from Jews who claim that they have never treated any man in such fashion. If we credit this claim with substance, we should still consider 5:18 in which both the Christians and Rabbinic Jews (neither of which groups would claim biologically to be sons of God) claim to be sons of God in the sense of preferred people or special ones of God. Seen in that light, at 9:30 the specialness which Christians and Rabbinic Jews claim generically for themselves is crystallised in the persons of the Messiah and 'Uzayr respectively (Ezra being a man religious Jews revere for 'restoring' the Torah). In any case, the subject is treated further in the next verse where the point is made plain: both groups take men as lords in place of God — an accusation either group would find hard to refute on the level of established practice.

9:30[7] I.e. for what they say. Lit.: May God fight them. The verb here echoes that at the opening of 9:29.

9:30[8] The answer follows, and provides food for thought to those called Muslims also.

9:31[1] Arabic: min dūni. See note to 2:23.

9:33[3] Arabic: dīn. See Notepad V. Cf. 61:8-9. See also note to 8:73 for a discussion of what the supposedly staunch Traditionalist understands by this, and why he cannot be right. Muhammad Asad, ever representing the moderate and sane wing of the Traditionalist camp, notes here: Cf. 3:19 - "the only [true] religion in the sight of God is [man's] self-surrender unto Him". See also 61:8-9.

9:34[2] Arabic: ṣadda + ʿan. See note to 8:47.

9:34[3] Lit.: glad tidings.

9:35[1] I.e. what they have amassed.

9:36[1] Arabic: shuhūr — moons, months.

9:36[2] Apart from the explicit sense which is that God has set the number of months (i.e. in a year), this also, perhaps, implies that we should be aware that God knows how many have passed and how many yet to come. A month is also a convenient unit by which man can plan, develop, and grow; once we become attuned to the phases of the moon, we gain a deeper relationship with time, becoming aware at the end of each month that this block of time is now forever gone: the good and the evil thereof are, as it were, stored away (or amassed, to echo the preceding verse). However, this statement has another — and verifiable — significance, for which see Notepad XX.

9:36[3] Arabic: shahr — moon, month. For the count of month (Arabic: shahr) see Notepad XX.

9:36[4] Arabic: al kitāb. See Notepad IX.ii.

9:36[5] Arabic: kitāb allah. See Notepad IX.vi. For the count of in the Writ of God (Arabic: fi kitāb allah) see Notepad XX.

9:36[6] For the count of day (Arabic: yawm) see Notepad XX.

9:36[7] For the count of created the heavens and the earth (Arabic: khalaqa al samawāt wa al arḍ) see Notepad XX.
9:36[8] My view is that this feminine object pronoun agrees with count ('idda); however, it is claimed by the Traditionalist to reference four months. Even given the Traditionalist's reading, mention of idolaters later in the verse suggests a statement referencing 9:2; this would imply a particular pledge covering four months with particular idolaters in a particular year; certainly, there is no sense at 9:2 that the pledge mentioned there should hold up for all time — not even the Traditionalist claims that. The Traditionalist, however, somewhat predictably, claims a value here of four particular months with an import extending beyond the local context, the details of which he claims to know. However, detailed analysis of this segment reveals a sense entirely different to that which the Traditionalist claims, for which see Notepad XX.
9:36[9] I.e. four things. For details see Notepad XX.
9:36[10] Or protected, set apart.
9:36[11] Arabic: dīn. See Notepad V. This phrase occurs at 9:36, 12:40, 30:30.
9:36[12] See Notepad XX for analysis of this phrase.
9:36[13] See note to Arabic root: sh-r-k at 6:78 and Notepad VI.
9:36[14] Arabic: kāffatan — altogether, in the aggregate, collectively; all; the masses. If I were not aiming at as literal a rendering as possible I would have omitted the second instance of altogether since the emphasis here is on equivalence of action. The believers are to meet aggression with a force proportionate to that ranged against them.
9:36[15] See note to al muttaqūn at 2:2.
9:37[1] Traditionalist claims regarding postponement include the notion that months were added or subtracted by idolaters (by which he understands Pagan Arabs) in order to make the lunar year closer to the solar year, and that it refers to the postponement of 'inviolable months' (which he takes to be specific months of ongoing import the details of which he claims to know, though he can point nowhere in the Qur'an for support) in order to facilitate further fighting. My view (which happened to agree in part with the assertions of some Traditionalists, though for reasons other than those which they provide) was that this statement indicates the postponement of months in order to make the lunar calendar concur with the solar calendar. However, detailed analysis of 9:36-37 has led me to revise that position, for which see Notepad XX.
9:37[2] Arabic: alladhīna kafarū. See note to 2:6 and Notepad II.i.
9:37[3] I.e. postponement. See Notepad XX.
9:37[4] Lit.: They make it lawful a year and make it unlawful a year.
9:37[5] See Notepad XX.
9:37[6] Arabic: al kāfirūn. See note to 2:19 and Notepad II.iii.

¶9.6 9:38[1] Arabic: alladhīna āmanū. See note to 2:257 and Notepad II.iv.
9:40[1] I.e. the Messenger, as made clear in the following verse.
9:40[2] Arabic: alladhīna kafarū. See note to 2:6 and Notepad II.i.
9:40[3] Grammar: dual.
9:40[4] True strength is not in numbers; it consists in having God with you — which happens when one does what God requires.
9:40[5] Arabic: alladhīna kafarū. See note to 2:6 and Notepad II.i.
9:41[1] Lit.: and.
9:42[1] I.e. gain or booty.
9:42[2] The moral result of falsely swearing by God.

¶9.7 9:43[1] I understand this verse (and by implication those following) at an oblique angle to the Traditionalist. For him, the Messenger is chided here for granting leave not to join the campaign. Saheeh International, for example, has it: [...]why did you give them permission [to remain behind]? [You should not have] until it was evident to you who were truthful and you knew [who were] the liars. The chiding tone which the Traditionalist correctly detects is actuated by a concern opposite to the one he assumes. The point is that the Messenger had granted leave to join the campaign to unworthy men. The focus of the passage is not to prevent those who wish to opt out from doing so. It is to get rid of such people as quickly as possible and prevent them from joining, but to do so on the basis of proper criteria — which is itself a practice with Qur'anic precedent (see 2:249-250). The attentive reader will find this position fully supported by the verses which follow, and confirmed emphatically at 9:83.
9:44[1] See note to 58:4 for Qur'anic usage of to believe in.
9:44[2] The statement which begins in the previous clause outlines how one is to discern those who should be allowed to join the battle.
9:44[3] See note to al muttaqūn at 2:2.
9:45[1] See note to 58:4 for Qur'anic usage of to believe in.
9:46[1] Lit.: prepared for it with preparation.
9:46[2] I.e. stay behind with the women and children.
9:47[1] Arabic: fitnah. See note to 2:102.
9:47[2] Arabic: ẓālimūn. See note to 2:229.
9:48[1] Arabic: fitnah. See note to 2:102.
9:48[2] Lit.: the matters.
9:48[3] Arabic: al ḥaqq. See Notepad XVII (al ḥaqq i.).
9:48[4] I.e. thereby exposing themselves for the kind of men they are.
9:49[1] I.e. to join the campaign. See 9:43 and note thereto.
9:49[2] See note to fitnah at 2:102.
9:49[3] Arabic: fitnah. See note to 2:102.
9:49[4] Arabic: al kāfirūn. See note to 2:19 and Notepad II.iii.
9:50[1] I.e. answer.
9:50[2] I take this to mean that the speakers are referring to what has preceded in the Qur'anic text; namely, the fact that they were told not to participate (cf. 9:43-48), and thus had no part in the outcome. However, there are other views. Saheeh International has a note here which reads: The hypocrites claim to have protected themselves by remaining behind. Meanwhile, Muhammad Asad — drawing on a non-Qur'anic literature for much of his point — comments here: I.e., in the course of the expedition to Tabuk, during which most of this surah was revealed. One should, however, bear in mind that these verses have not merely a historical connotation but, rather, aim at depicting hypocrisy as such.
9:51[1] See note to (al) mu'minūn at 8:2.
9:52[1] I.e. victory, or death in battle.
9:53[1] Arabic root: f-s-q. See note to 2:26 and Notepad XI.vii.
9:54[1] Arabic: al ṣalāt; i.e. to such duty as is incumbent. This can only refer in the context to the military action which is the subject. See note to 2:3 and Article SZC.
9:54[2] Lit.: save while they are unwilling or save while they are averse.
9:55[1] I.e. by means of their wealth and children.
9:55[2] Arabic: kāfirūn. Typically rendered unbelievers. See note to 2:19 and Notepad II.iii.
9:56[1] Or cause division. Arabic: faraqa — to separate, part, divide, sever, sunder; fariqa — to be terrified; to be afraid. The commonest translations render the Arabic here afraid (and synonyms). There are reasonable grounds for so doing given what follows at 9:57, and I have rendered likewise; my reservations arise in the fact that this rendering requires that one ignore that the sense of this form I verb in all the other instances is to divide, to separate (2:50, 5:25, 17:106, 44:4).

9:57[1] Or and they are capricious. Arabic: jamaḥa — to bolt (horse); to be refractory, unruly, recalcitrant; to be defiant; to be capricious, whimsical. Often (and usually) translated as bolt away, such a rendering misses the unifying value of the verb which is that of caprice and contrary wilfulness. While I have complied with the standard reading in my translation, this second reading, in my view, fits well with the continuing context. This is the only instance of this root in the text.
9:58[1] I.e. the distribution thereof, as the remainder of the verse makes plain.
9:59[1] Lit.: and.
9:59[2] While I do not accept all the narrative specifics, the core of Muhammad Asad's point here is valuable enough to warrant reproducing his note here in full: Lit., "what God has given them, and His Apostle": a typically Qur'anic construction meant to bring out the fact that the real giver is God, and that the Apostle is His instrument. Although this passage relates, primarily, to the hypocrites at Medina and the historical situation obtaining at the time of the expedition to Tabuk, the import of these verses goes beyond the historical occasion of their revelation, describing as it does "the attitude and mentality of hypocrites of all times, and everywhere" (Manor X, 567). Consequently, we may assume that the reference, in this context, to "God's Apostle" is not confined to the person of the Prophet Muhammad but implies, metonymically, the Law of Islam as revealed through him - and, thus, to every government that holds authority by virtue of that Law and rules in accordance with it.
9:59[3] Sc. it would have been the better for them.

¶9.8 9:60[1] Here the text is inconvenient to the Traditionalist's agenda. The word is ṣadaqāt (lit.: charities). However, the Traditionalist is heavily invested in his externally derived requirement of a percentage-based material payment (tax) which he claims is the meaning of zakāt (for why this is Qur'anically unsustainable see Article SZC). But the word here is not zakāt, it is ṣadaqāt. The non-sectarians render correctly, N. J. Dawood as alms and A. J. Arberry as freewill offerings. However, the Traditionalist translators unblushingly twist the text into conformity with their requirements: Saheeh International renders the opening as: Zakāh expenditures are only for the poor and for the needy it and provides a footnote stating: By the state to collect, guard and distribute the zakāh. Meanwhile, Hilali & Khan have: As-Sadaqat (here it means Zakat) are only for the Fuqara' (poor).
9:60[2] Lit.: on.
9:60[3] I.e. those who work with charity, in the management, collection, or application of it.
9:60[4] Lit.: son of the road. See note to 2:177.
9:61[1] Arabic root: '-dh-y. See Notepad X.
9:61[2] I.e. one who listens much and believes what he hears.
9:61[3] See note to 58:4 for Qur'anic usage of to believe in.
9:61[4] See note to (al) mu'minūn at 8:2.
9:61[5] Arabic: alladhīna āmanū. See note to 2:257 and Notepad II.iv.
9:61[6] Arabic root: '-dh-y. See Notepad X.
9:62[1] Arabic: aḥaqq-. See Notepad XVII.
9:62[2] The object pronoun here is the masculine singular (Arabic: hu), and not the dual or plural; the only honest choice in translation here is between him or Him. This is inconvenient to the Traditionalist; his stock-in-trade is conflating the recipient of the Qur'an with someone called Muḥammad who features prominently in a much later literature — one which Muḥammad never saw or sanctioned — and his purpose is to convince one that expressions which reference God's messenger in the Qur'an have as their object following this later literature (or, more precisely, the Traditionalist's explanation of it). Thus, he needs this phrase to support that outcome; but, irritatingly for him, it does not. Traditionalist translators do a dance around the grammar to achieve their object, with Saheeh International rendering: But Allāh and His Messenger are more worthy for them to satisfy, if they should be believers, and Traditionalist translators Hilali & Khan rendering: but it is more fitting that they should please Allah and His Messenger (Muhammad SAW), if they are believers. This is dishonest treatment of the text. For comparison, the non-sectarian A. J. Arberry renders according to the words on the page: more right is it they should please Him, if they are believers. However, not all Traditionalists are cut from one cloth, and I include Muhammad Asad's note to this verse in full: Lit., "the while God and His Apostle are most entitled that they should seek His pleasure...", etc. As has been pointed out by many of the commentators (and most succinctly by Rashid Rida' in Manar X, 607 f.), there is no question of any juxtaposition of God and His Apostle in this phrase. This is made clear by the use of the singular pronoun in an yurduhu ("that they should seek His pleasure"), which is meant to bring out - in the inimitable elliptic form so characteristic of the Qur'an - the idea that God's pleasure is the only worthwhile goal of all human endeavour, and that a believer's duty to surrender to the Prophet's guidance is but an outcome of the fact that he is the bearer of God's message to man. Cf. in this connection, "Whoever pays heed unto the Apostle pays heed unto God thereby" (4:80), or, "Say [O Prophet]: 'If you love God, follow me, [and] God will love you'" (3:31).

9:72[2] See note to (al) mu'minūn at 8:2.
9:72[3] I state elsewhere that the Qur'an does not contain the Traditionalist's identifying catchphrase allahu akbar. Here, although akbar follows allah it relates to riḍwān (approval) and not to allah (God); the logistics of the sentence preclude any other possibility. For example, the thoroughly Traditionalist Saheeh International translators render this clause: but approval from Allāh is greater.
9:72[4] Arabic: dẖālika huwa. See note to 22:11.

¶9.10 9:73[1] As with comparable imperatives, one should consider the text as a whole. On that basis, an exhortation to fight presupposes a case in which one is being fought against; the single exception is a declaration of war against those who heed warning who continue to deal in usury (see 2:278-279).
9:73[2] Arabic: kuffār. See note to 2:109.
9:73[3] Arabic: munāfiqūn. See note to 4:138.
9:74[1] Arabic: islām. This is an abstract noun and means peace or submission (to God). See 3:18-19 and notes thereto.
9:74[2] This is yet another instance where God and His messenger are treated as functionally singular. Numerous contexts make clear that all bounty comes from God.

¶9.11 9:84[1] Arabic root: ṣ-l-w; i.e. to do such duty as is incumbent. See note to 2:3 and Article SZC. Generically, ṣallā means to perform (the or one's) duty. The context here suggests the duty to officiate at a burial (cf. 5:31). And that is how the Traditionalist understands it. However, this context also requires him to deviate from what he generally claims the word ṣalāt to mean.
9:84[2] Arabic root: f-s-q. See note to 2:26 and Notepad XI.vii.
9:85[1] Arabic: kāfirūn. Typically rendered unbelievers.

¶9.12 9:90[1] Arabic: al aʿrāb. Certainly, today this means the Arabs. There is support for the claim at 9:101, 9:120, 33:20 that the Qur'an means desert Arabs of the Bedouin type. All instances appear in the notes and reference this verse.
9:90[2] I.e. did not fight.

9:94[1] Arabic: akẖbār — news; information; reports, communications; stories. Rendered here as assertions since there is doubt involved as to the veracity of the claims. Occurs at 9:94, 47:31, 99:4.
9:94[2] Lit.: and.
9:94[3] Lit.: witnessed.
9:96[1] Lit.: if.

9:99[2] See note to 58:4 for Qur'anic usage of to believe in.
9:99[3] Arabic: ṣalawāt; i.e. to do such duty as is incumbent. See note to 2:3 and Article SZC. Generically, ṣalāt denotes duty. In its primary sense it is the duty both to serve and seek help from God alone as per the covenant at 1:1-7 of which the statement at 1:5 forms our part — commitment to which also satisfies the pre-existing obligation every man has to acknowledge God's authority (see 7:172). The Traditionalist's values for ṣalawāt as a plurality of prescribed prayers (and by 'prayer' he means a series of standing, bowing, kneeling combined with the repetition of particular words) is clearly unsustainable here. That value which is discerned by comparison of all instances of ṣalāt makes perfect sense; the duties which were particular to the Messenger were, evidently, known to him, and the reference here may reasonably be assumed, given the context, to indicate military matters.
9:99[4] Arabic: alā. See note to 2:12.

¶9.13 9:101[1] Arabic: (al) aʿrāb. See note to 9:90.
9:101[2] Arabic: munāfiqūn. See note to 4:138.
9:101[3] Arabic: madīna — town; city. This is generally rendered Medina by translators — which assumes the city known as Medina today, and which may or may not be correct factually. The point is, however, a contrast between inhabitants of the countryside and the inhabitants of the town. A. J. Arberry renders according to this reality as City.
9:101[4] Arabic: nifāq. See note to 4:138.
9:101[5] Muhammad Asad provides the following thought: I.e., first through failure in their worldly concerns, accompanied by pangs of conscience and the resulting spiritual distress, and then through a full realization, at the moment of dying, of the unforgivable nature of their sin (Manar XI, 19).

9:102[2] Lit.: and.
9:102[3] Arabic: sayyi'a. See Notepad XI.ix.
9:103[1] Arabic: zakkā. See note to 2:129. This is a form II verb which shares its root (z-k-w) with zakāt. Some translators evade the sense of purification but on a pan-textual basis the form II verb's inherent connection with purification may be verified. All instances are found at: 2:129, 2:151, 2:174, 3:77, 3:164, 4:49, 4:49, 9:103, 24:21, 53:32, 62:2, 91:9.
9:103[2] Arabic root: ṣ-l-w; i.e. to do such duty as is incumbent. Generically, ṣallā means to perform (the or one's) duty. Here the context indicates specifically the duty to treat appropriately those whose loyalty and commitment was previously in question but who then repented and contributed to the cause. The Traditionalist claims a value here of prayer (i.e. that the Messenger prayed for such people). What the Traditionalist means by prayer wanders depending on what he wants to achieve. Here what he means by prayer is personal supplication or intercessory appeal to God. In other positions what he means is a highly ritualised process of liturgy and physical movements held to be beneficial to the practitioner and required by God (a process in which personal supplication or intercessory appeal to God may or may not feature). The speaker of English does not generally notice that a single English word is being applied by the Traditionalist so as to conflate two entirely different concepts. However, what is always the case — and what can be demonstrated on the basis of the Qur'anic text and the consistent usage therein — is that ṣalāt denotes duty, a fact which remains true no matter what specific value the Traditionalist claims for it in this or any other case. Clearly, the duty in this case is to take receipt of the charity (in a fitting manner) and to acknowledge the repentance of those who give it — as confirmed both here and in the verse which follows. See note to 2:3 and Article SZC.

9:123[3] Or have power over. Arabic: waliya. This form I verb means to be close to, to lie next to; to be a friend of; to manage, rule, have power over. This is the only instance of this form of the verb; this fact makes it vulnerable to spurious claims for the usual reasons. I have rendered after the first meaning in accordance with most standard translations and confined my dissent to the notes because I cannot prove an alternate case on the basis of the Qur'anic text despite the fact that have power over makes more sense to me.
9:123[4] Muhammad Asad comments here: I.e., uncompromising with regard to ethical principles. For the general circumstances in which war is permitted, see 2:190-194, 22:39, 60:8-9[...]. The reference to "those deniers of the truth who are near you" may arise from the fact that only "those who are near" can be dangerous in a physical sense or, alternatively, that - having come from afar - they have already approached the Muslim country with an aggressive intent. Meanwhile, Abdullah Yusuf Ali says: When conflict becomes inevitable, the first thing is to clear our surroundings of all evil, for it is only evil that we can rightly fight. To fight evil we must put up a stout and stiff resistance. Mealy-mouthed compromises are not right for soldiers of truth and righteousness. They are often a compound of cowardice, weariness, greed, and corruptibility.

While Muhammad Asad's value here is more interpretive and expositional than I can use ('in their Sustainer's sight they surpass all others in that they are completely sincere') he is fully correct in identifying the sense of sincerity or truth which the Arabic contains. His note here reads: Lit., "they have precedence (qadam) of truthfulness (sidq)": the latter term denoting a concord between what a person actually conceives in his mind or feels and what he expresses by word, deed or attitude - in other words, complete sincerity.
10:2[4] Arabic: al kāfirūn. See note to 2:19 and Notepad II.iii.
10:2[5] Arabic: sāḥir — sorcerer. While I do not agree with his points, I include Muhammad Asad's comment here for broader context: Lit., "He is indeed an obvious enchanter (sahir)" - thus implying that the "man from among yourselves" (i.e., Muhammad) did not really receive any revelation from God, but merely deluded his followers by means of his spellbinding eloquence (which is the meaning of sihr in this context): an accusation levelled by unbelievers of all times not merely against Muhammad but - as the Qur'an frequently states - against most of the earlier prophets as well. The term "those who deny the truth" refers, in this context, specifically to people who a priori reject the notion of divine revelation and, thus, of prophethood. My own view is that sorcery in the Qur'an refers to non-military means of gaining political power. See note to 2:102.

There is no sense either in the root or in the noun itself of something reflected despite what some translators insinuate into the text or state in their notes. The Qur'an is clear: the moon itself produces light.

10:22[2] Lit.: are in or (under the influence of ḥattā iḏẖā) have been in.
10:22[3] Muhammad Asad's understanding here is predicated on dominant but erroneous assumptions regarding ḥattā iḏẖā — treating it merely as is standard today in Arabic rather than on the basis of a detailed study of the Qur'an's own employment of this formula across the entirety of the Qur'anic text (see note to 3:152). This notwithstanding, I reproduce his comment in full since the remainder of his point is of interest: Lit., "until, when you are in the ships...", etc. As has been pointed out by Zamakhshari, the particle "until" (hatta) which precedes this clause refers to the sudden rise of the storm described in the sequence, and not to the "going to sea in ships". It is to be noted that at this point the discourse changes abruptly from the direct address "you" to the third person plural ("they"): a construction which is evidently meant to bring out the allegorical character of the subsequent narrative and to turn it into a lesson of general validity.

10:54[1] The naked verb to ransom in English tends to be a perfective idea assuming a successful outcome. The uncertain outcome of a verb is made explicit in English by the inclusion of such words as to seek to, which I have done here.
10:54[2] Lit.: concealed the remorse. A. J. Arberry has here: and they will be secretly remorseful; and Saheeh International: And they will confide regret. However, I have been guided to a large degree by Muhammad Asad, who notes here: The primary meaning of the verb asarrahu is "he concealed it" or "he kept it secret"; thus, the phrase asarru 'n-nadamah (expressed in the past tense but in the above context obviously denoting a future event) could be rendered as "they will conceal their remorse". In view, however, of the many statements in the Qur'an that on the Day of Judgment the sinners will not only not conceal but will, rather, stress their remorse, some of the commentators (e.g., Baghawi, on the authority of Abu 'Ubaydah) are of the opinion that in this particular verse the verb asarra denotes the opposite of its primary meaning and, accordingly, interpret the phrase as "they will manifest their remorse". But the linguistic validity of this rather forced interpretation has been emphatically contested by many philologists, and particularly by Abu Mansur al-Azhari (cf. Lane IV, 1337); and since there is no convincing reason to disregard the original significance of the verb asarra with its implication of "concealment", the above Qur'anic phrase must be understood (as Zamakhshari understands it), in the metonymical sense of an involuntary "concealment", that is, the sinners' inability to express the full depth of their remorse.

10:71[5] Lit.: affair, matter; command.
10:71[6] Arabic: ghumma. This word (which occurs once only in the text) means perplexity and dubiousness or confusedness (Lane, p. 2345). I render as unclear to convey the sense in the context which is Nūḥ's challenge to his people to be fully resolved upon a specific, concrete course against him, and to hold nothing back. A. J. Arberry renders this word: a worry; Saheeh International has: obscure; Hilali & Khan have: in doubt.
10:71[7] Muhammad Asad discerns an ellipsis here which I do not, but his comment is worth repeating: Sc., "because they run counter to the idolatrous beliefs which you have inherited from your ancestors". The story of Noah, briefly mentioned in verses 71-73, is told at greater length in 11:36-48 (see also 7:59-64). Here it connects with verse 47 above, and thus with the main theme of this sūrah: the truth of God's revelation of His will through His prophets, and the suffering which in the life to come is bound to befall those who give the lie to His messages.

10:85[1] Arabic: fitnah. See note to 2:102. Clearly, those speaking would rather avoid pain and torment; however, the emphasis is placed otherwise. 10:85[2] Arabic: ẓālimūn. See note to 2:229.
10:86[1] Arabic: al kāfirūn. See note to 2:19 and Notepad II.iii. Firʿawn and his people had pretensions to righteousness but rejected warning when it came. They derived their power, it seems, from the dark arts of the ancient Mystery Schools; perhaps, a low form of which is practiced today by those at the higher visible Masonic degrees and a higher form of which is practiced by those above them. A point which the uninitiated find hard to grasp is that such people typically regard themselves as virtuous. We note also that Firʿawn accuses Mūsā of being of the kāfirūn (see 26:18-22).
10:87[1] See note to waḥī and awḥā at 3:44.

10:87[4] I.e. let the people keep to their houses, or: have them stay with their own families.
10:87[5] I.e. keep to your houses; or: keep to your families. I see here an instruction to come out from among the people of Firʿawn and to reside with one's own people exclusively. Arabic: qiblah. See note to 2:142. The verse here at 10:87 is the only scenario in which qiblah occurs outside of 2:142 and repetitions thereof at 2:143-145. It is physically impossible for qiblah to mean at 10:87 what the Traditionalist requires it to mean at 2:142 (namely, a place towards which one turns in prayer). His awareness of a dissonance with his required value at 2:142-145 is revealed here if we look at his attempts to paper over the cracks of his problem in the present context. Saheeh International has here: and make your houses [facing the] qiblah. The words in square brackets are imagined to exist by the translators; they are not in the text. Hilali & Khan sidestep this problem by other means: and make your dwellings as places for your worship. This is a stretch, but to the inattentive reader may seem close enough. But is 'place(s) for your worship' what they understand by qiblah at 2:142-145? Of course not. In both cases, we discern subterfuge. And this sleight of hand persists also in the minds of those who read in Arabic because the priests of the religion of Islam correctly understand that they can rely upon those who follow them to exercise little or no intellectual rigour. However, if we look to a non-specialised, 'unmullahised' meaning of this word (such as destination or course), we find that it fits both scenarios perfectly. The only remaining problem is one for the Traditionalist, in that this plain meaning does not meet his cultic requirements. Additionally, while some claim that the local narrative at 10:87 refers to the night of the Passover, close analysis proves that the Passover is in no way corroborated by the Qur'an. The number of signs given Mūsā is nine (17:101), and all nine are accounted for in the text (27:1-12, 7:130, 7:133). Thus, the Qur'an tacitly rejects the Passover as a historical event (in contrast to the Hebrew scriptures in which the Passover constitutes the final and greatest of the plagues), a fact which — if one takes the Qur'an as the measure — lays an axe to the root of both modern Jews' conception of themselves, as well as to the Christians' arrogation to themselves of the same fabrication (albeit in 'spiritualised' form). This subject is covered in detail in my book The God Protocol.

10:87[6] Arabic: aqīmū al ṣalāt; i.e. uphold such duty as is incumbent. See note to 2:3 and Article SZC. The Traditionalist's value of perform a ritual the details of which are not found in the Qur'an fails spectacularly here.

10:92[2] Dr. Maurice Bucaille in his The Bible, The Qur'an and Science identifies this man as Ramesses II — a view which is firmly entrenched in (and supportive of) the Egypt-Palestine thesis. The Arabia Felix thesis is able also — at least potentially — to field a comparable solution since mummification was practiced in Yemen in ancient times. Here, as elsewhere, real archaeological and other historical spadework is required to form genuine conclusions.

¶10.10

10:94[1] Muhammad Asad notes here: some of the commentators assume that verses 94 and 95 are addressed to the Prophet Muhammad - an assumption which is highly implausible in view of the admonition (in verse 95), "Be not among those who are bent on giving the lie to God's messages": for it is obvious that God's chosen Prophet was never in danger of falling into such a sin. Consequently, Razi interprets these two verses as being addressed to man in general, and explains the reference to "what We have bestowed upon thee from on high" in the sense given in my rendering. This interpretation makes it clear, moreover, that the above passage is closely connected with verses 57-58, which speak of the guidance vouchsafed to mankind through the ultimate divine writ, the Qur'an.
10:94[2] Arabic: al kitāb. See Notepad IX.ii.
10:94[3] I include Muhammad Asad's second note on this verse for the sake of completion: I.e., the Jews and the Christians. The "reading" is here a metonym for belief, namely, in the Bible, which - notwithstanding the fact that its text has been corrupted in the course of time - still contains clear references to the advent of the Prophet Muhammad and thus, by implication, to the truth of the divine message revealed through him. In its wider sense, the above verse alludes to the unbroken continuity of man's religious experience and to the fact, frequently stressed in the Qur'an, that every one of God's apostles preached one and the same basic truth. (See in this connection the second paragraph of 5:48 and the corresponding notes 66 and 67.)

11:3[1] Muhammad Asad renders this clause: He will bestow upon everyone possessed of merit [a full reward for] his merit. While I have not followed his translation here, his comment follows for interest: The noun fadl, when used with reference to God, invariably denotes "bounty" or "favour"; in its reference to man, it usually signifies "merit" or, occasionally, "eminence". The above verse makes it clear that, in contrast to the partial and often only moral rewards and punishments in the life of this world, God will, in the life to come, bestow the full measure of His favours upon everyone who has acquired merit by virtue of his faith and his actions. (Cf. 3:185 - "only on the Day of Resurrection will you be requited in full for whatever you have done".)

11:7[2] The Arabic includes the verb kāna. The tense in such cases is frequently a matter of interpretation. See note following.

11:7[3] The sense depends on how one reads the verb kāna (see preceding note). Taken as the past tense, it would incline one to the view that it references the time before the world was fully formed (cf. Genesis 1:2). However, if indicating a continuous present, it would reference the waters which cover the firmament of the sky; cf. the waters which were above the firmament in Genesis 1:6-8. Those brought up to accept NASA's cosmology on the basis of CGI and Hollywood films when children are encouraged to research the subject as adults.

11:7[4] Arabic: alladhīna kafarū. See note to 2:6 and Notepad II.i.

11:7[5] Arabic: siḥr — sorcery. See note to 2:102.

11:8[1] Arabic: alā. See note to 2:12.

¶11.2 11:9[1] Muhammad Asad notes here: The sequence makes it clear that the generic term "man" referred to in this and the next verse applies, primarily, to the agnostics who are either unconvinced of the existence of God or are "bent upon denying the truth"; in its wider implication, however, it applies also to those who, while believing in God, are weak in faith and therefore easily swayed by external circumstances, and particularly by whatever happens to themselves.

11:9[2] Muhammad Asad notes here: [...]inasmuch as he attributes his past happy state to a merely accidental chain of causes and effects - in short, to what is commonly regarded as "luck" - and not to God's grace. Hence, the term ya'us, in its Qur'anic usage, is indicative of spiritual nihilism.

11:10[1] Arabic: sayyi'āt. Typically rendered in this work evil deeds. See Notepad XI.x.

11:12[1] See note to waḥī and awḥā at 3:44.

11:12[2] Arabic: lawlā. See Notepad XIV.

11:13[1] Arabic: am. See note to 21:21.

11:13[2] I.e. if this is the claim.

11:13[3] Arabic: sūrah. See note to 2:23.

11:13[4] I.e. to any authority or source of knowledge.

11:13[5] Arabic: min dūni. See note to 2:23.

11:13[6] See grammar note to 2:91.

11:14[1] Grammar: note the shift to the plural.

11:14[2] I.e. the Qur'an.

11:14[3] Naturally, the Traditionalist understands here adoption and profession of his religion — a religion he calls Islam and promotes under that rubric. His assertions for the value of this word have no Qur'anic basis (in that they are irreconcilable with the Qur'an's usage of islām and muslim, as serious consideration of all instances the across the Qur'anic text demonstrates). See note to muslim at 2:128.

11:16[1] I.e. in the life of the world.

11:16[2] I.e. entirely worthless.

11:17[1] See note to 3:162.

11:17[2] Sc. like one who is not?

11:17[4] Arabic: imām — leader; master; plumb line; standard, criterion; example, model.

11:17[5] I.e. those who are upon clear evidence.

11:17[6] See note to 58:4 for Qur'anic usage of to believe in.

11:17[7] Arabic: al aḥjāb — the parties. In Qur'anic parlance, this term frequently refers to the various factions mankind separates into on the basis of the response to God's proofs.

11:17[8] Or appointed time, appointment.

11:17[9] Arabic: al ḥaqq. See Notepad XVII (al ḥaqq i.).

11:17[10] Arabic: lā yu'minūn. Qur'anic usage implies: (are those) lost in darkness. See note to 2:6 and Notepad II.ii.

11:30[1] Arabic: afalā. See Notepad XIV.

11:31[1] Rendered variously by translators, including as to and of.

11:31[2] Arabic: ẓālimūn. See note to 2:229.

11:35[1] Arabic: am. See note to 21:21.

11:35[2] I.e. if this is the claim; the answer follows.

11:35[3] Most translators likewise regard this verse as an aside; I think it is the only logical view (cf: 11:49).

11:40[2] I.e. the infernal part of the lower earth; cf. 23:27.

11:41[1] Arabic: mursan — anchorage. This noun is formed on the r-s-w root which indicates something firmly set, stable, steady. In a nautical context anchorage is the correct term. This noun occurs twice outside this verse (7:187, 79:42); both instances treat of the Hour and are translated there arrival.

11:42[1] Arabic: al kāfirūn. See note to 2:19 and Notepad II.iii.

11:43[1] Grammar: dual.

11:44[1] Lit.: it established itself, it sat.

11:44[2] Arabic: al jūdī. George Sale states: This mountain [al-Judi] is one of those that divide Armenia on the south, from Mesopotamia, and that part of Assyria which is inhabited by the Curds, from whom the mountains took the name Cardu, or Gardu, by the Greeks turned into Gordyae, and other names. [...]Mount Al-Judi (which seems to be a corruption, though it be constantly so written by the Arabs, for Jordi, or Giordi) is also called Thamanin[...], probably from a town at the foot of it. Meanwhile, Muhammad Asad says: This mountain, known in ancient Syriac as Qardu, is situated in the region of Lake Van, almost twenty-five miles north-east of the town Jazirat Ibn 'Umar, capital of the modern Syrian district of Al-Jazirah. It "owes its fame to the Mesopotamian tradition which identifies it, and not Mount Ararat, with the mountain on which Noah's ark rested[...] This localization of the ark's resting-place[...] is certainly based on Babylonian tradition" (Encyclopaedia of Islam I, 1059). We should, however, remember that the designation Ararat (the Assyrian Prartu) at one time included the whole area to the south of Lake Van[...]: this might explain the Biblical statement that "the ark rested[...] upon the mountains of Ararat" (Genesis viii, 4).

11:44[3] Arabic: ẓālimūn. See note to 2:229.

11:45[1] Arabic: al ḥaqq. See Notepad XVII (al ḥaqq i.).

11:46[1] Nūḥ's son was the result of an evil work against Nūḥ, not being of his seed. See 66:10 for clarification. Translators attempt to force the text into conformity with their assumptions (namely, that the son's deeds were unrighteous), but the plain sense is as here. The closest rendering in this regard is the non-sectarian A. J. Arberry who has: it is a deed not righteous. The word it and he in the masculine in Arabic (as here) are the same, while the tense in this clause is a matter of interpretation.

11:48[1] Arabic: ummah — nation, community, people, generation; species, class; faith; model, leader (here pl.).

11:49[1] See note to waḥī and awḥā at 3:44.

11:49[2] See note to al muttaqūn at 2:2.

¶11.5 11:50[1] Or inventors, forgers.

11:51[1] I.e. incumbent upon.

11:51[2] Arabic: afalā. See Notepad XIV.

11:54[1] Arabic: sū' (sg.), aswā' (pl.). See Notepad XI.v. The modern version of this would be such contemporary gods as those of psychology and psychiatry.

11:54[2] Grammar: plural imperative.

11:54[3] See note to Arabic root: sh-r-k at 6:78 and Notepad VI.

11:55[1] Arabic: min dūni. See note to 2:23.

11:56[1] This expression denotes complete mastery.

11:56[2] Muhammad Asad comments here: [...]implying that He governs all that exists in accordance with a system of truth and justice in the ultimate, absolute sense of these terms, never allowing the conscious evildoer to escape the consequence of his deeds, and never letting righteousness go unrewarded, either in this world or in the hereafter (since it is only in the combination of these two phases that human life can be considered in its entirety).

11:57[1] Lit.: make succeed. English requires you to resolve the linguistic ambiguity between success and succession.

11:58[1] Arabic: alladhīna āmanū. See note to 2:257 and Notepad II.iv.

11:59[1] Arabic: āyāt. See Notepad VIII.

11:60[1] Arabic: 'atba'a. See note to 2:262.

11:60[2] Sc. evil is the gift given. This anticipates the completion of the phrase at 11:99.

11:60[3] Arabic: alā. See note to 2:12.

11:60[4] While it is possible to take this construction in this position as a negative rhetorical device throughout the segment (— was it not: "Away with 'Ād, the people of Hūd!"?), I have rendered it as is common since the analytical overhead required to prove the point pan-textually is greater than any possible benefit of so doing.

¶11.6 11:62[1] An expression of disappointment.

11:63[1] Arabic: a ra'ayt-. See note to 6:40.

11:63[2] I reproduce with only the lightest editing the excellent comment by Muhammad Asad, himself a Traditionalist Muslim: [...]Although this dialogue is related in the context of the story of Salih and the leaders of the Thamud, its implications have - as is always the case with Qur'anic stories and parables - a universal, timeless import. The stress here is on the intrinsic impossibility of reconciling belief in the One God, whose omniscience and omnipotence, embraces all that exists, with an attribution of divine or semi-divine qualities and functions to anyone or anything else. The subtly-veiled suggestion of the Thamud and its rejection by Salih has a bearing on all religious attitudes based on a desire to "bring God closer to man" through the interposition of alleged "mediators" between Him and man. In primitive religions, this interposition led to the deification of various forces of nature and, subsequently, to the invention of imaginary deities which were thought to act against the background of an undefined, dimly-perceived Supreme Power (for instance, the Moira of the ancient Greeks). In higher religious concepts, this need for mediation assumes the form of personified manifestations of God through subordinate deities (as is the case, in Hinduism, with the personifications of the Absolute Brahma of the Upanishads and the Vedanta in the forms of Vishnu or Shiva), or in His supposed incarnation in human form (as represented in the Christian idea of Jesus as "God's son" and the Second Person of the Trinity). And, lastly, God is supposedly "brought closer to man" by the interposition of a hierarchy of saints, living or dead, whose intercession is sought even by people who consider themselves to be "monotheists" - and this includes many misguided Muslims who do not realize that their belief in saints as "mediators" between men and God conflicts with the very essence of Islam. The ever-recurring Qur'anic stress on the oneness and uniqueness of God, and the categorical denial of the idea that anyone or anything - whether it be a concrete being or an abstract force - could have the least share in God's qualities or the least influence on the manner in which He governs the universe aims at freeing man from the self-imposed servitude to an imaginary hierarchy of "mediating powers", and at making him realize that "wherever you turn, there is God's countenance" (2:115), and that God is "[always] near, responding [to the call of whoever calls unto Him]" (2:186; also, in a condensed form. in verse 61 of this surah).

11:64[2] Arabic: sū' (sg.), aswā' (pl.). See Notepad XI.v.

11:65[1] Muhammad Asad comments here: The verb 'aqara primarily denotes "he hamstrung [an animal]"- i.e., before slaughtering it, so that it might not run away. This barbarous custom was widely practiced in pre-Islamic Arabia, so that 'aqr ("hamstringing") gradually became synonymous with slaughtering in a cruel manner (Razi; see also Lane V, 2107 f.).

¶11.7 11:70[1] Arabic: nakira — to feel unfamiliar, not to know. This is the only instance of the form I of this root.

11:70[2] Because they declined to eat. In this context, the verb is often rendered other than I have done, making Ibrāhīm the one who had fear. Saheeh International — which renders as have I — supplies a note which makes an interesting contribution in this regard: Traditionally, if a guest refused to eat, it meant that he harbored ill will toward the host or intended him harm; cf. 51:28.

11:74[1] Rather than condemn them, Ibrāhīm interceded on behalf of the inhabitants of the city of Lūṭ.

11:77[1] Muhammad Asad provides a helpful note here: Lit., "he was straitened as regards the reach of his arm in their behalf" - an idiomatic phrase often used in classical Arabic, denoting here Lot's utter inability to afford his guests protection from the people of Sodom, whose homosexual propensities have ever since been commemorated in the term "sodomy". Since Lot thought that the strangers were no more than handsome young men, he felt certain that they would be sexually assaulted by his sinful countrymen.
11:77[2] Arabic: 'aṣīb. This word conveys senses of hot, crucial, or critical. It is commonly translated here as distressful, fierce, or trying.
11:78[1] Arabic: sayyi'āt. See Notepad XI.x.
11:78[2] See note to al muttaqūn at 2:2.
11:78[3] Arabic: alaysa. See Notepad XIV.
11:78[4] An allusion, surely, to the fact that God's wrath is stored up for those who abuse themselves in a way which defies the most obvious logic. However, see Notepad XXII and note to 26:166.
11:79[1] Arabic: ḥaqqin. See Notepad XVII (ḥaqq- vii.).
11:79[2] Or claim on. The sense here is that they have no desire for his daughters — or, by extension, for women in general.
11:81[1] Arabic: alaysa. See Notepad XIV.
11:82[1] Lit.: We made its uppermost its nethermost.
11:82[2] Arabic: sijjīl. Occurs at 11:82, 15:74, 105:4.
11:83[1] Arabic: musawwama — branded, marked. This word is used at 3:14 with regard to horses to denote categories of excellence. In 1989, the amateur archaeologist and fundamentalist Christian, Ron Wyatt, announced that he had found the location of the cities known in the Bible as Sodom and Gomorrah. Certain Christian groups make claims for the generality of Wyatt's work which are greater than the evidence he provides rightly allows. However, what is beyond question is that the areas he claimed for Sodom and Gomorrah contain regular, repeating lines perhaps indicative of human structures (albeit in a condition of severe decomposition), window-like apertures and plentiful evidence of a deluge of burning sulphur (brimstone). The sulphur was found to be 98% pure — a high level of purity. The Arabia Felix thesis claims a site for the same events. More investigation on the ground is required. See Notepad XVI.
11:83[2] Understood by some to refer to the punishments of God.
11:83[3] Arabic: ẓālimūn. See note to 2:229. If Ron Wyatt is correct in his identification of the cities of Lūṭ, then that location is only a day's ride from Petra. The Arabia Felix thesis claims a site for the same event. More investigation on the ground is required. Mecca, on the other hand, is many hundreds of miles away from either general location. See Notepad XVI.

11:84[2] Arabic: khaīr — good, better, best, benefit, wealth, property, affluence.
11:85[1] See note to 3:18.
11:85[2] Lit.: things.
11:86[1] I.e. what remains when operating on an equitable basis economically. Muhammad Asad adds here: I.e., the lasting merit achieved by virtue of good deeds and fair dealings with one's fellow-men (cf. the expression al-baqiyat as-salihat in 18:46 and 19:76).
11:86[2] Arabic: khaīr — good, better, best, benefit, wealth, property, affluence.
11:86[3] See note to (al) mu'minūn at 8:2. See grammar note to 2:91.
11:87[1] Arabic: ṣalāt; i.e. such duty as is incumbent. See note to 2:3 and Article SZC. Generically, ṣalāt denotes duty. In its primary sense it is the duty both to serve and seek help from God alone as per the covenant at 1:1-7 of which the statement at 1:5 forms our part — commitment to which also satisfies the pre-existing obligation every man has to acknowledge God's authority (see 7:172). The present context exposes the Traditionalist's non-Qur'anic assertion that ṣalāt is equal to a strict daily prayer regimen, and leaves him with no choice but to attempt to paper over the cracks in the (almost universally safe) assumption that his followers will neither question his motives nor conduct a thorough analysis themselves. Hilali & Khan give us: They said: "O Shu'aib! Does your Salat (prayer) (i.e. the prayers which you offer has spoiled your mind, so you) command that we leave off what our fathers used to worship[...]. Meanwhile, Saheeh International's attempt to square the circle is: They said, "O Shu'ayb, does your prayer [i.e., religion] command you that we should leave what our fathers worship[...]. Neither of the values claimed here for ṣalāt by the Traditionalists are consistent with what the Islamic religion claims as the value for ṣalāt; yet God states that the Qur'an is consistent (4:82). Either the Traditionalist is wrong, or God is wrong, or the Qur'an is wrong. There is no other option. See 29:45 and note on tanhā 'an.
11:87[2] Said in sarcasm.
11:88[1] Arabic: a ra'ayt-. See note to 6:40.
11:88[2] Sc. then how could I speak otherwise
11:88[3] I.e. I do not wish to deprive you of what is rightfully yours (cf. 11:85).
11:89[1] The possessive person pronoun is as rendered here: my. Often presented less literally, the import is about the same. N. J. Dawood has: Let your dispute with me not; A. J. Arberry has: let not the breach with me; Saheeh International: let not [your] dissent from me.
11:91[1] Or one powerful against us.
11:92[1] Lit.: taken.
11:92[2] I.e. dismissed out of hand, or put out of mind.
11:93[1] Lit.: station, position. In modern English parlance: do your worst.
11:94[1] Arabic: alladhīna āmanū. See note to 2:257 and Notepad II.iv.
11:95[1] Or prospered.
11:95[2] See note to 7:85.

11:98[1] Or arrival-place, watering-hole.
11:99[1] In my opinion, the narrative now broadens to include the principal addressees: those whom the recipient of the Qur'an was warning (and those whom — if we follow the messengers — we warn) should they reject the message.
11:99[2] Arabic: 'atba'a. See note to 2:262.
11:99[3] Lit.: in this (i.e. this life).
11:100[1] I.e. among cities are those standing and those destroyed by the judgments of God.

11:106[1] I.e. of fire (Lane, p. 1242). Cf. 21:100, 25:12.

11:108[1] Lit.: without (being) interrupted.

11:110[1] Arabic: al kitāb. See Notepad IX.ii.
11:110[2] I include Muhammad Asad's comment here with light editing: i.e., they would have been punished, like those communities of old, by utter destruction, had it not been for God's decree (kalimah, lit., "word") that their punishment should be deferred until the Day of Resurrection (cf. the last sentence of 10:93).
11:110[3] Seen by some to refer to the Qur'an; or possibly indicating that God could have decided the differences which men have about the Writ received by Mūsā.
11:113[1] See note to 17:74.
11:113[2] Arabic: min dūni. See note to 2:23.
11:114[1] Arabic: al ṣalāt; i.e. uphold thou such duty as is incumbent. See note to 2:3 and Article SZC. My understanding of this imperative (one directed here to the recipient of the Qur'an alone) derives from the context, and suffers from none of the Traditionalist's problems with al ṣalāt since I treat it, as does the Qur'an, as a generic noun (i.e. a noun the specific meaning of which depends upon the context; cf. al ṣabr). Most of the chapter (11:25-95) rehearses the example of warners sent to their respective peoples prior to the destruction of God being made binding upon those peoples. There follows at 11:96-108 a summary of the eternal condition of those on either side of the decision for God. At 11:109-111 the narrative turns to the Prophet, directing his attention to the people of his time and place. At 11:112 he is told to keep to the right path (a path one may reasonably deduce only as a function of what has preceded, and as a directive to act upon that basis). At 11:113 he and those with him are admonished not to place confidence in those who do wrong, with a warning that the Fire will touch them (cf. 11:96-108) as a consequence of disobedience. Now, at 11:114, comes the imperative in question, directed to the Messenger himself. At this point, the Traditionalist has him praying a number of prayers each day. But what about the entire preceding context? The verse at 11:114 also includes the promise: good deeds take away evil deeds! If the claim is that such good deeds comprise performing a prayer regimen the Traditionalist himself cannot find in the Qur'an, that does gross violence to the context at the very least. More likely, given the context, the ṣalāt mentioned comprises a call to repentance and reform. By way of confirmation, 11:115 calls the Messenger to patience, whereas 11:116 laments that more people were not found forbidding corruption among former peoples. The only interpretation which makes sense is that at 11:114, the Messenger is to repeat the example of former messengers by doing what they did: forbidding corruption and warning the people. Any other reading removes two-thirds of 11:114 from the context entirely, and produces that stilted dissonance which so characterises any reading which assumes the Traditionalist's conclusions. My broader (and much more detailed) analysis concludes that this process of warning was to take the form of three discrete concatenated readings taken from between sūrah 50 and sūrah 114, in a nightly service. Thus, the two ends of the day And at an approach of the night means: the time preceding dawn, and dusk, and the time following dusk. For the full analysis of this service see the section header titled 68:1 towards the end of Article MLQ. See also 17:78 and notes thereto.
11:114[2] Arabic: sayyi'āt. See Notepad XI.x.
11:116[1] Arabic: lawlā. See Notepad XIV.
11:119[1] I.e. for that end. I have no strong opinion on Muhammad Asad's comment here, but include it for interest: Some of the earliest commentators (e.g., Mujahid and 'Ikrimah) are of the opinion that the expression li-dhalika (rendered by me as "to this end") refers to God's bestowal of His grace upon man, while others (e.g., Al-Hasan and 'Ata) relate it to men's ability to differ intellectually from one another. According to Zamakhshari, it refers to the freedom of moral choice which characterizes man and is spoken of in the preceding passages: and since it is this freedom which constitutes God's special gift to man and raises him above all other created beings (cf. the parable of Adam and the angels in 2:30-34), Zamakhshari's interpretation is, in my opinion, the most comprehensive of all.
11:119[2] Cf. 10:33, 10:96, 10:103, 16:36, 16:38, 17:16, 22:18, 28:63, 30:47, 32:13, 36:7, 37:31, 38:14, 39:19, 39:71-72, 40:6, 41:25, 46:18, 50:12-14.

12:0[2] The twelfth chapter of the Qur'an is by convention called yūsuf or Joseph.
12:1[1] See note to 2:1 and Article MLQ.
alif lām rā:
1:1-7 (al fātiḥah).
12:1[2] Arabic: āyāt. See Notepad VIII.
12:1[3] I.e. the Qur'an. For why we know the Qur'an to be the reference see note to 6:92. Arabic: al kitāb. See Notepad IX.ii.
12:2[1] Arabic: qur'ān — reading, recital, recitation, something which is read out.
12:3[1] The story of Yūsuf is 'the best of stories'; as a storyline, it is indeed perfect, as are its lessons and morals.
12:3[2] See note to waḥī and awḥā at 3:44.
12:3[3] Arabic: qur'ān — reading, recital, recitation, something which is read out.
12:4[1] I.e. in a dream.
12:4[2] Arabic: sajada. See Notepad IV.
12:5[1] Or adversary (against the command of God). See Article SJC.

¶12.2

12:7[1] Arabic: āyāt. See Notepad VIII.
12:10[1] Lit.: if you are doers.
12:12[1] Arabic: irta'a. This verb literally means to be out upon pasture or to graze; since it can describe putting a young lamb or goat out to run about, in the context it is applicable as a figure of speech for a child running and gambolling.
12:14[1] I.e. they would fight with their lives to protect the boy.
12:15[1] Sc. they did as they wished.
12:15[2] See note to waḥī and awḥā at 3:44.
12:18[1] Arabic: bal. See note to 2:88.
12:19[1] Arabic: wārid. This is the active participle of the w-r-d root the core meaning of which is to arrive. It occurs also at 19:71 and 21:98 where it is rendered in keeping with the verb to arrive. It is something of a leap for a modern due to his disconnection from the pre-industrial world, but the arriver (as it were) here at 12:19 denotes water-drawer because it is that person whose duties comprise caring for animals upon arrival at a stopping-place. It is under the influence of this original reality that the w-r-d root has acquired connotations of watering-place and to water.

12:20[1] Lit.: dirhams counted. That the Qur'an mentions dirhams in this context has been claimed against it by its detractors since they come from a point of view which assumes the dominant Egypt-Palestine thesis. The Arabia Felix thesis would claim this as a point in its favour. See Notepad XVI.

¶12.3 12:21[1] Or (a) miṣr. This phrase causes Traditionalist translators (themselves locked into an extension of the Egypt-Palestine thesis) to read from miṣr here as referring to the man himself since, read otherwise (that is, read as the man coming from a miṣr with the boy to his wife), there is an unpleasant jarring against their assumptions. The Arabia Felix thesis might claim this as a point in its favour. See note to 2:61 and Notepad XVI.

12:21[2] Meaning to make him comfortable.

12:21[3] The motif 'most men' is characteristic of this chapter and found at 12:21, 12:38, 12:40, 12:68, 12:103. It occurs elsewhere in the Qur'an, but most densely in this chapter (see also: 2:243, 7:187, 11:17, 13:1, 16:38, 17:89, 25:50, 30:6, 30:30, 34:28, 34:36, 40:57, 40:59, 40:61, 45:26).

12:23[1] I.e. to seduce him.

12:23[2] Or he is my lord if understood as indicating the master of the house; an ambiguity exists here since Arabic does not use capitalisation.

12:23[3] Arabic: ẓālimūn. See note to 2:229.

12:24[1] Sc. and might have acted upon his desire. Muhammad Asad discerns a similar ellipsis at this point.

12:24[2] Or lord. See note to 12:23 above.

12:24[3] Arabic: fāḥisẖat, faḥsẖā'. See Notepad XI.iii.

12:25[1] Grammar: dual.

12:25[2] Grammar: dual.

12:28[1] Grammar: the feminine plural is implicit in the Arabic construction indicated by me as women.

12:28[2] Lit.: plan.

12:29[1] Grammar: the feminine singular is implicit in the Arabic construction indicated by me as wife.

12:29[2] Arabic: ḏẖunūb. See Notepad XI.iv.

12:29[3] Arabic root: kẖ-ṭ-'. See Notepad XI.vi.

¶12.4 12:30[1] Arabic: 'azīz — mighty, excellent; also denotes high-ranking dignitary.

12:30[2] Arabic: sẖaghafa — infatuate, enamour. The corresponding verbs in English are usually rendered in the passive voice and do not readily allow for direct objects in such a context. By rendering as I have, it has been possible to overcome these problems and convey something of the tension inherent in a context in which a houseboy possesses a form of mastery over his mistress.

12:31[1] Muhammad Asad notes the following: The expression muttaka'- lit., "a place where one reclines [while eating]", i.e., a "cushioned couch" - seems to have been used here tropically to denote a "luxurious [or "sumptuous"] repast". The reason, I must assume, that Asad regards this word 'tropically' rather than literally is because the literal reading does not fit with the dominant Egypt-Palestine thesis, which he inherited by default. Study of how well-to-do people took their food (i.e. sitting as per modern Western convention, or reclining as per Classical Roman and some Eastern conventions), might provide a minor proof point between those location theses of which we are aware (see Notepad XVI).

12:31[2] The community among which Yūsuf lives is cognisant of One God — a fact confirmed several times in the chapter. This presents a difficulty, I would suggest, for the Egypt-Palestine thesis (which places this narrative in ancient Egypt); there is no corresponding difficulty for either the ʿAsīr-Ḥejāz thesis or the Arabia Felix thesis, both of which presuppose a backdrop of historical iterations of monotheism (albeit one frequently found in decline or in diluted or corrupt condition). See Notepad XVI.

12:33[1] Grammar: we note the use here of the masculine plural (used for both male and mixed plural subjects), perhaps indicating the complicity of male servants under instruction by their mistresses.

12:33[2] Grammar: feminine plural object pronoun.

12:33[3] Grammar: feminine plural object pronoun.

12:33[4] Grammar: feminine plural possessive adjective.

12:35[1] Grammar: the pronoun object is in the masculine plural suggesting that responsible men concerned with the case weighed the evidence. From the context, it seems likely that this group of men included husbands of the women scheming to entrap Yūsuf.

12:35[2] Arabic: āyāt. See Notepad VIII. Possibly, in this case, it refers to the evidence of the women's cut hands.

¶12.5 12:36[1] Grammar: dual.

12:36[2] Lit.: I saw.

12:36[3] Lit.: I saw.

12:37[1] Grammar: dual.

12:37[2] Grammar: dual.

12:37[3] Grammar: dual.

12:37[4] Grammar: dual.

12:37[5] Some think this refers to the household of the Governor. The broader context possibly suggests the personal decision each must make no matter into what family he was born.

12:37[6] See note to 58:4 for Qur'anic usage of to believe in.

12:38[1] This illustrates definitively that Yūsuf understood that faith in God is a personal decision and not merely a matter of racial or cultural inheritance.

12:38[2] See note to Arabic root: sẖ-r-k at 6:78 and Notepad VI.

12:38[3] Again, Yūsuf's account lacks the emphasis on racial supremacy and exclusivity which permeates the Hebrew Bible in its current state.

12:38[4] The motif 'most men' is characteristic of this chapter and found at 12:21, 12:38, 12:40, 12:68, 12:103. See also note to 12:21.

12:40[1] Grammar: plural.

12:40[2] Arabic: min dūni. See note to 2:23.

12:40[3] Arabic: dīn. See Notepad V. This exact phrase occurs at 9:36, 12:40, 30:30.

12:40[4] The motif 'most men' is characteristic of this chapter and found at 12:21, 12:38, 12:40, 12:68, 12:103. See also note to 12:21.

12:41[1] Or put to death by stake. See note to ṣalaba at 4:157.

12:41[2] Grammar: dual.

12:42[1] Or adversary (against the command of God). See Article SJC.

12:42[2] Arabic: ḏẖikr — calling to mind, recalling, reminding; remembrance (of something past); history.

¶12.6 12:43[1] I.e. I saw.

12:43[2] Or dry.

12:45[1] Arabic: ummah. This is claimed by the preponderance of Traditionalists to mean time or period. This, I suggest, may be an example of how the Arabic language and lexicons have accommodated religious assumptions over time. There are 64 instances of this noun in the text, yet for this one instance alone we are to accept a value which has no obvious etymological connection with the root sense. While I have complied with this convention, an explanation might be that the word here is immah (visually identical to ummah in the unadorned script). Arabic: immah — easy life, ease and enjoyment; plenty.

12:46[1] Or dry.

12:48[1] I.e. years.

12:49[1] Arabic: aghatha — to give abundant rain (here passive). Muhammad Asad who renders this verb 'to be delivered from distress' identifies the underlying problem in interpretation in his comment: Or: "will be granted rain" - depending on whether one connects the verbal form yughath with either of the infinitive nouns ghayth ("rain") or ghawth ("deliverance from distress"). Although the crops of Egypt depend entirely on the annual Nile floods, the water-level of the river is, in its turn, contingent upon the quantity of rainfall at its upper reaches. The problem which Asad here attempts to resolve (not convincingly in my view) is inherent under the Egypt-Palestine thesis — but not under the Arabia Felix thesis, for example, since Yemen's agriculture is directly dependent upon rain (see Notepad XVI).

12:49[2] I.e. press grapes.

¶12.7 12:50[1] Arabic: al rasūl. This is precisely the same word as applied often to the recipient of the Qur'an. Its meaning here is of a man given a message, whose job was to pass on that message precisely as he received it, and no more.

12:50[2] Grammar: the feminine plural implicit in the Arabic construction is indicated by me by means of women.

12:51[1] The king is speaking.

12:51[2] Grammar: the feminine plural implicit in the Arabic construction is indicated by me by means of women.

12:51[3] Arabic: sū' (sg.), aswā' (pl.). See Notepad XI.v.

12:51[4] Arabic: al ḥaqq. See Notepad XVII (al ḥaqq i.).

12:51[5] Lit.: of those who speak truthfully.

12:52[1] I.e. her husband. The wife of the Governor had evidently had time to reflect.

12:53[1] Arabic: sū' (sg.), aswā' (pl.). See Notepad XI.v.

12:53[2] Verses 12:52-53 are taken by some as the words of Yūsuf. I do not agree for several reasons. Firstly, it is the wife speaking at 12:51. Secondly, Yūsuf was absent as indicated by 12:54. Thirdly, the speech is one of contrition and admission of guilt — neither of which rightly apply to Yūsuf, who had done no wrong.

12:54[1] Lit.: self, soul.

12:54[2] I.e. in rank.

12:55[1] I have rendered in keeping with the common understanding of this word in this context, however a grasp on the Arabic allows access to a more nuanced perception of what is the case here: kẖizāna (pl) kẖazā'in — treasure house; money box; vault, safe; treasury, treasury department. Elsewhere in this work the word is rendered treasuries; other translators tend to do similarly (cf. 6:50, 11:31, 15:21, 17:100, 38:9, 52:37, 64:7).

12:57[1] Arabic: allaḏẖīna āmanū. See note to 2:257 and Notepad II.iv.

12:57[2] See note to al muttaqūn at 2:2.

¶12.8 12:58[1] Or recognised.

12:61[1] This is frequently rendered along the lines of We will try to persuade his father to part with him. Such is a perfectly good translation. However, I wanted the reader with no access to the Arabic to feel the use here of the same verb here as found at 12:23, 12:26, 12:30, 12:32, 12:51, 12:51. As the reader becomes more familiar with the Qur'an, he begins to discern the characteristic language and motifs of each of its parts. To convey these in translation is frequently beyond my abilities, yet I felt that the present example could be preserved without undue damage to the English.

12:62[1] Lit.: young men.

12:63[1] Cf. 12:12.

12:65[1] Lit.: what do we desire!

12:65[2] Since they could spend again what had been returned to them.

12:66[1] Lit.: from.

12:67[1] Those who hold to the Arabia Felix thesis and who relate miṣr to a trading centre or walled citadel find support for their reading here. See Notepad XVI.

12:67[2] Arabic: mutawakkilūn. See note to 3:159.

12:68[1] Arabic: min ḥaytẖu. See note to 2:149. Here A. J. Arberry renders this collocation after the manner; Muhammad Asad has: in the way; Hilali & Khan have: according to; N. J. Dawood has simply: as.

12:68[2] The motif 'most men' is characteristic of this chapter and found at 12:21, 12:38, 12:40, 12:68, 12:103. See also note to 12:21.

¶12.9 12:69[1] Cf. 11:36.

12:70[1] Muhammad Asad has a note here which some may find useful: Commenting on this verse, Razi says: "Nowhere in the Qur'an is it stated that they made this accusation on Joseph's orders; the circumstantial evidence shows rather (al-agrab ilazahir al-hal) that they did this of their own accord: for, when they had missed the drinking-cup, [these servants of Joseph remembered that] nobody had been near it [except the sons of Jacob], and so it occurred to them that it was they who had taken it." Analogous views are also advanced by Tabari and Zamakhshari in their comments on the last words of verse 76 below. This extremely plausible explanation contrasts sharply with the Biblical account of this incident (Genesis xliv), according to which the false accusation was part of an inexplicable "stratagem" devised by Joseph. If we discard - as we must - this part of the Biblical version, it is far more logical to assume that Joseph, who had been granted by the King full authority over all that belonged to the latter (see verse 56 above), had placed the royal cup as a present in the bag of his favourite brother; and that he did this secretly, without informing his servants, because he did not want anyone, least of all his ten half-brothers, to know his predilection for Benjamin.

12:74[1] Elsewhere rendered reward.

12:75[1] Elsewhere rendered reward.

12:75[2] Elsewhere rendered reward.

12:75[3] The chopping-off of hands is conspicuously absent here as the punishment for theft (see note to 5:38).

12:75[4] Arabic: ẓālimūn. See note to 2:229.

12:76[1] Arabic: dīn. See Notepad V.

12:76[2] Lit.: degrees.

12:77[1] Specifically, they are implying an insult towards the mother of Yūsuf and his brother since all brothers shared the same father; there is no record of Yūsuf stealing anything in this history except, possibly, figuratively the love of Yaʿqūb which — as the brothers would have seen it — was their right.

12:77[2] Muhammad Asad notes here: According to almost all the commentators, the pronoun "it" refers to Joseph's subsequent "saying" or, rather, thought, indicated by the verb "he said" (i.e., within himself)[...].

12:78[1] I.e. advanced in years.

12:78[2] Arabic: makān — position, place. Modified here in English for reasons of naturalness, this word echoes Yūsuf's use of the same in the preceding verse.

12:79[1] Lit.: the (taking) refuge in God.

12:79[2] Arabic: ẓālimūn. See note to 2:229.

¶12.10

12:80[1] Lit.: from.

12:83[1] Cf. 12:18.

12:83[2] Arabic: bal. See note to 2:88.

12:83[3] Grammar: this is in the plural not the dual; the eldest brother voluntarily remained behind (12:80-82), making three.

12:86[1] I see the resolution of this statement at 12:96. Muhammad Asad's comment here is also helpful: Namely, that "judgment as to what is to happen rests with none but God", and that "all who have 'trust [in His existence] must place their trust in Him alone" (verse 67): the twin ideas which underlie the whole of this surah, and which Jacob now seeks to impress upon his sons. In addition to this, his remembrance of Joseph's prophetic dream (verse 4) and his own conviction at the time that his beloved son would be elected by God for His special grace (verse 6), fills Jacob with renewed hope that Joseph is still alive (Razi and Ibn Kathir): and this explains the directives which he gives his sons in the next sentence.

12:87[1] Arabic: rawḥ. This word covers a range of meanings, including: rest, repose; redress; quietude of mind; cheerfulness, joy; compassion; divine mercy; refreshing breeze; pleasant; good fortune. It is also connected closely with rūḥ, meaning spirit; life; soul, mind; word or spirit of God, revelation, prophecy. It is found twice at 12:86 and once at 56:89.

12:87[2] Arabic: al kāfirūn. See note to 2:19 and Notepad II.iii.

12:88[1] Arabic: muzjā. This word shares a root with the form IV verb meaning to drive (17:66, 24:43). Lane (p. 1224) identifies in passing the connection with the root sense where he says of muzjā: "small or scanty thing[...]; that may be pushed and driven away because of the little account made of it." And of the collocation here at 12:88 he says: "small, or scanty, merchandise; little in quantity[...] or merchandise rejected by every one to whom it is offered[...] or merchandise wherewith the days are pushed on."

12:90[1] See note to al muttaqūn at 2:2.

¶12.11

12:94[1] Lit.: find.

12:94[2] Or breath.

12:94[3] Instances where speech either trails off or is clipped through interruption are found at 2:138, 6:143, 6:144, 10:22, 12:94, 26:24, 26:26, 26:28, 43:9, 58:22, 77:11, 84:5.

12:96[1] I.e. Yūsuf's shirt.

12:96[2] Lit.: he returned seeing.

12:96[2] Cf. 12:86.

12:97[1] Arabic: dẖunūb. See Notepad XI.iv.

12:97[2] Arabic root: ḵẖ-ṭ-ʾ. See Notepad XI.vi.

12:99[1] Or (a) miṣr. See note to 2:61. This statement presents a problem to the Egypt-Palestine thesis (which places the narrative in Egypt and correlates miṣr with ancient Egypt — a position which the Traditionalist supports) since those speaking are already physically present in the given country; the Arabia Felix thesis (wherein miṣr is taken in its original sense of trading station or citadel) readily accommodates this statement, and has Yaʿqūb and his sons leaving a rural, pastoral existence and entering a commercial, city-based one; the ʿAsīr-Ḥejāz thesis proposed by Kamal Salibi connects the m-ṣ-r root with an Arabian tribe. See Notepad XVI.

12:100[1] This masculine plural pronoun can denote only the brothers since Yūsuf is in conversation with his father (cf. 'he raised his parents upon the throne'). See Notepad IV.

12:100[2] Arabic: sajada. See Notepad IV.

12:100[3] Lit.: interpretation.

12:100[4] Arabic: ḥaqqan. See Notepad XVII (ḥaqq- iii.).

12:100[5] This point is claimed as support by the Arabia Felix thesis: that the locus of the entire narrative is much smaller than that claimed by the Egypt-Palestine thesis, and that the transition for the children of Israel at this time was from a pastoral, nomadic existence to a fixed, urban one.

12:100[6] Or adversary (against the command of God). See Article SJC.

12:100[7] While many translators run this direct speech into that which follows in the next verse, my sense is that closing the speech marks here and treating the next verse as a separate speech is more logical given the change in addressee.

12:101[1] See note to muslim at 2:128.

12:102[1] See note to waḥī and awḥā at 3:44.

12:103[1] The motif 'most men' is characteristic of this chapter and found at 12:21, 12:38, 12:40, 12:68, 12:103. See also note to 12:21.

12:103[2] See note to (al) mu'minūn at 8:2.

12:104[1] Arabic: dẖikr — calling to mind, recalling, reminding; remembrance (of something past); history.

12:104[2] The Qur'an does not create or support a particular religion; it is a preaching intended for all humanity.

12:105[1] Arabic: āya. See Notepad VIII.

12:106[1] Lit.: when they are.

12:106[2] I.e. by ascribing to God a religion and worshipping that. See note to Arabic root: sẖ-r-k at 6:78 and Notepad VI.

12:108[1] See note to s-b-ḥ root at 2:30.

12:109[1] See note to waḥī and awḥā at 3:44.

12:109[3] Arabic: afalā. See Notepad XIV.

12:110[1] Arabic: ḥattā idẖā. See note to 3:152.

12:110[2] Or victory.

12:111[1] Arabic: ḥadīṯẖ — story; account; narrative, narration. The Qur'an's usage of this term appears at times to anticipate the later abuse of it by Muslims.

12:111[2] Lit.: between its hands. I understand this to mean here: what is within its scope; i.e. that which it treats of or concerns itself with. See note to 2:66.

12:111[3] I.e. that is found within its scope.

13:0[2] The thirteenth chapter of the Qur'an is by convention called al raʿd or Thunder.

13:1[1] See note to 2:1 and Article MLQ.

13:3[2] Arabic: āyāt. See Notepad VIII.

13:4[1] The Arabic word ṣinwān — which occurs twice in this phrase and nowhere else in the Qur'an — is a difficult concept to render in English. Lane (p. 1746) says that ṣinwān means one of a pair or of more than a pair. He writes: "of palm-trees, or of any trees, or of trees resembling one another, growing from one root; each [or every one] of such being called the ṣinw of the other [or others growing with it]." He renders this portion of the verse at 13:4 as: "Palm-trees having one root and [others] having distinct roots." He goes on to state: "A brother; but not so called unless coupled with another: or a brother by the same father[...] because he has branched forth from one stock [with his father]". Translators render variously. N. J. Dawood has: and groves of palm, the single and the clustered; A. J. Arberry renders: and palms in pairs, and palms single; Saheeh International has: palm trees, [growing] several from a root or otherwise; Hilali & Khan have: and date-palms, growing out two or three from a single stem root, or otherwise (one stem root for every palm); Muhammad Asad has: and date-palms growing in clusters from one root or standing alone and attaches a note to standing alone which reads: Lit., "non-clustered" (ghayr sin wan)=i.e., each tree having separate roots.

13:4[2] Arabic: āyāt. See Notepad VIII.

13:5[1] I.e. at men's denial of the Resurrection.

13:6[1] Arabic: sayyi'a. See Notepad XI.ix.

13:6[2] I.e. instead of.

13:6[3] I.e. they challenge the Messenger to bring down the punishments of God. Cf. 27:46.

13:6[4] Arabic: al maṯẖulāt. This word occurs only once in the text. It is a feminine plural noun based on the m-ṯẖ-l root, which is found most commonly in the Qur'an with the meanings like or example. Additionally, exemplariness and similitude are concepts which are features of this root. The notion of punishment is implicit in the context and the feminine plural noun here possibly corresponds in a multiple application to the feminine singular noun al sayyi'a (rendered here the evil) which precedes (and which itself undoubtedly references the retribution of God). Other translators generally render here as have I, or with similar punishments.

13:7[1] Arabic: alladẖīna kafarū. See note to 2:6 and Notepad II.i.

13:7[2] Arabic: āya. See Notepad VIII.

13:7[3] Arabic: lawlā. See Notepad XIV.

13:7[4] It is a feature of Arabic that the verb to be is often implied rather than explicit. This is the case in other languages also (for example, Russian). Occasionally, this can give rise to ambiguity — which is the case here. The clause can mean either 'Thou art but a warner And for every people a guide' or 'Thou art but a warner And for every people is a guide'. A. J. Arberry, for example, renders after the first model, and both N. J. Dawood and Saheeh International after the second. I tend toward the second reading on the basis of the established facts that it is God who guides (cf. 2:272) and that God sends a messenger to every community (cf. 10:47, 16:36). Muhammad Asad broadly concurs in his translation with the conclusion here, rendering: and [in God] all people have a guide. I reproduce his note below in full: According to the classical commentators, this sentence lends itself to several interpretations: (1) "Thou art only a warner; and every nation has had a guide like thee (i.e., a prophet)"- which would be in consonance with the Qur'anic doctrine of the continuity of prophetic guidance; or (2) "Thou art only a warner - but [at the same time] also a guide unto all people" - which would stress the universality of the Qur'anic message as contrasted with the time-bound and ethnically limited missions of the earlier prophets; or (3) "Thou art only a warner bound to do no more than deliver the message entrusted to thee, while it is God alone who can truly guide men's hearts towards faith". Since the last of the above three interpretations is the most plausible and has, moreover, the support of 'Abd Allah ibn 'Abbas, Sa'id ibn Jubayr, Mujahid and Ad-Dahhak, I have adopted it in my rendering. According to Zamakhshari, this interpretation is further strengthened by the subsequent reference to God's omniscience.

13:10[1] I.e. to God.

13:10[2] God created us; it makes no difference if one hides what one says or thinks — nothing is hidden from him.

13:11[1] I.e. the archetypal person outlined in the previous verse.

13:11[2] Arabic: mu'aqqibāt. This is typically understood to refer to angels. The regular plural ending, and related usage (cf. 72:27) tend to confirm this. The word is the form II active participle of the verb 'aqaba. The form II verb occurs at 27:10 and 28:31 where it means to return, to come back, to look again. The core root senses are: follow after (repeatedly); expose; criticise. The active participle occurs in only one other instance (13:41) where it means critic or adjuster (of the decision of another). Given what we can glean on a pan-textual basis, the sense in the present case appears to be of angels which perform (repeated or relentless) examination or evaluation — a value which comports with a broader narrative which treats of the futility of hiding anything from God.

13:11[3] Or it. One can take this masculine pronoun object to reference qawl (speech) in the previous verse, although it is commonly (and legitimately) thought to refer to the man himself.

13:11[4] I include Muhammad Asad's note here for interest: The rendering of the above passage hinges on the meaning given to the term mu'aqqibat-a double plural of mu'aqqib, which signifies "something that comes immediately after another thing" or "succeeds another thing without interruption". Most of the classical commentators understand by mu'aqqibat "hosts of angels", i.e., the recording angels who attend on every human being, succeeding one another without interruption. Consequently, they interpret the phrase min bayni yadayhi wa-min khalfihi as meaning "ranged before him and behind him", i.e., surrounding man from all sides; and they explain the words "from God's command" as being here synonymous with "by God's command", and take them to refer to the angels or to their function of guardianship. However, this interpretation has by no means the support of all the commentators. Some of the earliest ones assume that the term mu'aqqibat refers to all manner of worldly forces or concepts on which man so often relies in the mistaken belief that they might help him to achieve his aims independently of God's will: and this is the meaning given to this elliptic passage by the famous commentator Abu Muslim al-Isfahani, as quoted by Razi. Explaining verse 10 and the first part of verse 11, he says: "All alike are, in God's knowledge, deeds done secretly or openly, as well as he who hides in the darkness of night and he who walks [boldly] in the light of day... : for he that resorts to the [cover of] night can never elude God's will (amr), just as he [cannot] that walks in the light of day, surrounded by hosts of helpers (mu'aqqibat)- that is, guards and aids - meant to protect him: [for] those guards of his cannot save him from [the will of] God." It is on this convincing interpretation that I have based my rendering. The worldly "guards and aids" on which a sinner relies may be tangible (like wealth, progeny, etc.) or intangible (like personal power, high social standing, or the belief in one's "luck"): and this explains the phrase "both such as can be perceived by him and such as are hidden from him".

13:11[5] Arabic: min dūni. See note to 2:23.

13:12[1] See note to 7:57.

13:13[1] See note to s-b-ḥ root at 2:30.

13:13[2] Lit.: and.

13:13[3] Or cunning, subtlety. Arabic: miḥāl. This is the only instance of this root, which fact makes it vulnerable to misrepresentation. The word is commonly translated might or power or assault and synonyms, and I have complied with that convention in translation. However, the m-ḥ-l root relates more to concepts of cunning or scheming. Commentators have perhaps ascribed what they considered more appropriate values to the word, and the results of this process have entered the lexicons. However, one can see that such values are at odds with the primary root senses. Translators who comment here attempt to resolve this problem. Muhammad Asad explains his decision at this juncture thus: According to Raghib, the expression[...] (which occurs in the Qur'an only in this one place) signifies "powerful in contriving, in a manner hidden from man, that wherein wisdom lies". Asad has made a noble attempt at rendering (or explaining) what is on the page, while bending the sense in a direction in keeping with his refined nature.

13:14[1] Arabic: al ḥaqq. See Notepad XVII (al ḥaqq i.); i.e. the kind of supplication one makes when the heart is utterly sincere — beyond all men's conceptions and pontifications about the nature of God — for example, when both engines on the plane you are in catch fire as you fly over the Andes, or you learn that your child has been picked up from school by an unauthorised stranger and is now missing.

13:16[5] I.e. if this is the claim — as per the modern myths found in blind-chance creationism which is the current enforced orthodoxy.

13:16[6] I.e. as it does to you. They are still looking at the same creation — they cannot get away from that fact.

13:17[1] I.e. to make.

13:17[2] Arabic: ḍaraba. Since what follows is an example, I have rendered ḍaraba as present.

13:17[3] Arabic: al ḥaqq. See Notepad XVII (al ḥaqq i.).

13:18[1] The naked verb to ransom in English tends to be a perfective idea assuming a successful outcome. The uncertain outcome of a verb is made explicit in English by the inclusion of such words as to seek to, which I have done here.

¶13.3 13:19[1] See note to 3:162.

13:19[2] Arabic: al ḥaqq. See Notepad XVII (al ḥaqq i.).

13:20[1] I take this to be a reference to al fātiḥah in the first instance. See note to 2:27.

13:22[1] Arabic: al ṣalāt; i.e. such duty as is incumbent. See note to 2:3 and Article SZC.

13:22[2] Arabic: sayyi'a. See Notepad XI.ix.

13:22[3] The word good is commonly understood here. I base my own inclusion of it both on its presence (along with evil) in the preceding phrase, and on a correlation between the present phrase and its contrary equivalent at 13:25.

13:22[4] Arabic: 'uqbā — end, outcome, upshot; issue, effect, result, consequence. This word occurs six times in the text, five of which instances are in this chapter. Where it occurs, as here, with al dār, I render as an adjective (as do most other translators) as the only way to achieve consistency across the broader narrative. Elsewhere I render as final outcome. The remaining instance is at 91:15.

13:23[1] Cf. 40:8.

13:25[1] I take this to be a reference to al fātiḥah in the first instance. See note to 2:27.

13:26[1] Lit.: in or concerning.

13:26[2] Arabic: matā' — enjoyment, delight, gratification, pleasure. Inherent in the Qur'an's use of this word is a sense of impermanence which I have conveyed here by the use of passing in keeping with many translators.

13:29[1] Arabic: alladhīna āmanū. See note to 2:257 and Notepad II.iv.

13:29[2] Arabic: ṭūbā. This word occurs once. Its root is ṭ-y-b (which occurs frequently in other forms in the Qur'an) conveys senses of goodness and we can take ṭūbā to mean unalloyed goodness or blessedness.

13:29[3] Arabic: ma'āb — place of return; place to which one returns.

13:30[1] See note to waḥī and awḥā at 3:44.

13:30[3] Cf. 2:255, 3:2, 3:6, 3:18, 3:18, 4:87, 6:102, 6:106, 7:158, 9:129, 13:30, 20:8, 20:98, 23:116, 27:26, 28:70, 28:88, 35:3, 39:6, 40:3, 40:62, 40:65, 44:8, 59:22, 59:23, 64:13, 73:9.

13:31[1] Arabic: qur'ān — reading, recital, recitation, something which is read out.

13:31[3] Arabic: bal. See note to 2:88.

13:31[5] Arabic: ya'isa. This word tends to be treated as the verb to know. A. J. Arberry's rendering is typical: Did not the believers know that, if God had willed, He would have guided men all together? However, this form I verb occurs eight times (5:3, 12:87, 12:87, 13:31, 29:23, 60:13, 60:13, 65:4) and in all other contexts is recognised as to despair or cognates thereof. Lane (p. 3035) notes that this verb has come to mean to know in the dialect of En-Nakha' and derivatives thereof, according to various authorities. We are primarily interested in what the Qur'an means by the term; and given what we have already stated as the preponderance of the Qur'an's treatment of this word, we should default to that value. Lane further cites a value which supports our case: "[...]or, accord. to some of the lexicologists[...] the meaning is, do not then those who have believed despair of the belief of those whom God has described as those who will not believe?" Understood thus, the emphasis is on the anxiety for loved ones that is the daily experience of every compassionate believer, given that God sends those who choose to reject him to Hell (cf. 11:119, 32:13).

13:31[6] Arabic: alladhīna kafarū. See note to 2:6 and Notepad II.i.

13:31[7] I reproduce Muhammad Asad's comment here for interest: Lit., "a sudden calamity (qari'ah) will not cease (la yazal) to befall them or to alight close to their home". However, since this phrase connotes repetition and continuity, the singular form of the noun qari'ah has here obviously a cumulative sense - namely, an unceasing succession of social catastrophes, fratricidal wars and mutual deprivations which, in consequence of their deliberate disregard of all spiritual values, will directly befall "those who are bent on denying the truth" (alladhina kafaru), or will, indirectly, cause them to suffer by affecting their whole organic environment: and this, to my mind, is the meaning of the phrase "or will alight close to their homes".

13:31[8] Or to alight.

Cf. in this connection 14:4, where it is stated that every one of God's prophets was entrusted with a message "in his own people's tongue, so that he might make [the truth] clear unto them". That the message of the Qur'an is universal, and not restricted to the Arabs alone, is brought out clearly in many places, e.g., in 7:158, "Say [O Prophet]: 'O mankind! Verily, I am an apostle of God to all of you."*

Having identified the set, one needs criteria for distinguishing between those cases where it can be rendered literally and where not. Having considered the context for each of the components which make up the set, the criteria I use are: where the following word is annā (as here) or an, I render Have they not considered? In all other cases I render Have they not seen? All instances reference this verse. See also note to 2:243.

13:43[2] Sc. understands these things. The Traditionalist typically has it (or at least when he has inserted parenthetical statements) that Sufficient is God as witness between me and you And [so is] who has knowledge[...]. I reject this reading because I find the insinuation that God should need or accept further witness unacceptable on the basis of clear Qur'anic statements (e.g. 4:166). Nor can it be that Sufficient is God as witness between me and you And [between] whoso has knowledge[...] because the preposition bayna is absent before whoso. In my view, the strongest case is for ellipsis, which is supplied above.

14:15[2] Or judgment or victory (from God). Muhammad Asad's comment here is most useful to the reader without access to the Arabic: Or: "they [i.e., the apostles] prayed for victory" or "for [God's] aid" - both these meanings being contained in the noun fath, with which the verbal form istaftahu, used here, is connected. It should be borne in mind that the primary significance of fataha is "he opened", and of istaftaha, "he sought to open [something]" or "he desired that it be opened". Thus, the above passage echoes, in a generalized form, Shu'ayb's prayer in 7:89, "Lay Thou open (iftah) the truth between us and our people".
14:16[1] Lit.: After him. Often rendered Before him for clarity since it is understood here in the sense of in time. Cf. 14:17, 23:100, 45:10, 85:20.
14:16[2] I include Muhammad Asad's comment here for interest: The word sadid is an infinitive noun of sadda. which in its primary meaning denotes "he turned away" or "was averse [from something]"; also - as noted in the Qamus and the Asas - "he cried out loudly" (i.e., by reason of his aversion to something). Since sadid signifies anything that is repulsive, it is also used tropically to describe the pus that flows from wounds or the viscous liquid that oozes from corpses. In his commentary on this verse, Razi suggests that the expression ma' sadid is here purely metaphorical, and should be understood as "water like [what is described as] sadid". It is in pursuance of this interpretation that I have rendered the above expression as "waters of most bitter distress" - a metaphor of the boundless suffering and bitter frustration which, in the life to come, awaits those who during their life in this world were bent on denying all spiritual truths. (Cf. the expression sharab min hamim - rendered by me as "a draught of burning despair" - occurring in several places.

14:22[4] This is why the Satanic system gives its victims advance warning via media (in promoted films, for example) of its plans. It thus both practices predictive programming (showing future events in the form of fiction to acclimatise the masses to planned outcomes) and trains the herd to disregard its right moral interests. Importantly, it renders the masses who acquiesce culpable by these means. The battle is for our souls; we can only justly be condemned if we have given — at some level — our approval to the Satanic agenda. And legally, silence connotes consent.

Thus, a "good word" circumscribes any proposition (or idea) that is intrinsically true and - because it implies a call to what is good in the moral sense - is ultimately beneficent and enduring; and since a call to moral righteousness is the innermost purport of every one of God's messages, the term "good word" applies to them as well.*

14:31[3] I.e. commerce.
14:32[1] Arabic: fulk — (m. and f.) ship, (also coll.) ships.
14:33[1] Arabic: da'aba — to persevere, to persist, to be indefatigable, be tireless.
14:34[1] With Muhammad Asad I render this clause in the present tense in English.

¶14.6 14:35[1] Cf. 14:6 and note thereto.
14:35[2] Muhammad Asad comments here: The whole of this passage (verses 35-41) - from which the title of this surah is derived represents a parenthetic reminder, in the form of Abraham's prayer, of the only way to righteousness, in the deepest sense of the word, open to man: namely, a recognition of God's existence, oneness and uniqueness and, hence, a rejection of all belief in "other powers" supposedly co-existent with Him (cf. verse 30 above). Inasmuch as this prayer implies a realization of, and gratitude for, God's infinite bounty, it connects directly with the preceding verse 34 and the subsequent verse 42.
14:35[3] Arabic: (sg.) ṣanam, (pl.) aṣnām. Translated usually as image or idol, the underlying sense is of something fashioned, shaped or pictured (that is: created). Muhammad Asad comments here: The term "idols" (asnam, sing. sanam) does not apply exclusively to actual, concrete representations of false "deities": for shirk - that is, an attribution of divine powers or qualities to anyone or anything beside God - may consist also, as Razi points out, in a worshipful devotion to all manner of "causative agencies and outward means to an end" - an obvious allusion to wealth, power, luck, people's favour or disfavour, and so forth - "whereas genuine faith in the oneness and uniqueness of God (at-tawhid al-maha) consists in divesting oneself of all inner attachment to [such] causative agencies and in being convinced that there exists no real directing power apart from God".

14:37[1] If this indeed refers to a physical sanctuary as the Traditionalist asserts, that place, in my view, was at Petra and no longer exists (see Notepad XVI). This episode supplies us today with a historical event — one of many found in the Qur'an — from which we can learn, but in which we are not expected to participate. See also note to 9:28 and my work The God Protocol.
14:37[2] al ṣalāt; i.e. such duty as is incumbent. See note to 2:3 and Article SZC.
14:40[1] muqīm al ṣalāt; i.e. one upholding such duty as is incumbent. See note to 2:3 and Article SZC.
14:41[1] See note to (al) mu'minūn at 8:2.

¶14.7 14:42[1] The narrative returns from the story of Ibrāhīm to the present messenger.
14:42[2] Arabic: ẓālimūn. See note to 2:229.
14:42[3] For a brief discussion of whether part of humanity is raised up blind on the Day of Judgment see note to 19:38.
14:47[1] I parse differently to most. I see the present clause as the continuation of the thought which begins in the previous verse, the impetus of which continues through to 14:51.
14:48[1] Lit.: and they. Understood usually to indicate all men, or all creatures. Given how I parse 14:46-47, I incline to the view that what is meant specifically in the first instance is His messengers. In support of this, consider: 4:41-42, 4:165, 5:109, 5:116-120, 6:130-131, 7:6-9, 16:84, 16:89, 25:22-30, 28:65-67, 28:74-75, 39:67-70, 40:51-52, 77:8-15.
14:52[1] Usually understood to mean the Qur'an as a whole. However, in my view, the case is stronger for what immediately precedes this point in this chapter.
14:52[2] Cf. 3:20, 5:67, 46:35.
14:52[3] Lit.: and that.

15:2[2] The Traditionalist makes claims for the meaning of this word which, though seeming to confirm his sectarian predilections, are shown to be false on the basis of the Qur'an's use of this term. See note to muslim at 2:128.
15:3[1] E.g. from the inescapable fact of death.
15:4[1] Arabic: kitāb. See Notepad IX.iii.

15:9[1] Arabic: dẖikr — calling to mind, recalling, reminding; remembrance (of something past); history.
15:9[2] Lit.: custodians. If one takes the context to reference the Qur'an as a whole (which is a reasonable position, and the Traditionalist himself does so), one should also consider that the Traditionalist has created a complicated narrative purporting to represent the history of the preservation of the Qur'an. That narrative itself is nowhere anticipated in the Qur'an, and is flatly rejected by it here. Read as the Traditionalist himself reads this verse, God made responsibility for the protection of the Qur'an binding upon himself in the Qur'an. If one accepts the Qur'an, that should be sufficient. If one chooses to lose oneself in later stories asserted by the religion called Islam, then one should be aware that those stories themselves contradict the book that religion claims as its foundation.
15:12[1] Grammar: the masculine object pronoun may refer to kufr (denial).
15:13[1] See note to 58:4 for Qur'anic usage of to believe in.

15:15[3] Arabic: masḥūrūn from siḥr — sorcery. See note to 2:102.

¶15.2 15:17[1] Or adversary (against the command of God). See Article SJC. While I am not convinced on all points, I include Muhammad Asad's comment here for broader perspective of the interested student: The term shaytan ("satan") - derived from the verb shatana ("he was [or "became"] remote") - often denotes in the Qur'an a force or influence remote from, and opposed to, all that is true and good (Taj al-'Arus, Raghib): thus, for instance, in 2:14 it is used to describe the evil impulses (shayatin) within the hearts of "those who are bent on denying the truth". In its widest, abstract sense it denotes every "satanic force", i.e., every impulsion directed towards ends which are contrary to valid ethical postulates. In the present context, the phrase "every satanic force accursed (rajim)"- like the phrase "every rebellious (marid) satanic force" in a similar context in 37:7 - apparently refers to endeavours, strongly condemned in Islam, to divine the future by means of astrological speculations: hence the preceding reference to the skies and the stars. The statement that God has made the heavens "secure" against such satanic forces obviously implies that He has made it impossible for the latter to obtain, through astrology or what is popularly described as "occult sciences", any real knowledge of "that which is beyond the reach of human perception" (al-ghayb). See also 37:6-10, 67:5-6.
15:18[1] Arabic: 'atba'a. See note to 2:262. Cf. 37:6-10.
15:18[2] I.e. the sẖayṭān of the previous verse. Tense in Qur'anic Arabic is far more fluid than what we are used to in modern languages. Translators typically render the current verse in the present tense. I have followed this convention because the overhead of contesting the point seemed greater than any possible benefit. However, the strictly grammatical form — as also found in the verses which immediately precede and follow it — is in the past tense. That sẖayṭān treats of an adversary (against the command of God). See Article SJC.
15:19[1] Arabic: min kulli. See note to 2:164.
15:21[1] Or appointed.
15:23[1] Lit.: inheritors.
15:24[1] Rendered also as And we know the former [peoples] among you And we know the latter. The form X participles which comprise the objects in this verse occur nowhere else in the text. Given the use of the roots of both words across the text as a whole, I have chosen to render as here, concurring with A. J. Arberry's understanding.

¶15.3 15:26[1] I agree to some extent with — and have based my rendering here upon that of — Muhammad Asad. While I reject the popular, heavily financed, resurrected ancient myth of Evolution (preferring instead the scientific method — namely something based upon verifiable evidence — over speculation, myth and the persecution of dissenters) Asad's note at this point is reproduced here in full: There are many references in the Qur'an to man's having been "created out of clay (tin)" or "out of dust (turab)", both these terms signifying man's lowly biological origins as well as the fact that his body is composed of various organic and inorganic substances existing - in other combinations or in their elementary forms - on or in the earth. The term salsal, occurring in three verses of this surah as well as in 55:14, adds a further dimension to this concept. According to most of the philological authorities, it denotes "dried clay that emits a sound" (i.e., when it is struck); and since it is used in the Qur'an exclusively with reference to the creation of man, it seems to contain an allusion to the power of articulate speech which distinguishes man from all other animal species, as well as to the brittleness of his existence (cf. the expression "like pottery" in 55:14). As the construction of the sentence shows, this salsal is stated to have evolved (Razi) out of hama' - which, according to some authorities, is the plural of ham'ah, signifying "dark, fetid mud" or "dark slime" - while the participial adjective masnun which qualifies this noun denotes, as Razi points out, both "altered" (i.e., in its composition) and "brought into shape": hence my rendering of this expression as "transmuted", which to some extent combines both of the above meanings. To my mind, we have here a description of the primeval biological environment out of which the "sounding clay" - the matrix, as it were - of man's physical body has evolved in accordance with God's plan of creation.

15:27[1] Arabic: al jānn — with the definite article this is used exclusively as a title of Iblīs in his rebellious state as the shayṭān; found at 15:27 and 55:15. See Article SJC.

15:29[1] Arabic: waqa'a. This verb has two key meanings in the text depending on the preposition it uses (for the full set of instances of this form I verb see 4:100, 7:118, 7:134, 10:51, 15:29, 22:65, 27:82, 27:85, 38:72, 56:1, 69:15). As a rule, it means to occur, to befall. It is true (as per the Traditionalist's claim here) that it also means to fall down. However, in this case the nearest preposition is in la. The Traditionalist wishes the reader to think that it means to fall down to him and the reason he wants this is that if he can get us to ascribe a purely physical value to the s-j-d root, he can begin to shoehorn his religion into the mind of the reader on that basis. However, from what I could find in the lexicons, waqa'a does not normally take an object when it means to fall down and it does not take one with la except in its other sense of to befall (something befell him would take la before him). The verb sajada, however, does take la (see for example 22:18). Of course it is possible for a priesthood to plead special cases for Qur'anic usage ad infinitum in order to achieve predetermined outcomes, but if the points above be granted, the sense here must be: fall down, to him in submission. This scenario occurs at 15:29 and 38:72.

15:30[1] Arabic: sajada. See Notepad IV.

15:31[1] Arabic: illā. Generally rendered save (as in except or excepting) and equivalents, I have translated in this context to leave open the question of whether Iblīs was an angel. See Article SJC.

15:31[2] Arabic: sajada. See Notepad IV.

15:32[1] Arabic: sajada. See Notepad IV.

15:33[1] Arabic: sajada. See Notepad IV.

15:34[1] I.e. the garden.

15:34[2] Arabic: rajīm. This conveys senses also of one stoned or outcast.

15:35[1] Arabic: dīn. See Notepad V. For Day of Judgment see 82:17-19.

15:38[1] Or appointed.

15:39[1] Perhaps an allusion to and an expression of contempt for that from which Man was taken and to which he will be returned.

15:41[1] Or for (as per A. J. Arberry); or possibly binding upon or incumbent upon.

15:41[2] Muhammad Asad comments here: I.e., "this is what I have willed" - namely, that Iblis (or Satan) should tempt man, but should have no power to seduce those who are truly conscious of God. Thus, the Qur'an makes it clear that despite his ostensible "rebellion" against his Creator, Satan fulfils a definite function in God's plan: he is the eternal tempter who enables man to exercise his God-given freedom of choice between good and evil and, thus, to become a being endowed with moral free will.

15:43[1] Or appointment.

¶15.4 15:45[1] See note to al muttaqūn at 2:2.

15:47[1] See note to 52:20.

15:55[1] Arabic: bil ḥaqqi. See Notepad XVII (bil ḥaqqi ii.).

15:56[1] Arabic: al ḍālūn. See note to 3:90.

15:60[1] With Muhammad Asad, I see this clause as referring to God rather than to the angels.

¶15.5 15:62[1] Or strangers. See note to munkar at 3:104.

15:63[1] Arabic: bal. See note to 2:88.

15:63[2] Lūṭ had warned the city in which he lived — as per the modus operandi of all messengers, and of those who follow their example. The angels have now come with the logical consequence of that community's rejection: cataclysmic devastation.

15:64[1] Arabic: bil ḥaqqi. See Notepad XVII (bil ḥaqqi i.).

15:65[1] I.e. take up the rear; go last.

15:66[1] See note to 15:60.

15:66[2] An expression meaning to be utterly cut off or destroyed. Occurs at 6:45, 7:72, 8:7, 15:66; i.e. every remnant of this people was to be extirpated from the face of the earth.

15:67[1] Presumably in anticipation of inflicting their depravity upon the guests of Lūṭ.

15:69[1] See note to al muttaqūn at 2:2.

15:70[1] I take this to mean that the people of the city refused Lūṭ any rights, including those of hospitality and protection for guests, perhaps due to the fact that he was not a native of that city.

15:71[1] Lit.: if you are to be doers. This formula has echoes both at 12:10 where the brothers plan to rid themselves of Yūsuf, and at 21:68 where the people of Ibrāhīm plan to throw him in the fire.

15:74[1] I.e. the city. See 11:82 and note thereto.

15:74[2] Arabic: sijjīl. Occurs at 11:82, 15:74, 105:4.

15:75[1] Arabic: āyāt. See Notepad VIII.

15:75[2] Arabic: mutawassimīn. This is the form V active participle from wasama; its meanings include those who scrutinise, those who regard carefully, those who examine closely (Wehr, p. 1253). Often rendered by translators with an emphasis on discernment (e.g. Saheeh International, and which convention I have followed) or prudence (e.g. N. J. Dawood). Muhammad Asad's note at this juncture reads: In its full significance, the term mutawassim denotes "one who applies his mind to the study of the outward appearance of a thing with a view to understanding its real nature and its inner characteristics" (Zamakhshari and Razi). This is the only occurrence of this root form in the text.

15:76[1] Or established road. Identified within the Petra thesis as the King's Highway, an ancient major trading route linking Egypt, northern Arabia, and the Levant. This lends additional support for Petra as the location of al masjid al ḥarām, and possibly — although, perhaps, not necessarily — as the city of the Prophet. The Arabia Felix thesis can claim ancient trading routes and centres. Mecca can claim neither outside the closed system of ḥadīth and related compositions and, according to Dan Gibson (Quranic Geography, 2011), appears on no map prior to 900 CE. See Notepad XVI.

15:77[2] See note to (al) mu'minūn at 8:2.

15:78[1] Taken by some to mean the people of Madyan. Arabic: al aykah means the woods or the forests. All instances of al aṣḥāba (the companions) in the Qur'an are found at: 2:39, 2:81, 2:82, 2:119, 2:217, 2:257, 2:275, 3:116, 4:47, 5:10, 5:29, 5:86, 7:36, 7:42, 7:44, 7:44, 7:46, 7:47, 7:48, 7:50, 7:50, 9:113, 10:26, 10:27, 11:23, 13:5, 15:78*, 15:80*, 18:9, 20:135, 22:51, 25:24, 25:38*, 26:61, 26:176*, 35:6, 36:55, 38:13*, 39:8, 40:6, 40:43, 46:14, 46:16, 50:12*, 50:14*, 56:8, 56:8, 56:9, 56:9, 56:27, 56:27, 56:38, 56:41, 56:41, 56:90, 56:91, 57:19, 58:17, 59:20, 59:20, 59:20, 60:13, 64:10, 67:10, 67:11, 68:17, 74:31, 74:39, 85:4, 90:18, 90:19. Instances bearing asterisks are cases which treat of geographical place, as here, and appear in the notes and reference this verse.

15:78[2] Arabic: ẓālimūn. See note to 2:229.

15:79[1] I.e. that which guides or lies ahead — here: highway. Arabic: imām — leader; master; plumb line; standard, criterion; example, model. Cf. 75:5.

¶15.6 15:80[1] Taken by some to mean the people of Thamūd. See note to 15:78. Abdullah Yusuf Ali comments here: The Rocky Tract is undoubtedly a geographical name. On the maps of Arabia will be found a tract called the Hijr, north of Medīna. Jabal Hijr is about 150 miles north of Medīna. The tract would fall on the highway to Syria. This was the country of Thamood. If correct, this lends support to the thesis that the narrative takes place in the Nabataean region, and not that of southern Ḥejāz. There is an archaeological site in northern Arabia under the auspices of UNESCO called Al-Ḥijr which is the largest site of the civilisation of the Nabataeans south of Petra and comprises houses hewn out of the rock face. This data fits neatly with the Petra thesis. However, the Arabia Felix thesis advances some claims for its locale in this regard. What is beyond question is that the Qur'an treats the history of the people of al ḥijr as something known to the initial hearers of the Qur'an. See also Notepad XVI.

15:81[1] Arabic: āyāt. See Notepad VIII.

15:85[1] Grammar: dual.

15:85[2] Arabic: bil ḥaqqi. See Notepad XVII (bil ḥaqqi ii.).

15:87[1] Or oft-repeated. Arabic: mathāni. The root meanings of th-n-y are doubling, pairing and repetition. Frankly, the present case could indicate either. By way of illustration, Muhammad Asad comments at 39:23 (the only other instance of this word) where he himself opts for an emphasis on repetition: [...]Another possible meaning, preferred by Razi, is "pairing its statements", i.e., referring to the polarity stressed in all Qur'anic teachings (e.g., command and prohibition, duties and rights, reward and punishment, paradise and hell, light and darkness, the general and the specific, and so forth). The Traditionalist typically claims the present context to indicate the seven verses of al fātiḥah. That position assumes two things: firstly, that the bismillah there is part of the revelation; and secondly, that the verse divisions (or at least the number thereof) are equal to seven verses. The Traditionalist's interpretation here has foundation no matter which of the senses for mathāni one accepts. The verses of al fātiḥah are certainly oft-repeated (if every nominal Muslim performs the daily rituals the Sunni Traditionalist claims as compulsory and in the way he claims they must be performed, al fātiḥah is currently repeated almost ten trillion times each year). On the other hand, the verses of al fātiḥah are 'oft-paired' with other portions of the Qur'an during parts of his ritual regimen; that is: al fātiḥah is recited, then some other portion of the Qur'an (admittedly, with less frequency than al fātiḥah itself is repeated). See note to 2:3 and Article SZC.

15:87[2] Arabic: qur'ān — reading, recital, recitation, something which is read out.

15:88[1] Or pairs. Arabic: azwāj. In addition to pairs, spouses, azwāj is said to mean categories or kinds. Muhammad Asad comments here: The philological authorities are unanimous in that the plural noun azwaj denotes here "kinds" of people, or "some" of them, and not - as certain modern translators of the Qur'an have assumed - "pairs". Historically, unanimity among authorities of any kind has provided little to encourage one who would uncover what the Qur'an has to say, and that state of affairs continues to this day. Nevertheless, the sense for zawj / azwāj which Muhammad Asad mentions is supported by Lane (pp. 1272-1273). More importantly, considered from the point of view of Qur'anic pan-textual analysis, we find this usage mirrored at one other place — 38:58 — thus forming a pair, a fact we find significant given the value of pairing we have opted for at 15:87 (see note thereto) and the core meaning of the word presently under discussion. Here at 15:88, we find an admonition to disregard the seeming advantages enjoyed by those heedless to the message of warning. And at 38:58 which we identify as the corollary to 15:88 on the basis of it (second) like usage of azwāj (thus forming a pair), the context treats of the fate of the heedless as an accomplished fact, comparing the torments of Hell suffered by them with the pleasures of the Garden for those of faith. Identification of embedded connections of this type between segments of the Qur'an help us broaden our understanding of its message and deepen our appreciation of its structure.

15:88[2] This phrase occurs additionally at 16:127 and 27:70. In those instances the immediate context treats of those who scheme against the mission of the Messenger. This fact will be of increasing relevance as we unpack the lines that follow in the notes. We know as a certainty that the recipient of the Qur'an had been appointed adversaries who tried to fabricate against the revelation he received (cf. 6:112). Both on this basis, and on the basis of the reasoning contained in the notes to this portion, I take the segment beginning here through to the end of 15:90 as a parenthetical aside.

15:88[3] An expression which means: be gentle, compassionate.

15:88[4] See note to (al) mu'minūn at 8:2.

15:89[1] The words a clear warner is a common refrain in the Qur'an. The inclusion of the definite article in this sole instance adds conspicuous specificity to this context. What the Messenger brought is clear. It has, however, been subject to attack since even before the time of his death. What follows in the notes will put some flesh on the bones of this assertion.

15:90[1] Sc. so shall We do again. Arabic: al muqtasimūn. This is the only instance of the form VIII of this verb, which fact leaves it vulnerable to spurious values. The Traditionalist emphasises here values of division, his assertion being that the reference is to a (claimed) practice of dividing or separating scripture extant among recipients of previous revelation. However, the context does not treat of that topic — or of anything remotely connected with it. Additionally, the verb form itself contains the nuance of dividing or distributing among themselves (see for example Wehr, p. 893), a nuance the Traditionalist disregards. While the operative verb here (Arabic: anzala — to send down) together with 'alā is used both for good things (such as rain) as well as for punishments (scourges or annihilation), the preceding words I am the clear warner (see note to 15:89) can leave us in no doubt as to which of the two options is in view. The Traditionalist also disregards the dominant theme of the chapter as a whole: the extent of provision allowed to former peoples (and, by extension to the present hearers) prior to their destruction (verses 15:3-4 set the tone for what follows). On the basis of these facts, surely the payload here is a warning to those made materially comfortable by distributing the good things of this life among themselves. The obvious thematic cross-reference — at least, one obvious to anyone accustomed to think of the Qur'an as a complete text rather than as a dartboard at which to throw snippets of a much later literature — is at 59:7 where we read that it be not a distribution by turns between the rich among you. We note also that the immediate context at 59:7 required systematic analysis of the type needed here in order to reintegrate the words on the page with the context subsequent to the Traditionalist's externally derived assaults upon the text (I am referring, of course, to the Traditionalist's unrelenting abuse of the words: And what the Messenger gives you, take it at 59:7). This fact brings us to our last point: the opening word of 15:90 (Arabic: kamā — like as) has no preceding thought, which fact compels a conclusion by means of ellipsis, which must be derived from the context. See also my work The God Protocol which features Qur'anic support for my assertion that Muḥammad's initial audience was destroyed by an act of God. Finally, I enclose this clause in secondary quotations since I regard such implied by the context.

15:91[1] See note to 'grieve thou not over them' at 15:88, and also notes to 15:89 and 15:90. The parsing of the text here makes those 'who have made the Qur'an into parts' the object of those the recipient of the Qur'an is told not to grieve over. This reading is supported in the notes above. It is also reflected in the Traditionalist's own actions; his stock-in-trade is splitting the Qur'an up, whether it be into so-called Meccan or Medinan chapters, or by imposing his later histories or other stories upon its contents and structure.

15:91[2] Arabic: qur'ān — reading, recital, recitation, something which is read out.

15:94[1] I.e. by implementing the imperatives addressed to thee in the Qur'an while drawing on their supporting, supplementary lessons (for example, see 14:44-15:93).

15:94[2] See note to Arabic root: sh-r-k at 6:78 and Notepad VI.

15:97[1] This statement takes on a new significance in light of our understanding of 15:91.

15:98[1] See note to s-b-ḥ root at 2:30.

15:98[2] Arabic: sajada. See Notepad IV.

15:99[1] I.e. death.

16

16:0[2] The sixteenth chapter of the Qur'an is by convention called al naḥl or The Bee.

16:1[1] See note to s-b-ḥ root at 2:30.

16:1[2] See note to Arabic root: sh-r-k at 6:78 and Notepad VI.

16:2[1] See note to al muttaqūn at 2:2.

16:3[1] Arabic: bil ḥaqqi. See Notepad XVII (bil ḥaqqi ii.).

16:3[2] See note to Arabic root: sh-r-k at 6:78 and Notepad VI.

16:9[1] I.e. incumbent upon.

16:9[2] I.e. some paths.

16:9[3] Arabic: jā'ir. The root sense is of tyranny and outrage and (wrongful) encroachment. In connection with roads it means to stray (from what is true).

16:10[1] Lit.: trees, shrubs.

16:11[1] Arabic: min kulli. See note to 2:164.

16:11[2] Arabic: āya. See Notepad VIII.

16:12[1] Arabic: āyāt. See Notepad VIII.

16:13[1] Lit.: And.

16:13[2] Arabic: dharaʻa. This verb has connotations of to sow (many or different things); to seed; to create; to produce. Occurs at 6:136, 7:179, 16:13, 23:79, 42:11, 67:24.

16:13[3] Arabic: āya. See Notepad VIII.

16:14[1] Arabic: fulk — (m. and f.) ship, (also coll.) ships.

16:16[1] Arabic: najm — star, celestial body. Frequently translated in the plural, the grammatical form is singular.

16:17[1] See note to 3:162.

16:17[2] Arabic: afalā. See Notepad XIV.

16:20[1] Arabic: min dūni. See note to 2:23.

16:22[1] See note to 58:4 for Qur'anic usage of to believe in.

16:22[2] Or do not recognise; i.e. the truth when it comes to them. This word (Arabic: munkiratun) is rendered variously by translators (values of denial and disapproval feature prominently). The case for deny is strong (cf. the three instances of the form IV verb proper at 13:36, 16:83, 40:81), and I have conformed here with that convention. However, a case for do not recognise can also be made given the remaining examples of this form IV in its participle form at 12:58, 21:50, 23:67.

16:25[1] Arabic: alā. See note to 2:12.

16:26[1] Arabic: min ḥaythu. See note to 2:149.

16:27[1] See note to Arabic root: sh-r-k at 6:78 and Notepad VI.

16:27[2] Lit.: for whom or concerning whom.

16:27[3] I.e. towards God and his messenger. A review of the remaining instances in the text of this form III verb leaves one in no doubt that what is meant here is hostility towards God and his messenger (4:115, 8:13, 8:13, 47:32, 59:4, 59:4).

16:27[4] Arabic: al kāfirūn. See note to 2:19 and Notepad II.iii.

16:28[1] Arabic: sū' (sg.), aswā' (pl.). See Notepad XI.v.

16:28[2] Arabic: balā. See note to 2:81.

16:30[1] See note to al muttaqūn at 2:2.

16:30[2] See note to al muttaqūn at 2:2.

16:31[1] See note to al muttaqūn at 2:2.

16:32[1] Arabic: ṭayyibīn. The core senses of this word include good, well, noble, genial, healthy, fragrant, as well as aspects of pure and chaste. Values here among translators such as good and pure are common. Muhammad Asad's general approach is interpretive and expositional, and he is able to allow himself in a state of inner purity which I agree is the underlying sense. N. J. Dawood opts for virtuous, which I have adopted.

16:34[1] I.e. the consequences thereof. Arabic: sayyi'āt. See Notepad XI.x.

16:35[1] See note to Arabic root: sh-r-k at 6:78 and Notepad VI.

16:35[2] Arabic: min dūni. See note to 2:23.

16:35[3] Lit.: besides. Arabic: min dūni. See note to 2:23.

16:35[4] I.e. other than what God forbids.

16:35[5] I.e. incumbent upon.

16:36[1] Arabic: ṭāghūt. See note to 2:256.

16:36[2] Cf. 10:33, 10:96, 10:103, 16:36, 16:38, 17:16, 22:18, 28:63, 30:47, 32:13, 36:7, 37:31, 38:14, 39:19, 39:71-72, 40:6, 41:25, 46:18, 50:12-14.

16:37[1] Lit.: If.

16:38[1] Arabic: balā. See note to 2:81.

16:38[2] Arabic: ḥaqqan ʻalā. See Notepad XVII (ḥaqq- i.).

16:39[1] Arabic: bayyana. See note to 2:69.

¶16.6

16:43[1] See note to waḥī and awḥā at 3:44.

16:43[2] Arabic: dhikr — calling to mind, recalling, reminding; remembrance (of something past); history.

16:44[1] Arabic: zubur. See note to 3:184.

16:44[2] Arabic: dhikr — calling to mind, recalling, reminding; remembrance (of something past); history.

16:44[3] Arabic: bayyana. See note to 2:69.

16:45[1] Arabic: sayyi'āt. See Notepad XI.x.

16:45[2] Arabic: min ḥaythu. See note to 2:149.

16:47[1] I have agreed with Muhammad Asad here in both rendering and reasoning, and reproduce his note in full: One of the meanings of takhawwuf is "gradual diminution" or "decay" or "slow destruction" (Lisan al-'Arab, art. khawafa; thus also Tabari and Zamakhshari); in the above context, the term has obviously both a social and a moral connotation: a gradual disintegration of all ethical values, of power, of civic cohesion, of happiness and, finally, of life itself.

16:60[2] Arabic: al ʻazīz al ḥakīm. See note to 3:18.

16:61[1] I.e. the earth.

16:62[1] I.e. daughters.

16:62[2] Often rendered also abandoned or neglected. Arabic: mufraṭūn. This is a passive participle from the form IV verb faraṭa. In the form here it could mean either rushed in, or neglected, forgotten. This is the only instance of this verb in this form so there is no way of correlating the sense internally. A. J. Arberry favours the first option, Saheeh International and Muhammad Asad the second. I have rendered as I think best fits the context (particularly in view of 16:61). In addition, Lane (p. 2433) tells us of alternative readings: mufriṭūn (exceeding the limits assigned to them), and mufarriṭūn (falling short of their duty i.e. to themselves in respect of sins).

16:63[1] Or adversary (against the command of God). See Article SJC.

16:70[1] I.e. in death.

¶16.10

16:71[1] I.e. slaves.

16:71[2] Rather, they keep their own wealth and status for themselves and maintain dependants out of it.

16:73[1] Arabic: min dūni. See note to 2:23.

16:74[1] I.e. do not make conceptual comparisons with or for God.

16:75[1] Arabic: bal. See note to 2:88.

16:76[1] Grammar: dual.

16:76[2] Arabic: mawlā. Elsewhere rendered protector.

¶16.11

16:77[1] Lit.: or it is.

16:78[1] I.e. intellects.

16:79[1] Arabic: āyāt. See Notepad VIII.

16:80[1] Or goods or utensils.

16:81[1] Or shadows; i.e. means of protection. While I agree with Muhammad Asad's thought here, I have kept to a literal translation; he notes: Lit., "shades "shades (zilal. sing. zill). Metonymically, this term is occasionally used to describe anything that "shades" one in the sense of protecting him; and since the sequence clearly refers to means of protection, I believe that this derivative meaning of zilal is here preferable to the literal.

16:83[1] Arabic: al kāfirūn. See note to 2:19 and Notepad II.iii.

16:86[2] See note to Arabic root: sh-r-k at 6:78 and Notepad VI. The concept of partners is said by the Traditionalist to refer only to fraudulent gods. I think the connotation is much wider than that and includes authorities of any kind (today: government, heavily promoted 'scientists', opinion-makers such as actors and other semi-fictitious personas) and all fiction-based belief systems, including most of what today passes for religion.

16:91[2] Lit.: made God over you surety.
16:92[1] The importance of this may not immediately be apparent to moderns since we do not take oaths so readily. However, contract — verbal or written — is the basis of any functioning society.
16:92[2] Lit.: a community is more numerous than a community; i.e. oaths are not to be entered into out of fear of superior forces.
16:92[3] Arabic: bayyana. See note to 2:69.
16:93[1] Despite what religionists of all stripes throughout all ages have claimed, God is not a denominationalist; he whom God guides is guided.

¶16.14

16:98[1] Arabic: qur'ān — reading, recital, recitation, something which is read out.
16:98[2] Or adversary (against the command of God). See Article SJC. Cf. 6:112-113, 22:52-53. For why verses 16:99-100 are treated as parenthesis here see note to 16:101.
16:99[1] Arabic: alladhīna āmanū. See note to 2:257 and Notepad II.iv.
16:100[1] See note to Arabic root: sh-r-k at 6:78 and Notepad VI.
16:100[2] Some take the object here to be God rather than the adversary (cf. 16:98); the import is the same in either case, however.
16:101[1] This is a continuation of verse 16:98 as evidenced by idhā (when) in the introductions to both.
16:101[2] If one is to believe the Qur'an rather than the stories written down centuries afterwards which comprise the principal reading of those who claim the banner of a religion known as Islam, we find that the Qur'an itself was written down in full at the time of the revelation, and that both the content and the ordering thereof are from God. On that basis one may reasonably conclude — in fact, must conclude — that as new revelation was sent down the text was added to, and sections inserted into the existing corpus, until such time as the revelation was complete. This, logically, is the process alluded to here. The Messenger is told here to seek refuge with God at two times: 1. When he recites the Qur'an (i.e. when he receives words from God which he repeats aloud; cf. 16:98) and, 2. When those words are placed in writing into the existing corpus. The surrounding context fully supports this assertion. The Traditionalist employs a formula derived, one assumes, from 16:98 before engaging in any recitation of the Qur'an. Given that the Qur'anic imperative is both directed to the recipient of the Qur'an and includes 16:101 in its remit, one cannot help feeling that the Traditionalist's practice is somewhat indicative of his general condition, since he initiates his reading with a declaration which itself shows that he does not understand (at least the present portion of) the book he intends to recite.
16:101[3] Arabic: āya. See Notepad VIII.
16:101[4] Arabic: āya. See Notepad VIII.
16:101[5] Or sends down in stages. This nuance is conveyed to the reader without access to the Arabic by Muhammad Asad in his comment here: I.e., the gradualness of revelation (implied in the verbal form yunazzil) corresponds to God's plan, according to which He has gradually unfolded His will to man, substituting one dispensation for another in the measure of mankind's intellectual and social development, bringing it to its culmination in the message of the Qur'an.
16:101[6] See notes above to the same verse. This statement now makes logical sense. As new revelation was given and added to the corpus, critics of the Messenger accused him of fabrication.
16:101[7] Arabic: bal. See note to 2:88.
16:102[1] Arabic: bil ḥaqqi. See Notepad XVII (bil ḥaqqi ii.).
16:102[2] Arabic: alladhīna āmanū. See note to 2:257 and Notepad II.iv.
16:102[3] See note to muslim at 2:128.
16:103[1] The term here (Arabic: bashar) is used in the text in the generic sense of man as in mortal (consider 3:47 and 19:20 where Maryam points out that no mortal has touched her). True to his characteristic trait of seeking to insinuate himself by means of usurping generic terms, perhaps predictably, the Traditionalist has a range of (conflicting) stories concerning the identity of the 'man' at 16:103. The overlay of his emphasis impels most translations to emphasise the man at 16:103 rather than the tongue which is the natural focus of the verse. Given the context — one in which mention has just been made of The Spirit of Holiness — it is not unreasonable to conclude the language referenced here to be either Hebrew or Greek: the former as the principal language of the Hebrew Bible, and the latter as the language of the Christian scriptures as well as that of Byzantium (which point would support a location for the Qur'anic revelation much further north than that claimed by the Traditionalist). Cf. 4:113, 44:13-14, 53:1-12. See also Notepad XVI.

16:116[1] Lit.: say.
16:116[2] This is, in essence, what religionists of any stripe do for a living. In the case of the religion known as Islam, there is an endless list of things made up by men and ascribed either directly to God, or to him via the messenger of God.
16:116[3] Lit.: the lie.
16:116[4] Lit.: the lie.
16:118[1] Arabic: alladhīna hādū. Understood here as Jews by faith but not necessarily of Israelite descent. See Notepad XIII.i.
16:119[1] I.e. after repentance and making of amends.

¶16.16

16:120[1] Arabic: ummah — nation, community, people, generation, species, class, faith, model, leader. The non-sectarian A. J. Arberry renders here nation. Muhammad Asad, perhaps typically, has a somewhat exalted value: a man who combined within himself all virtues. I have complied here with the most common value used by translators, and I supply Muhammad Asad's comment for interest only: This is one of the many meanings of the term ummah and, to my mind, the one most appropriate in the above context. - The mention of Abraham at this place contains a subtle allusion to verse 118, where the Jews are spoken of: for, the latter claim to be "the chosen people" on account of their descent from Abraham, whereas the Qur'an consistently rejects all claims to a special status by virtue of one's descent. Moreover, the Qur'an states in many places that whereas this particular ancestor of the Hebrews - and, by the way, of most of the Arab tribes as well - was a personification of all that is good and upright, so that "God exalted him with His love" (4:125), his Jewish descendants always tended to rebel against God and, thus, "persistently wronged themselves".
16:120[2] Arabic: ḥanīf — inclining to a right state or tendency; spurning falsehood. See note to 2:130.
16:120[3] See note to Arabic root: sh-r-k at 6:78 and Notepad VI.
16:123[1] See note to waḥī and awḥā at 3:44.
16:123[2] Arabic: ḥanīf — inclining to a right state or tendency; spurning falsehood. See note to 2:130.
16:123[3] See note to Arabic root: sh-r-k at 6:78 and Notepad VI.
16:124[1] I understand this to indicate Sabbath and the sense to relate to those who say they follow Mūsā and those who say they follow Jesus (conflated with ʿĪsā; see Notepad XVI and Notepad XVIII) and who observe Sabbath on different days. However, the object could also mean him. Muhammad Asad takes it in that sense, for example, and relates it to Ibrāhīm. While I am not persuaded by his argument, I include it for interest: The implication is that the majority of the Jews had deviated from the true creed of Abraham (which is the meaning of the phrase, "those who came to hold divergent views about him") inasmuch as most of them became convinced that they were "God's chosen people" simply because of their physical descent from that great Prophet: an assumption which obviously runs counter to every truly religious principle. As the Qur'an repeatedly points out, this spiritual arrogance was punished by God's imposition on the children of Israel - and on them alone - of all manner of severe restrictions and rituals, of which the obligation to refrain from all work and even travel on the Sabbath was one. In its widest implication, this passage is meant to stress the fact that all God-imposed rituals are only a means towards the achievement of spiritual discipline, and never a religious goal in themselves.
16:125[1] See note to wisdom (ḥikma) at 33:34.
16:126[1] The preceding verses treat of doctrinal skirmishes with those of existing faiths in the context of God's overarching knowledge. Nevertheless, the Traditionalist frequently leaps here into assumptions about military matters. Muhammad Asad identifies the point that has evaded so many other Traditionalists: Lit., "retaliate [or "respond"] with the like of what you have been afflicted with": thus, the believers are admonished to observe self-restraint while arguing with people of another persuasion, and never to offend against decency and intellectual equity. Although retaliation in argument is permissible if one's integrity is impeached by an opponent, the sequence makes it clear that it is morally preferable to renounce it altogether and to bear the unjust attack with patience.
16:128[1] See note to al muttaqūn at 2:2.

17:0[2] The seventeenth chapter of the Qur'an is by convention called al isrā' or The Night Journey.
17:1[1] See note to s-b-ḥ root at 2:30.
17:1[2] Arabic: al masjid al ḥarām. See Notepad VII.ii and Notepad XVI.
17:1[3] Arabic: aqṣā — furthest. This is the plain meaning of this word. It occurs twice more in the text (28:20, 36:20), and is rendered thus by most translators.
17:1[4] Arabic: al masjid al aqṣā. See Notepad VII.iii and Notepad XVI. The Traditionalist links this verse to a claim originating in the ḥadīth literature wherein Muḥammad is said to have entered the heavens on the back of a mythological steed and negotiated with God on the number of daily prayers. This is a crucial connection, since without it the Traditionalist's claim for the divine nature of what he calls al ṣalāt (his highly specified understanding of which he has made a pillar of his religion) can point to no definitive purchase within the Qur'an. The details of the Traditionalist's narrative (in which Muḥammad supposedly meets Mūsā who encourages him to beat God down to a manageable number of prayers) is anathema to the Qur'an, and has more in common with parts of the Talmud. In any event, the claim that al masjid al aqṣā indicates the mosque of that name in Jerusalem is clearly erroneous since no such building existed until after the Muslims took Jerusalem. I can offer three options at this juncture. Firstly, one could argue that the present context suggests Mūsā rather than Muḥammad as the subject since Mūsā is the first person named in the segment; an assessment which comparison with 27:8 might support. Within the Petra thesis — or, at least, the Petra pilgrimage thesis — one may reasonably suppose 17:1 to indicate a journey from al masjid al ḥarām (in Petra) to Jabal al Lawz in Midian in the northern part of what today is Saudi Arabia near the border with Jordan about 120 miles away, if one takes al masjid al aqṣā to indicate that place Mūsā received the Commandments and accepts Jabal al Lawz as its location. Secondly, if one considers the instances where We blessed (Arabic: bāraknā) occurs across the text, one could form the view that the reference is to Ibrāhīm (see 7:137, 17:1, 21:71, 21:81, 34:18, 37:113). Thirdly, if we take Petra as the location of al masjid al ḥarām and assume the land of modern Israel as that of the prophets, then the allusion is simply to a night journey undertaken by Muḥammad from Nabataean Arabia towards Jerusalem, a route along the King's Highway which inevitably would have presented him with a vista of the cities of Lūṭ destroyed by God by the Dead Sea (cf. 15:73-77, 25:40, 37:133-138).
17:1[5] Arabic: āyāt. See Notepad VIII.
17:2[1] Arabic: al kitāb. See Notepad IX.ii.
17:2[2] Arabic: min dūni. See note to 2:23.
17:3[1] Translators often obfuscate a direct connection between this word and what precedes it by means of interpolations, yet the text reads as I have rendered. Arabist and non-sectarian A. J. Arberry does likewise: 'Take not unto yourselves any guardian apart from Me/The seed of those We bore with Noah; he was a thankful servant.
17:3[2] I.e. carried.
17:4[1] Or concerning. I render in by analogy with 17:58.
17:4[2] Arabic: al kitāb. See Notepad IX.ii. Muhammad Asad comments here: [...] here evidently used in the generic sense of the word, and probably applying to predictions contained in the Torah (Leviticus xxvi, 14-39 and Deuteronomy xxviii, 15-68) as well as the prophecies of Isaiah, Jeremiah, John and Jesus.
17:4[3] At the time of the first edition of this work, I was of the view that the latter half of 17:7 referred to a future event; I have revised the position. Since Muhammad Asad summarises the position I have come to, I allow him to make his own points below.

17:5[1] Muhammad Asad notes here: The term 'ibad, rendered by me above as "bondmen", denotes every kind of "created beings" (in this case, obviously human beings) inasmuch as all of them are, willingly or unwillingly, subservient to God's will[...]. It is probable that the phrase "Our bondmen of terrible prowess in war" relates to the Assyrians who overran Palestine in the seventh century B.C. and caused the disappearance of the greater part of the Hebrew nation (the ten "lost tribes"), and to the Babylonians who, about one hundred years later, destroyed Solomon's Temple and carried off the remainder of the children of Israel into captivity, or to both, thus comprising all these events within one "period" (see foregoing note).- God's "sending" tribulations upon reprobate sinners is here, as elsewhere in the Qur'an, a metonym for the natural law of cause and effect to which, in the long run, the life of man-and particularly the corporate life of nations and communities - is subject.

17:6[1] Muhammad Asad notes here: [...]apparently a reference to the return of the Jews from the Babylonian captivity in the last quarter of the sixth century B.C., the partial re-establishment of their state, and the building of a new temple in the place of the one that had been destroyed. I agree with Asad's assessment insofar as it applies to a portion of the children of Israel. However, I would point out that — even if one is to accept (to whatever extent) an identification of those called Jews after this point in history with those called Jews today — Jews (principally Judahites) comprised only a fraction of the children of Israel, and that the promises of God were to the children of Israel, not to "the Jews". This question is beyond the purview of the present work.

17:7[1] I.e. yourselves.

17:7[2] Sc. We raised up against you servants of Ours of severe might (cf. 17:5 and note thereto).

17:7[3] Muhammad Asad notes here: Lit., "to bring evil to your faces". Inasmuch as the face is the most prominent and expressive part of the human body, it is often used as a metonym for one's whole being; hence, the "evil done to one's face" is synonymous with "utter disgrace". Most probably, this passage relates to the destruction of the Second Temple and of Jewish statehood by Titus in the year 70 of the Christian era. While I agree with his broader point, Asad speaks here of "Jewish statehood"; what one means by "Jewish" — or, rather, what those who claim to be "Jewish" mean by it — is a modern shell game, and a question we must leave beyond restating our point above that the promises made by God cited in this segment were to the children of Israel, not to "the Jews".

17:7[4] Arabic: masjid, masājid. See Notepad VII.i. See note to 18:21.

17:8[1] I.e. to punishment. Responsibility is placed squarely on the shoulders of the people concerned. The children of Israel were offered a high calling. They were intended to be witnesses to — and teachers of — the Torah. The Qur'an exhorts them to remember that calling and to abide by it. The tenor of the present phrase certainly reflects the essence of the two segments of the Hebrew scriptures Muhammad Asad cites at 17:4, although, I feel, permitting of a broader preamble than he allows, namely: Leviticus 26:1-46 and Deuteronomy 28:1-68. It is worth adding at this juncture that, while I accept that those who identify as Jews and genuinely follow the Torah (and not a usurping literature created by rabbis) are righteous before God, I am yet to be convinced of the extent to which those called Jews today bear a racial connection with the children of Israel who accompanied Mūsā.

17:8[2] Arabic: ḥaṣīr. This word occurs only once. In its plainest connotation it means simply mat or sitting-place, yet it also has — or has acquired — connotations of prison or dungeon. Saheeh International, for example, covers both aspects with prison-bed, by which choice I have been guided.

17:8[3] Arabic: al kāfirūn. Typically rendered the unbelievers. See note to 2:19 and Notepad II.iii.

17:9[1] Arabic: qur'ān — reading, recital, recitation, something which is read out.

17:9[2] See note to (al) mu'minūn at 8:2.

17:10[1] See note to 58:4 for Qur'anic usage of to believe in.

¶17.2 17:11[1] Other interpretations exist here. For example, Saheeh International has: And man supplicates for evil [when angry] as he supplicates for good. But I agree with A. J. Arberry: Man prays for evil, as he prays for good, whose rendering I take to agree with that of with Muhammad Asad: man [often] prays for things that are bad as if he were praying for something that is good. These latter renderings treat directly of the words on the page, and of the sense, which I take it to be that man appeals to God for what he sees as good without understanding that some of what he regards as good is, in fact, evil. Muhammad Asad adds here: Cf. 2:216 - "it may well be that you hate a thing the while it is good for you, and it may well be that you love a thing the while it is bad for you: and God knows, whereas you do not know": in other words, divine guidance is the only objective criterion as to what is good and what is bad.

17:11[2] Evil is always packaged as good; the manifesto of every evil agenda reads as the embodiment of virtue. Few are the men who do due diligence on what they accept. Notwithstanding, we are judged on the basis of what we do, in fact, accept and act upon. See 17:36.

17:12[1] Arabic: āya — here dual. See Notepad VIII.

17:12[2] Arabic: āya. See Notepad VIII.

17:12[3] Arabic: āya. See Notepad VIII.

17:12[4] Muhammad Asad identifies the central point, noting: Lit., "the count ('adad) of years". Since, as the Qamus points out, this phrase denotes also "the years of [a person's] life, which he counts", it obviously implies here a call to spiritual self-criticism in view of the ephemeral nature of one's worldly life.

17:12[5] I.e. of days.

17:12[6] Arabic: faṣṣala — to set out (that is, present in a logical order, categorise) and to make plain or detail.

17:13[1] Or (bird of) omen. Muhammad Asad comments here: The word ta'ir literally signifies a "bird" or, more properly, a "flying creature". Since the pre-Islamic Arabs often endeavoured to establish a good or bad omen and, in general, to foretell the future from the manner and direction in which birds would fly, the term ta'ir came to be tropically used in the sense of "fortune", both good and evil, or "destiny"[...] It should, however, be borne in mind that the Qur'anic concept of "destiny" relates not so much to the external circumstances of and events in man's life as, rather, to the direction which this life takes in result of one's moral choices: in other words, it relates to man's spiritual fate - and this, in its turn, depends - as the Qur'an so often points out - on a person's inclinations, attitudes and conscious actions (including self-restraint from morally bad actions or, alternatively, a deliberate omission of good actions). Hence, man's spiritual fate depends on himself and is inseparably linked with the whole tenor of his personality; and since it is God who has made man responsible for his behaviour on earth, He speaks of Himself as having "tied every human being's destiny to his neck". This opinion is fully supported by the verses which follow.

17:13[2] Arabic: kitāb. See Notepad IX.iii.

17:14[1] Arabic: kitāb. See Notepad IX.iii.

17:16[1] I.e. to keep to the commands of God. See my book The God Protocol for details.

17:16[2] Arabic root: f-s-q. See note to 2:26 and Notepad XI.vii.

17:16[3] Cf. 10:33, 10:96, 10:103, 16:36, 16:38, 17:16, 22:18, 28:63, 30:47, 32:13, 36:7, 37:31, 38:14, 39:19, 39:71-72, 40:6, 41:25, 46:18, 50:12-14.

17:16[4] Lit.: with annihilation.

17:17[1] Arabic: dẖunūb. See Notepad XI.iv.

17:18[1] Some render in a partitive sense (i.e. thereof, from it). With N.J. Dawood and A. J. Arberry, I allow fī its most natural value in the context.

17:18[2] Note that the latter part of this formula occurs also only at 7:18.

17:19[1] Lit.: with its striving.

17:19[2] Arabic: (al) mu'min. See note to 8:2.

17:20[1] I.e. to each of the categories just mentioned.

17:20[2] Arabic: maḥẓūr. This is the passive participle from the form I verb ḥaẓara, and the only representative of this form of the verb in the text (the form VIII occurs once also at 54:31). The active form of the verb here means to fence in, to hedge in; also to forbid. The passive participle has the sense of prohibited or restricted. A. J. Arberry and Muhammad Asad render as confined.

17:21[1] I.e. of distinction.

17:21[2] Or preference; distinction.

17:22[1] I.e. in Hell.

¶17.3 17:23[1] Arabic: qawl — speech; teaching, doctrine; saying, word.

17:23[2] Lit. as they brought me up (as) small.

17:25[1] I.e. to God in repentance.

17:26[1] Arabic: ḥaqqa. See Notepad XVII (ḥaqq- v.).

17:26[2] Lit.: son of the road. See note to 2:177.

17:26[3] Lit.: with squandering.

17:27[1] Or adversaries (against the command of God). See Article SJC.

17:27[2] Or adversary (against the command of God). See Article SJC.

17:28[1] I.e. due to insufficient means from which to give at that time.

17:28[2] Arabic: qawl — speech; teaching, doctrine; saying, word.

¶17.4 17:31[1] Arabic root: kẖ-ṭ-'. See 33:5 and Notepad XI.vi.

17:32[1] The root (z-n-y) conveys senses of unlawful sexual intercourse (sexual congress between two people who are not married to each other) and occurs at 17:32, 24:2, 24:2, 24:3, 24:3, 24:3, 24:3, 25:68, 60:12.

17:32[2] Arabic: fāḥiṩẖat, faḥṩẖā'. See Notepad XI.iii.

17:33[1] Arabic: bil ḥaqqi. See Notepad XVII (bil ḥaqqi ii.); i.e. as a result of due process of law, or in battle.

17:33[2] I.e. by law and by right.

17:34[1] See note to 4:2.

17:34[2] Lit.: until.

17:34[3] The directives regarding al ṣalāt are frequently of this type: generic imperatives with applications contingent upon textual and individual contexts.

17:34[4] I.e. by God.

17:35[1] While ta'wīl is rendered generally in this work interpretation, the collocation (aḥsanu ta'wīlan) has the sense of best in respect of result (see Lane, p. 127). This collocation occurs here and at 4:59.

17:35[2] Muhammad Asad notes here: Or: "do not follow [or "pursue"] anything...", etc. This would seem to relate to groundless assertions about events or people (and hence to slander or false testimony), to statements based on guesswork unsupported by evidence, or to interfering in social situations which one is unable to evaluate correctly.

17:39[1] See note to waḥī and awḥā at 3:44.

17:39[2] See note to wisdom (ḥikma) at 33:34.

17:40[1] Often translated daughters; with A. J. Arberry I render ināṯẖ literally as females.

17:40[2] Arabic: 'aẓīm — elsewhere generally rendered tremendous or great, neither of these values are appropriate in this context. A. J. Arberry uses monstrous; Saheeh International uses grave; Muhammad Asad uses dreadful; Hilali & Khan use awful; N. J. Dawood covers both the adjective and noun here with: monstrous blasphemy.

17:40[3] I.e. a monstrous thing. Arabic: qawl — speech; teaching, doctrine; saying, word.

¶17.5 17:41[1] Arabic: ṣarrafa. This verb in its simplest sense means to explain, but has connotations of to turn about, to exchange (one thing for another), to embellish, and to expound (by adding or exchanging one way of saying something with another). By way of illustration, all of the following translations are correct, but convey different aspects of the core sense: A. J. Arberry: We have turned about; Saheeh International: And We have certainly diversified; Muhammad Asad: And, indeed, many facets have We given; Hilali & Khan: And surely, We have explained. All ten instances are found at 6:46, 6:65, 6:105, 7:58, 17:41, 17:89, 18:54, 20:113, 25:50, 46:27.

17:41[2] Arabic: qur'ān — reading, recital, recitation, something which is read out.

17:43[1] See note to s-b-ḥ root at 2:30.

17:43[2] Lit.: And exalted is He above what they say by great exaltation.

17:44[1] See note to s-b-ḥ root at 2:30.

17:44[2] See note to s-b-ḥ root at 2:30.

17:44[3] See note to s-b-ḥ root at 2:30.

17:45[1] Arabic: qur'ān — reading, recital, recitation, something which is read out.

17:45[2] See note to 58:4 for Qur'anic usage of to believe in.

17:46[1] Lit.: heaviness.

17:46[2] Arabic: qur'ān — reading, recital, recitation, something which is read out.

17:46[3] This description can be seen fulfilled today not only among those the Traditionalist condemns as unbelievers, but in the Traditionalist himself. As with modern Christians, the Traditionalist is functionally incapable of discussing God without attaching other names (in the case of the Traditionalist, that of Muḥammad), and he will typically turn away from those who try to engage him on that basis.

17:47[1] Arabic: bimā. This gives to the verb a nuance of listening for something. N. J. Dawood captures this nuance in his rendering of this line: We well know what they wish to hear when they listen to you, as does Muhammad Asad: We are fully aware of what they are listening for when they listen to thee.

17:47[2] Arabic: ẓālimūn. See note to 2:229.
17:47[3] Arabic: masḥūrūn from siḥr — sorcery. See note to 2:102.
17:48[1] Lit.: and are not able a path.
17:49[1] Lit.: particles, crushed bits.
17:51[1] I.e. be you whatever you can imagine of 'what is great within your breasts' (e.g. denial).

¶17.6 17:53[1] I think the context here indicates — at least to some degree — when bearing witness to the truth of the Day of Judgment.
17:53[2] Or adversary (against the command of God). See Article SJC.
17:53[3] Or adversary (against the command of God). See Article SJC.
17:55[1] I.e. as a token of God's grace to him (I acknowledge Muhammad Asad for this insight). Or writings. Arabic: zabūr. For the generic meaning of this word see note to 3:184. However, on the basis of 21:105, I agree that zabūr indicates psalms in the sense of written songs. This word occurs at 4:163, 17:55 and 21:105.
17:56[1] Arabic: min dūni. See note to 2:23.
17:56[2] Arabic: taḥwīl. This is commonly rendered by translators here using values which emphasise transfer. I agree that this is the general import, and that the passage is refuting the doctrine of vicarious atonement. However, the sense of this word at its two remaining instances (17:77, 35:43) is clearly alteration, and I have retained that value here also. N. J. Dawood delivers the same emphasis as here by means of change.
17:57[1] Such as their claimed gods and sons of God.
17:58[1] Arabic: al kitāb. See Notepad IX.ii. I capitalise Writ here since this statement is demonstrably inscribed in genuine scripture, in this case the Qur'an. Other views of this phrase exist, however; for example, Saheeh International supplies a note here: The Preserved Slate (al-Lawḥ al-Maḥfūth), which is with Allāh.
17:59[1] Arabic: āyāt. See Notepad VIII.
17:59[2] Muhammad Asad supplies what I regard as a helpful insight here; and while I do not share his view that there exists such a thing as 'Judaeo-Christian' in reality, I reproduce his note with some light editing: This highly elliptic sentence has a fundamental bearing on the purport of the Qur'an as a whole. In many places the Qur'an stresses the fact that the Prophet Muhammad[...] was not empowered to perform miracles similar to those with which the earlier prophets are said to have reinforced their verbal messages. His only miracle was and is the Qur'an itself - a message perfect in its lucidity and ethical comprehensiveness, destined for all times and all stages of human development, addressed not merely to the feelings but also to the minds of men, open to everyone, whatever his race or social environment, and bound to remain unchanged forever. Since the earlier prophets invariably appealed to their own community and their own time alone, their teachings were, of necessity, circumscribed by the social and intellectual conditions of that particular community and time; and since the people to whom they addressed themselves had not yet reached the stage of independent thinking, those prophets stood in need of symbolic portents or miracles[...] in order to make the people concerned realize the inner truth of their mission. The message of the Qur'an, on the other hand, was revealed at a time when mankind (and, in particular, that part of it which inhabited the regions marked by the earlier, Judaeo-Christian religious development) had reached a degree of maturity which henceforth enabled it to grasp an ideology as such without the aid of those persuasive portents and miraculous demonstrations which in the past, as the above verse points out, only too often gave rise to new, grave misconceptions.
17:59[3] Lit.: as a sight-giver.
17:59[4] Arabic: āyāt. See Notepad VIII.
17:59[5] Lit.: as dread or as intimidation.
17:60[1] Sc. then wast thou put in dread. All translators — at least those who deliver syntactically correct English at this juncture — infer ellipsis, and supply what they feel is implied by one means or another, making their additions at different places within the verse, and with varying levels of disclosure to the reader with no access to the original Arabic. The question, then, is only what should be supplied and where. To take the second item first, we should look to the next verse since it begins with the same formula (Arabic: wa idh qulnā) we find here at 17:60. Since the line beginning that verse introduces a complete thought, a requirement of completion may be inferred for 17:60, and I place the ellipsis accordingly. We look next to the surrounding text for what is implied. The immediate context treats of dread, and the ellipsis is interpreted on that basis. Additionally, what immediately follows the formula (Arabic: wa idh qulnā) at 17:61 treats of compliance with — or submission to — the word of God, and that compliance is both anticipated and mirrored at 17:60 by means of the text we have supplied. Lastly, there is an implied counterpoint between what happened when the recipient of the Qur'an was put in dread (he became the servant of God), and what we find at the end of 17:60 (that though God puts men in dread, those among mankind for whom the vision Muḥammad received was a means of denial, it serves only to increase them in great inordinacy). While I do not supply the arguments in this work, I contend that this phrase anticipates those who made identification of the later so-called mirāj story and 'the vision' mentioned here an article of faith; any such connection is dispatched — and the textually-supported meaning of 'the vision' established — by means of detailed pan-textual analysis in my work The God Protocol.
17:60[2] The Traditionalist claims this in support of the supposed mirāj. The pan-textual Qur'anic evidence is against him (see my work The God Protocol).
17:60[3] Arabic: fitnah. See note to 2:102.
17:60[4] Lit.: and.
17:60[5] Cf. 37:62-66, 44:43, 56:52.
17:60[6] Arabic: qur'ān — reading, recital, recitation, something which is read out.
17:60[7] I.e. by means of the Qur'an. This form II verb occurs at 3:175, 17:60, 39:16, 39:36.
17:60[8] The nearest masculine noun this masculine singular verb can correspond to is qur'ān above.

¶17.7 17:61[1] Arabic: sajada. See Notepad IV.
17:61[2] Arabic: sajada. See Notepad IV.
17:61[3] Arabic: illā. Generally rendered save (as in except or excepting) and equivalents, I have translated in this context to leave open the question of whether Iblīs was an angel. See Article SJC.
17:61[4] Arabic: sajada. See Notepad IV.
17:62[1] Arabic: a ra'ayt-. See note to 6:40.
17:62[2] Or destroy. Arabic: aḥtanika. This is the form VIII of a verb which occurs in no other form and only once in this. Thus, there is nothing to cross-reference with. The Traditionalist inclines towards values which emphasise destruction or extirpation. However, values of mastery or power over are also acceptable

(see Lane, p. 662). Muhammad Asad's comment here provides additional light: Cf. 7:16-17. The verb hanaka denotes, literally, "he put a rope around the lower jaw (hanak) [of a horse]", i.e., in order to lead it; hence, the form ihtanaka means "he made [another being] follow him submissively" or "obey him blindly".
17:64[1] I.e. cavalry and infantry, or all forces.
17:64[2] See note to Arabic root: sh-r-k at 6:78 and Notepad VI.
17:64[3] Or adversary (against the command of God). See Article SJC.
17:66[1] Arabic: fulk — (m. and f.) ship, (also coll.) ships.
17:69[1] I.e. to the sea.
17:69[2] The Arabic root from which the noun here (qāṣif) is derived — and which I have rendered raging storm — means to dash in pieces, to smash, to thunder, to roar. This is the only occurrence of any word based on this root in the text.
17:69[3] Some translators emphasise ingratitude here. The Arabic kufr comprises senses which include denial, ingratitude, and covering-over.
17:69[4] The root on which tabīʿ is based occurs 172 times in a number of derived forms. In all other cases, it is — by common consent — connected directly or indirectly with the concept of following. In this case alone, it is asserted in translations to have the value of avenger or prosecutor. Wehr (p. 109) gives the meaning of tabīʿ as follower, adherent, partisan; aide, help, assistant, attendant, servant. Lane (p. 295) covers much the same ground as Wehr but includes the sense of prosecutor (for a right or due; particularly blood-revenge), but notes that tabīʿ also signifies an aider (especially against an enemy). Plainly there is some correlation between a follower and one who acts to prosecute in favour of a particular person, but that connection is tenuous, and in my view it should not supersede 171 instances of the root without very strong textual support (which support I am yet to see provided by those who favour prosecutor and analogues here). Muhammad Asad comes closest to what I regard as the pan-textual sense among those translators I reviewed by rendering: whereupon you would find none to uphold you against Us. The import, then, is this: no man lost at sea in a raging storm would find anyone who would choose to share his lot and take his part against God since atheism simply evaporates on a damaged ship in a tempest (cf. 17:67). I include all forms of the root with their instances for purposes of comparison and verification: form I verb (2:38, 2:145, 2:263, 3:73, 7:18, 14:36, 17:63, 38:85, 79:7); form IV verb (2:262, 7:175, 10:90, 11:60, 11:99, 15:18, 18:85, 18:89, 18:92, 20:78, 23:44, 26:60, 28:42, 37:10, 77:17); form VIII verb (2:102, 2:120, 2:120, 2:143, 2:145, 2:166, 2:166, 2:167, 2:168, 2:170, 2:170, 2:208, 3:7, 3:20, 3:31, 3:53, 3:55, 3:68, 3:95, 3:162, 3:167, 3:174, 4:27, 4:83, 4:115, 4:125, 4:135, 5:16, 5:48, 5:49, 5:77, 6:50, 6:56, 6:106, 6:116, 6:142, 6:148, 6:150, 6:153, 6:153, 6:155, 7:3, 7:3, 7:90, 7:142, 7:157, 7:157, 7:158, 7:176, 7:193, 7:203, 8:64, 9:42, 9:100, 9:117, 10:15, 10:35, 10:36, 10:66, 10:66, 10:89, 10:109, 11:27, 11:59, 11:97, 11:116, 12:38, 12:108, 13:37, 14:44, 15:42, 15:65, 16:123, 17:47, 18:28, 18:66, 18:70, 19:43, 19:59, 20:16, 20:47, 20:90, 20:93, 20:108, 20:123, 20:134, 22:3, 23:71, 24:21, 24:21, 25:8, 26:40, 26:111, 26:215, 26:224, 28:35, 28:47, 28:49, 28:50, 28:50, 28:57, 29:12, 30:29, 31:15, 31:21, 31:21, 33:2, 34:20, 36:11, 36:20, 36:21, 38:26, 39:18, 39:55, 40:7, 40:38, 42:15, 43:61, 45:18, 45:18, 46:9, 47:3, 47:3, 47:14, 47:16, 47:28, 48:15, 48:15, 52:21, 53:23, 53:28, 54:3, 54:24, 57:27, 71:21, 75:18); noun (14:21, 17:69, 40:47); form I active participle (2:145, 2:145, 24:31); form VI active participle (4:92, 58:4); form VIII verbal noun (2:178, 4:157); form VIII passive participle (26:52, 44:23).
17:70[1] Lit.: preferred in preferment.
17:70[2] Arabic: min man. Lit.: of whom. The plain sense of this verse militates against established dogma.

¶17.8 17:71[1] Following immediately from 17:70, here also Traditionalist translators prefer values which emphasise the unity of all mankind for reasons of dogma (Hilali & Khan, for example, have all human beings). Among non-sectarian translators some present another emphasis. N. J. Dawood, for example, has each community, which is a more correct reading pan-textually. The expression rendered here each people (Arabic: kulli unāsin) occurs in two other places (2:60, 7:160), both of which treat of a context in which kulli unāsin can only signify separate peoples or tribes.
17:71[2] Or leader, or that which they followed. Arabic: imām. This word is said to mean leader, record, and highway (as in that which is followed). There is a clear connecting thread between these values, and in the present case, opinions are divided between them — and understandably so; certainly cases could be made for all three on the basis of the Qur'anic text. I have opted for record on the basis of the writ mentioned in the following clause. All instances are found here: 2:124, 9:12, 11:17, 15:79, 17:71, 21:73, 25:74, 28:5, 28:41, 32:24, 36:12, 46:12.
17:71[3] Arabic: kitāb. See Notepad IX.iii.
17:71[4] Or recite. The verb is based on the same root as the word qur'ān.
17:71[5] Arabic: kitāb. See Notepad IX.iii.
17:72[1] Lit.: in this.
17:73[1] See note to waḥī and awḥā at 3:44.
17:73[2] I.e. other than the Qur'an.
17:73[3] It is precisely on this basis — i.e. of something invented other than it (the Qur'an) — that the Traditionalist asserts his religion, proclaiming that respect for the Messenger is expressed correctly by embracing a literature which effectively usurps the Qur'an.
17:74[1] Arabic: rakana (ilā) — to lean, support one's weight upon; to trust in, rely on. A value of to incline towards is favoured by most translators, which tendency arises, in my view, in doctrinal concerns rather than in objective lexical values. This preferred value is certainly included among those Lane, for example, cites (p.1154). And insofar as to incline towards meant (when Lane was writing) to rely upon, this value is correct. However, to incline towards is a fuzzy value today (meaning something between to be favourably disposed towards and to be willing to listen to). But such values are not what is meant here. Lane makes clear that to incline towards is a synonym of to trust in, to rely upon: "He inclined to him, or it; and he trusted to, or relied upon him, or it, so as to be, or become easy, or quiet, in mind[...]". See also 11:113.
17:75[1] I.e. punishment.

¶17.9 17:76[1] Because punishment would have become binding upon them at this point. For a detailed analysis see my work The God Protocol.
17:77[1] Arabic: sunnah; i.e. communication of God's message followed by rejection and destruction or (occasionally) by acceptance and submission. See 3:137, 17:77, 33:62, 35:43, 48:23.
17:77[2] Sc. has not changed. There is no question but that there is ellipsis in this verse. To demonstrate that ellipsis is commonly acknowledged, here are some other translations: [That is Our] established way (Saheeh International); [such has been Our] way (Muhammad Asad); (This was Our) Sunnah (rule or way) (Hilali & Khan). The question is only what the elided value is, and where in the verse it comes. The mention of 'practice' as here (Arabic: sunnah) is found in comparable contexts at 17:77, 33:38-39, 33:62, 35:43, 40:85, 48:23. At both 35:43 and 48:23 it is supported by the statement: and thou wilt not find in the practice of God any change. At 35:43 this statement itself is immediately followed by: nor wilt thou find in the practice of God any alteration. This statement itself is closely mirrored here at 17:77 immediately following the opening line to the verse. Clearly, these two thoughts go together. On that basis, I take the full value of the elided text to be and thou wilt not find in the practice of God any change which I see truncated here in ellipsis to has not changed.

17:77[3] Arabic: sunnah; i.e. communication of God's message followed by rejection and destruction or (occasionally) by acceptance and submission. See 3:137, 17:77, 33:62, 35:43, 48:23. See my work The God Protocol.

17:78[1] al ṣalāt; i.e. such duty as is incumbent. See note to 2:3 and Article SZC. The purport here, naturally, is construed by the Traditionalist in accordance with a pre-existing expectation of a 'prayer' regimen. The context fits better an obligation to warn by means of the Qur'an, which point we expand upon in the notes following. See also Notepad XXI (cf. also 50:40, 68:42, 68:43).

17:78[2] Arabic: dulūk. The primary meaning of the verb with which this noun is associated is to rub or to press or to squeeze (often: until things merge). The expression dulūk al shams signifies that time at which the sun seems to merge with the horizon. The expression dulūk al shams is noted by Wehr (p. 335) as sunset. The Traditionalist has two problems at this point. Firstly, he is unable to conceive of al ṣalāt as the generic, abstract noun it clearly is (cf. al ṣabr). And, secondly, having particularised the general, he has also locked himself into the dogma of five daily rituals on the basis of his non-Qur'anic literature. He is in the unenviable position of Cinderella's ugly sisters: he must make the glass slipper fit come what may, but reality is against him. Thus, he has it that dulūk al shams means the time after the sun passes the meridian. By extending his notion of sunset in this way, he can convince himself that what is meant here is provision for a number of 'prayers' nowhere mentioned here in the text. By way of example, the Traditionalist translators at Saheeh International render here Establish prayer at the decline of the sun [from its meridian] until the darkness of the night, to which they add the note: i.e., the period which includes the thuhr, aṣr, maghrib, and 'ishā' prayers. The Traditionalist just needs to get one more of his five-prayer set through the goalposts. But this is sleight of hand, and any reasonably intelligent child without prior indoctrination would recognise it as such. What no one seems to ask is: if four 'prayers' can be found in this space, why not six, or ten — or a hundred? The fact is that the Traditionalist is locked in to values taken from elsewhere, and is committed to cramming the glass slipper onto a fat, hairy foot no matter if it shatters in the process — which, of course, in the light of any sensible analysis, it does (one has only to consider 11:114 for the Traditionalist's manipulations with dulūk al shams to be exposed, despite the incursions the Traditionalist employs against the plain sense of the text there also). And, again, no matter what the precise meaning of aqāma al ṣalāt in this segment, the indisputable fact is that both here and at 11:114 the imperative is in the singular. I have no objection to prayer, including to that of the Traditionalist, minor points notwithstanding. I have no objection to prayers being held at the time the Traditionalist holds them, or at any other time. I do object to his practice of claiming monopoly rights over a book which itself claims to be from God and complete, and then of importing his values for key terms in that book from elsewhere and proceeding to attack anyone who doesn't agree with him. And I also object to his allied practice of manipulating the plain sense of the text to make it seem to fit with his externally derived requirements. If he doesn't wish to take the Qur'an at its own estimation that is his affair, but he should not hinder those who do.

17:78[3] Arabic: qur'ān — reading, recital, recitation, something which is read out.

17:78[4] Arabic: qur'ān — reading, recital, recitation, something which is read out.

17:78[5] I will present the Traditionalist's claims for this statement in their best possible light before explaining why I don't agree with them. Muhammad Asad notes here: Most of the classical commentators take this to mean "witnessed by the angels of night as well as those of day", since dawn is the time between night and day. Razi, however, is of the opinion that the "witness" to which the Qur'an refers here is the spark of God-given illumination in man's own soul - the heightening of his inner perception at the time when the darkness and stillness of night begins to give way to the life-giving light of day, so that prayer becomes a means of attaining to deeper insight into the realm of spiritual truths and, thus, of achieving communion with all that is holy. This is all very uplifting, but it is plucked from the ether; it has no purchase in the Qur'an. The passive participle mas̲hhūr (witnessed) occurs in three places: 11:103, 85:3, and here at 17:78. At 11:103, the context anticipates the Day of Judgment; it is a day to which mankind (al nās) is being gathered, and that day is "witnessed". The active party here is God; the object, human beings. At 85:3, the preceding context (provided at 85:1-2) is an oath which includes the Day of Judgment (cf. 11:103), and the key phrase the "witnessed" precedes actions by men in which they (men) are themselves "witnesses" (see 85:4-9). The segment concludes with the statement that God is "witness" over all things. Thus, the "witness" of 85:3 must refer in the first instance to God, and the "witnessed" of 85:3 to that which men have done and seen. And on the basis of what we have learned at 11:103 and 85:3, "the witnessed" of 17:78 must refer to that which is done and seen by men. My analysis of 'the mysterious letters' (Arabic: al ḥurūf al muqaṭṭa'āt) contains within it evidence of a series of three portions of the Qur'an beginning at sūrah 50, and which the Qur'an itself calls al sujūd. These sections comprise the text to be recited as a witness to those the Messenger was sent to warn. (This process is likely retained by parts of the Traditionalist's prayer regimen in vestigial form, though he has lost its original purpose entirely.) These readings were to be open for attendance by men. The 'recitation of dawn' was to be 'witnessed' by men at the conclusion of a process in which al sujūd portions of the Qur'an were recited, and in the course of which existing believers worshipped, and outsiders who heard the message either walked away or remained (i.e. until dawn) and submitted to God. I suggest the interested student read from sūrah 50 onwards with these assertions in view in order to judge for himself how readily such a position comports with the text. For my full analysis of 'the mysterious letters' see Article MLQ.

17:79[1] Arabic: tahajjad. This is the only instance of the root (h-j-d) from which this word comes. Thus, we have nothing to compare with in the text, and the word is highly vulnerable to the type of lexical manipulations of Qur'anic terms which characterise the Traditionalist's method. This word now means relinquish sleep for prayer. And a review of Lane's entry for the verb (p. 2940) shows the root of the verb to be firmly fixed in notions of sleep (either succumbing to it or refraining from it). Clearly, from the context at 17:79, the latter is meant. I think it is safe to regard the Traditionalist's preferred emphasis on prayer (and here he means the prayer he can point to nowhere in the Qur'an but which he insists is from God) as a case of culture affecting lexical sense over time. It is clear to see how this would have happened. In agreement with the non-sectarian Arabist A. J. Arberry I have used vigil, which emphasises wakefulness, but allows for worship and remembrance of God also. In the context of my view of 17:78, the imperative here informs part of that process by which men were warned by means of the Qur'an (see notes to 17:77 and 17:78).

17:79[2] Arabic: bihi — with it (i.e. with the Qur'an). Both Saheeh International and Hilali & Khan make this point explicitly.

17:79[3] The Traditionalist has given this word (Arabic: nāfila) a highly technical meaning of supererogatory prayer. This is a clever piece of manipulation because, firstly, it assumes acceptance of the claim that there exists a baseline number of prayers and, secondly, because it assumes acceptance of the claim that prayer in the sense he means it is the subject here. This is possible only if one has already accepted a non-Qur'anic value for al ṣalāt at the hand of the Traditionalist. However, we can cross-reference nāfila, since it occurs at one other place: 21:72. There the context is Yaʿqūb being given to Ibrāhīm in addition to Isḥāq. Thus, nāfila could indicate any number of things at 17:79 — an additional duty, an additional merit, an additional time, or some other additional value. To assume a special prayer (the details of which the Traditionalist claims to know, naturally) is to impose upon the text rather than to draw from it. And, as in the previous verse, the imperative here is in the singular and clearly directed to the Prophet himself, which could be seen to give the Traditionalist's claims for this segment regarding himself a presumptuous and inappropriate flavour.

17:79[4] Arabic: maqām. See note to 2:125. At this point the average Traditionalist claims for Muḥammad what the average Christian claims for Jesus: the right of intercession — that one man can get God to close his eyes to his sins on the basis of another man's righteousness or intercession. Saheeh International (whose translation and position is entirely reflective of Sunni orthodoxy) notes here: The position of intercession by permission of Allāh and the highest degree in Paradise. I reject this position entirely. It is antithetical to the spirit and letter of the revelation Muḥammad brought on any number of counts. The same translators then note: This is a promise from Allāh (subḥānahu wa ta'ālā) to Prophet Muḥammad (ṣ)). They are seemingly oblivious to the contradiction between this claim and the Traditionalist's insistence that the first half of the verse (given the Traditionalist's understanding of it) has application for himself — and all other Muslims — personally.

17:85[1] I.e. of divine revelation. Muhammad Asad notes here: Some commentators are of the opinion that it refers here, specifically, to the revelation of the Qur'an; others understand by it the "soul", in particular the soul of man. This latter interpretation is, however, unconvincing inasmuch as the preceding as well as the subsequent verses relate explicitly to the Qur'an and, hence, to the phenomenon of divine revelation.

17:86[1] See note to waḥī and awḥā at 3:44.

17:86[2] I.e. in that matter.

17:87[1] This is one of many cases in the Qur'an which contain what I call implicit punctuation. The parenthesis I have supplied is the simplest way of achieving logical sense. Those translators who achieve sense in a transparent manner clear this hurdle by means of interpolation. For example, Saheeh International has: Except [We have left it with you] as a mercy from your Lord; and Muhammad Asad has: [Thou art spared] only by thy Sustainer's grace.

17:101[1] Arabic: āyāt. See Notepad VIII.

17:101[2] The fact is that the Qur'an contradicts the Hebrew scriptures on many key points, including the number of signs given to Mūsā for Fir'awn (for example, the Passover is entirely absent from the Qur'anic narrative). My work The God Protocol explores this topic at length.

17:102[2] Arabic: fir'awn. See note to 2:49.

17:103[1] Arabic: fazza. The form X of this verb with min (as here) is said to mean either to unsettle from or to incite from though

Lane (p. 2447) also lists to expel from.

17:103[2] This scenario does not sit easily with the dominant Egypt-Palestine thesis. A ruler personally pursuing an enemy accompanied by his kin better fits a small tribal scenario. See Notepad XVI.

17:104[1] While my understanding of the identity of the "children of Israel" is at some variance with his, I support Muhammad Asad's underlying sentiment here: According to Razi, the expression lafif denotes a human crowd composed of innumerable heterogeneous elements, good and bad, strong and weak, fortunate and unfortunate: in short, it characterizes mankind in all its aspects. It is obviously used here to refute, once again, the idea that the children of Israel are a "chosen people" by virtue of their Abrahamic descent and, therefore, a priori and invariably destined for God's grace. The Qur'an rejects this claim by stating that on Resurrection Day all mankind will be judged, and none will have a privileged position.

17:106[1] Arabic: qur'ān — reading, recital, recitation, something which is read out.

17:106[2] Arabic: 'alā mukthin — at intervals. This noun occurs nowhere else in the text, but the use of the verb (13:17, 20:10, 27:22, 28:29) and the active participle (18:3, 43:77) from the same root comports with the sense of the noun as understood here. Muhammad Asad renders here in stages. Both Hilali & Khan and A. J. Arberry have at intervals. Saheeh International is committed to a value which emphasises the duration of the revelation (the details of which, as Traditionalist translators, naturally, they claim to know). However, while the concept of duration is entirely consonant with the meaning and usage of the root in other places in the text, to my knowledge the Traditionalist does not claim that the Messenger stopped reciting the Qur'an at the point new revelation ceased, nor would support for such a view be found in the Qur'an. Thus, no matter what some Traditionalists imply or would have us infer here, the fact is the notion of duration implicit in this context could not mean what they would like it to (namely, the totality of the time over which the Qur'an was sent down, claimed by them to be twenty-three years). And that much granted, the fact is that in this context any duration is more likely to refer to a humanly achievable unit of recitation (such as an hour or so), than to the value of twenty-three years taken from a non-Qur'anic source. And if one agrees thus far, then what one means by duration and intervals becomes effectively the same thing. In addition, I would argue that we find here (over and above the plain sense of announcing new revelation as it was received) strong support for the process of al sujūd identified in this work as the reading of one of a number of specific portions of the Qur'an between chapter 50 and the end of chapter 114 in a nightly vigil to which outsiders are also invited to hear the message of the Qur'an. See my analysis of 'the mysterious letters' at Article MLQ.

17:106[3] Lit.: *in a gradual (*or successive) sending down.

17:107[2] I.e. your response to this is your affair.

17:107[3] I.e. those who have genuine knowledge in one or more of the areas of which the Qur'an treats.

17:107[4] Lit.: fall down to the chins. Arabic: adhaqān — chins. This word (the only instance of the root) occurs three times: 17:107, 17:109, 36:8. It means chins. At 36:8 it means chins — a point uncontested by the Traditionalist who renders there thus himself. Here, however, he is very eager to impress upon the mind some connection with his externally derived prayer regimen, and so would have the reader believe that fall on their faces is the value. While I render that way also in this edition, this point requires some elucidation. What it says is fall down to the chins. It does not even say fall down to their chins but: fall down to the chins. Thus to the chins is an adverbial modifier describing how 'they' fall down. I do not believe that it is possible to fall down to the chins physically — at least not with any degree of naturalness or spontaneity. I am compelled therefore to regard to the chins as a non-physical (i.e. metaphorical) adverbial modifier (cf. English up to one's neck) and take it to mean without reservation, completely, most earnestly. This is in large measure what to fall on one's face means in English, and so it is acceptable on that basis — but care should be taken to protect oneself here from vulnerability to the Traditionalist's indefatigable efforts to insinuate his externally derived requirements into the mind.

17:107[5] Arabic: sajada. See Notepad IV.

17:108[1] See note to s-b-ḥ root at 2:30.

17:108[2] Some Traditionalists understand this statement as recognition of the (superior) and long-awaited prophethood of Muḥammad by those of previous scriptures. But the preponderance of pan-textual data is dramatically against them. In fact, what is being referenced here is recognition of the truth of destruction of communities by God in the past, and the inevitability of the Day of Judgment. The word rendered promise here (Arabic: wa'd) occurs 49 times (3:152, 4:122, 9:111, 10:4, 10:48, 10:55, 11:45, 11:65, 13:31, 14:22, 14:47, 16:38, 17:5, 17:5, 17:7, 17:104, 17:108, 18:21, 18:98, 18:98, 19:54, 19:61, 20:86, 21:9, 21:38, 21:97, 21:104, 22:47, 25:16, 27:71, 28:13, 28:61, 30:6, 30:6, 30:60, 31:9, 31:33, 34:29, 35:5, 36:48, 39:20, 39:74, 40:55, 40:77, 45:32, 46:16, 46:17, 67:25, 73:18). As used in the Qur'an with regard to God it treats of three circumstances: God's promises to the believers regarding this life; God's promises both to believers and others regarding the reality of the Last Day and the Hereafter; of temporal destruction to come. Even the promise at 9:111 which references former scripture has the Day of Judgment firmly in view. And at 20:86, in the case of Mūsā, the promise mentioned refers back to verses 20:81-82 which treat of both blessings and potential wrath. Anyone who thinks that 40:55 does not fit into this scheme should read the whole of that chapter. Thus, the preponderance of evidence based on the Qur'anic data for the meaning of 17:108 is that those speaking here recognise the reality of God's promise to mankind: Judgment is coming. This reading is entirely consonant with the context here also. And at 73:18, where we find the last instance of wa'd the final word of that verse mirrors the concluding word of 17:108 (Arabic: maf'ūlan — fulfilled). Any reader studious enough to have absorbed my work on 'the mysterious letters' will have understood that sūrah 73 itself contains the key to the division of the reading of the latter portion of the Qur'an into segments as a warning to men. See Article MLQ. See also my work The God Protocol.

17:109[1] See note to 17:107.

17:110[2] Arabic: ṣalāt; i.e. such duty as is incumbent. See note to 2:3 and Article SZC. Generically, ṣalāt denotes duty. In its primary sense it is the duty both to serve and seek help from God alone as per the covenant at 1:1-7 of which the statement at 1:5 forms our part — commitment to which also satisfies the pre-existing obligation every man has to acknowledge God's authority (see 7:172). Worship — which is the value the Traditionalist insists upon here — is, doubtless, a duty; however, see 17:78 and note thereto. In the context here, the duty referred to is most readily identified in communication of the statements the recipient of the Qur'an is given to say at 17:107-111. If this assertion is rejected, the fact is that — even given the Traditionalist's understanding here — the value at the opening of this verse cannot be what he claims for al ṣalāt. His conflation of two concepts is particularly effective in English, the speakers of which he has believing something he himself knows to be untrue: that al ṣalāt (as he understands it) and supplication (i.e. an appeal to God for something) are basically the same thing. This has worked because he has told the English-speaking world that al ṣalāt means prayer, and the mind of the English speaker provided the bridge from that assertion to what he — the native speaker of English — means by the term, (i.e. supplication). But supplication is not what the Traditionalist means across the whole of this verse. In the present context — even given the Traditionalist's understanding of it — the opening subject of the verse is supplication and not a daily ritual which the Traditionalist thinks of as al ṣalāt and which he has told the English speaker is prayer. So, even if one agrees with the Traditionalist's understanding of al ṣalāt and with his view that the opening of the verse treats of supplication, this in no way suggests that these two processes are one thing, nor does it mean that this one thing is what the English speaker means by prayer. The Traditionalist — at least one with access to Arabic — knows all of this, but he allows the English speaker to labour under the misapprehension I have just summarised.

18:0[2] The eighteenth chapter of the Qur'an is by convention called al kahf or The Cave.

18:1[1] Arabic: al kitāb. See Notepad IX.ii.

18:1[2] I.e. from a straight path.

18:2[1] Or possibly he.

18:2[2] See note to (al) mu'minūn at 8:2.

18:4[1] It is perhaps significant that the calumny brought by many Christians over the centuries against God is mentioned at this point, just prior to the story of the companions of the cave (or The Seven Sleepers as Christian sources put it). Modern Christians typically have the impression that all early Christians were Trinitarians, but this is simply not the case; the first Christians were Judaeans and uncompromising monotheists. There certainly exists a story in a cave featuring Christians and set in Ephesus which predates the Qur'an, and the fact that the Qur'an features stories which were previously known is presented by its detractors as grounds to question its veracity or to accuse it of imitation. Such a position gains some traction over ignorant and inattentive audiences. However, the fact is that the Qur'an both confirms and corrects a wide range of narratives as part of its modus operandi. If one can fault the facts that it confirms or corrects, that is one thing. But to criticise a message which itself states that it repeats and corrects known accounts — for doing exactly that — is a cheap shot designed to give audiences which are unlikely ever to consider the Qur'an's arguments in context the impression that they have reliable grounds to disregard the Qur'anic revelation in toto. Where the Qur'an performs this function it often states as much, as here at 18:13 — We narrate to thee their report with the truth. The implication is that other reports exist and are incorrect and that this one states things correctly. Any suggestion that the subjects of the current story were Trinitarian Christians is also implicitly corrected by the Qur'an. For his part, the Traditionalist Muslim, in my opinion, misunderstands a crucial part of this story due to his pre-existing commitment to extraneously derived values. I provide extensive notes over the course of this particular narrative to explain why and how I think it is typically misread.

18:5[1] Or of him. While I neither agree with nor follow his assertion in my translation, I include Muhammad Asad's point here for interest: Most of the classical commentators (and, as far as I am aware, all the earlier translators of the Qur'an) relate the pronoun in bihi to the assertion that "God has taken unto Himself a son", and hence take the phrase to mean, "They have no knowledge of it", i.e., no knowledge of such a happening. However, this interpretation is weak inasmuch as absence of knowledge does not necessarily imply an objective negation of the fact to which it relates. It is, therefore, obvious that bihi cannot signify "of it": it signifies "of Him", and relates to God. Hence, the phrase must be rendered as above - meaning that they who make such a preposterous claim have no real knowledge of Him, since they attribute to the Supreme Being something that is attributable only to created imperfect beings. This interpretation is supported, in an unequivocal manner, by Tabari and, as an alternative, by Baydawi.

18:5[2] Lit.: Great is (become).

18:6[1] I.e. in the wake of those who subscribe to the lie about God outlined above.

18:6[2] Cf. 26:3.

18:6[3] See note to 58:4 for Qur'anic usage of to believe in.

18:6[4] Arabic: ḥadīth — story; account; narrative, statement. While I render as is common here, I find Muhammad Asad's reasoning worthy of consideration and include his comment in full: Lit., "it may well be that thou wilt...", etc. However, the particle la'alla does not, in this context, indicate a possibility but, rather, a rhetorical question implying a reproach for the attitude referred to (Maraghl XIII, 116).

18:8[1] I.e. strip away all frippery and additions rendering the earth in a bare state (the allusion, as I understand it, is three-fold: to truth when stripped of all lies; to a time when all vanity is vanished away and all that remains is what faith we had and what good works we did on the basis of the faith; and to the condition of the earth at the end of time).

18:9[1] Arabic: am. See note to 21:21.

18:9[2] Arabic: al raqīm — the inscription, the writing. This word occurs only once. Some take it as a common noun (i.e. the inscription), others as a geographical name, and yet others — somewhat surprisingly — as the name of the dog mentioned later. My sense is that it refers to the story of the companions of the cave as a written document, but God knows best.

18:9[3] Muhammad Asad notes here: Lit., "that the Men of the Cave... were more wondrous...", etc. - the implication being that the allegory or parable based on this story is entirely in tune with the ethical doctrine propounded in the Qur'an as a whole, and therefore not "more wondrous" than any other of its statements. I would go further: this narrative submits fully to the processes of pan-textual and other analysis which form our method, and by progressing in a logical and methodical manner, we can expect to understand the import here in a satisfactory way — and thereby cut the Gordian knot the Traditionalist has tied for himself for reasons originating in assumed conclusions and outcomes required by his religion. We begin by treating the three verses following as parenthetical.

18:9[4] Arabic: āyāt. See Notepad VIII.

18:10[1] This verse provides support, perhaps, for aspects of the Petra thesis — or, at least, the Petra pilgrimage thesis — as Petra is liberally peppered with caves. See Notepad XVI.

18:10[2] Arabic: amr — (here) affair; also matter; command. It pays to be aware of this word as we go through the story of the companions of the cave since it serves as a marker to help the reader properly track what is being said and by whom.

18:11[1] I.e. made them sleep.

18:13[1] I.e. if this be thy assumption (cf. 18:9), then know thou that God tells thee the truth. Arabic: bil ḥaqqi. See Notepad XVII (bil ḥaqqi ii.).

18:13[2] See note to 58:4 for Qur'anic usage of to believe in.

18:14[1] That is, they stood up before the people among whom they lived and did what all those who truly follow God are called upon (as per the Qur'anic imperative) to do: they called men to God alone (not to religions or other man-made mechanisms of control).

18:14[2] Arabic: min dūni. See note to 2:23.

18:14[3] Lit.: a god.

18:14[4] Arabic: sh̲aṭaṭ. See Notepad XI.xi.

18:15[1] Given the background to the case in the chapter so far, the implication is that the gods mentioned could include a deified ʿĪsā or Jesus.

18:15[2] Arabic: min dūni. See note to 2:23.

18:15[3] Arabic: lawlā. See Notepad XIV. The non-sectarian A. J. Arberry renders this instance of this construction almost exactly as I do here: Ah, if only they would bring some clear authority regarding them! (and as I do at all instances where this construction occurs).

18:15[4] Translators tend to see this entire verse as the words of the companions of the cave. I think the case is stronger pan-textually for closing the speech marks here. This construction occurs in multiple cases across the text, and in all other cases it is clearly the direct speech of God (see 2:114, 2:140, 6:21, 6:93, 6:143, 6:157, 7:37, 10:17, 11:18, 18:57, 29:68, 32:22, 39:32, 61:7).

18:16[1] This anticipates the time when the companions of the cave should withdraw having warned the erring people.

18:16[2] Here again affair serves as a marker to clarify who is the subject throughout the narrative — namely the companions of the cave (see note to 18:10).

18:16[3] Arabic: mirfaq — facilities, anything conducive to ease and convenience.

18:17[1] Generally, this segment is placed in a hypothetical mood by translators (And thou mightest have seen the sun, etc.). However, since I both parse and render this segment as an aside in the literary present which reviews the past in the now, I am able to render literally.

18:17[2] This verse provides support, perhaps, for aspects of the Petra thesis — or, at least, the Petra pilgrimage thesis — as Petra is liberally peppered with caves. See Notepad XVI.

18:17[3] Arabic: āyāt. See Notepad VIII.

18:17[4] Cf. 'among Our proofs' (18:9).

18:18[1] I have rendered this clause and that preceding literally. Most translators render in a more hypothetical mood (And thou wouldst have thought them awake[...]). However, the plain reading is as I have rendered. With the segment beginning 18:17 as a parenthetical aside which treats of the present though with a view to the past — as I read the text — the sense here is: though thou think those around thee awake, they are, in fact, asleep — and there is nothing thou canst do to waken them. Thus a parallel is drawn between the narrative past and the narrative present (cf. 18:6).

18:18[2] The attentive reader will notice that the Qur'an nowhere expresses repugnance towards dogs. The Traditionalist has imported his dislike of dogs from elsewhere (cf. 5:87), claiming them to be filthy. I would agree that wild dogs roaming the streets are a public nuisance requiring effective remedy. But a good, properly trained dog (with a responsible master) is a blessing, providing man with companionship and protection, and invaluable assistance to him in his work.

18:18[3] At this point, the text genuinely adopts the hypothetical mood (Arabic: law) which other translators begin at 18:17.

18:19[1] The stage has been set for the focus of the narrative: the debate which ensues once the companions of the cave have awoken. I emphasise this because the Traditionalist loses this thread, and much of the remaining notes I provide on this part of this sūrah are dedicated to ensuring that we do not lose it.

18:19[2] Arabic: waraq. Typically translated silver coin. I do not say this is wrong, but I failed to find any support for silver, though it exists in the broader literature. The original sense of waraq is leaf (of a tree). It also means strip of metal and is used to mean coin or coinage. So coin is a safe value here in the circumstances.

18:21[1] It is at this point that the Traditionalist's understanding, in my view, falls apart — and does so for reasons of ideology (namely, that he has imported extraneous values which he both needs and assumes as part of the persistent fallacy which has it that his religion grows organically out of the Qur'an). In the notes that follow, I unpick the numerous errors he makes, to explain what this verse means. However, before embarking on that process, it is as well to understand what he says it means. The generally moderate Traditionalist translators at Saheeh International, for example, present in the following way: And similarly, We caused them to be found that they [who found them] would know that the promise of Allāh is truth and that of the Hour there is no doubt. [That was] when they(1) disputed among themselves about their affair and [then] said, "Construct over them a structure. Their Lord is most knowing about them." Said those who prevailed in the matter, "We will surely take [for ourselves] over them a masjid." (The reader will appreciate that everything in square brackets is admitted interpolation.) At (1) a note is supplied: The people of the city.

18:21[2] I.e. God.

18:21[3] Arabic: aʿth̲ara. The facts are these: the form IV verb aʿth̲ara + ʿalā means to acquaint, to make come across and requires two objects (e.g. x with y) and the typical rendering here fails this requirement, a point conceded indirectly by the lexicographer Lane (Arabic-English Lexicon, p. 2004) who describes the second object as 'suppressed'. This is academic language for 'missing and ignored for reasons of convenience'. (To illustrate, here is a sentence in English which has the same problem: we thought about. There is an obvious unmet requirement here. Popular renderings of the clause in question have the same type of problem.) The case is quite simple once we own the point which the Traditionalist is unable to grasp which is that the speaker here has not changed to God. It remains the companions of the cave (which should come as no surprise since we are told at 18:19 that the entire point of the story is the debate between the companions of the cave). The verb, then, is not in the first person plural (we), it is in the third person masculine singular (he) taking a first person plural object nā (us) then the preposition ʿalā and the second object them. The companions of the cave are here stating why God acquainted them with the people of the town. In his haste to create a religion based on later fictions, the Traditionalist has lost — or perhaps wished not to retain — the point of the Qur'anic narrative which is that we, the believers, are meant to warn those around us. It is not a job for commissioned messengers and prophets only; such a task is what following a messenger of God entails. The companions of the cave were simply doing their job; and their story concentrates on the post-op review in the cave. Understood thus, all requirements of the verb are met and nothing is 'suppressed', and we remain focused on the very point the Qur'an tells us is central: the debate among the companions of the cave (18:19).

18:21[4] I.e. the people to whom the companions of the cave witnessed (see 18:14). The expression promise of God treats of the warning to a community of destruction (for a detailed outline of this collocation see note to 17:108).

18:21[5] Arabic: ḥaqqun. See Notepad XVII (ḥaqq- vi.).

18:21[6] This, perhaps, also refers back to the initial When in this story at 18:10 confirming that this is a continuation of that story given to correct the assumption introduced at 18:9. Here, as elsewhere, one needs to develop a sense of the shorthand and logistics the Qur'an employs. To use screenwriting terminology, what we have here is the payoff for the setup at 18:19 (when the companions of the cave send one of their number with money to buy food). That person has now, evidently, returned with news of what has transpired on the ground while they were asleep. We are left to fill in the details. The executive version is this: they have been in stasis for an inordinately long time (cf. 18:26); everyone who persecuted them (and by extension, all the members of their personal families along with everyone else they knew) is now long dead, and they are living in a completely different era. Put yourself in their shoes: if you woke up one day and someone in your house went to the shops and came back with a similar piece of news, would that not cause voices to be raised?

18:21[7] I.e. the companions of the cave.

18:21[8] Here again affair serves as a marker to identify the subject throughout the narrative: the companions of the cave (see note to 18:10). The Traditionalist here switches affair to reference the people of the city and is, in general, lost in his understanding of the entire passage.

18:21[9] I.e. over — or in memory of — those who perished. The argument here is in favour of a monument or memorial building of some type. Muhammad Asad covers this sense in his rendering of this clause: Indeed, we must surely raise a house of worship in their memory!

18:21[10] The victors in the debate conclude that they will take a masjid for (i.e. as a recompense for) them. The Qur'anic usage of the Arabic provides a construction which occurs just once more in the text (at the end of 18:77) where take (in payment) for is unquestionably the sense (and confirmed to be so by the generality of translators). Interestingly, a Christian church was built at Petra in 450 CE. The Traditionalist's rendering of the current phrase here is typically mired in fudging and surmise.

18:21[11] Arabic: masjid, masājid. See Notepad VII.i. A rigorous pan-textual approach is embarrassing to the Traditionalist here also. In his general presentation, he allows the non-specialist reader to think that by masjid the Qur'an means an Islamic mosque. Awkwardly for him, context (as here) frequently demonstrates this claim to be false. In such cases, he unblushingly inserts another value and hopes no one will notice — which generally nobody does.

18:22[1] I.e. those who speculate without knowledge.

18:22[2] This, incidentally, is the number surmised by early Christians.

18:22[3] Given the statement at 18:25 there is a case to be made that this refers to the number of years the companions of the cave slept rather than the number of individual youths, but God knows best.

18:22[4] I.e. one based in and limited to what God has given. The facts are these: a population fell into idolatry; young men of faith refused to go along with that idolatry and stood up and witnessed to the truth of the One God, and were rejected; God protected the young men a stasis of sleep in a cave for an inordinately long time (cf. 18:26); the young men awoke to find that God had destroyed the former population; the young men discovered what had transpired and discussed how best they should respond; one party argued that they should build a monument to those who had perished; a second party argued that they should take a masjid (place of worship) in recompense for the people of the community to which they witnessed (and sent to their lord apprised of the truth).

18:22[5] The Qur'an is completely clear: we are to limit our information about this question to facts (which, for us, means what we have in the Qur'an).

18:24[1] Surely, the point of this aside is that one should anticipate that he, like the companions of the cave, if he would serve God and do what is required (namely, warn with the revelation the erring culture around him), may also sleep for an unnaturally long time, or be taken to his Lord in death — which is why it is a wise course to anticipate such an eventuality by referencing God's will as part of formulating any future plans.

18:25[1] I take this verse to refer to those who guess at the Unseen (cf. 18:22). Muhammad Asad thinks likewise: This obviously connects with the "idle guesses" mentioned in the first paragraph of verse 22 above - guesses refuted by the subsequent statements, "My Sustainer knows best how many they were" in verse 22, and "God knows best how long they remained [there]" in verse 26.

18:60[1] It is perhaps of note that the two stories which follow (that of Mūsā and the mysterious stranger, and that of Dhūl-Qarnayn) come so soon after the account of the companions of the cave. Concerning Dhūl-Qarnayn (beginning 18:83) we are told explicitly that he was a person about whom men of the time asked questions. We may reasonably infer that all three stories were current at the time of the revelation and were histories about which people had questions.

18:60[2] Lit.: young man. Muhammad Asad notes: Lit., "young man" (fata)- a term applied, in early Arabic usage, to one's servant (irrespective of his age). According to tradition, it was Joshua, who was to become the leader of the Israelites after the death of Moses.

18:64[2] I.e. they doubled back immediately.

18:68[1] Arabic: kẖubr — knowledge, experience. This word occurs at 18:68 and 18:91 only. Muhammad Asad adds here: Lit., "that, thou dost not encompass with [thy] experience (khubran)": according to Razi, an allusion to the fact that even a prophet like Moses did not fully comprehend the inner reality of things (haga'iq at-ashya' kama hiya); and, more generally, to man's lack of equanimity whenever he is faced with something that he has never yet experienced or cannot immediately comprehend. In the last analysis the above verse implies - as is brought out fully in Moses' subsequent experiences - that appearance and reality do not always coincide; beyond that, it touches in a subtle manner upon the profound truth that man cannot really comprehend or even visualize anything that has no counterpart - at least in its component elements - in his own intellectual experience: and this is the reason for the Qur'anic use of metaphor and allegory with regard to "all that is beyond the reach of a created being's perception" (al-ghayb).

18:81[1] Arabic: zakāt. See note to 2:43 and Article SZC. Here we have an example of the plain sense of the word zakāt in the Qur'an in context. It means purity, and all Traditionalist translators render it as such here, or use synonyms. This is also the dictionary definition of the word. Yet, in other contexts, the Traditionalist foists upon the believer a fixed tax which not only is nowhere found in the Qur'an, but the notion of which is antithetical to plain Qur'anic statements (2:215, 2:219).

¶18.11

18:83[1] Lit.: He of the Two Horns or He of the Two Generations. Muhammad Asad contributes the following thoughts here: Lit., "I will convey unto you a remembrance [or "mention"] of him" - i.e., something that is worthy of remembrance and mention: which, I believe, is an allusion to the parabolic character of the subsequent story and the fact that it is confined, like the preceding parable of Moses and the unknown sage, to a few fundamental, spiritual truths. - The epithet Dhu'l-Qarnayn signifies "the Two-Horned One" or "He of the Two Epochs", since the noun qarn has the meaning of "horn" as well as of "generation" or "epoch" or "age" or "century". The classical commentators incline to the first of these meanings ("the Two-Horned"); and in this they appear to have been influenced by the ancient Middle-Eastern imagery of "horns" as symbols of power and greatness, although the Qur'an itself does not offer any warrant for this interpretation. In fact, the term qarn (and its plural qurun) occurs in the Qur'an - apart from the combination Dhu'l-Qarnayn appearing in verses 83, 86 and 94 of this surah - twenty times: and each time it has the meaning of "generation" in the sense of people belonging to one particular epoch or civilization. However, since the allegory of Dhu'l-Qarnayn is meant to illustrate the qualities of a powerful and just ruler, it is possible to assume that this designation is an echo of the above-mentioned ancient symbolism, which - being familiar to the Arabs from very early times - had acquired idiomatic currency in their language long before the advent of Islam. Within the context of our Qur'anic allegory, the "two horns" may be taken to denote the two sources of power with which Dhu'l-Qarnayn is said to have been endowed: namely, the worldly might and prestige of kingship as well as the spiritual strength resulting from his faith in God. This last point is extremely important - for it is precisely the Qur'anic stress on his faith in God that makes it impossible to identify Dhu 'l-Qarnayn, as most of the commentators do, with Alexander the Great (who is represented on some of his coins with two horns on his head) or with one or another of the pre-Islamic, Himyaritic kings of Yemen. All those historic personages were pagans and worshipped a plurality of deities as a matter of course, whereas our Dhu 'l-Qarnayn is depicted as a firm believer in the One God: indeed, it is this aspect of his personality that provides the innermost reason of the Qur'anic allegory. We must, therefore, conclude that the latter has nothing to do with history or even legend, and that its sole purport is a parabolic discourse on faith and ethics, with specific reference to the problem of worldly power.

18:86[2] I.e. the west.

18:86[3] Muhammad Asad notes here: Or: "abundance of water" - which, according to many philologists (cf. Taj al-'Arus), is one of the meanings of 'ayn (primarily denoting a "spring"). Objections are sometimes raised against this statement which rest upon the assumption that the Qur'an claims that the sun (itself) set into a body of water. Anyone on a west-facing coast can observe the sun appear to set into the sea; this is all that is meant here (cf. 18:90).

18:88[1] I.e. the Garden.

18:88[2] Lit.: ease.

18:88[3] I.e. laws would not be made too demanding.

18:90[3] Arabic: min dūni. See note to 2:23.

18:90[4] I.e. besides the sun. They had no dwellings.

18:91[1] The word kaḏẖālika means thus and occurs many times in the Qur'an. In the majority of cases it fits perfectly within the narrative. However, I noticed that in a small number of cases it neither fits fully syntactically nor has any obvious function. Translators struggle to accommodate it in such cases by ignoring it, twisting it, or inserting words of their own choosing to form a non-existent and non-functioning thought such as: thus [it was] or thus [it came to pass], treating the reader to the literary equivalent of ho-hum or well then — certainly not representative of the terse and compact vitality which one experiences with the Qur'an. I reviewed and listed every instance of kaḏẖālika and identified those cases in which they 'hang' (or seem lost or disjointed from the context). That process rendered a set comprising: 18:91, 26:59, 44:28, 44:54. (The reader is encouraged to look at and compare a number of translations to see how the translators wrestle to make the word fit; where they deal with it honestly it lies there like a second spare tyre next to a fully packed car.) Having identified the set, I read the surrounding context for each and found that they all treat of the same themes: security in, and inheritance or possession of, land or kingdom. In order: 18:91 treats of Dhūl-Qarnayn who encounters a people who have nothing but the sun above their heads (they have neither security nor possession of the land) and in the next verse the narrative turns to the story of Ya'jūj and Ma'jūj due to whom those he encounters are unable to live unmolested in the land — which condition he remedies (they possess a land but have not security — although they gain it); at 26:59 the children of Israel inherit 'treasures and a noble station' and are delivered through the sea (leaving behind slavery and tyranny) while those who oppressed them are destroyed (so the children of Israel had neither security nor possession but they gain both along with inheritance); 44:28 treats of Fir'awn and his people and lists the good that they had, before stating: '[...] We gave it as an inheritance to another people' and '[...]the heaven and the earth wept not for them, nor were they granted respite' (so they had both security and possession but lost everything and utterly failed in the end); the final instance is found at 44:54 and treats of those of prudent fear, and sits in the middle of 44:51-57, a passage which describes the bliss of the Garden where the inhabitants are 'in a secure station' and will 'not taste therein of death save the former death[...]' — a passage which itself follows on from, and stands in stark contradistinction to, a description of the fate of the inhabitants of Hell (so in this case they have the supreme security and possession, and can never lose it). Given the totality of the above facts, I must regard these 'extra' *kadhālika*s as having logistical as well as semantic functions, operating with a function similar to kallā (see note to 74:16) as pan-textual markers which draw together points spread across the broader narrative — a fact which indicates that their surrounding contexts should be considered together. Given what we now know, the statement immediately following the first instance of this kadhālika set at 18:91 takes on an entirely different aspect. Translators struggle to dispatch this instance with conviction because they (quite reasonably) assume it treats of Dhūl-Qarnayn, and when understood as such it means, frankly, nothing — or at least nothing we can do anything with. However, it fits perfectly into the model just outlined. Saheeh International renders the clause: 'And We had encompassed [all] that he had in knowledge.' The Arabic rendered here he had is ladayhi which means (in the context) he has (or he had) with him or near him is (or was). The case is now clear that the statement refers not to Dhūl-Qarnayn but to the use of the hanging kadhālika: And We have encompassed all that it (i.e. the hanging kadhālika) has (i.e. is with it, near it) in knowledge. All instances appear in the notes and reference this verse. This is one of the proofs the Qur'an contains which demonstrate that it is complete, perfect, and in the correct order (see also note to 74:31 and Article MLQ).

18:91[2] I.e. with kadhālika (as a pan-textual marker). See note above.

18:92[1] Lit.: Then he followed a means (Arabic: 'atba'a; see note to 2:262; Arabic: sabab — means).

18:93[1] Arabic: ḥattā idhā. See note to 3:152.

18:93[2] Arabic: al saddayn. Often translated two mountains, for reasons originating, I assume, in places other than the Qur'an. This word is found in its singular form in three other places; in each case it means barrier (18:94, 36:9, 36:9).

18:93[3] Arabic: min dūni. See note to 2:23.

18:93[4] Grammar: dual.

18:94[1] Said by the Traditionalist to denote Gog and Magog — though what he means by that is either unclear or based on suspect sources.

18:95[1] I.e. he declines their offer of payment.

18:96[1] Arabic: ḥattā idhā. See note to 3:152.

18:96[2] Arabic: ṣadaf — shell, conch, visible part of the ear. There is no justification that I can find for Traditionalist translations here using mountains and synonyms. This noun occurs only once, a fact which makes it vulnerable to abuse for the usual reasons. The verb form occurs at 6:46, 6:157, 6:157, 6:157 and means to turn away (in a reflexive, not transitive sense). The story here, as commonly understood, is that a wall was built between two mountains to keep Ya'jūj and Ma'jūj at bay. But I do not agree that this is what the text says. Rather, it seems to be yet another case of ideology driving interpretation. There are strong, internally verifiable words for mountain in the Qur'an but ṣadaf is not one of them; such a value also makes no sense in the context: if a wall is erected across a valley and there exists a compelling reason to get past it, it is a simple matter to climb up one side of the mountain and down the other side of the barrier. In any case, I do not believe this is what is described here. The preceding language concerns building a dam, filling until making level and pouring. This does not sound like building upwards, rather blocking downwards or inwards. My thesis is this: Ya'jūj and Ma'jūj were cave-dwellers and Dhūl-Qarnayn is blocking the entrance to their subterranean domain. In such a scenario ṣadaf bears a reasonable correlation to the action in both its noun and verb aspects. The verb means to turn away, which is what cave-dwellers have traditionally done with regard to the world. The noun's meanings have in common the concept of an aperture or opening which serves as an entrance to something which itself burrows into the inner parts of a thing. On this basis, I believe that opening is the right interpretation here. In this scenario, Dhūl-Qarnayn is not building a wall between one faction and another. He is sealing Ya'jūj and Ma'jūj alive into a mass tomb. On this basis verses 18:98-99 make sense also. Creative eschatological myths concerning the Ya'jūj and Ma'jūj are now superfluous — or, at least they can claim no Qur'anic basis.

18:96[3] Arabic: ḥattā idhā. See note to 3:152.

18:98[1] This expression most frequently refers to the end of time. See notes to 17:108, 18:21.

18:98[2] Cf. 7:143, 69:14, 89:21 which are the only remaining verses in which words from this root (d-k-k) occur in the Qur'an. A review of these verses will confirm that what is meant here is the Day in which God Almighty arises. The point Dhūl-Qarnayn is making is that the tomb they have created for Ya'jūj and Ma'jūj will not withstand the end of the world, and that Ya'jūj and Ma'jūj, like every other creature, will be brought forth to Judgment; he is simply putting the work of his hands into right context with respect to the power and judgment of God. This narrative has been woven into an eschatological expectation by Muslims, the broader scope of which is entirely contrary to clear statements in the Qur'an. See note to 18:96.

18:107[2] Arabic: nuzul. This word signifies living quarters or lodgings and is closely allied to senses associated with hospitality to a guest (e.g. nuzl means food served to a guest). This word occurs at 3:198, 18:102, 18:107, 32:19, 37:62, 41:32, 56:56, 56:93.

18:108[1] The Qur'anic expression here lā yabghūna 'anhā ḥiwalan has entered the language as a common expression meaning they would not have it any other way.

18:109[1] Arabic: madad — help, aid, assistance, support, backing, reinforcement. A. J. Arberry uses replenishment here which I feel covers the main senses of this word. This verse dispatches the notion that the Qur'an requires outside sources. God is not short of words. Had he wanted to say more than what is in the Qur'an, he would have done so. Adding to the words of God albeit — or, perhaps, especially — in the name of a prophet (which is the Traditionalist's stock-in-trade), strikes me both as a crime against God, and a calumny against that prophet. See also 31:27.

19:5[3] Lit.: ally, protector.

19:6[1] The subject of inheritance in various contexts is a core theme of this chapter (consider particularly 19:6, 19:40, 19:49-50, 19:59-63, 19:80). This is of additional significance when one understands how the letters of al ḥurūf al muqaṭṭa'āt ('the mysterious letters') which head this sūrah operate, passing their values from this point downwards through the sequence (see Article MLQ).

19:7[1] Typically identified with John of the Christian Bible, but see note to 3:39. See Notepad XV.

19:9[1] Existing translations vary on whether an angel or God is speaking. Pan-textual consideration demonstrates that it can only be an angel, since this convention (Arabic: kadhālika qāl rabbuk- — Thus said thy Lord) occurs only twice more in the Qur'an and both cases unambiguously treat of an angel — or angels — giving news of a child to be born under miraculous circumstances (at 19:21 to Maryam, and at 51:30 to Ibrāhīm). Added to this, we have the fact that 19:9 contains the message from God. Thus, the case of who is speaking here is clear.

19:15[1] 'Īsā, son of Maryam employs the same formula at 19:33, which is one reason why I don't accept as Qur'anically sound the Islamic world's attempt to include the narrative of the Second Coming of Jesus in its teachings. No one claims that 19:15 implies that Yaḥya did not die and will return again, but at 19:33, the same formula in the mouth of 'Īsā, son of Maryam is leveraged by the Traditionalist to imply support for Muslims' later eschatological opinions regarding him. A plain reading of the Qur'an shows that 'Īsā, son of Maryam died here on this earth and is not 'coming on the clouds of heaven' (and so to kill the pigs or break the crosses or do any of the things non-Qur'anic Islamic sources ascribe to him).

19:17[2] Arabic: sawīy — straight; right, correct, proper; unimpaired, sound; regular, even, harmonious. I have inclined to A. J. Arberry's value here of without fault which covers most of the word's values.

19:18[1] Arabic: raḥmān. Typically rendered most merciful. See 36:23 and note thereto, note to 1:1, and Notepad I. The Traditionalist's value is particularly discordant here.

19:22[1] Arabic: ḥamalathu. Lit.: she bore him or she carried him. Translations tend to emphasise notions of conceiving here, which value does not survive analysis of use of this root across the text. Cf. 19:27.

19:23[1] Lit.: forgetfulness forgotten.

19:24[1] The masculine singular subject could imply either the angel, or the newly born babe (cf. 19:29-30).

19:26[2] Arabic: ṣawm. This word is generally taken to mean fasting (from food and drink). However, the context makes it clear that the Qur'an permits of fasting (ṣawm) by abstaining from speech, since Maryam is specifically provided here with both food and drink. It is also clear that not speaking means restricting verbal communication to that which is necessary. It does not mean pretending to be physically unable to speak; nor does it mean that explaining in simple terms that one is refraining from speech annuls such a fast.

19:26[3] Lit.: a man.

19:27[1] See Notepad XVI and Notepad XVIII.

19:27[2] Lit.: brought.

19:28[1] This could simply refer to her descendance from Hārūn, or it could signify something more than that (see note to 3:37).

19:30[1] Arabic: al kitāb. See Notepad IX.ii.
19:31[1] Arabic: al ṣalāt; i.e. such duty as is incumbent. See note to 2:3 and Article SZC. Again, the Traditionalist's value for al ṣalāt fails since — if he is to be consistent — his position has to be that a baby performed five ritual prayers each day. While I do not find that a credible position, it is perfectly possible (although admittedly rare) for a human being to complete his duty to God from cradle to grave.
19:31[2] Arabic: al zakāt. See note to 2:43 and Article SZC.
19:33[1] One naturally infers from this that ʿĪsā died, but not a violent death (cf. 19:15).
19:33[2] This statement is taken by some Traditionalists — under the influence of the dominant Egypt-Palestine thesis and Pauline Christology — to mean ʿĪsā did not die. However, such a position is difficult to support; see 19:15 where the same formula is applied to Yaḥyā.

19:37[3] Arabic: mashhad — assembly, meeting, place of assembly; view, spectacle, sight.
19:38[1] Or possibly Hear thou and see thou! While I follow the dominant convention in the translation at this juncture, there is a case to be made for reading this clause as a parenthesis exhorting the reader into a preview of the scene which surrounds it. In form both the hearing and seeing components of this verse are in the second person singular imperative. A comparable construction is found at 18:26. A related question is whether the Qur'anic position is that the unbelievers are raised up blind on the Day of Judgment. In support of this view one might cite 14:42-43, 20:124-125, 20:102. An opposing argument might advance 38:62-63 and 50:22. This is an interesting question, and one which requires detailed pan-textual analysis of the components and collocations across all contexts to decide definitively, but that study is beyond the remit of the present work. I am indebted to Said Mirza for bringing the questions which engendered this note to my attention.
19:38[2] Arabic: ẓālimūn. See note to 2:229.

¶19.4 19:51[1] Arabic: al kitāb. See Notepad IX.ii. See note to 19:16.

19:52[1] Namely, a tree-covered or fertile mountain. See note to 2:63. Cf. 20:80.
19:54[1] Arabic: al kitāb. See Notepad IX.ii. See note to 19:16.
19:54[2] While this can be read to mean that Ismāʿīl was true to his promise, the case is stronger, in my view, that the subject is God (implying that Ismāʿīl was the result of God's promise to Ibrāhīm) with Ismāʿīl's defining characteristics being found in the following clauses.
19:55[1] Arabic: al ṣalāt; i.e. such duty as is incumbent. See note to 2:3 and Article SZC.
19:55[2] Arabic: al zakāt. See note to 2:43 and Article SZC.
19:56[1] Arabic: al kitāb. See Notepad IX.ii. See note to 19:16.

19:58[1] This statement makes it clear that the reference to Maryam beginning at 19:16 is connected with ʿĪsa.
19:58[2] When one reads the Qur'an carefully, it becomes clear that not all mankind descends from Ādam. The Qur'an identifies a specific racial line which runs from Ādam via Nūḥ and beyond. This subject is beyond the remit of the present work.
19:58[3] I.e. carried (in the ship).
19:58[4] Arguments are advanced in certain quarters that Israel is a personality distinct from Yaʿqūb (cf. Genesis 32:28 and 35:10). While Israel is nowhere conclusively identified in the Qur'an with Yaʿqūb, I have so far found no conclusive Qur'anic data associating this name with anyone else.
19:58[5] Arabic: āyāt. See Notepad VIII.
19:58[6] Arabic: raḥmān. Typically rendered most merciful. See 36:23 and note thereto, note to 1:1, and Notepad I.

19:58[8] Cf. 17:107, 17:109.
19:59[1] Arabic: al ṣalāt; i.e. such duty as is incumbent. See note to 2:3 and Article SZC.
19:59[2] Arabic: aḍāʿā — to cause to be lost, to let go to waste, to make vain. This verb occurs 10 times in the text (2:143, 3:171, 3:195, 7:170, 9:120, 11:115, 12:56, 12:90, 18:30, 19:59).
19:59[3] This statement is helpful in understanding the value of al ṣalāt. It must in some measure stand in contradistinction to following lusts (i.e. simply doing what one feels like). One notes that among those who insist upon the value of al ṣalāt as a five-times daily prayer, there are countless persons who habitually commit sins (cf. and followed lusts). Thus, scrupulous performance of a ritual, in and of itself, can have no material bearing on what is meant here. However, our value for al ṣalāt (duty) holds firm. Duty is that which one does whether one feels like doing it or not. Duty keeps one from following one's lusts. Certainly, it is a duty upon a believer to worship God. But to say that therein lies the sum total of all duty is foolishness. Yet this is the essence of the Traditionalist's ideology on this point. So what does duty signify in the context? We find the answer in the first line of the next verse. No one whose life comports with that statement follows his lusts.

19:59[4] Arabic: ghayy — trespassing, transgression, offence, error, sin; seduction, temptation, enticement, allurement.

19:64[1] Understood as the angels who bring revelation to prophets.
19:64[2] Lit.: between our hands. I understand this to mean here: what is at our time. See note to 2:66.
19:65[1] Grammar: dual.
19:65[2] Arabic: samiyy. This word has two separate meanings in Arabic (and appears in lexicons under two separate entries). The first range of meanings covers: like or equal, and contender for superiority, loftiness, excellence, etc. and some translators render here according to this meaning. The second meaning deals with names and naming (principally, namesake or one of like name). Since the usage here echoes that at 19:7, and given that the present verse opens with a great name of God, my opinion is that the latter option is the correct one. The student should know that the root noun ism (name) has connotations of authority also.
19:65[3] I.e. with his authority.

¶19.5 19:68[1] Or adversaries (against the command of God). See Article SJC.

19:69[1] Arabic: shīʿa — sect, persuasion. Cf. 28:4.
19:71[1] Some translators render using passing over and similar values here. But the verb means to arrive at, to come to (usually with reference to a destination or resting-place); cf. 21:98, 21:99, 28:23.

19:73[5] Arabic: maqām. See note to 2:125.
19:73[6] Muhammad Asad comments here: Lit., "better in assembly". This parabolic "saying" of the unbelievers implies, in the garb of a rhetorical question, a superficially plausible but intrinsically fallacious argument in favour of a society which refuses to submit to any absolute moral imperatives and is determined to obey the dictates of expediency alone. In such a social order, material success and power are usually seen as consequences of a more or less conscious rejection of all metaphysical considerations - and, in particular, of all that is comprised in the concept of God-willed standards of morality - on the assumption that they are but an obstacle in the path of man's free, unlimited "development". It goes without saying that this attitude (which has reached its epitome in the modern statement that "religion is opium for the people") is diametrically opposed to the demand, voiced by every higher religion, that man's social life, if it is to be a truly "good" life, must be subordinated to definite ethical principles and restraints. By their very nature, these restraints inhibit the unprincipled power-drive which dominates the more materialistic societies and enables them to achieve - without regard to the damage done to others and, spiritually, to themselves - outward comforts and positions of strength in the shortest possible time: but precisely because they do act as a brake on man's selfishness and power-hunger, it is these moral considerations and restraints - and they alone - that can free a community from the interminable, self-destructive inner tensions and frustrations to which materialistic societies are subject, and thus bring about a more enduring, because more organic, state of social well-being[...].

19:82[1] Arabic: kallā. This exclamation operates also as a pan-textual marker. See 74:16 and note thereto.
19:82[2] Arabic: ḍidd — an opposite, contrary; adversary, opponent. This root occurs only once in the text. Its position suggests confirmation for the value of shayṭan presented in the notes to this work of adversary (cf. 19:83). See Article SJC.

¶19.6 19:83[1] Arabic: alam tara. See note to 2:243.

19:83[4] Lit.: inciting them with inciting.
19:84[1] I.e. seek thou not to hasten the punishments of God.
19:84[2] I.e. of days.
19:85[1] See note to al muttaqūn at 2:2.
19:85[3] A choice has to be made, as so often, which of the available senses one is to convey. N. J. Dawood has multitudes. A. J. Arberry has with pomp. Saheeh International has as a delegation. All are correct. Arabic: wafd — arrival, coming; delegation. The word has connotations also of ambassadorship and honour. Note the expression ḥaḍarū wufūd — they came in droves. I have chosen to render here by expanding slightly upon Muhammad Asad's as honoured guests. This is the only instance of this root in the text.
19:86[1] Or thirsty. Lit.: watering-place. Many translations emphasise here notions of thirst and wells or horde. These are not incorrect renderings, but the non-specialist reader needs some background to understand the import, for which see note to 12:19.

19:87[1] Arabic: raḥmān. Typically rendered most merciful. See 36:23 and note thereto, note to 1:1, and Notepad I. Any 'covenant with the Almighty' would be founded upon acknowledgement of his uniqueness, and be contaminated by no notions of a 'son' (see next verse).

19:88[2] Muhammad Asad comments here: This allusion to the Christian belief in Jesus as "the son of God" - and, in general, to every belief in God's "incarnation" in a created being - takes up the theme broached in verse 81 above: namely, the deification of powers or beings other than God "with a view to their being a source of strength" to those who turn to them. But whereas verse 81 refers specifically to the godless who accord a quasi-divine status to material wealth and power and abandon themselves entirely to the pursuit of worldly success, the present passage refers to people who, while believing in God, deify prophets and saints, too, in the subconscious hope that they might act as "mediators" between them and the Almighty. Since this deification offends against the principle of God's transcendent oneness and uniqueness, it implies a breach of man's "bond with God" and, if consciously persisted in, constitutes an unforgivable sin (cf. 4:48 and 116).

19:89[1] Lit.: brought.

19:91[1] Often translated ascribe to, such a rendering is correct but loses a nuance which exists in the Arabic. The verb da'ā means to call (out) to (in all senses, including to supplicate) and is rendered accordingly throughout. Here, under the influence of the preposition li there is a sense of imparting (which is why ascribe is often the value chosen by translators). However, what is missing from such a rendering, and what I detect in the Arabic, is an allusion to the Christian practice of making supplication to God in the name of his 'son'.

19:92[2] Muhammad Asad comments here: The idea that God might have a "son" - either in the real or in the metaphorical sense of this term - would presuppose a degree of innate likeness between "the father" and "the son": but God is in every respect unique, so that "there is nothing like unto Him" (42:11) and "nothing that could be compared with Him" (112:4). Moreover, the concept of "progeny" implies an organic continuation of the progenitor, or of part of him, in another being and, therefore, presupposes a degree of incompleteness before the act of procreation (or incarnation, if the term "sonship" is used metaphorically): and the idea of incompleteness, in whatever sense, negates the very concept of God. But even if the idea of "sonship" is meant to express no more than one of the different "aspects" of the One Deity (as is claimed in the Christian dogma of the "Trinity"), it is described in the Qur'an as blasphemous inasmuch as it amounts to an attempt at defining Him who is "sublimely exalted above anything that men may devise by way of definition" (see last sentence of 6:100).

19:94[1] Lit.: and numbered them with a numbering. A. J. Arberry, for example, has here: and He has numbered them exactly.

19:96[1] Arabic: alladhīna āmanū. See note to 2:257 and Notepad II.iv.

19:96[3] The Qur'an speaks sparingly of the love of God for his servants. It is, perhaps, significant that this instance should occur in a context which treats of Trinitarian Christian assertions — given the excessive and unwarranted emphasis Trinitarian Christianity places on the love of God. This verse clarifies for Christians (and for all mankind) how God's love is accessed: one needs to heed (i.e. have faith in) the message and do works of righteousness. In this case — and in this case alone — the Almighty appoints love for us. Those who read and accept the Qur'an are not to adopt what it calls the 'vain desires' of previous communities (2:120-121).

19:97[1] I.e. (the revelation of) the Qur'an.

19:97[2] This seems to me to have a secondary implication of simplify, make accessible.

19:97[3] I.e. in Arabic.

19:97[4] See note to al muttaqūn at 2:2.

20

20:0[2] The twentieth chapter of the Qur'an is by convention called ṭā hā or Ṭā Hā.

20:1[1] See note to 2:1 and Article MLQ.

ṭā hā:

ṭā: 19:16-33 (ʿĪsā)

hā: 19:41-50 (Ibrāhīm).

20:2[1] Arabic: qur'ān — reading, recital, recitation, something which is read out.

20:4[1] Lit.: (gradual or successive) sending down.

20:6[1] Grammar: dual.

20:8[1] Cf. 2:255, 3:2, 3:6, 3:18, 3:18, 4:87, 6:102, 6:106, 7:158, 9:129, 13:30, 20:8, 20:98, 23:116, 27:26, 28:70, 28:88, 35:3, 39:6, 40:3, 40:62, 40:65, 44:8, 59:22, 59:23, 64:13, 73:9.

20:9[1] Arabic: ḥadīth — story; account; narrative, statement.

20:12[1] Or twice-hallowed valley. Muhammad Asad concurs with Zamakhshari's rejection of ṭuwa as the name of the valley in favour of it indicating twice (from ṭuwan). Asad says: i.e., "twice-hallowed" - apparently because God's voice was heard in it and because Moses was raised there to prophethood.

20:13[1] See note to waḥī and awḥā at 3:44.

20:14[1] Arabic: al ṣalāt; i.e. such duty as is incumbent. See note to 2:3 and Article SZC. In this case, al ṣalāt implies — in whole or in part — Mūsā's duty to speak before Firʿawn (cf. 20:42), the central, and chief motivating component of which follows in the next verse: to keep the Hour at the forefront of one's concerns, and not to be diverted from it. The fact is that this verse speaks of al ṣalāt for My remembrance. What the Traditionalist has managed to miss is the obvious corollary which is that, if there is such a thing as al ṣalāt for God's remembrance then there are other types of al ṣalāt also. The problem, as ever, is that the Traditionalist over-specifies the general, and then injects the details from one case into all cases, drawing on an extraneous literature. By insisting on an over-specified value for aqāma al ṣalāt, the result is that he imposes upon Mūsā a system of prayer that he never encountered, and misses the point of 20:15-16 in the context, and deprives the reader of making the obvious connection between this statement and 20:42. I am not saying men should not pray. I am not saying Mūsā did not pray. I am saying that the Traditionalist's obsession with making the expression aqāma al ṣalāt equate a system of rituals worked out in the 7th century at the earliest as part of his broader programme of proclaiming his religion to be intrinsic to the text is manifestly wrong, dishonest, and extremely tedious. It is also a prime example of diverting one from the Hour in favour of vain desires (cf. 20:16).

20:14[2] Arabic: dhikr — calling to mind, recalling, reminding; remembrance (of something past); history.

20:29[1] Lit.: a burden-carrier.

20:32[1] See note to Arabic root: sh-r-k at 6:78 and Notepad VI. Generally rendered using partner, the sense of partnership remains using this variation.

20:38[1] See note to waḥī and awḥā at 3:44.

20:38[2] See note to waḥī and awḥā at 3:44.

20:39[1] Arabic: qadhafa. I would like to render with a softer word, but this verb has an unavoidably unceremonious and sudden connotation, and serves as a correlation for cast at 20:19 and in what follows at 20:39. All instances are found at 20:39, 20:39, 20:87, 21:18, 33:26, 34:48, 34:53, 37:8, 59:2.

20:48[1] See note to waḥī and awḥā at 3:44.

20:48[2] At this point the transmission of the message from God to Mūsā ceases and there follows a scene change of a type common to the Qur'an — one which is easily processed by a generation familiar with the conventions of cinematic storytelling. The ability to follow such narrative shifts increases one's appreciation of the text.

20:61[1] Arabic: asḥata — to destroy (utterly), to do away with (see Lane, p. 1324). This is the only instance of this form IV verb in the text.

20:62[1] Lit.: the.

20:63[1] Arabic: sāḥirān — sorcerers (dual). See note to 2:102.

20:63[2] Arabic: siḥr — sorcery. A prime example where siḥr is associated with acquiring and maintaining temporal power. See note to 2:102.

20:63[3] Lit.: way or method.

20:64[1] Lit. in formation; i.e. work together, with one strategy.

20:66[1] Arabic: bal. See note to 2:88.

20:69[1] Arabic: sāḥir — sorcerer. See note to 2:102.

20:69[2] Arabic: sāḥir — sorcerer. See note to 2:102.

20:69[3] Lit. wherever he may come. Muhammad Asad comments here: Lit., "wherever he may come" - i.e., irrespective of whether he aims at a good or at an evil end (Razi). The above statement implies a categorical condemnation of all endeavours which fall under the heading of "magic", whatever the intention of the person who devotes himself to it.

20:70[1] Arabic: saḥara — sorcerers. See note to 2:102.

20:70[2] The verb here is the same as that rendered to cast (i.e. staffs), but in the passive mood. The only way to render this in English is by making the verb intransitive, which is the practice of most translators. The context here indicates literal prostration.

20:70[3] Arabic: sajada. See Notepad IV.

20:70[4] See note to 58:4 for Qur'anic usage of to believe in.

20:71[1] I.e. Mūsā.

20:71[2] Arabic: siḥr — sorcery. See note to 2:102.

20:71[3] Or put to death by stake. See note to ṣalaba at 4:157.

20:73[1] See note to 58:4 for Qur'anic usage of to believe in.

20:73[2] Arabic root: kh-ṭ-'. See Notepad XI.vi.

20:73[3] Arabic: siḥr — sorcery. See note to 2:102.

20:75[1] Arabic: (al) mu'min. See note to 8:2.

¶20.5

20:77[1] See note to waḥī and awḥā at 3:44.

20:78[1] Arabic: fir'awn. See note to 2:49.

20:78[2] Arabic: 'atba'a. See note to 2:262.

20:78[3] Arabic: yamm — wide expanse of water, either river or sea.

20:78[4] Saheeh International makes an apposite point here: i.e., not only the water but that which only Allāh knows — terror, pain, regret, etc.

20:79[1] Arabic: firʿawn. See note to 2:49.

20:80[1] Namely, a tree-covered or fertile mountain. See note to 2:63. Cf. 19:52.

20:80[2] Muhammad Asad contributes the following thought: According to Arab philologists, the term mann denotes not only the sweet, resinous substance exuded by certain plants of the desert, but also everything that is "bestowed as a favour", i.e., without any effort on the part of the recipient. Similarly, the term salwa signifies not merely "a quail" or "quails", but also "all that makes man content and happy after privation" (Qamus). Hence the combination of these two terms denotes, metonymically, the gift of sustenance freely bestowed by God upon the followers of Moses.

20:81[1] I.e. perished; come to utter ruin.

20:82[1] Cf. 71:10.

20:84[1] Muhammad Asad comments here: The classical commentators understand this phrase in its physical sense, i.e. "they are coming up behind me and are now close by". Since, however. Moses was obviously meant to be alone on his ascent of Mount Sinai, I am of the opinion that his answer has a tropical sense, expressing his assumption that the children of Israel would follow his guidance even in his absence: an assumption which proved erroneous, as shown in the sequence.

20:85[1] See note to fitnah at 2:102.

20:85[2] Lit.: after thee.

20:85[3] Typically identified with Samaritan. This identification is problematical for obvious reasons. I do not necessarily agree with all of his thoughts here, but I include Muhammad Asad's comment with some light editing for interest: The designation as-samiri is undoubtedly an adjectival noun denoting the person's descent or origin. According to one of the explanations advanced by Tabari and Zamakhshari, it signifies "a man of the Jewish clan of the Samirah", i.e., the ethnic and religious group designated in later times as the Samaritans (a small remnant of whom is still living in Nablus, in Palestine). Since that sect as such did not yet exist at the time of Moses, it is possible that - as Ibn 'Abbas maintained (Razi) - the person in question was one of the many Egyptians who had been converted to the faith of Moses and joined the Israelites on their exodus from Egypt: in which case the designation samiri might be connected with the ancient Egyptian shemer, "a foreigner" or "stranger". This surmise is strengthened by his introduction of the worship of the golden calf, undoubtedly an echo of the Egyptian cult of Apis. In any case, it is not impossible that the latter-day Samaritans descended - or were reputed to descend - from this personality, whether of Hebrew or of Egyptian origin; this might partly explain the persistent antagonism between them and the rest of the Israelite community. Another line of reasoning identifies sāmiriyy with Zimrī (Hebrew: זִמְרִי, lit. "praiseworthy") son of Salu, the prince or leader of a family within the Tribe of Simeon during the time of the Israelites' Exodus.

20:86[1] While I do not hold to this view myself, Muhammad Asad's comment here explains why some translators render otherwise: Or, according to Zamakhshari: "Did, then, the time [of my absence] seem too long to you?" (It is to be noted that the term 'ahd signifies a "time" or "period" as well as a "covenant" or "promise".)

20:86[2] Or appointment.

20:86[3] Lit.: failed to keep my promise.

20:87[1] Or appointment.

20:87[2] Lit.: failed not to keep thy promise.

20:87[3] Muhammad Asad produces here what is for him unusually weak exegesis and moral interpretation. However, I include his comment since the broader points may be of interest to some students: It is mentioned in Exodus xii, 35 that, immediately before their departure from Egypt, the Israelites "borrowed of the Egyptians jewels of silver and jewels of gold". This "borrowing" was obviously done under false pretences, without any intention on the part of the Israelites to return the jewellery to its rightful owners: for, according to the Biblical statement (ibid., verse 36), "they spoiled [i.e., robbed] the Egyptians" by doing so. While it is noteworthy that the Old Testament, in its present, corrupted form, does not condemn this behaviour, its iniquity seems to have gradually dawned upon the Israelites, and so they decided to get rid of those sinfully acquired ornaments (Baghawi, Zamakhshari and - in one of his alternative interpretations - Razi).

20:87[4] I parse from here to the end of 20:91 as a parenthetical narrative since it presents a review of past action and is followed at 20:92 by a continuation of what precedes this point.

20:87[5] Typically identified with Samaritan. See note to 20:85.

20:88[1] Grammar: note the shift to the plural; see next note.

20:88[2] This is the first component in the process of co-opting a revelation to create a control-based religion: men come behind a messenger of God with what the common people is trained to believe is information the Messenger (and by implication God) 'forgot' to put in the revelation. For the second component see 20:96.

20:89[1] Arabic: afalā. See Notepad XIV.

20:89[2] Arabic: qawl — speech; teaching, doctrine; saying, word.

20:90[1] See note to fitnah at 2:102.

20:91[1] Arabic: ʿakafa — to be devoted (to), to remain (in or at).

20:92[1] I.e. Mūsā.

20:95[1] Typically identified with Samaritan. See note to 20:85.

20:96[1] I.e. of dust.

20:96[2] Cf. 20:84.

20:96[3] I understand this to mean: into the furnace where the idol was being created. This is the second component in the creation of a control-based religion: the charlatan claims some special insight and creates thereby a tenuous link with the Messenger (see 20:88), which the gullible accept.

20:97[1] Or Untouchable! Lit.: No contact!

20:97[2] Arabic: ʿakafa — to be devoted (to), to remain (in or at).

20:97[3] Arabic: yamm — wide expanse of water, either river or sea.

20:97[4] The verb nasafa has the sense of to atomise, to pulverise; to blast; to scatter. I render here as to scatter (20:97, 20:105, 77:10).

20:98[1] Lit.: Other than whom there is no god. I have elected to render as I have here because the more literal reading in this context would deprive the reader in English of the full set of that motif which is found at the verses listed below.

20:98[2] Cf. 20:14 and see notes thereto. Cf. 2:255, 3:2, 3:6, 3:18, 3:18, 4:87, 6:102, 6:106, 7:158, 9:129, 13:30, 20:8, 20:98, 23:116, 27:26, 28:70, 28:88, 35:3, 39:6, 40:3, 40:62, 40:65, 44:8, 59:22, 59:23, 64:13, 73:9.

20:99[1] Arabic: dhikr — calling to mind, recalling, reminding; remembrance (of something past); history.

20:102[1] I.e. from terror. Or blue-eyed. Arabic: zurq — blue in colour; white-eyed (as in glaucoma).

20:103[1] I.e. ten days. Muhammad Asad notes here: As in several other places in the Qur'an (e.g., in 2:259, 17:52, 18:19, 23:112-113, 30:55, 79:46, etc.), this and the next verse touch upon the illusory character of man's consciousness of "time" and, thus, upon the relativity of the concept of "time" as such. The number "ten" is often used in Arabic to denote "a few" (Razi).

20:104[1] It is a fact of human society that each community — be it large or small — comprises leaders (trendsetters or key influencers) and followers. I believe that the expression here exemplars in the path indicates the first category.

20:105[1] Cf. 20:97 and see note thereto on nasafa.

20:106[1] The feminine pronoun object here is taken by most to indicate the earth.

20:107[1] Muhammad Asad notes here: In the eschatology of the Qur'an, the "end of the world" does not signify an annihilation - i.e., reduction to nothingness - of the physical universe but, rather, its fundamental, cataclysmic transformation into something that men cannot now visualize. This is brought out in many allegorical allusions to the Last Day, e.g., in 14:48, which speaks of "the Day when the earth shall be changed into another earth, as shall be the heavens".

20:108[1] Lit.: humbled.

20:108[2] Arabic: raḥmān. Typically rendered most merciful. See 36:23 and note thereto, note to 1:1, and Notepad I. This is a clear case where the Traditionalist's value for this word does not comport with the context.

20:108[3] Arabic: hams. This means whisper, muttering, mumble, or murmur, but can also indicate the sound of a gentle footfall or treading, and some translate according to that sense (e.g. N. J. Dawood and Hilali & Khan). This is the only instance of this root in the text, so there is nothing to compare with pan-textually. However, given the preceding local context at 20:103, I am firmly in favour of the option I have chosen.

20:109[2] Arabic: qawl — speech; teaching, doctrine; saying, word. Cf. 22:24, 22:30, 23:68, 51:8.

20:110[1] Lit.: between their hands. I understand this to mean here: what is at their time. See note to 2:66.

20:110[2] Or Him. Or possibly indicating what God knows.

20:111[1] Arabic: ʿanā — to be humble, submissive, servile (toward, before), be obedient, yield, submit (to), to obey (someone). This is the only instance of this root in the text.

20:111[2] I would normally render bears injustice (using my default value for this verb), but cannot since such wording could imply that the subject is the recipient rather than the initiator of injustice. In the Arabic this linguistic problem does not exist.

20:112[1] Arabic: (al) mu'min. See note to 8:2.

20:112[2] The root of this word (which occurs just once) relates to patience and long-suffering. I think that in the context the sense is the unjust withholding of due (which forces patience upon the object). Saheeh International renders here deprivation and Muhammad Asad uses a related value also, which convention I have followed in the translation.

20:113[1] I.e. the Qur'an. For why we know the Qur'an to be the reference see note to 6:92.

20:113[2] Arabic: qur'ān — reading, recital, recitation, something which is read out.

20:113[3] See note to ṣarrafa at 17:41.

20:113[4] Arabic: waʿīd — threats, warnings; promises. Arabic: min al waʿīd. This nuance is elided by most translators, but given a characteristic expository flourish by Muhammad Asad who renders: all manner of warnings.

20:113[5] See note to al muttaqūn at 2:2.

20:113[6] Arabic: dhikr — calling to mind, recalling, reminding; remembrance (of something past); history.

20:114[1] Arabic: al ḥaqq. See Notepad XVII (al ḥaqq i.). Muhammad Asad supplies the following comment: Whenever the noun al-haqq is used as a designation of God, it signifies "the Truth" in the absolute, intrinsic sense, eternally and immutably existing beyond the ephemeral, changing phenomena of His creation: hence, "the Ultimate Truth". God's attribute of al-malik, on the other hand, denotes His absolute sway over all that exists and can, therefore, be suitably rendered as "the Ultimate Sovereign".

20:114[2] I think the imperative here has a broader application which is that one is not to make snap judgments about the Qur'an. One should hold back until he is fully apprised of its contents.

20:114[3] Arabic: qur'ān — reading, recital, recitation, something which is read out.

20:114[4] See note to waḥī and awḥā at 3:44.

20:115[1] This clause invites comparison with 20:88.

20:115[2] I.e. constancy, firmness of purpose.

20:116[1] Arabic: sajada. See Notepad IV.

20:116[2] Arabic: sajada. See Notepad IV.

20:116[3] Arabic: illā. Generally rendered save (as in except or excepting) and equivalents, I have translated in this context to leave open the question of whether Iblīs was an angel. See Article SJC.

20:117[1] Grammar: dual.

20:120[1] Or adversary (against the command of God). See Article SJC.

20:120[2] This is in contradiction to the account in Genesis. In the Qur'an, it is the man rather than the woman who is tempted by the shayṭān. That shayṭān treats of an adversary see Article SJC.

20:121[1] Grammar: dual.

20:121[2] Grammar: dual.

20:121[3] I.e. private parts.

20:121[4] Grammar: dual.

20:123[1] Grammar: dual.

20:123[2] Grammar: the feminine object indicates the garden.

20:123[3] Grammar: there is a shift here to the plural.

20:124[1] Arabic: dhikr — calling to mind, recalling, reminding; remembrance (of something past); history.

20:125[1] Lit.: gathered.

20:126[1] Lit.: He (supplied by the conjugation of the verb); God added for clarity in this context.

20:126[2] Arabic: āyāt. See Notepad VIII.

20:126[3] Cf. 20:88, 20:115.

20:127[1] See note to 58:4 for Qur'anic usage of to believe in.

20:127[2] Arabic: āyāt. See Notepad VIII.

¶20.9

20:128[1] While this may serve as potential support for Petra (either simply as the location of pilgrimage or also as the city of the Messenger) since Petra had been struck previously by earthquakes, its application is, without question, also general. See Notepad XVI. Note that it says that they walk therein, not that they live therein (cf. 21:95 and note thereto).

20:128[2] Arabic: āyāt. See Notepad VIII.

20:129[1] I.e. destruction of this generation also. I have had to rearrange the components of this sentence in English to achieve the sense found in the Arabic. Most other translators do likewise.

20:129[2] Arabic: lizām — necessity, requirement, exigency. This word occurs also at 25:77. Cf. 25:77 and notes thereto.
20:130[1] See note to s-b-ḥ root at 2:30. A point missed by the Traditionalist is that this imperative treats of the Messenger, a man who is exhorted 'be thou patient over what they say'; and whatever 'give thou glory with the praise of thy Lord' means specifically (naturally, the Traditionalist claims it in favour of his predetermined rituals) the reason for it is unambiguous: 'that thou mightest be satisfied'. The scenario is not of a closed-system religion in which a man lives how he likes in compromise with the world and keeps to an unrelated private prayer system as a form of time-tax paid to God. Rather, it is of a man seeking and receiving the strength he needs to sustain him in the process of delivering the message of warning God has entrusted to him to a deaf, ignorant, and derisive world. Cf. 50:39.
20:130[2] See note to s-b-ḥ root at 2:30.
20:130[3] [...]the ends of the day can only logically refer to dawn and dusk; that being the case, this imperative simply expands on and reiterates the one above.
20:131[1] Or categories. Arabic: azwāj. This can also mean pairs, spouses; kinds. Muhammad Asad comments: The philological authorities are unanimous in that the plural noun azwaj denotes here "kinds" of people, or "some" of them, and not - as certain modern translators of the Qur'an have assumed - "pairs".
20:131[2] Arabic: zahra — flower, blossom; beauty, splendour.
20:131[3] See note to fitnah at 2:102.
20:132[1] Arabic: al ṣalāt; i.e. such duty as is incumbent. See note to 2:3 and Article SZC. In its primary sense it is the duty both to serve and seek help from God alone as per the covenant at 1:1-7 of which the statement at 1:5 forms our part — commitment to which also satisfies the pre-existing obligation every man has to acknowledge God's authority (see 7:172). But, in my view, in the present context al ṣalāt has two immediate applications also: 1. to keep the life to come in a right perspective, not becoming disproportionately attached to the fading attractions of the life of the world, and 2. to call the world to turn to God alone (see Notepad XXI for notes on the night vigil). In any event, the imperative is in the singular and directed to the Messenger at that time, and the verse makes clear that his duty was for his benefit; God has no need of anything.
20:132[2] See note to al muttaqūn at 2:2.
20:133[1] Arabic: lawlā. See Notepad XIV.
20:133[2] Arabic: āya. See Notepad VIII.
20:134[1] I.e. before Muhammad came; or before it (the Qur'an).
20:134[2] Arabic: lawlā. See Notepad XIV.
20:134[3] Arabic: āyāt. See Notepad VIII.
20:135[1] Lit.: Each is waiting.

21

21:0[2] The twenty-first chapter of the Qur'an is by convention called al anbiyā' or The Prophets.
21:1[1] The verb in this phrase is the form VIII (iqtaraba) and means to draw near, to approach. While it can be claimed that this is a case of the prophetic past (a common characteristic of the Qur'an: future events described in the past tense), the import surely pertains also to the narrative present. The verb here anticipates its corollary in the present sūrah at 21:97 and is found additionally at 7:185, 21:1, 54:1, 96:19. In the first four instances of the set it treats of an approaching Day (of Judgment or of Punishment) as either an impending or future event, while at 96:19 it is found in the imperative in a directive to the Messenger to draw near to God. The Messenger was expecting destruction and, according to my analysis, the place of his initial preaching was destroyed in an act of God (treated in detail in The God Protocol). See note to 54:1. We note also the progressing motif within the sūrah — kunnā fā'ilīna — (found at 21:17, 21:79, 21:104) discussed in the note to 21:17.
21:2[1] Arabic: dẖikr — calling to mind, recalling, reminding; remembrance (of something past); history. This word is a feature of this sūrah (see notes to 21:1, 21:5, and 21:17 for comments on other characteristic features). This noun occurs 76 times in the text, and the present sūrah contains 10 of those instances (21:2, 21:7, 21:10, 21:24, 21:24, 21:36, 21:42, 21:48, 21:50, 21:105), more than any other sūrah (the nearest competitors are sūrah 38 with six instances, and sūrah 54 with five). The disproportionate incidence of this common word in the sūrah perhaps signals that we should pay it particular attention. The Traditionalist chooses to understand dẖikr to mean the entire Qur'an on an ad hoc basis where it suits his purposes (and in the present sūrah he requires that value at 21:24, 21:24, 21:50). While in places dẖikr does have that meaning (in the sense that the Qur'an as a whole is a remembrance) — in others it does not, a point which the Traditionalist not only concedes, but actively demonstrates in his translations. The question here is whether this is the sense which it conveys in the places the Traditionalist ascribes it this value in this sūrah (21:24, 21:24, 21:50). It will become clear as we progress through the sūrah that the Traditionalist needs to ascribe a value of the entire Qur'an to this word in the places mentioned, for without it his services as the supplier of 'additional' and 'explanatory' literatures are made void. Each instance of dẖikr in this chapter references this verse. Cf. 21:10 and note thereto.
21:3[1] Lit.: the.
21:3[2] Arabic: hāḏẖā — this. This word plays a role in the present sūrah as we shall see. At 21:24 and 21:50, the Traditionalist claims for it a value for which he cannot provide genuine support (i.e. that of the Qur'an as a whole). We note that outside the two instances mentioned, where hāḏẖā occurs (21:3, 21:36, 21:38, 21:59, 21:62, 21:63, 21:97, 21:103) it is perfectly clear what it refers to, and in each case it is to something localised (a named or known individual, a specific event, or something immediately present). The exception is 21:106 where the collocation is fī hāḏẖā, the significance of which is known (see note to 22:78). Thus, on the basis of the textual evidence pertaining to hāḏẖā in the sūrah, in the cases mentioned above (21:24, 21:50), absent exceptional evidence, their values should be taken to refer to the text immediately surrounding each instance, and not to the Qur'an as a whole as implied by the Traditionalist. In the case of 21:50, unlike the Traditionalist, we can provide exceptional evidence to show that the entire Qur'an is meant (see note to 6:92). In the case of 21:24 we cannot, and therefore must revert in that instance to the dominant (localised) value hāḏẖā has in the sūrah.
21:3[3] Arabic: siḥr — sorcery. See note to 2:102. The insinuation here is that the Qur'an is the result of sorcery — a claim the Qur'an refutes — and that those who reason thus are realists. In my opinion, the matrix system of today is sorcery in the sense that the Qur'an uses the term. Much of what purports to be science, education, and entertainment makes sense only when understood in terms of occult magic (for example: use of symbol, number, astrology, and visible allusions to ancient cults). The cult of government is today a form of sorcery (or mind control), one which has achieved the status of a god, and rivals the cults of ancient Egypt, Rome, or Nazi Germany. Underpinning it are brute force, smoke, mirrors, and demonic powers. Despite their present dominance, the ruling elite of today — like those of previous times — have nothing they will not lose at death.
21:3[4] Lit.: when you see? Cf. 27:54.
21:4[1] Or He said. While Muhammad Asad appeals here to some authorities I may not rate exactly as does he, his comment covers a point which should be known by the serious student of the text: According to the earliest scholars of Medina and Basrah, as well as some of the scholars of Kufah, this word is spelt qul, as an imperative ("Say"), whereas some of the Meccan scholars and the majority of those of Kufah read it as qala ("He [i.e., the Prophet] said"). In the earliest copies of the Qur'an the spelling was apparently confined, in this instance, to the consonants q-l: hence the possibility of reading it either as qul or as qala. However, as Tabari points out, both these readings have the same meaning and are, therefore, equally valid, "for, when God bade Muhammad to say this, he [undoubtedly] said it... Hence, in whichever way this word is read, the reader is correct (musib as-sawab) in his reading." Among the classical commentators, Baghawi and Baydawi explicitly use the spelling qul, while Zamakhshari's short remark that "it has also been read as qala" seems to indicate his own preference for the imperative qul. The topic here is suggestive of a much larger one: that the diacritical adornment to the ḥurūf (letters) are in places interpretive, and may be contested on the basis of context or common sense (cf. 39:18). I argue a thematically related point on the basis of pan-textual analysis at my note to 9:28.
21:4[2] Lit.: the word or the utterance. Arabic: qawl — speech; teaching, doctrine. Cf. 22:24, 22:30, 23:68, 51:8.
21:5[1] Arabic: bal. See note to 2:88. This verse presents three of the commonest arguments against the Qur'an: 1. That the Qur'an is a disjointed narrative which makes no sense. 2. That Muḥammad invented it. 3. That Muḥammad was a poet (and that the Qur'an is his composition). We note here that certain sūrahs contain what one might call characteristic mechanisms; that is, particular chapters use turns of phrase or individual words or constructions in ways which are conspicuous, including to an extent which is noticeable because it is disproportionate. In the present sūrah, such a characteristic mechanism is the use of bal (rendered variously throughout the text, as per the note to 2:88, it is found in this verse as But) since it occurs 12 times — more than in any other sūrah. (For comparison: bal occurs a total of 127 times in the Qur'an, of which seven are in al baqarah — the longest sūrah). We discern a clear argument and progression in the present chapter marked by bal: rejections and refutations advanced by those who mock and reject the Messenger; the establishment of truth; a mocking of the idolaters themselves; and, finally, the wrongdoers' recognition of their heedlessness as they face eternity in Hell: 21:5, 21:5, 21:5, 21:18, 21:24, 21:26, 21:40, 21:42, 21:44, 21:56, 21:63, 21:97. See also notes to 21:2 and 21:17 for comparable mechanisms in this sūrah.
21:5[2] Arabic: bal. See note to 2:88 and note to 21:5.
21:5[3] Arabic: bal. See note to 2:88 and note to 21:5.
21:5[4] Arabic: āya. See Notepad VIII.
21:6[1] Read free of the Traditionalist's pre-existing and supplanting narrative, the Qur'anic text frequently intimates the destruction of the people to whom the Messenger witnessed.

See my work The God Protocol for a detailed analysis of this and related topics.
21:7[1] See note to waḥī and awḥā at 3:44.
21:7[2] Arabic: dẖikr — calling to mind, recalling, reminding; remembrance (of something past); history. The Traditionalist understands this to indicate those who hold to the Bible (i.e. those called Jews and Christians today). While I accept this view to an extent, I lament that its point has been lost, which is that their scriptures contain histories. The expression 'people of the remembrance' occurs at only one other place in the Qur'an (16:43). See note to 21:2.
21:10[1] Arabic: kitāb. See Notepad IX.iii.
21:10[2] Arabic: dẖikr — calling to mind, recalling, reminding; remembrance (of something past); history. The Qur'an contains a history of the community of the Prophet (albeit in thumbnail outline); and this is the point here: this tells your own history. It is clear from the broader narrative that impending destruction loomed large on the horizon, and that the destruction of previous communities was a principal driver informing the mission of the time. When we assemble key features of the history of that mission on the basis of the text, it is clear that the original community to which Muhammad preached was itself annihilated (see my work The God Protocol). Those who today claim stewardship over the history of the period have a narrative, but that narrative does not work outwards from the Qur'an on the basis of its contents; rather, it works inwards to it on the basis of ideological requirements and conclusions taken from elsewhere as part of the larger project of making the Qur'an seem to contain a religion which, in truth, it does not. The mental energy required to ignore the obvious conflicts between that religion's narrative and what is contained in the book it claims as its foundational scripture is the price of membership of the religion, and its dominance over normative mental faculties and standards of investigation regarded as piety by its adherents. Naturally, Muslims have declined intellectually and culturally in consequence. The Qur'an seems to anticipate this result, with the remainder of the verse indicating the solution. See note to 21:2.
21:10[3] Arabic: afalā. See Notepad XIV.

21:11[1] Arabic: ẓālimūn. See note to 2:229.
21:11[2] Arabic: qaṣama — to break, to shatter; to break in pieces, to destroy entirely. This is the only instance from this root in the text.
21:14[1] Arabic: ẓālimūn. See note to 2:229.
21:16[1] Grammar: dual.
21:17[1] Arabic: in kunnā fā'ilīna. The core of this formula (kunnā fā'ilīna) comprises a repeating — and developing — motif within this sūrah (and occurs only within this sūrah). This formula resists translation into English in a manner which is both consistent and natural across each of its three instances (21:17, 21:79, 21:104), as the context is different in each case. The full import of the core of this formula might be allowed a freer rendition into English as: We are ever (or were ever) doers [of what We will]. This is the sense. So what is meant here by developing motif? We mean that while the core of the formula (kunnā fā'ilīna) remains fixed, the word linking it to the main text is different in each case, and this variance effects a development of the motif. So here at 21:17 the joining word is if (Arabic: in); at 21:79 it is and (Arabic: wa); and at 21:104 it is truly or indeed (Arabic: innā). Thus, the motif goes from conveying the conditional (if x be the case), to the enumerative (and x is the case), to the emphatic (truly x is the case). As a result, this motif grows in significance as we progress through the sūrah. To lose this formula in the process of translation is to deprive the reader of the sūrah of its chorus. While I can see no alternative to rendering this phrase in this somewhat wooden manner in order to achieve the consistency in English which is there in the Arabic, the price, it is hoped, is worth it. The remaining two instances reference this note.

21:18[1] Arabic: bal. See note to 2:88 and note to 21:5.

21:18[2] Arabic: bil ḥaqqi. See Notepad XVII (bil ḥaqqi i.).

21:18[3] Arabic: damaghа — to refute, invalidate (a falsehood, an error, a false accusation); to triumph (over falsehood; said of truth). This is the only instance of this root in the text.

21:18[4] Or vanishes away.

21:20[1] See note to s-b-ḥ root at 2:30.

21:21[1] Arabic: am. This is the Arabic equivalent of or and, as in English, introduces the second part of an alternative question (e.g. Would you like tea or coffee?). However, here and in many places across the text, am exists without a contextual setup or corollary (e.g. Or coffee?). Clearly, this does not fully make sense. The translators wriggle and try to explain, but not convincingly. Sometimes by sticking with or — or by replacing or ignoring it — they stumble upon sense because the surrounding text happens to fall kindly for them. But where they are true to their dominant premises they are left often with an awkward non sequitur. My process was this: I identified all cases of am in the text, placing them in one of two categories: those which perform the standard offices of or (e.g. Would you like tea or coffee?), and those which do not, those which have no natural preceding part (e.g. Or coffee?). This latter category I call the 'hanging am'. Upon reviewing all cases of the hanging am it became clear that the fact that am exists also in this second state indicates not a deficiency, but rather the presence of a separate textual entity. The Traditionalist has failed to understand the point and purpose of the hanging am which is why, in part, his translation reads in such a stalling, faltering way where it occurs. Its function, however, is twofold: rhetorical and logistical. It is rhetorical in that it identifies a key claim or scenario prior to answering or clarifying that claim or scenario, operating like a Q&A sheet. Its logistical function consists in the fact that the hanging am operates as a marker, so that all such Q&As may readily be identified and drawn together, thus providing an illuminating study as well as a reference guide for fielding common questions. The entire set of hanging *am*s is found at 2:108, 2:133, 2:140, 2:214, 4:53, 4:54, 6:143, 6:144, 6:144, 9:16, 10:31, 10:38, 11:13, 11:35, 13:16, 13:33, 13:33, 18:9, 21:21, 21:24, 21:43, 23:68, 23:69, 23:70, 23:72, 24:50, 25:44, 27:60, 27:61, 27:62, 27:63, 27:64, 29:4, 30:35, 32:3, 34:8, 35:40, 35:40, 37:150, 37:156, 38:9, 38:10, 38:28, 38:28, 39:9, 39:43, 42:9, 42:21, 42:24, 43:16, 43:21, 43:79, 43:80, 45:21, 46:4, 46:8, 47:24, 47:29, 52:30, 52:32, 52:32, 52:33, 52:35, 52:35, 52:36, 52:37, 52:37, 52:38, 52:39, 52:40, 52:41, 52:42, 52:43, 53:24, 53:36, 54:43, 54:44, 67:20, 67:21, 68:37, 68:39, 68:41, 68:46, 68:47. All instances appear in the notes and reference this verse.

21:21[2] I.e. if this is the claim. The answer follows.

21:22[1] Grammar: dual; i.e. in the heavens and the earth.

21:22[2] Grammar: dual; i.e. in the heavens and the earth.

21:22[3] See note to s-b-ḥ root at 2:30.

21:24[1] Arabic: am. See note to 21:21.

21:24[2] Arabic: min dūni. See note to 2:23.

21:24[3] I.e. if the claim is that such gods exist. The answer follows.

21:24[4] The Traditionalist typically claims This to refer to the Qur'an in toto. This assertion is rejected on a pan-textual basis (see note to 21:3). In any event, the word dhikr causes him problems in the remainder of the verse (see notes below). See also note to 21:2.

21:24[5] Arabic: dhikr — calling to mind, recalling, reminding; remembrance (of something past); history. See notes to 21:2 and 21:10, and to 21:24 below.

21:24[6] I.e. contains the history of the Messenger and those who accompanied him. The Traditionalist tends to be careful to deflect the attention from the obvious import of this line and the one following, since if he allows dhikr its plain value, he places his later 'histories' in opposition with the Qur'an. He can't allow that since he both claims the Qur'an as his foundational scripture and needs the perception that the Qur'an comports with his non-Qur'anic sources. Unless he can appear to sit astride these divergent horses both he and his religion lose all credibility. The Traditionalist translators at Saheeh International, for example, offer here: This [Qur'ān] is the message for those with me and the message of those before me (supported by a note which reads: All previous prophets called for the worship of Allāh alone.) Meanwhile, non-traditionalist A. J. Arberry (who generally takes a literal approach within the bounds of his understanding) renders: This is the Remembrance of him who is with me, and the Remembrance of those before me. Whether what is meant by This in the context — the entire Qur'an or some part thereof — is almost irrelevant to the inescapable conclusion which is that it is the Qur'an which contains said remembrance (and not some other source). But that does not suit the Traditionalist. He both needs the Qur'an to be from God but also to be in some vague way deficient, and therefore in need of both his sources and services. The reader is encouraged to consider all instances of dhikr in the present sūrah (listed at note to 21:2) for a broader appreciation of the word and its function. See also note 21:10 and remaining notes to the present verse.

21:24[7] Arabic: dhikr — calling to mind, recalling, reminding; remembrance (of something past); history. See notes to 21:2 and 21:10.

21:24[8] I.e. contains the histories of those who came before Muḥammad (the Qur'an contains many such histories, and the present sūrah contains references to Mūsā, Hārūn, Ibrāhīm, Lūṭ, Isḥāq, Yaʿqūb, Nūḥ, Dāwūd, Sulaymān, Ayyūb, Ismāʿīl, Idrīs, Dhūl-Kifl, Dhūl-Nūn, Zakariyyā, Yaḥyā, Maryam, ʿĪsā, and elliptically to Dhūl-Qarnayn). For why this plain reading is inconvenient to the Traditionalist, see note to the present verse above. The word remembrance (dhikr) indicates in many cases what we would call today history. We note that the Qur'an both covers what was (at the time of the revelation) current events, as well as what was for the people of that time (and for us today, naturally) history proper. Now, of course, the two are merged for us into one. This is a concept the Traditionalist seems unable to process. The battles, dramas, and religious requirements of those in previous times (including those of the Messenger and those with him) pertained to those people — although with lessons for us. What we need today for the business of knowing God's will and doing it is found within the Qur'an and requires no supplementation. And to proceed on any other basis requires one to be honest and reject the Qur'an's divine authority, since to regard it as deficient is to reject it in toto. See notes to 21:2 and 21:10.

21:24[9] Arabic: bal. See note to 2:88 and note to 21:5.

21:24[10] Arabic: al ḥaqq. See Notepad XVII (al ḥaqq i.).

21:24[11] I.e. from ever knowing it. It is a fact that most people who claim knowledge of the Qur'an choose not to see the Messenger's mission in the context the Qur'an presents: that of warners sent to communities in the past — prior (typically) to destruction — with an implied application in the present. See also my book The God Protocol.

21:25[1] See note to waḥī and awḥā at 3:44.

21:26[2] See note to s-b-ḥ root at 2:30.

21:26[3] Arabic: bal. See note to 2:88 and note to 21:5.

21:26[4] Translators tend to interpolate 'they are' into this phrase with varying degrees of transparency. Muhammad Asad's fully transparent (though expositional) presentation here provides an illustration: Nay, [those whom they regard as God's "offspring"are but His] honoured servants.

21:27[1] I.e. they do not speak presumptuously; they speak only that which God reveals to them.

21:28[1] Lit.: between their hands. I understand this to mean here: what is at their time. See note to 2:66.

21:29[1] Arabic: min dūni. See note to 2:23.

21:29[2] Arabic: ẓālimūn. See note to 2:229.

¶21.3 21:30[1] Arabic: alladhīna kafarū. See note to 2:6 and Notepad II.i.

21:30[2] Arabic: ratq. The verb rataqa means to repair, to patch up, to sew up, with the noun (as here) meaning patching, mending, repair; darn (of a stocking). Lane (p. 1033) includes the sense of to close up in his listing of the verb, which is the unifying concept. This is the only instance of this root in the text. Much has been made of this verse in support of the current dominant cosmogony. An illustrative example of this tendency is provided by Muhammad Asad whose own excursion into "scientific findings" begins with the words: It is, as a rule, futile to make an explanation of the Qur'an dependent on "scientific findings" which may appear true today, but may equally well be disproved tomorrow by new findings[...]. Non-sectarian A. J. Arberry renders here: a mass all sewn up.

21:30[3] Grammar: dual.

21:30[4] Or we unstitched them. Arabic: fataqa — to undo the sewing (of something), to unsew, unstitch, rip, rip open, tear apart, rend, etc. This is the only instance of this root in the text.

21:30[5] Arabic: afalā. See Notepad XIV.

21:32[1] Arabic: āyāt. See Notepad VIII.

21:33[1] Or orbit.

21:33[2] The verb here is in the plural. While finer points of grammar may be argued, it is likely given the context that the form references everything which immediately precedes (night, day, sun, and moon). This is certainly how Saheeh International understands this phrase, since it renders here: all [heavenly bodies] in an orbit are swimming. That much granted, one can point out that while under 'scientific' orthodoxy the moon makes 'a circuit' (although, correctly speaking, never in the same place twice), night and day do not make circuits of any kind (being merely functions of that side of the earth spinning upon its axis which faces the sun); meanwhile, the sun is said to make an orbit only through the Milky Way (of one cycle every 230 million years). However, under the pre-'scientific' model (a flat, immovable earth above which the heavenly bodies progress), night and day also move in 'a circuit' (as the sun makes its daily, localised circuit above the surface of the earth it creates day, while night makes 'a circuit' also at and beyond the extent of the sun's limited reach across the earth's surface).

21:35[1] Arabic: fitnah. See note to 2:102.

21:36[1] Arabic: alladhīna kafarū. See note to 2:6 and Notepad II.i.

21:36[2] Muhammad Asad perceives an ellipsis here: Sc., "and dares to deny their reality although he is a mere mortal like ourselves?"

21:36[3] Arabic: dhikr — calling to mind, recalling, reminding; remembrance (of something past); history; i.e. exclude his great works, limitless bounty, laws, warnings, cataclysmic acts, and Final Judgment from their minds. See notes to 21:2 and 21:10.

21:37[1] I.e. hasty. This includes connotations of: quick to draw conclusions on insufficient evidence; in a rush.

21:37[2] Arabic: āyāt. See Notepad VIII. See 20:56.

21:38[1] Grammar: note the plural here; the believers as a generality are meant to convey the Qur'an's message of warning — a point lost both within the Traditionalist's religion, and within those translations in English which do not emphasise thee and thou throughout where it exists in the Arabic.

21:38[2] See grammar note to 2:91.

¶21.4 21:39[1] Arabic: alladhīna kafarū. See note to 2:6 and Notepad II.i.

21:39[2] Saheeh International perceives ellipsis at this point: "... they would not be asking in disbelief and ridicule to be shown the punishment."

21:40[1] Arabic: bal. See note to 2:88 and note to 21:5.

21:42[1] Arabic: raḥmān. Typically rendered most merciful. See 36:23 and note thereto, note to 1:1, and Notepad I. This is a clear case where the Traditionalist's value for this word does not comport with the context.

21:42[2] Arabic: bal. See note to 2:88 and note to 21:5.

21:42[3] Arabic: dhikr — calling to mind, recalling, reminding; remembrance (of something past); history. See notes to 21:2, 21:10, and 21:36.

21:43[1] Arabic: am. See note to 21:21.

21:43[2] Or from (both Muhammad Asad and Hilali & Khan render thus here). Arabic: min dūni. See note to 2:23.

21:43[3] I.e. if this is the claim. The response follows.

21:44[1] Arabic: bal. See note to 2:88 and note to 21:5.

21:44[3] Or arrive at. Cf. 13:41.

21:44[4] Opinions on this statement (and its corollary at 13:41) differ markedly, and tend to be anchored in the Traditionalist's non-Qur'anic literature. However, the meaning can be derived by reference to key components within the statement. The words earth (arḍ) and to diminish (naqaḍa) are found together outside 21:44 and 13:41 at one other place only: 50:4. There the subject is God's advance knowledge of the decaying process by which the earth will diminish the human body to nothing. If we consider this fact in combination with the statement at 53:32 that we humans were brought forth from the earth (Arabic: min al arḍ), then the allusion at 21:44 is seen to reference the inescapable corruption which awaits our physical body (cf. Dust thou art[...]). Moreover, the broader context here supports this interpretation (21:34-35 treat of mortality; 21:37 treats of man's creation; 21:39-40 treat of bodies in eternity; 21:44 opens by citing historical cases of mortality). Finally, the context (13:37-43) surrounding the only other instance of this formula at 13:41 has similar emphasis on mortality within the immovable fact of God's judgment.

21:45[1] See note to waḥī and awḥā at 3:44.
21:46[1] Lit.: a breeze, a gust.
21:46[2] Arabic: ẓālimūn. See note to 2:229.
21:47[1] See note to 3:18.
21:47[2] Lit.: if.
21:47[3] Cf. 31:16.
21:48[1] Arabic: furqān. In the Qur'an, furqān has the connotation of division between the people of God and the world at large; those who believe and those who reject. See note to 2:53.
21:48[2] Arabic: dhikr — calling to mind, recalling, reminding; remembrance (of something past); history. The Traditionalist translators at Saheeh International have a note here: These are three qualities of the Torah. While this assertion is plucked from the ether, its motivation is not: the Traditionalist is committed to keeping the reader as distant as possible from understanding dhikr as history or recalling (e.g. someone's deeds or characteristics), because of his underlying requirements (see notes to 21:2, 21:10, and 21:36.) In this context, dhikr surely refers to the mission of Mūsā and Hārūn to Fir'awn (cf. 20:14, 20:42).
21:48[3] See note to al muttaqūn at 2:2.
21:50[1] I.e. the Qur'an. For why we know the Qur'an to be the reference see note to 6:92. See note to 21:3.
21:50[2] Arabic: dhikr — calling to mind, recalling, reminding; remembrance (of something past); history. See notes to 21:2, 21:10, and 21:36.
21:50[3] Translations typically emphasise values of rejecting or denying here. However, a substantially comparable statement is found at 12:58 which is rendered there by some translators as I have here also (at 12:58, the Traditionalists Hilali & Khan, for example, have: but they recognized him not while here at 21:50 they have: will you then (dare to) deny it?). The plain fact is that those who read the Qur'an invariably fail to recognise the import of the history it contains, transposing upon its contents later hearsay instead. See notes to 21:2, 21:10, and 21:36.

¶21.5 21:52[1] Arabic: tamāthīl — statues, images. This word occurs only twice: here and at 34:13. At 34:13 the context is Sulaymān's construction project. Thus, the more extreme medieval iconoclasts among those who wave the banner of what they call Islam should consider that Sulaymān — a prophet of God — had built for himself things which he (the bearded self-appointed eraser of high culture) takes upon himself to destroy. The actual point, were the latter to consider the Qur'anic usage, is the devotion to the thing, not the thing itself (Sulaymān, for his part, is found in the Qur'an ever-grateful to God for his material blessings).
21:52[2] Arabic: 'akafa — to be devoted (to), to remain (in or at).
21:55[1] Arabic: bil ḥaqqi. See Notepad XVII (bil ḥaqqi i.).
21:55[2] They are questioning whether Ibrāhīm is acting in seriousness or merely joking.
21:56[1] Arabic: bal. See note to 2:88 and note to 21:5.
21:57[1] Arabic: (sg.) ṣanam, (pl.) aṣnām. See note to 14:35.
21:57[2] Lit.: turned away turning backs. Found at 21:57, 27:80, 30:52, 37:90, 40:33.
21:58[1] Or a big (or biggest) one among them. Translators vary in their approach to the construction (which ends in Arabic in lahum), with some rendering values which suggest among them. I agree that this is the import, but have opted to translate here as have N. J. Dawood and A. J. Arberry, in accordance with the plainest reading.
21:59[1] Arabic: ẓālimūn. See note to 2:229.
21:60[1] Lit.: remember.
21:61[1] To the process of investigation, to Ibrāhīm's punishment, or to both.
21:63[1] Arabic: bal. See note to 2:88 and note to 21:5.
21:63[2] I.e. the biggest of them.
21:64[1] Arabic: ẓālimūn. See note to 2:229.
21:65[1] Lit.: were turned around on their heads. This is an idiom meaning to return to a former state, to revert to a former position. Muhammad Asad notes here: Lit., "they were turned upside down upon their heads": an idiomatic phrase denoting a "mental somersault" - in this case, a sudden reversal of their readiness to exonerate Abraham and a return to their former suspicion.
21:66[1] Arabic: min dūni. See note to 2:23.
21:67[1] Arabic: min dūni. See note to 2:23.
21:67[2] Arabic: afalā. See Notepad XIV.
21:68[1] Lit.: help.
21:68[2] I.e. if you are to act! Those with access to the Arabic will appreciate that this construction provides counterpoint to what is discussed in the note to in kunnā fā'ilīna at 21:17.
21:69[1] Or peace.
21:71[1] Claimed by the dominant Egypt-Palestine thesis as Palestine; the Arabia Felix and ʿAsīr-Ḥejāz theses field alternative locations. See Notepad XVI.
21:72[1] And — perhaps, especially in the case of Yaʿqūb — one is left to assume, substantially different in character to how he is presented in Genesis in the form we have it today. The restoration of the reputations of prophets of old is a project intrinsic to the Qur'an.
21:73[1] See note to waḥī and awḥā at 3:44.
21:73[2] Arabic: al ṣalāt; i.e. such duty as is incumbent. See note to 2:3 and Article SZC. Before discussing the nature of this instance of al ṣalāt in the text, we will consider the dynamics of the verse overall. If we take the Traditionalist's own values as binding, the verse can only be tautologous. And, conversely, for the sense not be tautologous, the Traditionalist's values must be incorrect. To explain: the Traditionalist has it that al ṣalāt is 'worship' (albeit worship of a very specific nature the details of which he derives from later hearsay ascribed to Muḥammad, and insists upon as the Qur'anic value); he also has it that 'ibāda (here in a verbal form: 'they served us') is 'worship'. And by 'worship' he means the same thing (at least to a large extent) as he means by al ṣalāt. Therein lies a tautology. And even if we stretch the meaning of 'ibāda to embrace the meaning given to it by later jurists (i.e. performance of the five pillars of a religion called Islam) and allow the last line to summarise what precedes, the Traditionalist is still in a bind because only two of his 'pillars' are present (and he can point nowhere in the Qur'an at 'al khayrāt' — good deeds — having a value equal to the missing three). Finally, if the Traditionalist attempts to wriggle out by citing a context that treats of pre-Islamic peoples, that move necessarily locks him out of his own claim (rejected vigorously by those who follow the Torah) that the 'pillars' of the Traditionalist's religion are materially the same thing as what was practised by the Hebrew followers of Mūsā's Torah. We can summarise the narrative which precedes the point at which 'leaders' is mentioned in 21:73 as follows: 21:1-5 (impending destruction; heedlessness of men); 21:6-15 (former messengers; previous cases of destruction); 21:16-29 (absolute monotheism is reality); 21:30-33 (appeals to Creation); 21:34-40 (mortality of messenger; haste of man; reality of Hell); 21:41-47 (appeals to past, to death, and to Judgment). At this juncture mention of former believing notables begins: 21:48-50 (Mūsā and Hārūn: the Division; fear of the Hour); 21:51-70 (Ibrāhīm's witness to God alone against his people); 21:71 (Lūṭ, Ibrāhīm's nephew); 21:72 (Isḥāq, Ibrāhīm's son, and Yaʿqūb, Ibrāhīm's grandson). The 'them' of 21:73 can only logically refer to these men — or to those which follow (see note to 21:24 for a full list). Yet nowhere in what precedes or follows this point in the present sūrah do we find support for the Traditionalist's values for al ṣalāt (namely, performance of a five-time daily ritual) or for al zakāt (payment of 2.5% yearly tax on one's substance). Rather, the emphasis in the sequence is on belief in God alone and the Last Day, and actions based thereupon (which is the core of our value for al ṣalāt). Additionally, a central plank of the value we assert in this work for al zakāt is the observance of legal sexual intercourse (purity) and we can point to the following in support of that value: Lūṭ's mission was characterised by calling men away from sinful sexual behaviour (21:74-75); Nūḥ (mentioned at 21:76) was victim of gross sexual misconduct, not the perpetrator of it (11:45-46); Dāwūd fell sexually (according to the Hebrew scriptures; a point contested but unconvincingly so by the Traditionalist), mentioned here at 21:78 (which points to 38:17-26), but was chastened and improved as a result (Sulaymān himself was the legitimate fruit of his father's initially illegitimate union with his mother). We can point also to the sexual and general fidelity of Ibrāhīm (though sorely tested while awaiting offspring); likewise to that of Isḥāq (whose wife Rebecca did not conceive until later in life). Finally, we can point to Maryam whose defining characteristic in the Qur'an is chastity (i.e. of eschewing immoral sexual activities — see 21:91 and note thereto). Thus, while one can argue on the basis of scripture that God instructed those listed in this sūrah in the upholding of duty (i.e. to cleave to and bear witness to God alone), and in the maintenance of (sexual) purity, it is simply not possible to assert that they kept the Traditionalist's prayer regimen or paid the tax he claims is obligatory. The Traditionalist's claims create dissonance and tautology, do not comport with what we find in the local context, find no support in the rest of the Qur'an, and require the Traditionalist to accuse adherents of the Torah of possessing his values for al ṣalāt and al zakāt but hiding them. The underlying cause of all of this is the Traditionalist's duplication of the very sin he (rightly) criticises the Rabbinic Jews of: writing with his own hand stories he ascribes to a prophet of God. If we look to the Qur'an rather than to the Traditionalist's 'Mishnah' for answers, this conflict evaporates.

21:78[3] Arabic: nafasha. This is the only instance of this verb. There is a single instance of the related passive participle at 101:5 where the context is of wool fluffed up. At 21:78, according to Lane (p. 2891) the association is of straying sheep or goats, dispersed and without the knowledge of their overseer.
21:78[4] Grammar: masculine plural.
21:79[1] Muhammad Asad notes here: A reference to the Psalms of David, which call upon all nature to extol the glory of God - similar to the Qur'anic verses, "The seven heavens extol His limitless glory, and the earth, and all that they contain" (17:44), or "All that is in the heavens and on earth extols God's limitless glory" (57:1). See notes to 2:30 and 3:184.

21:80[1] Some translators claim this to be chain mail on the basis of non-Qur'anic sources, and then adapt their translations to fit that requirement. But that is not what the text says. The word here is labūs (garments, clothes), precisely as rendered. The non-sectarian A. J. Arberry renders literally also garments. See 34:11 and note thereto.

21:85[1] Arabic: dhūl kifl. There are two general views on the meaning of dhūl kifl each of which is presented below. Muhammad Asad's comment on this point follows with some light editing: Lit., "and him of the pledge". The expression dhu 'l-kifl is derived from the verb kafala and especially the form takaffala - which signifies "he became responsible [for something or someone]" or "pledged himself [to do something]". Although the classical commentators consider dhu 'l-kifl to be the epithet or the proper name of a particular prophet - whom they variously, more or less at random, identify with Elijah or Joshua or Zachariah or Ezekiel - I fail to see any reason whatever for such attempts at "identification"[...]. I am, therefore, of the opinion that we have here (as in the identical expression in 38:48) a generic term applying to every one of the prophets, inasmuch as each of them pledged himself unreservedly to God and accepted the responsibility for delivering His message to man. Abdullah Yusuf Ali takes the other (and more popular view), and I include his comment here for the sake of completion: Dhu al Kifl would literally mean "possessor of, or giving, a double requital or portion"; or else, "one who used a cloak of double thickness," that being one of the meanings of Kifl. The Commentators differ in opinion as to who is meant, why the title is applied to him, and the point of his being grouped with Ismā'īl and Idris for constancy and patience. I think the best suggestion is that afforded by Karsten Niebuhr in his Reisebeschreibung nach Arabien, Copenhagen, 1778, 2:264-266, as quoted in the Encyclopaedia of Islam under "Dhu al Kifl". He visited Meshed 'Ah in Iraq, and also the little town called Kefil, midway between Najaf and Hillah (Babylon). Kefil, he says, is the Arabic form of Ezekiel. The shrine of Ezekiel was there, and the Jews came to it on a pilgrimage. If we accept "Dhu al Kifl" to be not an epithet, but an Arabicised form of "Ezekiel", it fits the context. Ezekiel was a prophet in Israel who was carried away to Babylon by Nebuchadnezzar after his second attack on Jerusalem (about B.C. 599). His Book is included in the English Bible (Old Testament). He was chained and bound, and put into prison, and for a time he was dumb, (Ezekiel, 3:25-26). He bore it all with patience and constancy, and continued to reprove boldly the evils in Israel. In a burning passage he denounces false leaders in words which are eternally true: "Woe be to the shepherds of Israel that do feed themselves! Should not the shepherds feed the flocks? Ye eat the fat, and ye clothe you with the wool, you kill them that are fed: but ye feed not the flock. The diseased have ye not strengthened, neither have ye healed that which was sick, neither have ye bound up that which was broken . . .", etc. (Ezekiel, 34:2-4). Dhu al Kifl is again mentioned in 38:48 along with Ismā'īl and Elisha.

21:85[2] Arabic: al ṣābirūn. See note to 2:155.

21:87[2] Or the man of the fish. Abdullah Yusuf Ali's comment here follows with light editing: Dhu al Nun, "the man of the Fish or the Whale", is the title of Jonah (Yunus), because he was swallowed by a large Fish or Whale. He was the prophet raised to warn the Assyrian capital Nineveh[...] His story is told in 37:139-149. When his first warning was unheeded by the people, he denounced God's wrath on them. But they repented and God forgave them for the time being. Jonah, meanwhile, departed in wrath, discouraged at the apparent failure of his mission. He should have remained in the most discouraging circumstances, and relied on the power of God; for God had power both over Nineveh and over the Messenger He had sent to Nineveh. He went away to the sea and took a ship, but apparently the sailors threw him out as a man of bad omen in a storm. He was swallowed by a big Fish (or Whale), but in the depth of the darkness, he cried to God and confessed his weakness. The "darkness" may be interpreted both physically and spiritually; physically, as the darkness of the night and the storm and the Fish's body; spiritually as the darkness in his soul, his extreme distress in the situation which he had brought on himself. God Most Gracious forgave him. He was cast out ashore; he was given the shelter of a plant in his state of physical and mental lassitude. He was refreshed and strengthened, and the work of his mission prospered. Thus he overcame all his disappointment by repentance and Faith, and God accepted him.

21:89[2] I.e. without issue.

21:89[3] Muhammad Asad renders this line: Thou wilt remain when all else has ceased to be. While this sort of creative flourish is beyond the remit of this work, I agree that it imparts the underlying sense.

21:90[1] Typically identified with John of the Christian Bible, but see note to 3:39. See Notepad XV.

21:90[2] Grammar: masculine plural.

21:90[3] Arabic: khāṣhi'ūn. See 2:45.

21:91[1] An epithet for Maryam, mother of 'Īsā. Arabic: farj (sg.), furūj (pl.). Lit.: openings, gaps, apertures; vulvas. More generally it means chastity or modesty.

21:91[2] Traditionalist translators are prone to insert mention of Jibrīl into the text here, on the basis, I assume, of their non-Qur'anic literature. The text on the page reads as non-sectarian A. J. Arberry, for example, renders: so We breathed into her of Our spirit. Muhammad Asad has an excellent note here: This allegorical expression, used here with reference to Mary's conception of Jesus, has been widely - and erroneously - interpreted as relating specifically to his birth. As a matter of fact, the Qur'an uses the same expression in three other places with reference to the creation of man in general - namely in 15:29 and 38:72, "when I have formed him... and breathed into him of My spirit"; and in 32:9, "and thereupon He forms [lit., "formed"] him fully and breathes lit., "breathed"] into him of His spirit". In particular, the passage of which the last-quoted phrase is a part (i.e., 32:7-9) makes it abundantly and explicitly clear that God "breathes of His spirit" into every human being. Commenting on the verse under consideration, Zamakhshari states that "the breathing of the spirit [of God] into a body signifies the endowing it with life": an explanation with which Razi concurs. As for the description of Mary as allati ahsanat farjaha; idiomatically denoting "one who guarded her chastity" (lit., "her private parts"), it is to be borne in mind that the term ihsan - lit., "[one's] being fortified [against any danger or evil]" - has the tropical meaning of "abstinence from what is unlawful or reprehensible" (Taj al-'Arus), and especially from illicit sexual intercourse, and is applied to a man as well as a woman: thus, for instance, the terms muhsan and muhsanah are used elsewhere in the Qur'an to describe, respectively, a man or a woman who is "fortified [by marriage] against unchastity". Hence, the expression allati ahsanat farjaha, occurring in the above verse as well as in 66:12 with reference to Mary, is but meant to stress her outstanding chastity and complete abstinence, in thought as well as in deed, from anything unlawful or morally reprehensible: in other words, a rejection of the calumny (referred to in 4:156 and obliquely alluded to in 19:27-28) that the birth of Jesus was the result of an "illicit union".

21:91[3] Arabic: āya. See Notepad VIII.

21:92[1] I.e. that to which the prophets and righteous men and women listed in this sūrah (see note to 21:24) belong. Arabic: ummah. The Traditionalist has latterly invested ummah with an emotional payload not found in the text, and tries to connect his religion with that of the people mentioned here. The fact is that any correspondence is either vestigial or coincidental, since he presses the book which chronicles that community (the Qur'an) into the service of an entirely different set of writings. The Traditionalist translators Hilali & Khan have here: This, your Ummah [Sharia or religion (Islamic Monotheism)] is one religion, while the Traditionalist Saheeh International has: your religion, is one religion. But this is not honest dealing with the reader. For comparison, the non-sectarian N. J. Dawood translates: Your community is but one community. Meanwhile, non-sectarian A. J. Arberry has: Surely this community of yours is one community. The claim of the sectarian to represent the faith of all prophets can be sustained only by the type of deceit we have just seen. The sectarian has a religion or — more correctly — some religions. One can accept or reject one ore more of those religions. Insofar as any one of those religions bears correspondence with the Qur'anic principles, it reflects that of previous men and women of God. To claim that the people listed in this sūrah followed a religion which bore a one-to-one relationship with any of those the Muslim world (based on non-Qur'anic authorities) calls Islām, is misdirection — a case of bait-and-switch — and a lie which methodical study of the Qur'an itself abundantly exposes.

21:92[2] Cf. 23:52.

21:93[1] Muhammad Asad renders this phrase in a way far freer than my remit allows (But men have torn their unity wide asunder), and supplies the following note: This is the meaning of the idiomatic phrase, taqatta'u amrahum baynahum. As Zamakhshari points out, the sudden turn of the discourse from the second person plural to the third person is indicative of God's severe disapproval - His "turning away", as it were, from those who are or were guilty of breaking the believers' unity.

¶21.7 21:94[1] Arabic: (al) mu'min. See note to 8:2.

21:94[2] Also rendered of it.

21:95[1] The Traditionalist has lost entirely the central place of warning to the Qur'an; that the Messenger was warning a people, and following in the footsteps of men who had likewise warned their respective communities prior (usually) to the destruction of the latter in an act of God. This is the model. The sense that I take from 21:95 is that any city which has been destroyed will not again be inhabited (cf. 11:100). This topic is included in my work The God Protocol.

21:96[1] Arabic: ḥattā idhā. See note to 3:152.

21:96[2] Cf. 18:94.

21:96[3] This is commonly incorrectly understood by the Traditionalist as an event required to allow — and itself presaging — the end of the world, whereas it is simply a euphemism for the end of the world itself (cf. 18:94-99 and notes thereto).

21:96[4] Arabic: ḥadab — elevation of the ground. This root occurs only here in the text. (Dhūl-Qarnayn sealed Ya'jūj and Ma'jūj into the side of a mountain: see 18:94-99 and notes thereto).

21:96[5] Sc. then has the promise of my Lord come to pass (the allusion here is clearly to 18:98 as mention of 'the true promise' in next clause confirms). Arabic: nasala. This verb means to pluck out; to ravel out, unravel, to untwist, fray; to moult; to fall out (of hair, feathers, etc.). Claims are made here for values such as descend, but such seem to be motivated by interpretative rather than etymological considerations (such a value is simply impossible at the verb's only other instance at 36:51).

21:97[1] See 21:2 and 54:1 and notes thereto for more on this verb (Arabic: iqtaraba) and its import.

21:97[2] Arabic: al ḥaqq. See Notepad XVII (al ḥaqq i.).

21:97[3] The methodology here makes use of the fact that the Qur'an frequently references itself, with such references operating as signposts to related sections. The verse above at 21:96 clearly references 18:98 (see note to 21:96), and mention here of the 'true promise' confirms that reference. The theme of promise (indicating the Day of Judgment and what is to follow) is a frequent motif in the sūrah. For more complete data on the usage of promise in the Qur'an see note to 17:108.

21:97[4] Arabic: allaḏhīna kafarū. See note to 2:6 and Notepad II.i.

21:97[5] Cf. 14:42.

21:97[6] Arabic: bal. See note to 2:88 and note to 21:5.

21:97[7] Arabic: ẓālimūn. See note to 2:229.

21:98[1] Arabic: min dūni. See note to 2:23.

21:98[2] Arabic: ḥaṣab. This noun occurs only once. The related active participle is found at 17:68, 29:40, 54:34, 67:17 and signifies a storm of stones. Wehr (p. 211) gives the definition of ḥaṣab as: road metal, crushed rock, ballast. On a pan-textual basis and that of related statements I would incline to a value here which emphasises stones (cf. 2:24 'Whose fuel is men and stones'). However, one finds values of firewood and fuel with Lane (p. 584) originating in various dialects, where the association is of things thrown (as stones are thrown) into a fire, and since there is not enough data to form a convincing view in any other direction, I render according to this definition.

21:98[3] Arabic: warada. The verb here has in addition to the sense of arriving the connotation of drawing water. This nuance defies elegant and succinct translation into English. However, the point is worth relating, since without it we miss entirely the contrast here between water on arrival and arrival in the fire of Gehenna.

21:99[1] I.e. those falsehoods men serve.

21:100[1] I.e. of fire (Lane, p. 1242). Cf. 11:106, 25:12.

21:100[2] I.e. anything but the roaring of the Fire.

21:102[1] Arabic: ḥasīs — faint noise; soft sound of voices, whispering.

21:102[2] Grammar: I take the feminine object pronoun here to agree with an implied value of fire (Arabic: nār).

21:104[1] Arabic: kutub. See Notepad IX.ii.

21:104[2] Lit. upon.

21:104[3] See note to in kunnā fā'ilīna at 21:17.

21:105[1] Or writings. Arabic: zabūr. For the generic meaning of this word see note to 3:184. However, on the basis of 21:105, I agree that zabūr indicates psalms in the sense of written songs. This word occurs at 4:163, 17:55 and 21:105. Muhammad Asad notes here: Zabar (lit., "scripture" or "book") is a generic term denoting any "book of wisdom": hence, any and all of the divine scriptures revealed by God to the prophets [Tabari]. What follows in the text is a direct quote from Psalms 37. It occurs at Psalms 37:29, but comparable verses are found at Psalms 37:9, 37:11, 37:22. On a related point, I have wondered why, given that Psalms 37 is quoted in the Qur'an, the Traditionalist is so little interested in its contents. I believe I have the answer: it is because its contents are inconvenient to his broader project. Consider that Psalms 37:11 reads: וענוים יירשו־ארץ והתענגו על־רב שלום: (But the meek shall inherit the earth; and shall delight themselves in the abundance of peace), while Psalms 37:37 reads: שמר־תם וראה ישר כי־אחרית לאיש שלום (Mark the perfect man, and behold the upright: for the end of that man is peace.) The word in both verses rendered peace (Hebrew: shalowm) is based on the same root from which muslim and islām are formed in the Arabic of the Qur'an. And while Psalms 37 lacks any support for the Traditionalist's religion, it is rich in the very themes which we identify in this work as central to the Qur'anic narrative.

21:105[2] Arabic: dhikr — calling to mind, recalling, reminding; remembrance (of something past); history. This is claimed by the Traditionalist to refer to the Torah as a whole. There is no pan-textual support for this claim in the Qur'an (see 21:48 and note thereto). Later expansions on the meaning of dhikr as part of cultural development notwithstanding (from bead-counting meditations to claimed titles for entire books), the Qur'an's own use of the term is more localised, tending to indicate histories, either collective or individual, or the remembrance (the deeds, power, or promises) of God. My opinion is that the present context requires us to look to Psalms 37. There we find prior to Psalms 37:9 — i.e. prior to the first instance of the four comparable statements referred to in the Qur'an at the present verse (see note to 21:105 above) — a condense remembrance of God (see Psalms 37:1-9). See also notes to 21:2, 21:10, and 21:36.

21:106[1] I.e. Qur'an. Traditionalist asserts that 'this' signifies the entire Qur'an on the basis of his ideological requirements (see notes to 21:3, 21:24 and 21:50). We agree with him that at 21:106 it does indicate the Qur'an; unlike him we can prove it on a textual basis (see note to 22:78).

21:106[2] Arabic: 'ābidīn. The Traditionalist rather needs this to indicate people who perform the rituals he calls 'ibāda. Sectarians Hilali & Khan, for example, would have the reader accept here: Verily, in this (the Quran) there is a plain Message for people who worship Allah (i.e. the true, real believers of Islamic Monotheism who act practically on the Quran and the Sunnah legal ways of the Prophet SAW). Meanwhile, the non-sectarian A. J. Arberry is both concise and honest: Surely in this is a Message delivered unto a people who serve. The word rendered here (those) who serve (Arabic: ʿābidīn) is found in the context of believers twice more in this sūrah (21:73, 21:84), and in neither can it be bent into the shape Hilali & Khan require of it here.

21:108[1] See note to waḥī and awḥā at 3:44.

21:108[2] See note to muslim at 2:128.

21:109[1] I.e. warned you equally. Muhammad Asad adds: [...] comprises in this context two distinct concepts: that of fairness as regards the clarity and unambiguity of the above announcement, as well as of equality, implying that it is being made to all human beings alike[...]. The thesis in the present work is that sūrahs 50-114 comprise the substance for a series of night vigils to which all were invited. See Appendix XXIV.

21:111[1] Arabic: fitnah. See note to 2:102.

21:112[1] See 21:4 and note thereto.

21:112[2] Arabic: bil ḥaqqi. See Notepad XVII (bil ḥaqqi ii.).

21:112[4] This verse identifies right policy when warning a civilisation of the judgments of God: we should ask God for his righteous judgment, and take God as our defence. The final words of the present sūrah echo those of Yaʿqūb at 12:18 at the point at which his sons — having placed Yūsuf in a well — lie to him about Yūsuf's death. This fact suggests to me that the intended inference of the final word (Arabic: waṣafa) implies lies. Consideration of all instances of the verb (6:100, 12:18, 12:77, 16:62, 16:116, 21:18, 21:22, 21:112, 23:91, 23:96, 37:159, 37:180, 43:82) and the single instance of the noun (6:139) in context serves to confirm this.

22

22:0[2] The twenty-second chapter of the Qur'an is by convention called al ḥajj or The Pilgrimage.

22:1[1] See note to al muttaqūn at 2:2.

22:2[1] I.e. experience immediate miscarriage.

22:3[1] A dominant theme in this chapter is introduced here: those who argue without knowledge. It finds correspondence in this chapter's characteristic mechanism: the elliptical resolution found at 22:67-70 of dẖālika (that) (22:30, 22:32, 22:60). See note to 22:30.

22:3[2] Or adversary (against the command of God). See Article SJC.

22:5[1] Arabic: min ʿalaq — from (a thing) clinging. The noun ʿalaqa is directly related to the verb ʿaliqa — to hang, be suspended, to dangle; to stick, cling, cleave, adhere. The noun's meanings include leech and blood clot, but the final and underlying sense is that of something clinging or cleaving. Translations which elide this fact or emphasise blood here omit the key to understanding this word. This noun occurs at 22:5, 23:14, 23:14, 40:67, 75:38, 96:2.

22:5[2] Arabic: muḍġha — a small chunk of meat; something chewed; morsel; embryo.

22:5[3] Arabic: bayyana. See note to 2:69.

22:5[4] I.e. in death.

22:5[5] Arabic: hāmida — calm, quiet, still, extinct; lifeless; rigid, stiff (of a corpse) (Wehr, p. 1212); of land: where there is no herbage, or sterile (Lane, p. 2961). This is the only instance of this root in the text.

22:5[6] Arabic: min kulli. See note to 2:164.

22:6[1] Arabic: dẖālika bianna. There is considerable additional analysis in the present edition of this work of the *dẖālika*s at 22:30, 22:32, and 22:60 (see note to 22:30). The additional analysis there necessitated further analysis of all *dẖālika*s in the present sūrah on a pan-textual basis. That revealed a minor tension between dẖālika bianna and both my previous translation of because and that found among other translators — typically: that is because. (I am aware, naturally, that Classical lexicons support the typical translation of that is because, or even of that is due to the fact that; what interests me is the formula's function on a Qur'anic pan-textual basis.) The minor tension I mention arises since that is because should provide a link of plain causation between a preceding statement and what follows, yet that expectation is imperfectly met in some cases (consider as examples 2:176, 8:53, 9:6, 9:120, 22:6, 22:61, 22:62, 31:30, 47:3). I am not saying the standard value for dẖālika bianna statements is wildly off; I am saying it is somewhat off and missing a minor component. Further, a number of dẖālika bianna statements are followed by anna statements (i.e. statements which beat the same drum as the preceding dẖālika bianna statement). This is the case here at 22:6. By using that is because the only way to retain the beat of subsequent anna statements is to repeat because (which is inelegant), or to ignore them altogether. The translation by Saheeh International of 22:6-7 illustrates a deeper problem: That is because Allāh is the Truth and because He gives life to the dead and because He is over all things competent / And [that they may know] that the Hour is coming — no doubt about it — and that Allāh will resurrect those in the graves. (Note: lower-case instances of that outside of parenthesis in the quoted verses correspond with the final two anna statements.) The problem is that the text runs off the rails of the initial trajectory set up by the opening That is because. But 22:6-7 is a single argument comprising five points, four of which relate to the opening dẖālika bianna by means of anna statements. And 22:5 itself is a detailed and compelling argument. But 22:6 does not follow 22:5 in the frictionless way a that is because statement in English implies. For 22:6 to follow seamlessly from 22:5, dẖālika bianna must do more than provide a link to what precedes and establish causation (both of which duties are provided by that is because), it must also supply an exposition of what precedes. Without the quality of exposition, the elements of linkage and causation fall flat rather than resound. Here, for example, the narrative function of 22:6 must be to build upon the list of statements which comprise 22:5, but the tones dẖālika bianna needs to sound are rendered mute by the pedestrian that is because value. What is supposed to be a logical progression becomes two statements stapled together with that is because. Again, I am not saying the that is because value is entirely wrong. I am saying it is missing something; like listening to a passage of music on the bass and mid-range channels only, with the treble channel zeroed out. To illustrate by means of a simple case: He plants flowers. / That is because flowers are beautiful. The two statements are linked, and causation is established between them. However, there is no sense in which there is an exposition or development of the first statement by that which follows, no call to broader consideration of the primary statement in the light of the secondary statement (which I assert as the missing 'range'). But we can retain all functions (linking, causation, and exposition) by means of: He plants flowers / For it is that flowers are beautiful! Here the because component is implicit to the structure; the two statement are clearly linked; and the second part is an exposition and development of the first. Moreover, any further points — that is anna statements — are easily added by means of and that[...]! It may be felt that the difference between that is because and for it is that is minimal; and I would agree. Yet there is a shift in nuance, one which preserves a register which is lost under the typical construction. We note that dẖālika bianna occurs in sūrah 47 more times than in any other (a total of five), and that it occurs in close succession on two occasions (at 22:61 and 22:62, and at 59:13 and 59:14). Notepad XIV contains references for all dẖālika bianna statements in the text, consideration of which is instructive. See also notes to 22:10 and 22:30. All instances reference this verse.

22:8[1] Arabic: kitāb. See Notepad IX.iii.

22:9[1] Or Bending the neck. The noun ʿitf (a side of the body) here is the only occurrence of the word's root in the text, and the collocation found here is said to have a number of meanings. We have nothing to cross-reference with, and are entirely dependent upon the lexicons which so often are themselves a function of non-Qur'anic influences or later cultural developments. All we can do here is state the options and choose what seems best. Lane (p. 2132) lists this collocation as meaning: twisting or bending the neck, or magnifying himself, or behaving proudly, and turning away.

22:9[2] Consideration of the three instances where this collocation occurs might suggest 'To be led away' as the reading here. At least, the fact that there is no direct object and the context itself suggest that possibility to me. Found also at 31:6 and 39:8. Both instances appear in the notes and reference this verse. Cf. 8:47 and note thereto treating of ṣadda + ʿan.

22:10[1] Arabic: dẖālika bimā. There is considerable additional analysis in the present edition of this work of the *dẖālika*s at 22:30, 22:32, and 22:60 (see note to 22:30). The additional analysis there necessitated further analysis of all *dẖālika*s in the present sūrah on a pan-textual basis. That both confirmed dẖālika bimā in its typical definition as a close relative of dẖālika bianna, and showed it to require the same treatment (see note to 22:6). The signature dẖālika bimā occurs at six places in the text, all of which treat of two scenarios only: [...]opposed and exceeded all bounds (2:61, 3:112, 5:78) and [...]hands sent ahead (3:182, 8:51, 22:10). All instances reference this verse. See Notepad XIV. See also notes to 22:6 and 22:30.

22:10[2] See note to 2:207.

¶22.2 22:11[1] Arabic: fitnah. See note to 2:102.

22:11[2] Lit.: he turns away on his face; i.e. he turns about completely. Arabic: wajh — face, countenance, personality, true self.

22:11[3] Arabic: dẖālika huwa. The role of the elliptical *dẖālika*s (22:30, 22:32, 22:60) is discussed in detail in the note to 22:30. The present note treats of the pan-textual significance of dẖālika huwa. This formula occurs 13 times in the text (9:72, 9:111, 10:64, 14:18, 22:11, 22:12, 35:32, 39:15, 40:9, 42:22, 44:57, 45:30, 57:12). The two instances found closest together are in the present sūrah (22:11 and 22:12) and draw thereby, I feel, the attention. To be clear: I understand the grammatical function of this construction; I am interested here in its function as a marker across the text. The present sūrah and sūrah 9 each contain two instances of dẖālika huwa. In sūrah 22 both instances are 'negative' whereas in sūrah 9 both are 'positive' (see list of statement categories below). In every case, this formula treats of the ultimate condition of man (either loss and error, or achievement and favour), and together this set of verses (and immediate surrounding contexts) presents a synthesis of what one might call the bottom line: in what success does and does not consist. The motifs fall into the following statement categories: the tremendous achievement (9:72, 9:111, 10:64, 40:9, 44:57, 57:12); the extreme error (14:18, 22:12); the clear loss (22:11, 39:15); the great favour (35:32, 42:22); the clear achievement (45:30). All instances reference this verse.

22:12[1] Arabic: min dūni. See note to 2:23.

22:12[2] Muhammad Asad comments here: By failing to commit himself unreservedly to the faith which he professes, man is often inclined to attribute to all manner of extraneous forces, be they real or imaginary, a decisive "influence" on his own destiny, and thus invests them, as it were, with divine qualities.

22:12[3] Arabic: dẖālika huwa. See note to 22:11.

22:12[4] I.e. the furthest one can go astray.

22:13[1] Arabic: ʿashīr — companion, fellow, associate, friend, comrade. This is the only instance of this word in the text. It indicates someone to whom one is close (cf. ʿishra — (intimate) association, intimacy, companionship, relations (social) intercourse, company; community of husband and wife.)

22:14[1] Arabic: alladẖīna āmanū. See note to 2:257 and Notepad II.iv.

22:15[1] The Traditionalist tends to interpolate the assertion that the masculine object pronoun here indicates the Messenger (alone). This is not my understanding, nor do I think the broader context bears such a rigid reading. A more textually-based view is that it refers to anyone whom God guides (cf. 22:16, 22:24) — and that would include the archetypal man who is the subject of the verse as a whole.

22:15[2] I.e. a path. Arabic: sabab — way, means, rope. The word sabab is found in the story of Dhūl-Qarnayn (18:83-99) where he followed 'a means' — that is: choose a path — rendered there 'went his way'. On the basis of the analysis there, I render as I do here. Some translators choose to interpret samā' (sky) as roof, and see an attempt at suicide by hanging; others, the imperative to stretch up a rope into the sky. Neither has merit in my view. The emphasis, surely, is that even conquering the vault of heaven by means of a physical construction makes no difference to the fundamental truths of creation, life, and death, or to God's supremacy and power over all things.

22:15[3] Arabic: qaṭaʿa. This verb has several meanings which — as many translators indicate — include to cut, sever. However, it also means traverse, cross, ford, and in the context I incline towards this sense.

22:15[4] I.e. enrages those lost in denial of God. Translators include an object pronoun not found in the text here with varying degrees of transparency. Saheeh International, for example, makes the interpolation explicit with: that which enrages [him]. However, there is no object pronoun in the Arabic. My analysis is as follows: the form I of this verb occurs only twice more in the text (9:120, 48:29), and in both instances treats of enraging those who reject or deny God; the participle is found once at 26:55 and there Fir'awn — the archetypal denier — is the object, and on that basis, I support the meaning I supply at the beginning of this note. The Qur'an, when taken together and treated as a whole, gives us enough to understand its message, a fact to which the following verse may be seen to allude.

22:16[1] I.e. the Qur'an. For why we know the Qur'an to be the

22:17[1] Arabic: alladhīna āmanū. See note to 2:257 and Notepad II.iv.
22:17[2] Arabic: alladhīna hādū. Understood here as Jews by faith but not necessarily of Israelite descent. See Notepad XIII.i.
22:17[3] See note to 2:62.
22:17[4] Arabic: naṣārā. See Notepad XIII.ii.
22:17[5] Arabic: al mujūs. Muhammad Asad comments here*: Al-majus: the followers of Zoroaster or Zarathustra (Zardusht), the Iranian prophet who lived about the middle of the last millennium B.C. and whose teachings are laid down in the Zend-Avesta. They are represented today by the Gabrs of Iran and, more prominently, by the Parsis of India and Pakistan. Their religion, though dualistic in philosophy, is based on belief in God as the Creator of the universe.* This is the only instance of this word in the text.
22:17[6] See note to Arabic root: sh-r-k at 6:78 and Notepad VI. The inference I derive is that all sects and factions are included. Muhammad Asad notes here: The Christians and the Magians (Zoroastrians) are included in the first category, for although they do ascribe divine qualities to other beings beside God, they regard those beings, fundamentally, as no more than manifestations - or incarnations - of the One God, thus persuading themselves that they are worshipping Him alone; whereas "those who are bent on ascribing divinity to beings other than God" (alladhina ashraku) by obvious implication reject the principle of His oneness and uniqueness.
22:18[1] Arabic: alam tara ilā. See note to 2:243.
22:18[2] Arabic: sajada. See Notepad IV.
22:18[3] Cf. 10:33, 10:96, 10:103, 16:36, 16:38, 17:16, 22:18, 28:63, 30:47, 32:13, 36:7, 37:31, 38:14, 39:19, 39:71-72, 40:6, 41:25, 46:18, 50:12-14.
22:19[1] I.e. the two basic categories of men: those who believe, and those who reject God. This sets up the subject of ḥajj (with which debate must have been associated since it is intrinsically linked linguistically in the Arabic) which follows.
22:19[2] I.e. in this life.
22:19[3] Arabic: alladhīna kafarū. See note to 2:6 and Notepad II.i.
22:20[1] Lit.: and the skins; i.e. their skins will be 'melted thereby' also.
22:21[1] Arabic: maqāmiʿ. This noun is formed from qamaʿa which means to tame, curb, bridle, restrain. More imaginative interpretations exist, but my reading is in line with both the root sense and the form. This root occurs only once. For his part, Muhammad Asad notes here: Lit., "for them will be grips (maqami') of iron". The noun miqma'ah - of which maqami'is the plural - is derived from the verb qama'a, signifying "he curbed" or "restrained" or "held in subjection" (Lisan al-'Arab). Hence, the "iron grips" mentioned in the above verse denote the inescapability of the suffering in the hereafter to which "they who are bent on denying the truth" condemn themselves.
22:22[1] Or distress.

22:23[1] Arabic: alladhīna āmanū. See note to 2:257 and Notepad II.iv.
22:23[2] The Traditionalist eschews the idea of men wearing silk — yet another point of tension in his presentation with the book he claims as his foundational scripture.
22:24[1] Arabic: qawl — speech; teaching, doctrine.
22:25[1] Arabic: alladhīna kafarū. See note to 2:6 and Notepad II.i.
22:25[2] Arabic: ṣadda + ʿan. See note to 8:47.
22:25[3] Arabic: al masjid al ḥarām. See Notepad VII.ii.
22:25[4] Sc. seek therein deviation by injustice. The fact that this verse is missing a component is understood by translators. N. J. Dawood achieves sense by taking liberties with the content; A. J. Arberry stays close to the Arabic and thus misses sense altogether; Traditionalist translators simply inject the English with sufficient interpolations to achieve sense, but on an ad hoc and ideologically driven basis. Thus, that there exists ellipsis within the verse is not in question. Ellipsis often produces a tentative voice, the function of which is to provide additional information without overstating any argument. This, I believe, is the case here, and this function is readily supplied by anticipating a later line in the present verse. Were this not supplied elliptically, the verse would state something which could not in all cases be so (that those described up to the point of ellipsis seek therein deviation by injustice), or that might be unfair (since all would be caused to taste of a painful punishment). The case is more nuanced (some may seek therein deviation by injustice, but some may not — or may not be aware of such an intention). And the tentative nature of the ellipsis allows for such cases since the thing is both being said and not said. However, as we shall soon see, in the case of those for whom the proposition holds true, no tentative mood applies: they are to taste of a painful punishment. I believe the ellipsis is required here to compensate for the absence of mitigating allowances (changes of heart, behaviour, etc.) frequently found in similar circumstances.
22:25[5] Arabic: ʿakafa — to be devoted (to), to remain (in or at).
22:25[6] I.e. from the right path.

22:26[1] Arabic: makān — position. This can mean either a literal or figurative position. Here the context concerns questions of faith which fact suggests the meaning is figurative. In any event, this is a history which relates to a previous people only (see note to 9:28 and Notepad XVI).
22:26[2] See note to Arabic root: sh-r-k at 6:78 and Notepad VI.
22:26[3] Arabic: ṭawafa. See note to 2:125.
22:26[4] Arabic: rakaʿa — to be lowly (i.e. before God). See Notepad III.
22:26[5] Arabic: sajada. See Notepad IV.
22:27[1] There is no question but that the addressee of 22:26 is Ibrāhīm. It is clear also that there is a shift to the time of Muḥammad in what follows. The question is only at what point that shift occurs. The Traditionalist frequently assumes — and wishes the reader to assume — that the imperative mood has switched to Muḥammad at the beginning of 22:27, but there is no strong indication of that, no use of such standard markers as 'Say thou' or 'O Prophet!' or 'O messenger!'. Whereas Muhammad Asad is clear on where he stands — he renders here: Hence, [O Muhammad], proclaim thou unto all people the [duty of] pilgrimage — most Traditionalist translators are more subtle. While they build their assumptions quietly into their presentations, their treatment of 22:28 leaves us in no doubt that they have subtly made the same inference at 22:27 that Muhammad Asad had the honesty to trumpet; for example Hilali & Khan's rendering of 22:28 reads: That they may witness things that are of benefit to them (i.e. reward of Hajj in the Hereafter, and also some worldly gain from trade, etc.), and mention the Name of Allah on appointed days (i.e. 10th, 11th, 12th, and 13th day of Dhul-Hijjah), over the beast of cattle that He has provided for them (for sacrifice) (at the time of their slaughtering by saying: Bismillah, WAllahu-Akbar, Allahumma Minka wa Ilaik).

Then eat thereof and feed therewith the poor who have a very hard time. What the Traditionalist calls the ḥajj is one of the five pillars of his religion. He is very clear on that. If even one pillar is dislodged, his entire operation is at an end. The portions of the text he can construe to create the impression that his 'pillar' of hajj is native to the Qur'an are minimal. He must wring from what is available to him as much seeming correspondence as he can between his externally derived rituals and the text. This explains his impatience to transport the narrative to the time of Muḥammad. However, on a more objective basis, while it is clear that the verses at 22:27-28 have an application both to Ibrāhīm and to Muḥammad (and that the focus switches from the one to the other), the earliest point at which a shift can be objectively determined comes at 22:28 with the statement So eat thereof. The shift to the imperative plural indicates a clear adjustment from one narrative frame to another. The alternative is that Muhammad Asad is right in his reading (see above). But for that position to be tenable, one would need to point to overwhelming textual proof of a shift from the imperative singular of 22:26 (treating of Ibrāhīm) to an imperative singular at 22:27 treating of Muḥammad. Muhammad Asad does not provide such proof, and in the absence of it, I see no textual justification to regard the opening of 22:27 as the 'join' between the two narratives. The entire scenario is of historical value to us now only in any case (see note to 9:28).
22:27[2] Arabic: ḥajj — pilgrimage, debate. See note to 2:158. The verses which treat of ḥajj are of historical interest only (see note to 9:28). There is no difference between such histories and those dealing, for example, with Ādam or Nūḥ.
22:27[3] Muhammad Asad comments here: Lit., "lean mount" - an expression which has induced some of the commentators to assume that it denotes "a camel that has become lean on account of a long and fatiguing journey". However, the verb dammarahu or admarahu relates in classical Arabic not only to camels but also to horses, and has the meaning of "he made it [i.e., the mount] lean and fit [for racing or war)"; thus, the noun midmar signifies "a training-ground where horses are prepared for racing or war", as well as "a race-course" (Jawhari, Asas, etc.; cf. also Lane V, 1803 f.). Hence, the adjectival noun damir - especially when contrasted, as above, with the expression rijalan ("on foot") - has the connotation of "fleetness" or, more properly, "fitness for speed", and may by inference be applied to every kind of "fast conveyance".
22:27[4] Arabic: ʿamīq — deep (from ʿamuqa — to be or to become deep, profound) according to Wehr (p. 754). Lane (p. 2157) adds to deep values of remote or far-extending as the value at 22:27. Since this is the only instance of this root in the text, we have nothing to cross-reference with. In such cases it is impossible to establish to what extent Lane here reflects values of what he calls 'chaste' Arabic, or that the Arabic he records in this case is coloured by later exegetical or ideological considerations. Among the five translators I refer to most frequently in these notes, only A. J. Arberry employs deep; Hilali & Khan try to cover all options with deep and distant; the remaining three use distant or synonyms thereof.
22:27[5] Arabic: fajj — way, road between two mountains. This word occurs also at 21:31 (in the plural) where mountain passes clearly fits. If we accept deep as the value for ʿamīq (see note above), then that supports a case for Petra as the locus of al masjid al ḥarām (the city is approached by more than one dramatic ravine — including a cleft in the rock, no less, called al sīq); no ravine is found in any approach to the city today called Mecca. I am not aware of a comparable claim under either the Arabia Felix thesis or ʿAsīr-Ḥejāz thesis. However, if one accepts distant as the value for ʿamīq (see note above), this argument loses force. But there are further considerations here. First among them is that the lack of 'deep mountain passes' in the vicinity of Mecca could have impacted the language and made ʿamīq (whose root appears only here in the text) the object of linguistic modifications in order to make understanding of the text fit with the geographical reality of a later time. And second, we should consider that the Qur'an — as the single text which binds the Arabic-speaking peoples together — naturally became the source of countless idioms (consider the influence of the King James Bible and of Shakespeare on the English language). Thus, min kulli fajjin ʿamīq today can be used to mean from all sides, from all directions, from everywhere. In any case, the text treats here of directives given to Ibrāhīm, and today the Traditionalist's sole supposedly Qur'anic evidence connecting the father of the great monotheistic religions with Mecca is a theatrical prop he calls maqam ibrahim — something which performs the offices of idol and religious 'artefact', and which an eight-year-old schoolboy would not accept as proof of any kind.
22:28[1] The Arabic here is: maʿlūmāt — given, known; fixed, determined, appointed. Nowhere does it say that these days are fixed by God. For the only other instance of maʿlūmāt see 2:197.
22:28[2] At this point the voice changes to the plural imperative, and the narrative focus can be said objectively to shift from the time of Ibrāhīm to that of Muḥammad and those with him.
22:29[1] Arabic: tafaṯh. Lane (p. 308) connects this root with physical hygiene, with tafaṯh indicating the state of being dirty; the state of having matted and dusty hair. He includes increasing levels of specificity, but this is the general sense. This is the only instance of this root in the text. An instance of a rare or unique word in a context where support for one of his 'pillars' is the goal frequently triggers the Traditionalist, and Hilali & Khan do not disappoint, responding on this occasion with: Then let them complete the prescribed duties (Manasik of Hajj) for them. However, the Traditionalist translators at Saheeh International were not thus affected here, rendering: Then let them end their untidiness.
22:29[2] I.e. pay their vows. The notion of paying one's vows will be lost on the majority of moderns. It means to perform any outstanding obligations one has undertaken with God. (See Numbers 6 for the Nazarite vow; 1 Samuel 1:11 for Hannah's vow to God; also Psalms 50:14, 66:13-14.) The noun (sg. naḏhr; pl. nuḏhūr) pertains to the form I verb naḏhara — to dedicate, consecrate; to vow, to make a vow. The form I verb is found at 2:270, 3:35, 19:26, 21:45; the noun is found at 2:270, 22:29, 76:7.
22:29[3] Arabic: taṭawwafa (form V). See note to 2:125.
22:29[4] Arabic: al bayt al ʿatīq — the ancient house. This expression occurs at 22:29 and 22:33. The Traditionalist ascribes to this term a highly specialised meaning in support of his religion (namely, he chooses to claim it as a further appellation for the box-like structure to which he bows down in the city today known as Mecca). Some points of interest: firstly, the verb rendered circumambulate by the Traditionalist is demonstrably used in the Qur'an to mean simply to move about or to circulate among (see note to ṭawafa at 2:125); secondly, Petra and the surrounding region are acknowledged (by non-sectarians) as very ancient burial sites; thirdly, at Petra there are feasting halls attached to graves where tribes would meet and feast. I contend firstly, that whatever is meant by the ancient house, it does not — and could not — have anything to do with Mecca (see Notepad XVI, also my book The God Protocol); secondly, that the case for associating the ancient house with Petra is strong given that it was truly an ancient site at the time in question; and thirdly, that whatever was the accepted mode of behaviour at that time and place, it has now passed into history; were the details required by later generations they would have been preserved in the Qur'an (consider the detailed coverage the Qur'an gives to inheritance law, acceptable foods, menstrual courses, and admissible marriage partners; cf. 31:27). That site is now closed (see 9:28 and note thereto), and I see no reason why its interest to us today should be greater than that of other locations in which the historical dramas the Qur'an includes are set. See also note to 22:30.

22:30[1] Sc. 22:67-70. The Traditionalist (and other) translators fumble for meaning with particular *dẖālika*s in this chapter (22:30, 22:32, 22:60). They interpolate and guess on an ad hoc basis, but neither convincingly nor with conviction. For example, at 22:30 A. J. Arberry has: All that; Saheeh International has: That [has been commanded], Muhammad Asad has: All this [is ordained by God]; and Hilali & Khan have: That (Manasik prescribed duties of Hajj is the obligation that mankind owes to Allah). At 22:32 A. J. Arberry has: All that; Saheeh International has: That [is so]. Muhammad Asad has: This is [to be borne in mind]. Meanwhile Hilali & Khan give us: Thus it is [what has been mentioned in the above said Verses (27, 28, 29, 30, 31) is an obligation that mankind owes to Allah]. Lastly, at 22:60 A. J. Arberry has: All that; Saheeh International has: That [is so]. Muhammad Asad has: Thus shall it be. And, finally, Hilali & Khan have: That is so. This is how these translators treat the exact same word at 22:30, 22:32, 22:60. Clearly, dẖālika here is something of an extra spare wheel. Everyone understands that something has to be done with it; the question is what. At one end of the ideological spectrum, non-sectarian A. J. Arberry opts for unassuming consistency with All that, (though we have no way of knowing what All that is). At the other, the highly doctrinaire Sunni Traditionalist translators Hilali & Khan are out to tell you exactly what All that is — and it is that they and their religion are critical to understanding the segment. What we can say with certainty in the light of the above is that what we shall be calling the 'awkward and solitary' *dẖālika*s (22:30, 22:32, 22:60) are elliptical; that is, they imply information which has been elided but which we are meant to deduce. The question is only what exactly the nature of that elided information is, and whether or not we can correctly identify it. Before we attend to that process, we need to be sure we understand the Traditionalist's motivations. Objectively, the 'awkward and solitary' *dẖālika*s (22:30, 22:32, 22:60) ill fit the surrounding text and create an ungainly stumble in the textual flow that translators do not know what to do with. But why could not the Traditionalist be satisfied with the type of opaque consistency as satisfied non-sectarian A. J. Arberry, creating the textual equivalent of O well, or Ho-hum? The answer is that the segment at 22:26-37 is one of a limited number of places available to the Traditionalist where he can — in fact, he must — leverage the text as far as possible to create the impression in the mind of the reader that his religion is native to the Qur'anic text. Without that, his religion can be dismissed as cut from entirely different cloth. But of equal importance to him is the fact that the segment is susceptible to his application of highly specialised 'religious' values to rarely occurring words. In this case, he makes much of particular 'religious' rites (but see 22:34), for all details of which we are to trust him and his non-Qur'anic literature. Since the terms to which he has affixed his specious definitions in the segment are either unique or extremely rare to the text as a whole, he has been able to claim his values knowing that nothing in the Qur'anic text directly contradicts him. Thus, by inertia, his highly specialised definitions have stuck, both in the minds of translators and in the minds of readers. But the first and most obvious weakness for the Traditionalist here is that his value for the 'awkward and solitary' *dẖālika*s is different in each case. That ill fits with the fact that the 'awkward and solitary' *dẖālika*s are themselves identical in each case. But that neither proves wrong his claims nor improves upon his interpolations. To do that we must consider the textual evidence methodically, critically, and pan-textually. So let us begin with what we know. It is a fact that three instances of dẖālika in the present sūrah (22:30, 22:32, 22:60) ill fit the surrounding text. Under the methodology practiced here, this characteristic invites deeper investigation. And if the reader wishes to review examples where conspicuous features of the text have both stimulated investigation and yielded rich exegetical insight, he should consider the cases of kadẖālika (see note to 18:91), kallā (see note to 74:16), and am (see note to 21:21). We also know that dẖālika is common to the broader text (it occurs a total of 280 times in this precise form), and is found 11 times in the present sūrah (22:6, 22:10, 22:11, 22:12, 22:30, 22:32, 22:60, 22:61, 22:62, 22:70, 22:70). If we consider the 11 *dẖālika*s of this sūrah we note first that the 'awkward and solitary' *dẖālika*s occur in an unbroken sequence (22:30, 22:32, 22:60), insomuch as no other instance of dẖālika divides them. Next we see that this discrete subset of three 'awkward and solitary' *dẖālika*s falls precisely at the midpoint of the sequence, with four instances of dẖālika occurring both prior to it and following it. Next we see that each cluster of four *dẖālika*s either side of the 'awkward and solitary' set of three, itself comprises two double clusters of two *dẖālika*s (22:6 and 22:10; 22:11 and 22:12; 22:61 and 22:62; 22:70 and 22:70). The signatures for each instance in the four minor sets are as follows: 22:6 (dẖālika + bianna) and 22:10 (dẖālika + bimā); 22:11 (dẖālika + huwa) and 22:12 (dẖālika + huwa); 22:61 (dẖālika + bianna) and 22:62 (dẖālika + bianna); 22:70 (inna dẖālika + fī) and 22:70 (inna dẖālika + 'alā). Now that we have covered the available textual data on dẖālika at sūrah 22 we can summarise what we know: we know the 'awkward and solitary' *dẖālika*s to be elliptical statements; we know that they imply something; we know that the 'awkward and solitary' *dẖālika*s form an unbroken chain of three flanked by four other dẖālika statements on either side. We will now consider what this can mean. Firstly, the central position of the 'awkward and solitary' *dẖālika*s provides symmetry to the phenomenon of *dẖālika*s in the sūrah. This fact indicates a relationship between the central three *dẖālika*s and those in each of the two flanks. Secondly, the unbroken consistency which we observe in the 'awkward and solitary' *dẖālika*s implies that their value must be uniform (i.e. a single value which applies to all of the three cases). On the basis of the two observations above — and given the known elliptical nature of the 'awkward and solitary' *dẖālika*s — we conclude that the 'awkward and solitary' *dẖālika*s must have a single value; that value must derive from one of the remaining *dẖālika*s in the sūrah; and that value must be unique. Since there are three instances of dẖālika + bianna in the flanks we can exclude these (dẖālika + bianna has its own pan-textual significance and occurs 7 times across the broader text, and is discussed in the note to 22:6). While the dẖālika + bimā signature occurs only once in the sūrah, it occurs 6 times across the broader text (it also has its own pan-textual significance, and is discussed in the note to 22:10). The dẖālika + huwa signature occurs twice in the sūrah, so we can exclude it. Additionally, it occurs a total of 12 times across the broader text (it also has its own pan-textual significance, and is discussed in the note to 22:11). The second of the two inna dẖālika statements at 22:70 (inna dẖālika + 'alā) occurs four times across the broader text (it also has its own pan-textual significance, and is discussed in the note to 22:70). This leaves the inna dẖālika + fī signature at 22:70. Not only is it unique within this sūrah, it is found nowhere outside of it. Thus, it is a single, unique value, and as such must be the point to which the three 'awkward and solitary' *dẖālika*s point. Before we continue, let us consider more generally: if an important message notes 'that' as a significant item three times but without clear elucidation, where would one look for the value of 'that' other than where the text itself tells you: verily, that is[...]? This is precisely the context the unique inna dẖālika + fī signature at 22:70 supplies. To continue: we know that the 'awkward and solitary' *dẖālika*s anticipate something unsaid explicitly (which is the nature of elliptical statements). And we know also from our broader analysis of the Qur'an that dẖālika always refers to something prior to the dẖālika marker (see note to 2:2). Since we know that the 'awkward and solitary' *dẖālika*s' elliptical values anticipate the inna dẖālika + fī signature at 22:70, that statement itself must derive its value from what precedes it. The remaining logistical question is: how far back does the inna dẖālika + fī signature at 22:70 refer? It must logically reach back as far as the first hard subject break, and that comes at 22:67. Now that we have established both the mechanics and the value for the three 'awkward and solitary' *dẖālika*s, we can now consider the significance of that value. The verse at 22:67 begins: For every community We appointed a rite for them to perform[...] There is only one possible reference for this, and that is at 22:34 where that 'rite' is spelled out: that they remember the name of God over what He has provided them of livestock cattle. The reader is expected to understand this association as he applies the value 22:67-70 at each instance of the 'awkward and solitary' *dẖālika*s (22:30, 22:32, 22:60). Analysed on a thorough pan-textual basis, it is seen that the 'awkward and solitary' *dẖālika*s provide intrinsic Qur'anic proof against precisely the type of abuses the Traditionalist attempts upon the Qur'an. Once we have grasped both the mechanism and the value of the 'awkward and solitary' *dẖālika*s, it matters little what extraneously derived or imagined rites the Traditionalist would bind upon us; we have the Qur'an's own word for it: there is only one rite, and it consists in remembering God's name over livestock as meat. Whether we read 22:26-37 as a history of Ibrāhīm, as a history of Muḥammad, or as a convergence of the two matters not; the elliptical *dẖālika*s at 22:30, 22:32 and 22:60 point the reader three times to the indisputable facts of 22:67-70, and those values put paid to all and any later insinuations from no matter what quarter. The facts are clear: firstly, that God appointed one rite for every community (contrary to what the Traditionalist would bind upon his followers) and, secondly, that Muḥammad himself knew this and taught accordingly (contrary again to what the Traditionalist would bind upon his followers). Moreover, anyone troubling himself to read the two verses following the elliptical values (i.e. 22:71-72) will find a chilling condemnation (and readily recognisable characterisation) of those who historically have been most insistent in forcing their extraneously derived religion upon the believer. This note builds upon the findings presented in the first edition of this work. See also the note to 22:3.

22:30[2] Arabic: ḥurumāt allah. This collocation occurs only once, but there exists a single additional instance of ḥurumāt at 2:194.

22:30[3] Muhammad Asad renders the Arabic awthān somewhat freely as the loathsome evil of idolatrous beliefs and practices but goes on to note in his comment: The term awthan (lit., "idols") denotes not merely actual, concrete images of false deities but also, in its widest sense, everything that is associated with false beliefs and practices or with a tendency to "worship" false values: hence the subsequent injunction to shun "every word that is untrue".

22:30[4] Arabic: qawl — speech; teaching, doctrine.

22:31[1] Arabic: ḥanāfa (pl. ḥunafā') — inclining to a right state or tendency; spurning falsehood. See note to 2:130.

22:31[2] See note to Arabic root: sh-r-k at 6:78 and Notepad VI.

22:31[3] See note to Arabic root: sh-r-k at 6:78 and Notepad VI.

22:32[1] Sc. 22:67-70. Cf. 22:30 and 22:60. See note to 22:30.

22:32[2] Arabic: sha'ā'ir allah — the tokens of God. The Traditionalist is quick here to insert specious, externally derived values for the usual reasons (see note to 2:125), but the plain meaning of 'the tokens of God' is those things which indicate the existence of God. The following context certainly treats of animals (named specifically at 22:34), and while the word benefits (Arabic: manāfi') found at 22:33 is not exclusively associated with animals in the broader text, it is clearly associated with them at 16:5, 23:21-22, 36:71-73, 40:79-80. Thus, it is acceptable to understand animals as the reference here at 22:32, though not mentioned specifically. We note that nowhere in this dataset can the Traditionalist point to values for sha'ā'ir allah that he needs in the present context. Further, the Traditionalist's assertion here of particular rites for sha'ā'ir allah is shown to be weak when considered on the basis of Qur'anic evidence (for which see notes to 22:33). However, even if this collocation had the value the Traditionalist claims (and thus relates to rites at al masjid al ḥarām), they were for a limited time since access to that site is now closed to the believers (see 9:28 and Notepad XVI). See note to 2:158.

22:32[3] See note to al muttaqūn at 2:2.

22:33[1] Arabic: manāfi'. See note to 22:32.

22:33[2] One should remember that the Traditionalist is committed in this segment to gaining maximum purchase upon the Qur'an for his externally derived religion (see also note to 2:125 and 22:30). And here he needs to achieve highly specialised meanings for sha'ā'ir allah (see notes 2:158 and 22:32) as part of that objective. It is understandable, therefore, in attempting to understand whether his claims are valid, that we should take an interest at this juncture in the phrase 'to a stated term' (Arabic: ilā ajalin musamman) since it applies to the animals for which the Traditionalist claims here an exceptional value. Exceptional claims require exceptional proof. And if he is right in his exceptional claim here of a value of sacrificial animals — and that the sense is not simply animals in general (see note to 22:32) — then we should expect this accompanying formula to bear that interpretation out. We should begin with what the Traditionalist means by 'to a stated term' here. He means: until a 'religiously' significant, appointed moment in his externally constructed process at which animals brought to his annual pilgrimage are slaughtered. That is his baseline requirement, and anything which confirms this type of sense across the broader text will provide him with genuine support. Analysis of the phrase 'to a stated term' reveals the following facts: 1. it occurs a total of 11 times in the text; 2. it is found in the present sūrah twice, more than in any other; 3. it is found nowhere outside of this verse in a context of claimed specialised religious definitions; 4. leaving aside the present context at 22:33, in all cases except one it treats of God's judgment or works: God's provision; the span God allows (or extends) for men's life or time of birth; or God's chosen time of destruction. And in the single instance which treats of men, the context is mundane: the voluntary conclusion of contracts between men. The full set is found at: 2:282, 11:3, 14:10, 16:61, 22:5, 22:33, 31:29, 35:45, 39:42, 42:14, 71:4. Thus, nowhere in the remaining cases of this set can one point to anything which would support the Traditionalist's case, nothing which treats of any context whatever in which 'religious' ritual is the dominant theme. On the basis of this evidence, the Traditionalist's specialised claim here is highly specific, anomalous, and lacks any pan-textual support.

22:33[3] Arabic: maḥill. See note to 2:196.

22:33[4] Arabic: al bayt al 'atīq — the ancient house. See 22:29 and note thereto.

¶22.5 22:34[1] The Traditionalist's stock-in-trade is (what one might call sectarian) rite and dogma. As he himself acknowledges, the Qur'an is conspicuously lacking in both. Here, however, we are given a single rite with enough detail to allow us to implement it, and in a context which speaks of every community. On this basis we may reasonably assume that we are to keep this rite. This point is confirmed at 22:67. See also note to 22:30. Here, for the usual reasons, the Traditionalist frequently attempts to interpolate his required conclusions into the text; Saheeh International, for example, has: And for all religion We have appointed a rite [of sacrifice] that they may mention the name of Allāh over what He has provided for them of [sacrificial] animals. This is a deceit on at least three counts. Firstly, ummah is translated by him (usually) as community and not religion; secondly, he has inserted 'sacrificial' next to 'rite' where it does not exist; thirdly, he has inserted 'sacrificial' next to 'animals' where it does not exist. The word he translates animals here (Arabic: al an'ām) occurs 33 times in the text (3:14, 4:119, 5:1, 5:95, 6:136, 6:138, 6:138, 6:138, 6:139, 6:142, 7:179, 10:24, 16:5, 16:66, 16:80, 20:54, 22:28, 22:30, 22:34, 23:21, 25:44, 25:49, 26:133, 32:27, 35:28, 36:71, 39:6, 40:79, 42:11, 43:12, 47:12, 79:33, 80:32). In no other case does he claim the reference to be to 'sacrificial' animals.

22:35[1] Arabic: al ṣābirūn. See note to 2:155.

22:35[2] Arabic: al ṣalāt; i.e. such duty as is incumbent. See note to 2:3 and Article SZC. While what the Traditionalist calls al ṣalāt is the dominant human activity at his box in Mecca, there is no implication here that al ṣalāt pertains to what he calls the ḥajj — not even the Traditionalist claims that. There is no mention here of al ṣalāt in or during ḥajj or at al masjid al ḥarām. This contrasts with the Qur'an's account of Zakariyyā at 3:39 where the context is clearly religious and the performance of duty (ṣalāt) is specified in terms of location. Rather, here at 22:35 there is merely repetition of a common formula, and no reference to location.

22:35[3] This motif occurs in six places (2:2, 8:3, 22:35, 28:54, 32:16, 42:38). In the first three instances (2:2, 8:3, 22:35) it is prefaced directly by mention of al ṣalāt.

22:36[1] Arabic: sha'ā'ir allah — the tokens of God. The Traditionalist is quick here to assert highly specialised values which emphasise sacrifice, but see notes to 2:158 and 22:32.

22:36[2] Or become requisite. Arabic: wajaba. This root occurs only once in the text. Wehr (p. 1229) gives meanings of to be necessary, be requisite, and developments thereof. Lane (p. 2921) covers the same ground, but also includes the value which the Traditionalist emphasises such as falling to the ground and collapsing. Given the Traditionalist's impositions over time of values with sectarian impetus upon words — especially upon words found rarely — in the Qur'an, this may be a case of dogma driving language, but God knows best. I have rendered in the translation after the meaning the Traditionalist prefers and confine my dissent to the notes. The broader question is entirely moot since al masjid al ḥarām was closed to believers within the time of the revelation (see note to 9:28, and my book The God Protocol).

22:36[3] Or the contented. Arabic: qāni'. This word occurs only once. Its root conveys senses of satisfied or contented and Muhammad Asad renders to some extent in that vein. However, the Traditionalist consensus is that the reference is to beggars or to poor people who do not ask. I think this may be a later development and a case of usage driving language. My view is that it means offering food to anyone who wants it including those in no particular need. However, I have rendered after the received meaning, and confine my dissent to the notes. The broader question is entirely moot since al masjid al ḥarām was closed to believers within the time of the revelation (see note to 9:28, and my book The God Protocol).

22:36[4] Arabic: mu'tarr. This word occurs only once. Its meanings listed by Wehr (p. 702) include miserable, wretched. This is generally translated as beggar (and synonyms). This is certainly what it has come to mean and I have rendered accordingly.

22:37[1] See note to al muttaqūn at 2:2.

22:37[2] The broader passage which deals with slaughtering livestock and feeding the poor and which comprises what the Traditionalist asserts as a religious duty binding upon all begins at 22:28. The phrase So eat thereof at that verse marks the shift from a history which treats of the time of Ibrāhīm to a history which treats of the time of Muḥammad (see notes to 22:26 and 22:36). Between that point and this, despite the Traditionalist's best efforts to achieve some purchase upon the text for one of the pillars of his religion (the ḥajj), the pickings are so meagre that apart from his usual tactics of claiming highly specialised values for rarely occurring words and inserting words which do not exist in the text, he is able to point to nothing in the words on the page here to support his conclusions. The entire sequence is, however, fully consonant with a historical event at the time of the Messenger the chief lessons of which are common to the Qur'an. Moreover, the categories of men identified for 'glad tidings' in the segment are not those who 'perform ḥajj' or anything of that sort. Rather, it is 'the humble' (22:34), and 'the doers of good' (22:37). There is a total of eight 'bear thou glad tidings to' statements followed by plural nouns (2:25, 2:155, 2:223, 9:113, 10:2, 10:87, 22:34, 22:37). The objects of 'the humble' (22:34), and 'the doers of good' (22:37) are both unique within that set. Clearly, the virtues of humility before God and doing good works are essential to the passage at 22:28-37, yet it is not possible to claim those virtues as either the exclusive provenance or defining features of the Traditionalist's annual rituals at Mecca, and nor does he claim them to be so. The Traditionalist's broader claims here are addressed in notes to 9:28 and 22:30.

22:40[1] Arabic: bi ghayri (al) ḥaqq. See Notepad XVII.

22:40[2] This formula occurs at one other place (2:251). The immediate context there is Ṭālūt's battle against those ranged against him, and Dawūd's victory over Jālūt. The broader context there is of a small number of believers (at 2:249 Ṭālūt expels the half-hearted) overcoming a much larger number. This allusion supports the connection I draw between the present phrase and 22:41 (see note to 22:41).

22:40[3] I rendered this cloisters in the earlier editions; after further research, I now render it pious communities. My reasons are connected with my understanding of the verse as a whole, for which see notes below to this verse.

22:40[4] Arabic: haddama. This form II verb is the only instance of the h-d-m root, a fact which suggests that particular care should be taken with it. However, having looked at all available lexicons, there seems to have been no attempt to co-opt it. The verb means to destroy, to raze, to pull down or to demolish. There are no grounds as far as I know to believe it treats of anything other than physical structures.

22:40[5] Arabic: biya'. This word is said by the Traditionalist to mean churches. This is the only instance of this word, which fact renders it vulnerable for the usual reasons. Clearly, biya' has come to mean churches (as in church buildings) over time, but there are excellent grounds for doubting this as the original meaning. The verb root from which biya' is derived is b-y-'. This root has two related senses: allegiance and trade; they are related since allegiance is pledged in the same way as trade is conducted: by means of contract. The many meanings found in any comprehensive Arabic lexicon formed on this root relate to just such a source (i.e. contract and trade) — with the exception of biya'. All other instances of this root in the Qur'an conform absolutely to this principle (9:111, 48:10, 48:10, 48:18, 60:12, 60:12, 60:12; 2:282; 2:254, 2:275, 2:275, 9:111, 14:31, 24:37, 62:9). The word bay' (visually identical to biya' in its non-diacritic form) means sale or trade, for example (cf. especially 24:36-38); Lane (p. 285) notes bay' as the hire or hiring (of land), a thing sold or bought. See further notes to this verse.

22:40[6] Arabic: ṣalawāt — plural of ṣalāt; i.e. such duties as are incumbent. See note to 2:3 and Article SZC. Generically, ṣalāt denotes duty. In its primary sense it is the duty both to serve and seek help from God alone as per the covenant at 1:1-7 of which the statement at 1:5 forms our part — commitment to which also satisfies the pre-existing obligation every man has to acknowledge God's authority (see 7:172). Here, however, the Traditionalist again abandons his default value for ṣalāt as a five-time daily ritual (of a particularly 'Muslim' kind), this time — bizarrely — in favour of Jewish synagogues. I remain confirmed in my stated value for ṣalāt throughout. See extended note to this verse below.

22:40[7] Arabic: masjid, masājid. See Notepad VII.i.

22:40[8] Sc. would be lost. One should understand the Traditionalist's problems at this verse, because once we understand those, it becomes clear why he has rendered the verse so bizarrely (with ṣalawāt as Jewish synagogues and the established root for trade and contract as churches). He wishes to achieve an equivalence for his religion with the religions called Christianity and Judaism. We know that masājid cannot possibly mean what the Traditionalist claims for it (i.e. specifically — and exclusively — 'Islamic' places of worship) but, rather, means places of worship in a general, non-sectarian sense (cf. 7:29, 17:7 and Notepad VII.i); but the Traditionalist has been able to fudge that point in the eyes of the laity. Having done that, the way is clear to attempt to get from monasteries (or pious communities) to his fudged value for masājid as mosques in a way which implies equal status for his religion. He attempts to do that by ascribing the values of the buildings characteristic for the main monotheistic religions to the stages in between — despite the fact that the result is both contrary to the norms of Arabic and to all comparable values in the Qur'an. But the Traditionalist has a second and equally compelling reason to bend this verse into his service: if we allow the normative values for each of the constituent parts, it reads as an endorsement of discrete religious communities, something the Traditionalist has an ideological predisposition against. The religion which is today called Islam is interested in a very different model: that of the Caliphate — a uniform monolith under a single ruler. This concept is nowhere found in the Qur'an. However, while the object of creating and maintaining a community dedicated to God alone is absolutely central to the message of the Qur'an, men have shown themselves typically more interested in this-worldly conquest than in what the Qur'an has to say. Thus, I am suggesting that a pious community of the type mentioned here at 22:40 is the unit of Qur'anic advancement, and it is to the end of creating and maintaining such units that imperatives to the believers as a group tend to be directed. I am suggesting also that this reading was inconvenient to interests invested in territorial conquest and conformist, non-thinking 'religion'. These, then, are the underlying currents which I believe have worn biya' into churches (in this one instance only) and ṣalawāt into the surreal value of Jewish synagogues (in this one instance only). The Traditionalist can then point to masājid and claim his religious buildings to be comparable with those of Christianity and Judaism (while both defusing any implied imperative to form overtly pious communities, and keeping military action infused with religious purpose). However, if we allow masājid its Qur'anic sense of places of worship (see Notepad VII.i), the Traditionalist's values for ṣawāmi', biya', and ṣalawāt become superfluous since they are all places of worship. Turning to ṣawāmi', we find it is typically rendered monasteries. Lexicons list Christian hermitages and monks' cells. The underlying root sense appears to be something tapered towards the top, and in Lane (p. 1738), is associated with the eagle (which seeks the highest point to which it can ascend). I think the association with isolated Christian monks' cells is a later development, and became attached partly due to the word's vulnerability to later impositions (this is the sole instance of this root in the text), and partly due to the Traditionalist's ideological requirements of this passage outlined in this note. The values attached to ṣawāmi' today emphasise seclusion and piety at the expense of community, but that emphasis does not comport with what precedes at 22:39-40. Rather, the Qur'anic text suggests organic communities capable of defending themselves, not isolated believers easily expelled. This is the basis on which I justify my value of pious communities. Believing communities have been associated with religions of all stripes since time immemorial. Monasteries or other organised religious communities typically formed the economic and intellectual centres of the broader communities among which they were founded or — more commonly — which grew up around them. It is precisely the economic life focused on the 'pious communities' which biyaʿ naturally references (i.e. trade) since such communities both generated and required material goods; ṣalawāt merely means here what it means throughout (i.e. duties) — duty being what has characterised life in religious communities across millennia no matter what the denomination or confession (each member typically has a strict set of duties to perform consonant with the order of which he is a member); lastly, the 'places of worship wherein the name of God is remembered much' are merely a central and necessary feature of any such religious community. The reason I believe there to be an elliptical statement at the end of this clause is that the conclusion is inherently tentative. Trade and duties and places of worship wherein the name of God is remembered much may survive the destruction of a pious community, but it is, perhaps, unlikely. It is not a rule set in stone, but a possibility which merits warning. Had God stated this conclusion explicitly, that would connote an immutable principle. Since we are left to infer the consequences, the status of the warning is different.

22:41[6] Lit.: the matters.

22:43[1] Given the broader context, the implication is clear: the people of Ibrāhīm were destroyed. This point, so far as I know, is elided from the Traditionalist's presentation. I cover this subject in some detail in my work The God Protocol.

22:51[1] Arabic: āyāt. See Notepad VIII.

22:51[2] Or to cause failure (to).

22:52[1] This word means desire or vain desire or wish. It occurs at 2:78, 2:111, 4:123, 4:123, 22:52, 57:14. The Traditionalist translators typically render it thus in all cases — except here. In this specific case, Saheeh International gives us: And We did not send before you any messenger or prophet except that when he spoke [or recited], while Hilali & Khan render as: Never did We send a Messenger or a Prophet before you, but; when he did recite the revelation or narrated or spoke. This is very odd, and may be instantly contrasted with the Arabist and non-sectarian A. J. Arberry's rendering: We sent not ever any Messenger or Prophet before thee, but that Satan cast into his fancy. Fellow non-sectarian N. J. Dawood renders more freely, but the result is the same: Never have We sent a single prophet or apostle before you with whose wishes Satan did not tamper. See note to the same verse below.

22:52[2] Or adversary (against the command of God). See Article SJC. Cf. 6:112-113, 16:98.

22:52[3] Two sets of Traditionalist translators (Saheeh International and Hilali & Khan) replace 'his desire' with 'it'. Clearly, the Arabic here does not suit them (see note to the same verse above). I assume this is because an objective reading of this verse and those following, when applied to Muḥammad as a messenger and prophet (and the implication is that it must be), so obviously suggests the Traditionalist's own actions. No one has been so active as he in adding something of his own — the obvious allusion is to 20:96 — to what Muḥammad brought. Despite all efforts to misguide, it is clear from 22:22-54 that God is not thwarted irrespective of what 'the satan' does.

22:52[4] The only other instance of this verb is at 2:106.

22:54[4] Or it.

22:54[6] To my mind verses 22:52-54 refer to a mechanism by which (despite the normative historical process whereby the messages of the prophets are co-opted by a priesthood and turned into a religion) there remains a means of access to that original message for those who have knowledge — itself a gift from God.

¶22.8 22:60[1] Sc. 22:67-70. Falling precisely where it does, this dhālika provides more than further emphatic punctuation of the points contained at 22:67-70 (see also 22:30, 22:32, and note to 22:30), the context dispatches also any notion of particular burial rites as instituted by God. The Traditionalist has his burial conventions, and he is welcome to them. But there is no Qur'anic support for them. Conflating his cultural preferences with imperatives from God is one of the Traditionalist's commonest blunders, and has resulted in incalculable stupidity, wasted potential, and needless suffering.

¶22.9 22:65[1] Arabic: fulk — (m. and f.) ship, (also coll.) ships.

22:67[1] Arabic: mansak — rite (sg.). Certain Traditionalist translators wrest this singular noun into the plural (Saheeh International has here: For every religion We have appointed rites which they perform) while Hilali & Khan go further with: For every nation We have ordained religious ceremonies [e.g. slaughtering of the beast of cattle during the three days of stay at Mina (Makkah) during the Hajj (pilgrimage)] which they must follow. However, the word here (mansak) is a singular noun, and the sentence simply restates the only instance of a universal rite found in the Qur'an (see 22:34). The argument here is precisely the opposite of what the Traditionalist wishes for it: a statement against the practice of imposing rites and claiming them to be from God. For comparison, non-sectarian A. J. Arberry renders here: We have appointed for every nation a holy rite that they shall perform. See note to 22:30.

22:70[1] Arabic: dhālika. Cf. 22:30, 22:32 and 22:60. See note to 22:30.

22:70[2] The collocation dhālika fī kitāb is unique to this instance (see note to 22:30). Arabic: kitāb. See Notepad IX.iii.

22:70[3] Arabic: dhālika. See note to dhālika above.

22:70[4] Arabic: dhālika ʿalā. There is considerable additional analysis in the present edition of this work of the dhālikas at 22:30, 22:32, and 22:60 (see note to 22:30). The additional analysis there necessitated further analysis of all dhālikas in the present sūrah on a pan-textual basis. This revealed the signature dhālika ʿalā as an identifiable set within the text (here we mean specifically in those cases which ʿalā does not operate as the preposition of a verb). In all cases it describes either what is easy for God or what is not difficult for God. It occurs at 11 times in the text (4:30, 4:169, 14:20*, 22:70, 29:19, 33:19, 33:30, 35:11, 35:17*, 57:22, 64:7 — an asterisk indicates what is not difficult for God). All instances reference this verse.

22:78[3] See note to muslim at 2:128.

22:78[4] I.e. in this Qur'an. I base this understanding on the fact that the collocation in this (fī hādhā) consistently references the Qur'an in all instances where the case is clear (17:41, 17:89, 18:54, 30:58, 39:27), while those which are not (21:106, 22:78) are fully resolved by applying the principle taken from those which are.

22:78[5] In a context which cites Ibrāhīm, 'the Messenger' surely contains a broad as well as a specific connotation.

22:78[6] I.e. that we might read, appreciate, and follow what the Messenger gave us: the Qur'an.

22:78[7] Cf. 2:143 and, for example, 22:72. The point has been assiduously missed over the centuries, but herein lies the duty of the muslim. The religion created by the Traditionalist is, at best, a distraction from the commission God gave men.

22:78[8] Arabic: aqīmū al ṣalāt; i.e. uphold such duty as is incumbent. See note to 2:3 and Article SZC. Here, surely, this reference to duty must include what is just mentioned: to bear witness to men. Consider also 22:40-41 and notes thereto.

22:78[9] Arabic: ātū al zakāt. See note to 2:43 and Article SZC. Consider also 22:40-41 and notes thereto.

23:1[1] See note to (al) mu'minūn at 8:2.

23:2[1] Arabic: ṣalāt; i.e. such duty as is incumbent. See note to 2:3 and Article SZC. However, in this context, it is difficult not to see this as a confirmation of the instance of al ṣalāt at 22:78 above.

23:2[2] Arabic: khāshiʿūn. See 2:45.

23:4[1] Or are doers.

23:4[2] Arabic: al zakāt. See note to 2:43 and Article SZC. This verse is problematic for the Traditionalist. It contains al zakāt but cannot in truth be suborned to a single value of paying a percentage tax on wealth, which is his required outcome. His broader presentation relies on his extraneously derived values for this term, and that the imperative formula in which al zakāt is found (ātū al zakāt) typically comes without obvious context, and this makes comparative analysis difficult. Here the formula is different, and this provides us data by which to compare al zakāt as a term. The verb is faʿla (to do, to act) and comes in combination with the preposition li which, though it has a range of functions, can be understood here to play the same role as the li in the following verse, where it provides stylistic support for the object only. Muhammad Asad translates somewhat freely here: and who are intent on inner purity but notes: Lit., "working for" or "active in behalf of [inner] purity", which is the meaning of zakah in this context (Zamakhshari; the same interpretation has been advanced by Abu Muslim). I agree with Asad's value for al zakāt here. My point would be that this broader, generic value is the general sense of al zakāt in all cases, and verses 23:5-9 provide genuine context which both confirms that value and adds detail to it (see Article SZC). Maintenance of the sexual impetus within the bounds stated at 23:5-6 (more broadly: within heterosexual relations between men and women where the man has concluded a marriage contract with the woman) is a material (as well as spiritual) contribution made by the individual to the society. The man is materially responsible for the woman, and the woman is also in a material commitment to exclude herself from the marketplace of females open to offers of marriage. While there is a number of instances where the Traditionalist's preferred value for al zakāt jars with the context in which al zakāt is found, there is none in which purity does so. Traditionalist translators at Saheeh International appear to recognise this verse as a pothole in their road, and stumble over it the best they can with: And they who are observant of zakāh, while remaining silent on what that might mean. Meanwhile, Hilali & Khan ride over the Arabic on caterpillar tracks to achieve: And those who pay the Zakat. On a related point, there is a correlation between 23:2-9 and 70:23-34 which a reader familiar with the Qur'an will recognise. Minor differences aside, there are three distinguishing features: 23:3-4 (not found in 70:23-34), and 70:24-28 and 70:33 (not found in 23:2-9). A superficial comparison might lead to the view that verses 70:24-25 relate to — or expand upon — 23:4, and then claim support for the Traditionalist's value for al zakāt on that basis. The facts are these: the 'bookends' are clear in each case (23:2 and 23:9, and 70:23 and 70:34); whereas there are comparable 'variables' on both sides (23:3-4 and 70:24-28), there is a single 'addition' at 70:33 (i.e. with no correlation between 23:2-9); lastly, verses 70:23-34 comprise the greater text. This means that the only question is at what point one 'adds' 23:3-4 to 70:23-34 to achieve a 'full' text: before 70:24-28 or after it. If one 'adds' 23:3-4 after 70:24-28, the argument that 70:24-25 relate to — or expand upon — 23:4 is null. However, 70:24-25 cannot logically be said to expand upon 23:4 since 70:24-28 contain two main points (both charity and the Day of Judgment), and that neither makes sense nor comports with the Traditionalist's value for al zakāt in any way. Thus, the only way to 'reconstitute' the passage is by 'inserting' 23:3-4 after 70:24-28.

23:5[1] Arabic: farj (sg.), furūj (pl.). Lit.: openings, gaps, apertures; vulvas. More generally it means chastity or modesty.

23:20[2] Arabic: saynā'. Usually rendered Sinai (however, see 95:2). Points arising include the fact that the Qur'an does not say that Mūsā talked with God at saynā' and there is no direct Qur'anic identification of saynā' with that location where those events took place; these are assumptions drawn from the Hebrew scriptures (and we know that the Qur'an frequently corrects or contradicts the Hebrew scriptures). The mountain claimed for Mūsā's encounter with God under the Egypt-Palestine thesis and found in the land today called Sinai was identified by Queen Helena, sister of the Emperor Constantine, based — at best — on incomplete information; there is little or no evidence to support that location, and much to refute it. The Petra thesis — or, at least, the Petra pilgrimage thesis — might incline towards the location at Jabal al Lawz, known locally as Jabal Mūsā, in the northern part of modern Saudi Arabia, around 120 miles from Petra; however, that location is not a ṭūr (mount) in the strict sense since Jabal al Lawz is barren (at least, that is the case now) and, again, the Qur'an does not identify saynā' with that location where Mūsā spoke with God, rather, one is accustomed to assume it under the influence of the dominant Egypt-Palestine thesis. The Arabia Felix thesis advances a location for saynā' which provides a more impressive correlation between the Qur'anic statements and geological and agricultural realities. As ever, more objective study is needed on the ground. See Notepad XVI.

¶23.4 23:52[1] See 21:92 and note thereto. Some consider this verse a continuation of God's address to the Messengers at 23:51. I do not for two reasons: due the obvious correlation between 23:52 and 21:92 (which itself is directed to the body of believers), and because of what directly follows (which can only describe those who came after God's messengers). Muhammad Asad (who himself does not supply speech marks at any point at 23:51-52) comments here: As in 21:92, the above verse is addressed to all who truly believe in God, whatever their historical denomination. By the preceding reference to all of God's apostles the Qur'an clearly implies that all of them were inspired by, and preached, the same fundamental truths, notwithstanding all the differences in the ritual or the specific laws which they propounded in accordance with the exigencies of the time and the social development of their followers.

23:52[2] See note to al muttaqūn at 2:2.

23:53[1] Arabic: 'amr — affair; command; i.e. to serve God alone — not a religion created by men. Perhaps tellingly, Saheeh International and Hilali & Khan — both Traditionalist translators — render this word religion.

23:53[2] Arabic: zubur. See note to 3:184. Elsewhere with values which emphasise writing. Here, most translators render sects, but Lane (p. 1217) notes two readings. The first reads the initial verb in the passive and becomes: But they have become divided in their state, among themselves, into parties. The second is: They have made their religion [to be founded upon] various books. In terms of logic, I follow this second reading. For me, the allusion is clear: the Talmud of the Jews; the Ḥadīth of the Muslims; the Letters of Paul of the Christians, etc.

23:54[1] Arabic: ghamra — water that rises above the stature of a man; (submerging gulf or flood of) ignorance. Occurs at 23:54, 23:63, 51:11.

23:54[2] It is improbable that a messenger told by God to leave factions alone would be motivated to begin a new one.

23:56[1] Arabic: bal. See note to 2:88.

23:56[2] Verses 23:55-56 call to mind the 'prosperity' preaching found among some branches of modern Christianity, the exultation in wealth among some Jews, and the ostentatious displays of wealth seen among some oil-rich Muslims, as well as complacent people of all types.

23:58[1] See note to 58:4 for Qur'anic usage of to believe in.

23:58[2] Arabic: āyāt. See Notepad VIII.

23:59[1] See note to Arabic root: sh-r-k at 6:78 and Notepad VI.

23:60[1] Lit.: and.

23:60[2] See Article SZC.

23:62[1] Arabic: kitāb. See Notepad IX.iii.

23:62[2] Arabic: bil ḥaqqi. See Notepad XVII (bil ḥaqqi ii.).

23:63[1] Arabic: bal. See note to 2:88. Given what comes above (23:57-62), I regard this verse as support to the previous bal statement at the end of 23:56. Other translators achieve sense only by means of a free interpretation of the Arabic, or subjective interpolations.

23:63[2] Arabic: ghamra. See note to 23:54.

23:63[3] Translations and understandings at this point vary. Logically, given the argument for parsing as we have (see note above to this verse), this refers to the parenthetical segment at 23:57-62.

23:63[4] Arabic: min dūni. See note to 2:23.

23:63[5] Translations and understandings at this point vary. However, parsed as here (see note above to this verse), 'that' refers back to 23:53. While Muhammad Asad does not correlate these two verses in his comment, he confirms the point: Namely, actions and dogmatic assertions which utterly contradict the teachings of the very apostles whom they claim to follow, like ascribing divine qualities to beings other than God, worshipping saints, or rejecting divine revelations which do not accord with their own likes and dislikes or with their customary mode of thinking.

23:64[1] Arabic: ḥattā iḏhā. See note to 3:152.

23:66[1] Arabic: āyāt. See Notepad VIII.

23:67[1] Muhammad Asad comments here: Lit., "as one who keeps awake at night" (samiran). In combination with the phrase kuntum[...] tahjurun, this expression indicates the pursuit of endless, fruitless discussions divorced from all reality, or a mere play with words leading nowhere.

23:68[1] Arabic: qawl — speech, teaching, doctrine, word. Taken by some to mean the Qur'an. This is possible, though I think it may more logically refer to the verses which follow, when taken as sequential 'hanging am' statements (see note to 21:21).

23:68[2] Arabic: am. See note to 21:21.

23:68[3] I.e. if this is the claim.

23:69[1] Arabic: am. See note to 21:21.

23:69[2] I.e. if this is the claim.

23:70[1] Arabic: am. See note to 21:21.

23:70[2] I.e. if this is the claim. Lit.: there is possession in him. Arabic: jinna. See Article SJC.

23:70[3] Arabic: bal. See note to 2:88. The answers to the three claims above follow here and in the next verse.

23:70[4] Arabic: bil ḥaqqi. See Notepad XVII (bil ḥaqqi i.).

23:70[5] Arabic: bil ḥaqqi. See Notepad XVII (bil ḥaqqi i.).

23:71[1] Arabic: al ḥaqq. See Notepad XVII (al ḥaqq i.).

23:71[2] See vain desires at 2:78, 2:111, 2:120, 2:145, 4:123, 4:123, 5:48, 5:49, 5:77, 6:56, 6:119, 6:150, 13:37, 23:71, 28:50, 30:29, 42:15, 45:18, 47:14, 47:16, 54:3, 57:14.

23:71[3] Arabic: bal. See note to 2:88.

23:71[4] Arabic: ḏhikr — calling to mind, recalling, reminding; remembrance (of something past); history. The Qur'an contains numerous histories treating of many people and places. Many of those histories — as here — have a generic application. The Qur'an contains multiple pastiches of archetypal responses to truth. Those who turn away from the Qur'an in the manner and on the basis it describes fail to recognise the Qur'an's description of themselves.

23:71[5] Arabic: ḏhikr — calling to mind, recalling, reminding; remembrance (of something past); history.

23:72[1] Arabic: am. See note to 21:21.

23:72[2] I.e. if this is the claim made against the Messenger (i.e. were this to be the case — which we know from clear Qur'anic statements it wasn't); the answer follows immediately. Arabic: kharj — wages or payment which is due to one. This word occurs only once more, at 18:94.

23:74[1] See note to 58:4 for Qur'anic usage of to believe in.

23:75[1] Cf. 2:15.

23:76[1] Sc. that they might return. This verse and the one following sit at odds with the conditional nature of what immediately precedes at 23:75. I can offer an explanation for the meaning of 23:76-77 which is grounded in the text. It is that these two verses provide clear allusions to two other parts of the Qur'an — the first allusion being found in the opening line of 23:76, and the second in the closing line of 23:77. Here at 23:76, the allusion is to the story of Mūsā's mission to Fir'awn at 43:46-56. The opening line of 23:76 contains 'We seized them with the punishment' (Arabic: akhaḏhnāhum bi al ʿaḏhāb). This exact statement occurs only once more in the Qur'an, at 43:48. There it is followed by the statement which I have supplied here as an ellipsis (it will be remembered that ellipsis is commonly used to supply a tentative or non-binding conclusion or thought — here, the idea that 'they might return' is obsolete in the case to which it alludes, since it is too late for such an eventuality for the followers of Fir'awn, although it has an application for those yet living). Discussion of the allusion found at 22:77 is supplied in a note to that verse.

23:77[1] Arabic: ḥattā iḏhā. See note to 3:152.

23:77[2] In the note to 23:76, that verse is demonstrated to contain an implicit allusion to 43:46-56 by virtue of an exact correlation in phrasing between the opening segment of 23:76 and 43:46-56. I regard 23:77 likewise as an allusion — here on the basis of its closing phrase. This verse ends with 'they are therein in despair' (Arabic: hum fihi mublisūn) which connects it ineluctably with 43:74-77, the segment which, at 43:75, contains the only other instance of this precise statement. That segment describes the lawbreakers in Gehenna begging to be put out of their misery, and is followed by a statement at 43:78 in which mention of being averse to the truth (which features above at 23:70) is found also.

23:78[1] I.e. minds, intellect.

23:79[1] Arabic: dẖara'a. This verb has connotations of to sow (many or different things); to seed; to create; to produce. Occurs at 6:136, 7:179, 16:13, 23:79, 42:11, 67:24.

23:93[1] I.e. their destruction. The argument that the people who first received the witness of the Qur'an were destroyed is set out in my book The God Protocol.

23:94[1] Arabic: ẓālimūn. See note to 2:229.

23:96[1] Arabic: sayyi'a. See Notepad XI.ix.

23:96[2] I.e. their inner dialogue, their worldview, the terms in which they explain reality to themselves and upon which they act.

23:97[1] Arabic: hamazāt (pl.) — goad, jibe, urge; also slander. Cf. 104:1.

23:97[2] Or adversaries (against the command of God). See Article SJC.

23:99[1] Arabic: ḥattā iḏẖā. See note to 3:152.

23:100[1] Arabic: kallā. This exclamation operates also as a pan-textual marker. See 74:16 and note thereto.

23:100[2] I.e. it is merely words; he would not do what he says.

23:100[3] So far as we know, we live in this world but once. The notion of reincarnation finds no purchase in the Qur'an.

23:102[1] Cf. 2:5, 3:104, 7:8, 7:157, 9:88, 23:102, 24:51, 30:38, 31:5, 59:9, 64:16.

23:105[1] Arabic: āyāt. See Notepad VIII.

23:107[1] I.e. to what we were doing.

23:107[2] Arabic: ẓālimūn. See note to 2:229.

23:110[1] I.e. those who believed.

23:110[2] The general understanding here is that those taken in derision, directly or indirectly, cause the mockers 'to forget My remembrance'. More likely, in my opinion, is that this is a reference to 'the adversaries' at 23:97-98. This view finds pan-textual support at 6:68, 12:42, 18:63 and most strongly at 58:19.

23:110[3] Arabic: ḏẖikr — calling to mind, recalling, reminding; remembrance (of something past); history.

23:113[1] Muhammad Asad comments here: This part of the allegorical "dialogue" between God and the doomed sinners touches (as do several other verses of the Qur'an) upon the illusory, problematical character of "time" as conceived by man, and the comparative irrelevancy of the life of this world within the context of the ultimate perhaps timeless - reality known only to God. The disappearance, upon resurrection, of man's earth-bound concept of time is indicated by the helpless answer, "ask those who are able to count time".

23:114[1] Sc. how short it was to be! Muhammad Asad supplies this ellipsis, and I agree.

23:116[1] Arabic: al ḥaqq. See Notepad XVII (al ḥaqq i.).

23:116[2] Cf. 2:255, 3:2, 3:6, 3:18, 3:18, 4:87, 6:102, 6:106, 7:158, 9:129, 13:30, 20:8, 20:98, 23:116, 27:26, 28:70, 28:88, 35:3, 39:6, 40:3, 40:62, 40:65, 44:8, 59:22, 59:23, 64:13, 73:9.

24:1[1] Arabic: sūrah. See note to 2:23.

24:1[2] Arabic: āyāt. See Notepad VIII.

24:2[1] The root (z-n-y) conveys senses of unlawful sexual intercourse (sexual congress between people who are not married to each other) and occurs at 17:32, 24:2, 24:2, 24:3, 24:3, 24:3, 24:3, 25:68, 60:12.

24:2[2] Grammar: dual. The grammar itself makes clear that such people are both to be punished. In those countries called Islamic, this stipulation is routinely ignored, even in those rare cases where the witness requirement and punishment is as found in the Qur'an. All too often a woman is punished alone, a practice which falls directly foul of this verse.

24:2[3] The Traditionalist claims that this applies only to those who are not unmarried and that in cases where the people are married (to other people) the punishment is stoning to death. He can point to no Qur'anic justification for this. The Qur'anic punishment is clear, and administrable only where there are four reliable witnesses to the fact. Stoning or other forms of capital punishment against fornicators of any kind constitute crimes for which the perpetrators will have to answer to God.

24:2[4] Grammar: dual. See grammar note to the same verse above.

24:2[5] Arabic: dīn. See Notepad V. Cf. 12:76.

24:3[1] The root (z-n-y) conveys senses of unlawful sexual intercourse (sexual congress between two people who are not married to each other) and occurs at 17:32, 24:2, 24:2, 24:3, 24:3, 24:3, 24:3, 25:68, 60:12.

24:4[1] Muhammad Asad comments here: The term muhsanat denotes literally "women who are fortified [against unchastity]", i.e., by marriage and/or faith and self-respect, implying that, from a legal point of view, every woman must be considered chaste unless a conclusive proof to the contrary is produced. (This passage relates to women other than the accuser's own wife, for in the latter case — as shown in verses 6-9 — the law of evidence and the consequences are different.)

24:4[2] A witness is someone who has personally seen an event; there is no other kind.

24:4[3] Arabic root: f-s-q. See note to 2:26 and Notepad XI.vii.

24:5[1] It is my understanding that this allowance extends to both categories of malefactors preceding this point (i.e. fornicators and false witnesses) who repent and amend their lives thereafter, and I think this view is supported at 24:10, 24:20, and 24:21. Muhammad Asad, however, reads this passage differently, commenting here: I.e., who publicly withdraw their accusation after having suffered the punishment of flogging - which, being a legal right of the wrongly accused person, cannot be obviated by mere repentance and admission of guilt. Thus, the above-mentioned exemption relates only to the interdict on giving testimony and not to the punishment by flogging.

24:9[1] Her fifth oath supersedes any claim her husband might make.

24:10[1] Sc. not one of you would have been pure ever. Both this clause and that at 24:20 foreshadow and find their resolution in 24:21. See note to 24:5. The Traditionalist recognises an ellipsis here also, but provides for the elided words on either an ad hoc basis, or imports values from elsewhere.

24:20[1] Sc. not one of you would have been pure ever. See note to 24:10. Most translators accept that there is ellipsis here. Most translations I reviewed import their values here on an ad hoc basis. Muhammad Asad was notable in his connection of this verse to 24:10. The value I discern here is in anticipation of 24:21.

24:21[1] Arabic: allaḏẖīna āmanū. See note to 2:257 and Notepad II.iv.

24:21[2] Or adversary (against the command of God). See Article SJC.

24:21[6] Arabic: zakkā. See note to 2:129.

24:22[1] The placement of this verse suggests to me how those who have been guilty obliquely or unwittingly of such crimes as those outlined above may be expected to absolve themselves.

24:23[1] Their heedlessness consists in the fact that they put themselves in situations where they might be accused.

24:23[2] See note to (al) mu'minūn at 8:2.

24:25[1] Arabic: al ḥaqq. See Notepad XVII (al ḥaqq i.).

24:25[3] Arabic: al ḥaqq. See Notepad XVII (al ḥaqq i.).

24:26[1] My first instinct always where there is an obvious disruption to the narrative flow is to consider what I call implicit punctuation (e.g. parenthesis required by the context). There is a clear case of such disruption here, resolved by means of parenthesis (allowing this point to follow on from 24:22). The subtle implication is that a way remains open to those who have spread calumny against believing women to make good (by means of generosity to those listed at 24:22). That the Traditionalist has been stumped here is clear from the alternative interpretation of 24:26 which developed. According to that interpretation al ḵẖabīṯẖūn (bad men) means bad words, and al ṭayyibāt (good women) means good words. Absent the parsing I present here or subjective interpolations, it was the only way those who wished to make sense of the broader passage were able to do it.

24:26[2] See note to 24:22.

24:27[1] Arabic: allaḏẖīna āmanū. See note to 2:257 and Notepad II.iv.

24:27[2] This is a continuation of the preceding argument concerning accusations of fornication, and of slander. People are to be safe in their own homes against the prying curiosity of non-family members. What happens behind closed doors does not concern the outside world. The world is liberally populated by people who wish to impose themselves and their assumptions upon others. The ruling here protects those who desire privacy from such people.

24:28[1] If people use this provision to commit sins, that is their business. God sees and knows. If they are keeping it out of the public domain and not polluting society, they cannot be punished by society.

24:29[1] Arabic: junāḥ. See Notepad XI.ii.

24:30[1] See note to (al) mu'minūn at 8:2.

24:30[2] It is obvious that men need to use their eyes to operate in the world. It is not possible not to see women as we go about our business. However, men should retain prudent fear of God. And it is a great blessing in that regard if the women in a community treat themselves and their bodies with respect and understand that modesty frees rather than oppresses them.

24:30[3] Arabic: farj (sg.), furūj (pl.). Lit.: openings, gaps, apertures; vulvas. More generally it means chastity or modesty.

24:31[1] See note to (al) mu'minūn at 8:2.

24:31[2] Arabic: farj (sg.), furūj (pl.). Lit.: openings, gaps, apertures; vulvas. More generally it means chastity or modesty.

24:31[3] This provides the Qur'anic dress code for women (see also the imperative to lengthen the dress found at 33:59). The present clause is an ideological battleground in the war to prove a requirement for women to wear what is today called ḥijāb in the Qur'an. The word here is ḵẖumur (sg. ḵẖimār), and the term has acquired so much baggage that the best I can say of it is that it means coverings (certainly, that is the sense of related verb which means to cover, hide, conceal). People from culturally 'Islamic' countries often get emotional because in those cultures ḵẖimār does in fact denote a head-covering. To say that this is what the Qur'an means by the term is another matter. Again, with the word juyūb (here: bosoms), the understanding will depend to a large extent on the required outcome. For example, dyed-in-the-wool Traditionalists Hilali & Khan have here: and to draw their veils all over Juyubihinna (i.e. their bodies, faces, necks and bosoms, etc.). This is a cultural and ideological position, and should be understood as such. Since this is a disproportionately important issue for many people, so I will summarise my own thoughts on it in the following manner: Is it true that the Qur'an requires a head-covering for all believing women? No, it is not. Does the Qur'an require believing women to dress modestly? Yes, it does. Do societies exist in which a head-covering is a requirement of modesty? Yes, there do. Does traditional 'Islamic' dress (i.e. long dress and headscarf) encompass the Qur'anic requirement for believing women? Yes, it does. Is the traditional 'Islamic' dress the same thing as the Qur'anic requirement? No, it is not. Now, while I know the claim that traditional 'Islamic' dress is a Qur'anic imperative to be false, I must add the following point: women are told to dress so that they will be recognised as believers and not harassed (33:59). A headscarf and the other modesty requirements found in traditional 'Islamic' dress together meet this criterion for historical reasons (i.e. such women are, by dint of custom, known to be women of faith). However, traditional Jewish and Christian (Orthodox) women's dress meets these requirements also. Distinct from these observations, it is my opinion that women who choose to dress modestly are providing a great service to themselves, their families, and their societies; I also hold it to be a crime before God to ascribe to the Qur'an imperatives which the Qur'an does not contain. The problem in today's media-driven society, of course, is that the association with faith which the headscarf once had has given way to other associations: those of intellectual and cultural backwardness and unthinking adherence to violent ideologies. Here, as in all things, we are called upon to use our intelligence and discretion within the bounds of fixed principles.

24:31[4] Arabic: irba — skill, resourcefulness, cleverness, smartness. Lane (p. 45) records the meaning here at 24:31 as idiots, or persons deficient in intelligence. However, one could perhaps take the meaning more broadly as one lacking either the physical or the intellectual prowess required to seduce a woman.

24:31[5] They are not to walk in a way that is sexually provocative. The verse makes clear what is meant by adornment in the context, namely: those parts of a woman's anatomy which can be discerned when she walks provocatively.

24:31[6] See note to (al) mu'minūn at 8:2.

24:32[1] Grammar: this is the form IV of the verb and is transitive and denotes giving rather than taking in marriage. This form occurs at 2:221, 24:32 and 28:27.

24:33[1] I.e. find not the means for.

24:33[2] Arabic: al kitāb. See Notepad IX.ii. This can be read either as the writ — i.e. the writing of emancipation, or as the Writ — by appealing, for example, to 24:32. Given that mention of making contracts follows, the former is the more likely case.

24:33[3] I.e. create a contract of emancipation on set terms.

24:33[4] I.e. by making sexual use of them without freeing and marrying them.

24:33[5] Sc. then you should marry them. As with many elliptical statements, the omission is itself a boon, since the overt statement would increase burdens upon men. Muhammad Asad both discerns a similar sense and confirms the position here which is that concubinage outside of marriage is not condoned by the Qur'an. He notes here: Lit., "if they desire protection against unchastity (tahassun)", i.e , through marriage (cf. the expression muhsanat as used in 4:24). Most of the classical commentators are of the opinion that the term fatayat ("maidens") denotes here "slave-girls": an assumption which is fully warranted by the context, Hence, the above verse reiterates the prohibition of concubinage by explicitly describing it as "whoredom" (bigha').

24:33[6] Grammar: feminine plural; i.e. whoso forces women with no legal rights into sexual intercourse.

24:33[7] Grammar: feminine plural.

24:33[8] The woman without legal rights used sexually by one with power over her is not guilty before God, and may — perhaps should — be taken in marriage.

24:34[1] Arabic: āyāt. See Notepad VIII.

24:34[2] See note to al muttaqūn at 2:2.

¶24.5

24:35[1] Abdullah Yusuf Ali makes a delightful comment here which I reproduce in full: The first three points in the Parable centre round the symbols of the Niche, the Lamp, and the Glass. (1) The Niche (Mishkah) is the little shallow recess in the wall of an Eastern house, fairly high from the ground, in which a light (before the days of electricity) was usually placed. Its height enabled it to diffuse the light in the room and minimised the shadows. The background of the wall and the sides of the niche helped throw the light well into the room, and if the wall was white-washed, it also acted as a reflector: the opening in front made the way for the light. So with the spiritual Light: it is placed high above worldly things: it has a niche or habitation of its own, in Revelation and other Signs of God; its access to men is by a special Way, open to all, yet closed to those who refuse its rays. (2) The Lamp is the core of the spiritual Truth, which is the real illumination; the Niche is nothing without it; the Niche is actually made for it. (3) The Glass is the transparent medium through which the Light passes. On the one hand, it protects the light from moths and other forms of low life (lower motives in man) and from gusts of wind (passions), and on the other, it transmits the light through a medium which is made up of and akin to the grosser substances of the earth (such as sand, soda, potash, etc.), so arranged as to admit the subtle to the gross by its transparency. So the spiritual Truth has to be filtered through human language or human intelligence to make it intelligible to mankind.

24:36[1] Translations typically bend this word into conformity with Traditionalist objectives such as mosque. But the word here is houses (Arabic: buyūt), a standard word for describing those places in which men live. The Traditionalist wants a value of mosque because his dominant concern in presenting the Qur'an is to create the impression in the mind of the reader of a connection between it and his religion. Here is the translation by Saheeh International (which is typical of Traditionalist ideology, and moderate ideologically) of the opening part of this verse: [Such niches are] in houses [i.e., mosques]. The translators have inserted the value they wish the reader to absorb in place of houses (namely, mosques). But the text does not use here the word the Traditionalist uses for his places of worship (Arabic: masājid); it uses houses.

24:36[2] See note to s-b-ḥ root at 2:30.

24:37[1] Arabic: dhikr — calling to mind, recalling, reminding; remembrance (of something past); history.

24:39[2] Arabic: ḥattā iḏhā. See note to 3:152.

24:39[3] Lit.: he finds it not something.

24:40[1] I.e. the deeds of those who ignore warning (refers back to 24:39).

24:40[2] Lit.: darknesses.

24:40[3] Lit.: it.

24:40[4] Lit.: it.

¶24.6

24:41[1] Arabic: alam tara. See note to 2:243.

24:41[2] See note to s-b-ḥ root at 2:30.

24:41[3] Or forming ranks. Arabic: ṣaffāt. This is commonly translated as with wings outstretched or equivalents, and I have chosen to follow this convention here. But I cannot tell if this is a case of interpretation affecting definitions, or whether there is genuine etymological substance for this view. However, of note are the following: a) the verb itself treats of positioning in rank or lines (and with the exception of the two verses where birds are mentioned in connection with the participle of this verb — here and at 67:19 — translators generally render according to that accepted sense), and b) there is no mention of wings — the Qur'an uses the word in other contexts but omits to do so here.

24:41[4] Or He. There is an ambiguity here which is expressed in the variation among translations. Saheeh International and Muhammad Asad see the created beings as the subject, while N. J. Dawood, A. J. Arberry, and Hilali & Khan see God as the subject.

24:41[5] Arabic: ṣalāt; i.e. such duty as is incumbent. See note to 2:3 and Article SZC. Generically, ṣalāt denotes duty. Included specifically here are birds. Birds do not fly about to no purpose; they perform duties which devolve upon their kind, often in concert with a partner, and which are established by the decree of God.

24:41[6] See note to s-b-ḥ root at 2:30.

24:43[1] Arabic: alam tara. See note to 2:243.

24:44[1] Arabic: qallaba. This form II verb is found at 6:110, 9:48, 18:18, 18:42, 24:44, 33:66. While some translators adapt their renderings here so as not to conflict with modern ideas (by means of alternates, for example), A. J. Arberry sticks to his principles using turns about — which notion is possible only within the scriptural conception of Earth as an extended plane above which the sun rotates.

24:46[1] Arabic: āyāt. See Notepad VIII.

¶24.7

24:47[1] See note to 58:4 for Qur'anic usage of to believe in.

24:47[2] See note to (al) mu'minūn at 8:2. Cf. 5:43.

24:48[1] Or He or it. Muhammad Asad notes here: I.e., in order that the divine writ - which is implied in the preceding expression "God and His Apostle" might determine their ethical values and, consequently, their social behaviour. No matter how one reads this pronoun, the facts are that the Messenger could judge only by that which God sent down in the Qur'an, and that he is now dead, and what remains is what God sent down in the Qur'an.

24:49[1] Arabic: al ḥaqq. See Notepad XVII (al ḥaqq i.).

24:49[2] Or Him or it. See note to 24:48 above.

24:49[3] Arabic: muḏhʿīnīn. The form IV verb with which this participle originates means to submit, yield, give in, obey; concede voluntarily, grant willingly. While most translations emphasise 'right' here, Muhammad Asad's free rendering of this phrase is instructive: but if the truth happens to be to their liking, they are quite willing to accept it!

24:50[1] Arabic: am. See note to 21:21.

24:50[2] I.e. have reason to fear. See note to 2:182.

24:50[3] I.e. if this is the claim.

24:50[4] Arabic: bal. See note to 2:88.

24:50[5] Arabic: ẓālimūn. See note to 2:229.

24:51[1] Arabic: qawl — speech, teaching, doctrine, word.

24:51[2] See note to (al) mu'minūn at 8:2.

24:51[3] Or He or it. See note to 24:48 above.

24:51[4] Cf. 2:5, 3:104, 7:8, 7:157, 9:88, 23:102, 24:51, 30:38, 31:5, 59:9, 64:16.

24:52[1] I.e. what God sent through his messenger.

24:52[2] See note to al muttaqūn at 2:2.

24:53[1] I.e. actions not words tell the truth.

24:54[1] Or Him or it. See note to 24:48 above; i.e. what God and his messenger (as a single source of information) have told you to do.

24:55[1] Arabic: allaḏhīna āmanū. See note to 2:257 and Notepad II.iv.

24:55[2] Muhammad Asad comments here: [...]i.e., enable them to achieve, in their turn, power and security and, thus, the capability to satisfy their worldly needs. This Qur'anic reference to God's "promise" contains an oblique allusion to the God-willed natural law which invariably makes the rise and fall of nations dependent on their moral qualities. I would add that while I agree with Asad's assessment, by the measure of the manifest failure of the 'Islamic' societies, one is left in no doubt that they do not meet the Qur'anic standard, and blaming one's failures on outside intervention and interests does not change that reality.

24:55[3] Arabic: dīn. See Notepad V.

24:55[4] See note to Arabic root: sh-r-k at 6:78 and Notepad VI.

24:55[5] Arabic root: f-s-q. See note to 2:26 and Notepad XI.vii.

24:56[1] Arabic: aqīmū al ṣalāt; i.e. uphold such duty as is incumbent. See note to 2:3 and Article SZC.

24:56[2] Arabic: ātū al zakāt. See note to 2:43 and Article SZC. Given one of the principal aspects we discern within the term al zakāt of maintaining exclusively chaste sexual relations (i.e. of sexual relations only after payment of a bride price by a man to a woman), 24:55 takes on a fresh connotation. J. D. Unwin's Sex And Culture (1934) is described on the back cover as: '[...]a landmark study of 86 civilisations through 5,000 years of history and found a positive correlation between the cultural achievement of a people and the sexual restraint they observe. The evidence is that human societies are free to choose either to display great strength or to enjoy sexual freedom; it appears they cannot do both for more than one generation.' When the West was chaste, it was dynamic. Now that it is become openly hedonistic, it is weak and confused. Such happens to any culture. According to Muhammad Asad, Zamakhshari treated 24:55 as parenthetical, as I have done here.

24:56[3] I.e. what God sent through his messenger (see note to 24:54).

24:57[1] Arabic: allaḏhīna kafarū. See note to 2:6 and Notepad II.i.

24:57[2] Or frustrate or cause failure i.e. to God.

24:58[1] Arabic: allaḏhīna āmanū. See note to 2:257 and Notepad II.iv.

24:58[2] I.e. such children who have reached an age where they are capable of understanding this imperative.

24:58[3] Arabic: ṣalāt; i.e. such duty as is incumbent. See note to 2:3 and Article SZC. In the context, surely this indicates awakening and dressing.

24:58[4] Given the values of particular prayers which the Traditionalist enforces in this verse and his value for what he calls the afternoon prayer at 2:238, the absence here of comparable allowances for the afternoon as those given for the dawn and night is problematic for him.

24:58[5] Arabic: ṣalāt; i.e. such duty as is incumbent. See note to 2:3 and Article SZC. In the context, surely this indicates undressing and lying down to sleep.
24:58[6] Some render here using privacy and synonyms, but the word means exposure or (a condition of) being uncovered. Muhammad Asad adds here: Lit., "three [periods] of nakedness (thalath 'awrat) for you". This phrase is to be understood both literally and figuratively. Primarily, the term 'awrah signifies those parts of a mature person's body which cannot in decency be exposed to any but one's wife or husband or, in case of illness, one's physician. In its tropical sense, it is also used to denote spiritual "nakedness", as well as situations and circumstances in which a person is entitled to absolute privacy. The number "three" used twice in this context is not, of course, enumerative or exclusive, but is obviously meant to stress the recurrent nature of the occasions on which even the most familiar members of the household, including husbands, wives and children, must respect that privacy.

24:61[2] Arabic: junāḥ. See Notepad XI.ii.
24:61[3] Lit.: your souls.
24:61[4] The focus of the chapter returns here to protecting society from contact with, or the promotion of, public immorality. By the requirement to state loudly one's desire to enter a house, many problems, embarrassments, and other social complications are avoided. Cf. 24:27.
24:61[5] Arabic: bayyana. See note to 2:69.

24:62[1] See note to (al) mu'minūn at 8:2.
24:62[2] See note to 58:4 for Qur'anic usage of to believe in.
24:62[3] Such pronouncements can relate only to a time when the Messenger was alive. The Traditionalist wishes to impose upon statements of a similar type the implication of an obligation binding upon the believer today. Such sleight of hand operates upon the cultic mindset and finds traction in the unwillingness to exercise the intellect on the part of the target.
24:62[4] See note to 58:4 for Qur'anic usage of to believe in.
24:63[1] Arabic: liwāḏh — furtively, stealthily, surreptitiously. This is the only instance of this root.
24:63[2] Or his.
24:63[3] We would expect the Traditionalist to latch on to this statement for his own ends, and he does not disappoint. Hilali & Khan have here: And let those who oppose the Messenger's (Muhammad SAW) commandment (i.e. his Sunnah legal ways, orders, acts of worship, statements, etc.) (among the sects) beware, lest some Fitnah (disbelief, trials, afflictions, earthquakes, killing, overpowered by a tyrant, etc.) befall them or a painful torment be inflicted on them. Firstly, 'His command' follows mention of God, and most probably applies to God. But even if one does not accept that reading, the verse following serves as a severe implied warning not to follow doubtful sources (and the only text which all Muslims of the world accept is the Qur'an). And, lastly, if one rejects both these points, there is no denying that it is inconsistent to take this imperative literally today (albeit by ascribing force of Muḥammad's command to books written by others centuries later) when what precedes this statement treats of a time in which Muḥammad was alive (so why then do those who read as Hilali & Khan suggest not also ask leave of Muḥammad to withdraw?). In short, it is impossible to maintain the assumptions Hilali & Khan invest in this clause across either the broader segment, or the text as a whole.
24:63[4] Arabic: fitnah. See note to 2:102.
24:64[1] Arabic: alā. See note to 2:12.
24:64[2] Lit.: what you are upon; i.e. what basis you have for confidence, the condition of your souls.

25:0[2] The twenty-fifth chapter of the Qur'an is by convention called al furqān or The Division.
25:1[1] Arabic: furqān. In the Qur'an, furqān has a connotation of division between the people of God and the world at large; those who believe and those who reject. The Traditionalist claims this word as a title of the Qur'an at 25:1. That view does not survive consideration of all contexts (2:53, 2:185, 3:4, 8:29, 8:41, 21:48, 25:1). See also note to furqān at 2:53.
25:2[1] See note to Arabic root: s̲h-r-k at 6:78 and Notepad VI.
25:2[2] Lit.: ordained it with ordinance.
25:3[1] Arabic: min dūni. See note to 2:23.
25:4[1] Arabic: alladhīna kafarū. See note to 2:6 and Notepad II.i.
25:5[1] The Traditionalist position is that Muḥammad was illiterate. This is the only instance of the form VIII of this verb, and means to write down, to transcribe. It is true that Lane (p. 2648) also records a value of to ask (for something) to be written, but this may be a later development arising in stories about the Prophet as illiterate. This explains renderings such as 'he has caused to be written' and the like which some translators offer.
25:7[1] Arabic: lawlā. See Notepad XIV.
25:8[1] The three scenarios just listed are those in which those who reject the Messenger would — according to their claim — take him seriously.
25:8[2] Arabic: ẓālimūn. See note to 2:229.
25:8[3] Arabic: masḥūrūn from siḥr — sorcery. See note to 2:102.

25:11[1] Arabic: bal. See note to 2:88.
25:11[2] Man is given a brain. He is surrounded by evidence. He knows that he is bound to die, and is supposed to draw conclusions on the basis of that fact. If he refuses to do so — or insists on drawing ones which are at odds with reality — certain repercussions become unavoidable.
25:12[1] I.e. of fire (Lane, p. 1242). Cf. 11:106, 21:100.
25:13[1] Arabic: minhā. This tends to be elided as it is difficult to include, but the feminine object suggests to me Fire in the context. A. J. Arberry makes this association explicit in his rendering: of that Fire.
25:13[2] Lit.: much destruction!
25:15[1] See note to al muttaqūn at 2:2.
25:16[1] I.e. by men or by angels. Also understood to mean to be fulfilled.
25:17[1] Arabic: min dūni. See note to 2:23.
25:18[1] See note to s-b-ḥ root at 2:30.

25:18[2] Arabic: min dūni. See note to 2:23.
25:18[3] Arabic: ḏh̲ikr — calling to mind, recalling, reminding; remembrance (of something past); history.
25:19[1] Those objects of worship mentioned at 25:3.
25:19[2] The presence of qad indicates a perfective idea; this fact indicates the opening of this verse as words of God on the Day of Judgment. Muhammad Asad identifies the same thrust in his translation: [Thereupon God will say:] "And now, they [whom you regarded as divine] have given the lie to[...].
25:19[3] Those who advance arguments against the Messenger of the type found at 25:4-8.
25:19[4] I.e. the punishment to come. See also note to this verse below.
25:19[5] Or to obtain victory; i.e. against the punishment to come. While I comply with the typical rendering of this noun in the translation, I see a case here for naṣr as victory (or to obtain victory as it would be as an object of the verb to be able). Under that reading, the sense is that those addressed can neither avert the punishment to come, nor defeat it by any means. I have parsed this segment outside of the direct speech which opens the verse; this draws the narrative back to the present — the context in which this reading has relevance. I mention Muhammad Asad's approach — which is similar to that taken here — in a note to this verse above. Other translators seem divided along lines of worldview, with non-sectarians N. J. Dawood and A. J. Arberry opening in the prophetic past, and then moving briskly to the present tense as do I (e.g. A. J. Arberry: So they cried lies touching the things you say, and you can neither turn it aside, nor find any help. Whosoever of you does evil, We shall let him taste a great chastisement.) Meanwhile, Traditionalists Saheeh International and Hilali & Khan render the opening with a future aspect which then also falls back quickly to the present (e.g. Hilali & Khan: Thus they (false gods all deities other than Allah) will give you (polytheists) the lie regarding what you say (that they are gods besides Allah), then you can neither avert (the punishment), nor get help. And whoever among you does wrong (i.e. sets up rivals to Allah), We shall make him taste a great torment). See also notes to this verse above.
25:20[1] Arabic: fitnah. See note to 2:102.

25:21[1] Arabic: lawlā. See Notepad XIV.
25:22[1] I.e. something which cannot be crossed and which divides one type of man from another; see 25:53 for the same convention in a different context. Here at 25:22, some Traditionalist translators impose upon the text without either restraint or cognisance of excess; for example, Hilali & Khan give us: On the Day they will see the angels, no glad tidings will there be for the Mujrimun (criminals, disbelievers, polytheists, sinners, etc.) that day. And they (angels) will say: "All kinds of glad tidings are forbidden for you," [None will be allowed to enter Paradise except the one who said: La ilaha ill-Allah, "(none has the right to be worshipped but Allah) and acted practically on its legal orders and obligations]. By way of comparison, we might consider non-sectarian A. J. Arberry's rendering: Upon the day that they see the angels, no good tidings that day for the sinners; they shall say, 'A ban forbidden!' Both here and at 25:53, we render this convention as Hilali & Khan themselves do at 25:53: a complete partition.

25:29[2] Or adversary (against the command of God). See Article SJC.
25:30[1] Arabic: qur'ān — reading, recital, recitation, something which is read out.
25:30[2] Violent and emotional protestations by excitable persons notwithstanding, this verse is fully realised in the actions of those who claim to be the people of Muḥammad. As a generalisation, they sing the Qur'an — sometimes very nicely — but they treat the book itself as a relic; in terms of practicalities it is abandoned in favour of traditions, inventions, man-made isms, etc. The Qur'an is not, as supposed, the foundation of the religion called Islam; were it fully removed, apart from the loss of the daily liturgy in which the Traditionalist reminds God of some small part of what He gave men to live by, there would be no discernible difference to the religion as commonly understood and practiced. For context my reading of this verse is the one accepted by the Traditionalist himself. The Traditionalist translators at Saheeh International — with no apparent cognisance of irony — supply the following note to the end of this verse: i.e., avoiding it, not listening to or understanding it, not living by it, or preferring something else to it. Hava's Arabic-English Dictionary lists uncouth (word), (absurd) speech, in addition to forsaken as the definitions of the Arabic word here mahjūr (thanks to Said Mirza for bringing this point to my attention).
25:31[1] This clearly applies to Muḥammad also since he was a prophet. Cf. 6:112.

25:38[1] Arabic: al rass — the commencement, the beginning. On the basis of my note to 15:78 I take rass as a common noun the meaning of which is commencement, beginning (see Lane, p. 1085). This much granted, it is reasonable to infer that the term denotes those who came after the Flood. This is, clearly, speculation — albeit speculation consistent with the broader narrative and usage found in the Qur'an, but I render as is common in the translation and confine my views to the notes. While I am neutral on Muhammad Asad's assertions here, I repeat part of his note on this point for interest: As for Al-Rass, a town of that name exists to this day in the Central-Arabian province of Al-Qasim; in the ancient times referred to it seems to have been inhabited by descendants of the Nabataean tribe of Thamud (Tabari). There is, however no agreement among the commentators as to the real meaning of this name or designation; Razi cites several of the current, conflicting interpretations and rejects all of them as purely conjectural.
25:38[2] I.e. God also destroyed.
25:39[1] Lit.: We destroyed with destruction.

25:40[1] A clear indication of the city of Lūṭ. This may be claimed as support for the location of al masjid al ḥarām at Petra and, perhaps, for the broader proposal that Muḥammad was originally an inhabitant of that city if we agree with the Dead Sea as the locus for the cities of Lūṭ; the Arabia Felix thesis advances an alternative location. Mecca is many hundreds of miles from either location. See Notepad XVI.

25:45[1] Arabic: alam tara. See note to 2:243.
25:45[2] Arabic: dalīl — indication; proof, evidence; guide, pilot.
25:46[1] I have rendered here tersely, and in conformity with the principles which guide the broader translation, to the best of my ability. However, the reader should know that readings of this verse vary markedly. My own reading is closest to that of A. J. Arberry, who renders: thereafter We seize it to Ourselves, drawing it gently; but N. J. Dawood has: little by little We shorten them; Saheeh International has: Then We hold it in hand for a brief grasp, augmented by a note which reads: i.e., when the sun is overhead at noon; Hilali & Khan have: Then We withdraw it to Us a gradual concealed withdrawal; and Muhammad Asad has: and then, [after having caused it to lengthen,] We draw it in towards Ourselves with a gradual drawing-in, which he augments with a note: I.e., "We cause it to contract in accordance with the 'laws of nature' which We Ourselves have instituted." As in so many other instances in the Qur'an, the abrupt change from the third-person pronoun "He" to "We" is meant to illustrate the fact that God is undefinable, and that it is only the inadequacy of human speech - and, hence, of the human mind - that makes it necessary to refer to the Supreme Being by pronouns which in reality are applicable only to finite-created "persons".
25:48[1] Lit.: between (the) two hands. See note to 2:66.
See note to 2:66.
25:50[1] Many translators see this clause as a continuation of the motif of water above. I do not, and maintain the same value for this form II verb here as throughout (6:46, 6:65, 6:105, 7:58, 17:41, 17:89, 18:54, 20:113, 25:50, 46:27). While I take the object as the Qur'an alone, Muhammad Asad supplies a comment which comports to some extent with the view here: [...]a reference to the frequent, many-faceted reiteration, in the Qur'an as well as in earlier revelations, of all the evidence unmistakably pointing to the existence of a conscious Creator (Zamakhshari).
25:52[1] Arabic: al kāfirūn. See note to 2:19 and Notepad II.iii.
25:52[2] I.e. using that which is expounded, namely the Qur'an (see 25:50 and note thereto).
25:53[1] Grammar: dual.
25:53[2] Cf. 25:22 and note thereto.
25:55[1] Arabic: min dūni. See note to 2:23.
25:55[2] Arabic: al kāfir. Typically rendered the unbeliever. See note to 2:19 and Notepad II.iii.
25:56[1] A clear statement of the remit given to the Messenger.
25:58[1] See note to s-b-ḥ root at 2:30.
25:58[2] Arabic: dhunūb. See Notepad XI.iv.
25:59[1] Grammar: dual.
25:59[2] Arabic: 'ayyām — days; aeons, eras.
25:59[4] Or Him. Since God has identified Himself as one aware at 25:58, I have to see the same convention at this verse as referring likewise to God. It is impossible that him could be the value here, since that would leave the Messenger being instructed to ask himself. That leaves it as a possible object. What it could indicate is, to me, clear from the context: the creation of the heavens and the earth. However, there are other readings possible, for which see note to this verse below.
25:59[5] I.e. God. Some (but not all) Traditionalists choose here to move the 'thou' narrative to the individual believer, and regard this statement as an imperative to seek knowledge from the Messenger (in the form today of the books written about him which he neither saw nor authorised, naturally). Saheeh International, for example, has here: so ask about Him one well informed [i.e., the Prophet (ṣ)]. Hilali & Khan, however, do not take this tack, and render: Ask Him (O Prophet Muhammad SAW), (concerning His Qualities, His rising over His Throne, His creations, etc.), as He is Al-Khabir (The All-Knower of everything i.e. Allah). Muhammad Asad is closest in his reasoning to what we present in this work, and supplies the following comment: I.e., "ask God Himself": since He alone holds the keys to the mysteries of the universe, it is only by observing His creation and listening to His revealed messages that man can obtain a glimpse, however distant, of God's Own reality.
25:60[1] Arabic: sajada. See Notepad IV.

¶25.6

25:61[1] See also note to 10:5.
25:63[2] Or gently, or humbly.
25:63[3] Lit.: say, "Peace." I.e. speak peaceably, words of peace.
25:64[1] Arabic: sajada. See Notepad IV.
25:65[1] As is common with translating direct speech from Classical Arabic, which uses no speech marks, the decision of where to close speech marks in the English translation is a matter of interpretation. I choose to close here; some other translators close at the end of this verse, and others still at the end of the next. I see the intervening text between this point and 25:67 as a parenthetical interlude within the narrative future.
25:68[1] Arabic: bil ḥaqqi. See Notepad XVII (bil ḥaqqi ii.).
25:68[2] The root (z-n-y) conveys senses of unlawful sexual intercourse (sexual congress between two people who are not married to each other) and occurs at 17:32, 24:2, 24:2, 24:3, 24:3, 24:3, 24:3, 25:68, 60:12.
25:68[3] Arabic: a'thām. This word is a synonym of ma'tham and ithm (sin, offence, crime) (Lane, p. 22).
25:70[1] Arabic: sayyi'āt. See Notepad XI.x.
25:71[1] Lit.: repents[...] in repentance.
25:73[1] Arabic: āyāt. See Notepad VIII.
25:74[1] Arabic: imām — leader; master; plumb line; standard, criterion; example, model.
25:74[2] See note to al muttaqūn at 2:2.
25:75[1] Or (high) room or abode; i.e. a place of honour.
25:77[1] Arabic: du'ā — call, supplication; summons. My understanding of this verse may be stated as: When you were ignorant, God did not concern Himself with you, but now that you have received a call and rejected what He sent you, dealing with you has become incumbent upon Him (cf. 2:38-39). However, other readings exist. Hilali & Khan, for example, have: Say (O Muhammad SAW to the disbelievers): "My Lord pays attention to you only because of your invocation to Him. But now you have indeed denied (Him). So the torment will be yours for ever (inseparable permanent punishment)." Meanwhile, N. J. Dawood takes a different view, especially of the opening clause: Say: 'Little cares my Lord if you do not invoke Him. Now that you have denied His revelations, His punishment is bound to overtake you.'

25:77[2] I.e. that he should concern himself with you; see note to the same verse above.
25:77[3] Arabic: lizām — necessity, requirement, exigency. This word occurs also at 20:129, to which verse a note is supplied.

26:4[1] Arabic: āya. See Notepad VIII.
26:4[2] I.e. God could force men to believe. Muhammad Asad comments here: Inasmuch as the spiritual value of man's faith depends on its being an outcome of free choice and not of compulsion, the visible or audible appearance of a "message from the skies" would, by its very obviousness, nullify the element of free choice and, therefore, deprive man's faith in that message of all its moral significance.
26:5[1] Arabic: dhikr — calling to mind, recalling, reminding; remembrance (of something past); history.

26:14[1] Arabic: dhanb. See Notepad XI.iv.
26:15[1] Arabic: kallā. This exclamatory statement occurs just twice in direct speech (at 26:15 and 26:62). At 26:15 it is in the context of God commissioning Mūsā to enter Fir'awn's territory and bring out the children of Israel. At 26:62 it occurs at the symmetrically opposite point: at the moment of the parting of the sea as Mūsā leads the children of Israel out of Fir'awn's territory. Together this pair offsets the broader set of pan-textual markers comprising kallā (see note to 74:16).
26:15[2] Grammar: dual.
26:15[3] Arabic: āyāt. See Notepad VIII.
26:15[4] Grammar: dual.
26:16[1] Grammar: dual.
26:16[2] Arabic: fir'awn. See note to 2:49.
26:16[3] Grammar: dual.
26:16[4] Arabic: rasūl — messenger. The message was one, and the emphasis is not on the Messenger but on the message. Messenger-worship (as with the majority of Christians) and messenger cults (as with the majority of Muslims) are simply stages — practiced over ages and in many different cultures — in the process of the dilution and pollution of a message sent by God. What happened in both cases is that the doctrine of the Messenger became a doctrine about a messenger.
26:17[1] Many translators — under the influence of the King James Bible — render here and in other such places: let the children of Israel go. This creates an image in the mind of the reader of a people straining to leave. This is not the picture which emerges in the Arabic of the Qur'an.
26:19[1] Arabic: al kāfirūn. See note to 2:19 and Notepad II.iii. The value we are using throughout for al kāfirūn fits here, without modification, Fir'awn's usage of it; Fir'awn is accusing Mūsā of hypocrisy — of a contradiction between his words and his actions — and our value fits perfectly (for detailed analysis of this and related subjects, see my work The God Protocol). The Traditionalist's assumed value of infidel or unbeliever would be ludicrous here, and he typically switches to ungrateful or synonyms at this point to accommodate that fact.
26:20[1] Arabic: al ḍālūn. See note to 3:90. Mainstream factions within the cult known as Islam have a doctrine which claims that all prophets and messengers were sinless. Such a doctrine is refuted in multiple places in the Qur'an. God uses men who repent of their past misdeeds, make right if they are able, and then serve him.
26:21[1] Note the change to the plural object; Fir'awn was not a purely autocratic tyrant; a careful reading of the Qur'an's treatment of him shows a man operating within a complex power structure.
26:23[1] Arabic: fir'awn. See note to 2:49.
26:24[1] Grammar: dual. Qur'anic definition: rabb al 'ālamīn. Mūsā's response provides the definitive Qur'anic definition for this collocation, rendered in this work Lord of All Creation. See note to 1:2.
26:24[2] Grammar: the shift to the plural indicates an appeal to the wider audience — an appeal which Fir'awn counters.
26:24[3] Arabic: yaqina. See note to 2:4. The argument here is staccato. This is not a leisurely debate. Mūsā is following his tack, delivering his message, and Fir'awn is interrupting him. The present thought is completed at 44:7-8. Instances where speech either trails off or is clipped through interruption are found at 2:138, 6:143, 6:144, 10:22, 12:94, 26:24, 26:26, 26:28, 43:9, 58:22, 77:11, 84:5.
26:25[1] Fir'awn's tactics are instructive: at 26:25 he mocks the message; at 26:27 he mocks the Messenger; at 26:29 he threatens the Messenger with physical violence; then when his bluff is called he puts the ruling elite in fear of losing its position of dominance (26:34-35).
26:25[2] In modern English parlance: Well, would you listen to that!
26:26[1] Instances where speech either trails off or is clipped through interruption are found at 2:138, 6:143, 6:144, 10:22, 12:94, 26:24, 26:26, 26:28, 43:9, 58:22, 77:11, 84:5.

26:28[1] Grammar: dual.
26:28[2] Instances where speech either trails off or is clipped through interruption are found at 2:138, 6:143, 6:144, 10:22, 12:94, 26:24, 26:26, 26:28, 43:9, 58:22, 77:11, 84:5.

26:54[1] This statement is difficult to integrate with the dominant Egypt-Palestine thesis as held by those with a literal view of the account in the Hebrew Bible which puts the number of the children of Israel at around 600,000 men plus women and children (Exodus 12:37). See Notepad XVI.
26:56[1] Arabic: jamīʿ — (in a state of) collection, congregation, or union; being together; met together (Lane, p. 460). Muhammad Asad's more flamboyant rendering provides a useful perspective: we are, verily, a nation united, fully prepared against danger.

¶26.5 26:69[1] If one considers this chapter as a whole and the preponderance of stories pertaining to warning and destruction it contains, the fact of the inclusion in it of the story of Ibrāhīm suggests that his people were also destroyed after his witness to them. See my work The God Protocol for more on this.

26:83[1] Arabic: ḥukm — judgment, wisdom.
26:84[1] In my opinion, this prayer has been answered in the Qur'an. The account of Abraham in Genesis is defamatory in the extreme, grants no backstory or context for God's choice of Abraham (other than God's fortuitous, prescient appreciation of the 'Jewishness' of many of his progeny — at least, given the application of the Hebrew scriptures by those called Jews today), and has clearly been redacted to serve questionable purposes. When read dispassionately, the actions of the character called Abraham in Genesis are suspect in many cases and unbefitting a person of even average moral fibre, to say nothing of a prophet of God. This calumny is fully dispatched by the Qur'an which presents Ibrāhīm in a fitting light.

26:127[1] I.e. incumbent upon.
26:128[1] Arabic: āya. See Notepad VIII; i.e. of your greatness. Muhammad Asad adds here: The noun ayah, which primarily denotes "a sign" or "a token", evidently refers here to the ancient Semitic custom of worshipping the tribal gods on hilltops, which were crowned to this end by sacrificial altars or monuments, each of them devoted to a particular deity: hence my rendering of ayah, in this particular context, as "altars" (in the plural).
26:128[2] Abdullah Yusuf Ali comments here: Any merely material civilisation prides itself on show and parade. Its votaries scatter monuments for all sorts of things in conspicuous places-monuments which commemorate deeds and events which are forgotten in a few generations! Cf. Shelley's poem on Ozymandias: "I am Ozymandias. King of Kings! Look on my works, ye mighty, and despair!...Boundless and bare the lonely and level sands stretch far away!"

26:130[1] I.e. as ones who take no consideration of moral restraint. Muhammad Asad comments here: The term jabbar, when applied to man, as a rule denotes one who is haughty, overbearing, exorbitant and cruel, and does not submit to any moral restraints in his dealings with those who are weaker than himself. Sometimes (as, e.g., in 11:59 or 14:15) this term is used to describe a person's negative ethical attitude, and in that case it may be rendered as "enemy of the truth". In the present instance, however, stress is laid on the tyrannical behaviour of the tribe of 'Ad, evidently relating to their warlike conflicts with other people: and in this sense it expresses a Qur'anic prohibition, valid for all times, of all unnecessary cruelty in warfare, coupled with the positive, clearly-implied injunction to subordinate every act of war - as well as the decision to wage war as such - to moral considerations and restraints.

26:157[1] Muhammad Asad comments here: The verb 'aqara primarily denotes "he hamstrung [an animal]"- i.e., before slaughtering it, so that it might not run away. This barbarous custom was widely practiced in pre-Islamic Arabia, so that 'aqr ("hamstringing") gradually became synonymous with slaughtering in a cruel manner (Razi; see also Lane V, 2107 f.).

26:166[1] Arabic: bal. See note to 2:88.
26:166[2] The Qur'an does not treat sodomites as victims of genetics, or of anything else; it presents them as transgressors (26:166) and as people expressing an irrational choice (11:78) — one born of ignorance (27:55). It reproves them as transgressors, much in the same way as it reproves transgressors of a number of types (political, economic, and so forth). There is no question but that male homosexual acts are wrong within the purview of the Qur'an. However, one should remember that those who practice sodomy are under no compulsion to be believers themselves (cf. 2:256). Logically, should a particular man be a believer but find himself afflicted with drives he chooses to regard as too powerful to control, should he wish to renounce his faith in favour of sodomy, that is nobody's business but his own so long as he does not impact the believing society with his sin. The Qur'an safeguards people's privacy in their homes against prying persons (24:27, 24:61), a right a sodomite should enjoy as much as anyone else. Within the Qur'anic jurisprudence binding upon believers, then, male-on-male penetrative sex is sexual immorality, fundamentally wrong, and taboo. It logically falls under the same legislation and punitive requirements as sexual intercourse outside marriage of any other type (marriage being recognised only between one male and up to four females). However, the Qur'anic mood is not one of instant and total condemnation; comparable contexts suggest that wrong action should be discouraged and reproved by friends and 'let be' if people repent and reform (cf. 4:16-17), and there can be punishment only when specific circumstances are met (cf. 24:2). Additionally, one should remember that Ibrāhīm entreated God on behalf of the city of Lūṭ (11:74), and Lūṭ himself reproved his people before he left and they were punished. The Qur'an does not say that sin is not sin; but neither does it strain to cast the first stone — or, in fact, any stones — despite what the Traditionalist contends, in this case or in any other. See 24:10, 24:14, 24:20 (which treat of sexual contexts) for reminders that we are all in need of God's mercy. See Notepad XXII.
26:168[1] I.e. male sexual relations.
26:169[1] I.e. of the consequence of destruction which must come to those who flout God's law.
26:171[1] One of the functions of the Qur'an is to correct calumnies levelled against the prophets in the corrupted texts of previous peoples. Chapter 19 of Genesis has it that Lot (Lūṭ) committed incest with his daughters after leaving the city — to ensure (as one is given to understand) the continuance of the family line due to a dearth of males in the new location; the daughters' argument rings hollow given that the males of the city they had fled could not have provided issue in any case (a point alluded to at 11:78-79). More convincing, perhaps, would be an argument for the need to raise up further children to Lot (Lūṭ) on the grounds that his wife was now dead, but such an argument is closed down by the Qur'an which states explicitly his wife was an 'old woman.' Thus, the Talmudic-sounding 'justification' found at Genesis 19 for incest is refuted on whatever basis it might be advanced: Lūṭ's wife had been past child-bearing age, thus it made no difference from the point of view of procreation that she was now dead; and the men of the city of Lūṭ were not potential husbands for his daughters, thus the dearth of eligible men in the scenario following that of the destruction of the city of Lūṭ was — in this regard at least — no different to that which preceded it. The primary function of the Book of Genesis in its current condition is to create and promote a programme of racial survival and supremacy, and is a composite of different accounts, and was probably constructed by Ezra before or after release from Babylon. See note to 26:84.

¶26.11 26:192[1] I see this as a reference to the motif of warning and destruction which punctuates this sūrah, or to the Qur'an itself. Muhammad Asad notes at this verse: Thus the discourse returns to the theme enunciated at the beginning of this surah, namely, the phenomenon of divine revelation as exemplified in the Qur'an, and men's reactions to it.
26:192[2] Lit.: (gradual or successive) sending down.

26:209[1] Arabic: ẓālimūn. See note to 2:229. God does not break his own laws in his dealings with men. There exists those moral laws given by God which are as fixed as any set of physical laws. (The cause of the ruling elite's drive to promote the notion of relativism in the physical world via pseudo-science becomes clear once we understand that it is the philosophical component needed to install a worldview orientated towards moral relativism by which the masses are detached from any sense of objective moral certainty and trained to accept the arbitrary rule of men.)

26:219[1] Arabic: sajada. See Notepad IV. Cf. 3:196, 16:46. The word taqalluba means going to and fro. If the Traditionalist is to insist on sajada as to prostrate rather than to submit, he is — if he is to be consistent — left with a mental image of the Messenger picking his way through the mass of believers in a position of prostration. That is not what the Traditionalist claims for this verse; but it should be if he wishes to present his case consistently.
26:221[1] Or adversaries (against the command of God). See Article SJC.
26:222[1] Muhammad Asad comments here: I.e. The term affak which literally denotes "a great [or "habitual"] liar", has here the meaning of "one who lies to himself": this is brought out in the next verse which stresses the psychological fact that most of such self-deceivers readily lie to others as well.
26:223[1] I.e. to falsehood.

26:225[2] I.e. without bearings, utterly lost. Muhammad Asad notes here: The idiomatic phrase hama fi widyan (lit., "he wandered [or "roamed"] through valleys") is used, as most of the commentators point out, to describe a confused or aimless and often self-contradictory - play with words and thoughts. In this context it is meant to stress the difference between the precision of the Qur'an, which is free from all inner contradictions, and the vagueness often inherent in poetry.

27:24[3] I take the segment from here through to the end of 27:26 to be parenthesis rather than the speech of the hoopoe for three reasons: firstly, it treats of something other than what can be visually observed; secondly, it diverges from the main dialogue; thirdly, the hoopoe is a servant of Sulaymān; such a didactic speech seems to me inappropriate coming a subordinate to such a man. Parenthesis is a key feature of the remainder of the present narrative, as we will see.

27:38[1] This entirely fits with our value for al jinn of domini — these were human beings accustomed to rule (although in subjection to Sulaymān). Sulaymān, likewise, required the submission of the Queen of Saba'. See Article SJC.

27:39[1] Arabic: al jinn. See Article SJC.
27:39[2] Or station. Arabic: maqām. See note to 2:125. As I read the text, this claim and that in the next verse are superlative expressions of obedience uttered by human beings.
27:40[1] Arabic: al kitāb. See Notepad IX.ii. Cf. 27:29-30. Various interpretations exist here. My own view is that the speaker here is simply one who had knowledge of the writ that Sulaymān sent.
27:40[2] In my view, at this point begins a sequence of two intercut, related episodes which ends at 27:44, and I have parsed accordingly. Read as a single narrative, the spiritual confession and gratitude on the part of Sulaymān, and the repentance of the Queen are diminished. The point, as I see it, is the contrast between worldly power and architectural achievements on the one hand, and the higher verities and eternal treasures on the other, as well as the lesson that God alone guides. I see the apposition between these two segments confirmed by means of an allusion at the verse at which the narrative moves to the next scene (27:45).

27:44[1] Arabic: ṣarḥ — castle, palace, lofty edifice, imposing structure. That this signifies a high building is clear from its only usage outside this verse (28:38, 40:36), where the context requires such a value (there rendered tower).
27:44[2] Arabic: ṣarḥ. See note above.
27:44[3] Traditionally understood to be a glass-paved floor under which a river ran.
27:44[4] As I read the text, the Queen's statement here is in response to Sulaymān's cumulative expression of confession and gratitude which comprises in Sulaymān's direct speech outside the parenthesis I infer between 27:40 and this point.

27:66[2] Two readings are known here: adraka (form IV) and addāraka (form VI). If we assume the form IV verb, then the remainder of the set is at 4:78, 4:100, 6:103, 6:103, 10:90, 36:40. If we assume the form VI verb, then the remainder of the set is at 7:38 and 68:49. The key senses for the form IV verb are to attain, to reach; to get, catch, overtake. The key senses for the form IV verb are to reach out and seize one another; to continue without interruption, go on incessantly. With most translators, I read according to the form VI verb, and my rendering here is standard. My understanding is that this word signifies an endless catching at something without result, and I take it to be roughly equivalent to the expression to go round in circles.

27:71[1] This is in the you not the thou form. All those who are believers are obliged to warn others. Traditionalist Muslims often engage in propagating their religion; the problem is that the Qur'an does not ask them to do that. The Qur'an asks them to follow the Messenger: to warn the heedless of the punishment to come in this world or the next. The religion Muslims have constructed is an obstacle to — or, at the least, a distraction from — the issue at hand.

27:81[1] This verse is problematic for the Traditionalist as it doesn't quite say what he wants it to. Anyone who sees purpose in Creation and connects that purpose with a single Mind believes in God's proofs. If such a person submits to God, then this is someone the Messenger can reach — one's racial, cultural, or sectarian affiliations being irrelevant. To the Traditionalist, the Messenger's job was to convert people to the Traditionalist's religion. But that requirement is at odds with the text in this verse, so the Traditionalist tends to finesse the words to comport with his objective. For example, staunchly Traditionalist translators Hilali & Khan have here: Nor can you lead the blind out of their error, you can only make to hear those who believe in Our Ayat (proofs, evidences, verses, lessons, signs, revelations, etc.), and who have submitted (themselves to Allah in Islam as Muslims); and Traditionalist Saheeh International has: And you cannot guide the blind away from their error. You will only make hear those who believe in Our verses so they are Muslims [i.e., submitting to Allāh]. Neither provide any comment, no doubt feeling it best not to draw more attention than necessary to the tension — obvious to the attentive reader — between this verse and 'Islamic' ideology. Non-sectarians deal with the reader more honestly. N. J. Dawood has: nor can you guide the blind out of their error. None shall give ear to you save those who believe in Our revelations and are submissive to Our will; while A. J. Arberry has: Thou shalt not guide the blind out of their error neither shalt thou make any to hear, save such as believe in Our signs, and so surrender.

Petra had been a sanctuary from ancient times, a fact which is liberally confirmed in the historical record. Mecca, at least according to Dan Gibson (Quranic Geography, 2011), does not appear on any map until 300 years after the Qur'anic revelation. Petra is now closed (see note 9:28 and Notepad XVI).

28:6[2] A minister under Fir'awn. A character is found in the Book of Esther by the same name, but has no other correlation. Muhammad Asad provides a comment which, while firmly rooted in the dominant Egypt-Palestine thesis, is interesting: This Haman, who is mentioned several times in the Qur'an as Pharaoh's chief adviser, is not to be confused with the Persian Haman of the Old Testament (The Book of Esther iii ff.). Most probably, the word "Haman" as used in the Qur'an is not a proper name at all but the Arabicized echo of the compound designation Ha-Amen given to every high priest of the Egyptian god Amon. Since at the time in question the cult of Amon was paramount in Egypt, his high priest held a rank second only to that of the reigning Pharaoh. The assumption that the person spoken of in the Qur'an as Haman was indeed the high priest of the cult of Amon is strengthened by Pharaoh's demand (mentioned in verse 38 of this surah as well as in 40:36-37) that Haman erect for him "a lofty tower" from which he could "have a look at [or "ascend to"] the god of Moses": which may be, among other things, an allusion to the hieratic purpose of the great pyramids of Egypt and to the function of the high priest as their chief architect.

¶28.2 28:15[1] Mūsā had to sneak into the city. We have no facts, but we can reasonably surmise that the city was not open to him for some reason, perhaps connected with his royal standing.
28:15[2] Arabic: shī'ah — sect, persuasion.
28:15[3] The man Mūsā killed is assumed to be of the sect of Fir'awn, in conformity with the account in Genesis. However, the text of the Qur'an does not say so. Moreover, the verse at 28:17 strongly suggests that the man he struck was of his own people. My work The God Protocol includes an analysis of this point.
28:15[4] Arabic: shī'ah — sect, persuasion.
28:15[5] Or adversary (against the command of God). See Article SJC.
28:15[6] It is my view that Mūsā understands here how he had been manipulated into the factionalism fostered by Fir'awn as a means of control (cf. 28:4).
28:17[1] The standard understanding is that Mūsā killed one of the sect of Fir'awn, but that contradicts the plain sense here. My work The God Protocol includes an analysis of this point. The word mujrimūn (rendered as lawbreakers throughout) can be better understood by reviewing all instances where it occurs: 6:55, 6:123, 7:40, 7:84, 8:8, 9:66, 10:17, 10:50, 10:82, 11:52, 11:116, 14:49, 15:12, 18:49, 18:53, 19:86, 20:74, 20:102, 25:22, 25:31, 26:99, 26:200, 27:69, 28:17, 28:78, 30:12, 30:55, 32:12, 32:22, 34:32, 36:59, 37:34, 43:74, 42:22, 44:37, 45:31, 46:25, 51:32, 54:47, 55:41, 55:43, 68:35, 74:41, 77:18, 77:46.
28:18[1] I regard the remainder of this verse as a replay of what had happened the day before (and connects with 28:15 where we read: 'And he who was of his sect sought aid of him against him who was of his enemy') which sets up the fact that now Mūsā intends to correct his error of the previous day. My work The God Protocol includes an analysis of this point.
28:19[1] Cf. 'enemy' at 28:15. To my mind, this only makes sense if we understand Mūsā to have killed a man of the children of Israel the day before. My work The God Protocol includes an analysis of this point.
28:19[2] I.e. to Mūsā and the Israelite he had killed the day before (see notes to 28:15-19).

The area claimed for Midian under the Egypt-Palestine thesis — where Mūsā sojourned — is local to Petra. Petra drew pilgrims from across the entire Arab region. Both the 'Asīr-Ḥejāz thesis and the Arabia Felix thesis advance alternate sites for Madyan (Midian). See Notepad XVI.

28:31[1] Arabic: jān. A dominus is one with a will to power, able to impose his will. We know that the staff changed into a serpent because 20:17-20 uses the word ḥayya — snake, serpent, viper. Here, the emphasis is that it was as though the staff acquired a will of its own. Occurs also at 27:10. See Article SJC.

28:32[3] Arabic root: f-ṣ-q. See note to 2:26 and Notepad XI.vii.
28:33[1] Arabic: min hum. It is my view that Mūsā had killed one of his own people, though that is not what is claimed in the Hebrew scriptures or by the Traditionalist Muslim (see my book The God Protocol for my reasons). The Arabic here can mean, as commonly read — and as I render myself — among them. However, the meaning is ambiguous. It could mean of theirs in the sense of one of their number; but the same wording can mean among them, or in their midst. Examples of a possessive sense for min are found at 69:18 (no secret among you — i.e. no secret of yours — will be hidden; Arabic: lā takhfā min kum khāfiya), and at 19:4 minnī simply means mine or my, as it does also at 20:39 and 20:123. Read thus, the line here means: I killed a soul of theirs (i.e. belonging to them); and at this point in the narrative, the children of Israel belonged fully to Fir'awn and his ruling caste as slaves. But min can also denote effect. It is seen at 2:273 (because of or due to reticence; Arabic: min al ta'affuf), and at 4:102 (because of or due to rain; Arabic: min maṭar). Additionally, Farid's Dictionary of Qur'an (p. 759) notes by reason of as a value for the particle min. It gives 71:25 as an example (because of — i.e. as a result of — their sinning errors they were drowned; Arabic: minmā khaṭyā'ātihim ughriqū). Read thus, the line here means: I killed a soul due to them (i.e. as a result of their actions). Penrice's Dictionary and Glossary of the Quran (p. 141) includes by reason of, but also lists after the manner of as a value for min. The first category we have looked at; as concerns the second category, min features frequently as part of the adverbial phrase min ḥaythu. This adverbial convention occurs at 2:149, 2:150, 2:191, 2:199, 2:222, 7:19, 7:27, 7:182, 12:68, 16:26, 16:45, 39:25, 59:2, 65:3, 65:6, 68:44. Comparison of all instances reveals it to have the two main functions: 1. from wherever, from whence, whence (e.g. 2:149, 2:150, 2:191), 2. in what manner; in accordance with how; in what manner it be that (e.g. 2:222, 12:68, 65:5). All instances appear in the notes and reference 2:149. Read thus, the line here means: I killed a soul (just) like them (i.e. in the manner that they kill souls). We turn now to consider which of these options is the most likely. Reading beyond the clause under consideration, we encounter Mūsā's concern that Fir'awn's people will kill him. Thus, killing is the dominant thread within the verse, and 'like them' is the option in closest keeping with that thread. Additionally, the Qur'an states three times that Fir'awn killed the males among the children of Israel (2:49, 7:141, 14:6); thus by killing a male among the children of Israel Mūsā committed an act which was precisely 'like them'. On that basis, my view is that 'like them' is a likely reading; but in terms of strict grammar (since the word here is min and not min ḥaythu, the case is strong also for the possessive, namely: I killed a soul of theirs (i.e. belonging to them, and which they legally possessed). However, I have rendered in the translation using the common convention of among them, a formulation which itself is ambiguous as discussed above, and I confine further thoughts to the notes. See notes to 28:15-19.

28:34[1] My view is that Mūsā killed one of the children of Israel; in such a scenario it would be natural for them to deny him also.

By requiring an opponent to state his position clearly, one may assess his view and consider if it represents that doctrine in which one is ready to live and give account for himself on the Day of Judgment. In most cases, when you look at their foundational arguments, one finds that people have only vague wishes and carnal appetites to guide them; and — what is more often than not the case (perhaps, especially) today — they are simply too lazy or ill-prepared to apply themselves to understand what others stand upon on the basis of knowledge, to say nothing of doing the hard work needed to gain such knowledge for themselves.

Nevertheless, they are keen to impress upon one the importance of their 'opinion', no matter how illogically stated.

28:57[2] This allows identification with Petra, although the Traditionalist would naturally claim Mecca (see Notepad XVI). However, I agree also with the import of the second part of Muhammad Asad's note on this verse: [...]In its purely spiritual connotation, on the other hand, the "sanctuary secure" is God's promise - referred to in verse 61 below - that all who have faith in Him and are conscious of their responsibility to Him shall be graced with a sense of inner peace in this world and with enduring bliss in the life to come; and since they are thus to be rewarded with the "fruits" of all their good deeds, "no fear need they have, and neither shall they grieve" (cf. 2:62, 3:170, 5:69, 6:48, 7:35, 10:62, 46:13). Consider also 29:67. I would add that the core power that the Satanic system holds over people is the threat of lack; we become free once we internalise the fact that all provision is of God.

The city of Petra, as a major trading centre, was the principal city of Nabataean Arabia. The Arabia Felix thesis advances an alternative. 28:68[1] Or what is best for them. Muhammad Asad expresses an interesting point at this juncture: Some of the classical commentators incline to interpret the ma in the phrase ma kana lahum al-khirah as a particle of negation and the noun khirah as "choice" or "freedom of choice", thus giving to this phrase the meaning of "He chooses, [but] they [i.e., human beings] have no freedom of choice". To my mind, however, this interpretation conflicts not only with the immediately preceding passages but with the tenor of the Qur'an as a whole, which insists throughout on man's responsibility for (and, hence, on relative freedom in) choosing between right and wrong - and this side by side with its stress on God's unlimited power to determine the factual course of events. Hence, I prefer to base my rendering on the interpretation advanced and convincingly argued by Tabari, who regards the crucial particle ma not as a negation but as a relative pronoun synonymous with alladhi ("that which" or "whatever"), and understands the noun khirah in its primary significance of "that which is chosen" or "preferred", i.e., because it is considered to be the best: in another word, as a synonym of khayr. Zamakhshari refers to this interpretation with evident approval (without, however, mentioning Tabari specifically), and enlarges upon it thus: "God chooses for mankind whatever is best (ma huwa khayr) and most beneficial (aslah) for them, for He knows better than they themselves do what is good for them."

28:76[2] I.e. those who exult in their riches.

28:78[1] I.e. due to his own shrewdness and wit. Such sentiments are common among those who are rich in material things and poor in the prudent fear of God. A walk round the nearest cemetery puts their claims in their right perspective.

28:78[2] This type of construction occurs also at 2:119, 16:93, 29:13, 34:25, 34:25, 55:39, 102:8. In all cases other than 55:39 it clearly means will not be asked to take responsibility for. While some translators treat the instance at 28:78 like that at 55:39, I choose to comply with the broader narrative. Thus I take this statement to be a claim of Qārūn: he did what he did because he assumed there to be no consequences for his actions — a point which is comprehensively dispatched at 28:84.

28:78[3] Arabic: dhunūb. See Notepad XI.iv.

29:17[1] Arabic: min dūni. See note to 2:23.
29:17[2] Muhammad Asad renders the Arabic awthān somewhat freely as the loathsome evil of idolatrous beliefs and practices but goes on to note in his comment: The term awthan (lit., "idols") denotes not merely actual, concrete images of false deities but also, in its widest sense, everything that is associated with false beliefs and practices or with a tendency to "worship" false values[...].
29:17[3] Arabic: min dūni. See note to 2:23.

¶29.3 29:24[1] This picks up from verse 29:18. Non-sectarian A. J. Arberry discerns the same parenthesis at 29:19-23 as do I.
29:24[2] Arabic: āyāt. See Notepad VIII.
29:25[1] Arabic: min dūni. See note to 2:23.
29:25[2] Muhammad Asad cites Razi who understood this to indicate that their love of their forebears bound them to blind imitation of their forebears' idolatry. For my part, I think that it bears a broader interpretation: idolatry of any kind tends to create coteries of privileged persons, and to exclude and persecute those who point out errors in the ideology. Today, the idols of medicine, education, science, religion, history, democracy, finance — to name but a few — are essentially closed environments with beneficiaries, priesthoods, worshippers, and required outcomes.
29:26[1] The story of Lūṭ now begins to be interlaced with the ongoing story of Ibrāhīm.

29:29[1] This last phrase is understood variously. Literally it means and you cut off, cut or sever the way. This is understood by some — and not without reason — to indicate highway robbery. I am of the opinion, (shared by some but not all of those commentators I read) that this usage indicates the specific crime for which these cities were infamous: that of penetrative sexual intercourse between males, and means cutting off the way (of nature) since what precedes this clause and what follows suggests the same unnatural act.
29:29[2] See note to munkar at 3:104.

¶29.4 29:31[1] The glad tidings were of the birth of a son, not of the impending destruction of the city of Lūṭ. Ibrāhīm himself asked God to forgive those cities (11:74).

29:45[5] Arabic: tanhā ʿan. Elsewhere (typically) rendered by the Traditionalist forbids, that value is inconvenient to him here, and he inclines to prevents and synonyms. Non-sectarian Arabist A. J. Arberry holds firm here, however, rendering forbids, a key motif of the sūrah to this point being the forbidding of sexual immorality. Absent notions originating elsewhere, the objective reader would conclude that al ṣalāt here is associated with the recorded actions of Lūṭ in exhorting his people to cease pursuing evil. However, since the Traditionalist is committed to his required outcome of a daily regimen of rituals, he needs to fudge that obvious connection. I am yet to hear a convincing explanation of how the Traditionalist's regimen of rituals 'forbids' (or even 'prevents') those who adhere to it from committing sins of any kind, including those outlined in this verse. I suppose one could argue that since parts of the Qur'an are recited during the ritual, the recital of the Qur'an itself forbids such actions. But it is perfectly possible to execute the Traditionalist's ritual without mentioning such verses, and in any case the majority of those who perform it do not understand what they are saying (cf. 4:43) because the Traditionalist has convinced them that Arabic is a magic language, and that it is important to God to have people unthinkingly recite back to Him the instructions He gave them to live by. See 11:87 and note thereto.

29:46[4] This is read by some to imply a complete confirmation by the Qur'an of all writings claimed by those called Christians and Jews today. I do not agree. The Qur'an is clear that it confirms what came before, but that it is a control over it — i.e. it clarifies where error has crept into what recipients of former writings have (cf. 5:48).

1:1-7 (al fātiḥah).
30:2[1] I follow the active voice here: ghalabat. The Byzantine Romans defeated the early Muslims at the battle of Mu'tah in 629 CE (8 AH), in the Dead Sea region. This is a historical event for which we have contemporaneous and reliable Byzantine sources. That battle ground is approximately 50 km from Petra. The Battle of Tabuk (approximately 200 km from Petra) is said to have taken place within a year or two, and that the Muslims were victorious against the Romans (albeit through achieving a successful expedition rather than actual engagement). Admittedly, there is no non-Islamic source, and the Muslim sources are — like all non-Qur'anic Islamic sources — deserving, in my view, of a high degree of suspicion. The Traditionalist has the Romans losing to and then defeating the Persians; his attempts to explain why this would be a cause for rejoicing among the believers are entirely unconvincing. I am indebted to Layth al-Shaiban for this insight.

30:3[1] Arabic: 'adnā — near, nearest, close, closest, low, lower, lowest. Comparative form of dānin. The Dead Sea area is now known to be the lowest point on terra firma.

30:3[2] I.e. the believers (see 30:4-5).

30:4[2] See note to (al) mu'minūn at 8:2.

30:5[1] Or victory.

30:6[1] Abdullah Yusuf Ali comments here: The promise refers to the Decision of all things by the Command of God, Who will remove all troubles and difficulties from the path of His righteous Believers, and help them to rejoice over the success of their righteous Cause. This refers to all times and all situations. The righteous should not despair in their darkest moments, for God's help will come. Ordinarily men are puffed up if they score a seeming temporary success against the righteous, and do not realise that God's Will can never be thwarted. I would add that this refers — in large part also — to the promise of the sudden and unexpected End, and to the ensuing Judgment.

30:8[1] Grammar: dual.

30:8[2] Arabic: bil ḥaqqi. See Notepad XVII (bil ḥaqqi ii.).

30:9[1] Or built upon. Hilali & Khan render here populated which comports with our note to 9:17; and we have remained consistent in the translation here. I provide N. J. Dawood's rendering as an alternative value since it is representative of those who diverge from what Hilali & Khan and I render here; also found here is cultivated (A. J. Arberry). See note to 9:17.

¶30.2 30:13[1] See note to Arabic root: sh-r-k at 6:78 and Notepad VI. The concept of partners is said by the Traditionalist to refer only to fraudulent gods. I think the connotation is much wider than that and includes authorities of any kind (today: government, heavily promoted 'scientists', opinion-makers such as actors and other semi-fictitious personas) and all fiction-based belief systems, including most of what today passes for religion.

30:18[1] The Traditionalist visibly strains in his attempt to bludgeon 30:17-18 into conformity with his expectation of five daily prayers. Not only do the numbers not correspond with his requirements, 30:17-18 simply give times when glory belongs to God — and the formulation can be understood as at all times. To claim more than that is to ascribe to the text something objectively absent from it.

30:30[4] The Traditionalist claims that the religion of 'Islam' is what is referenced here. No organised religion that I know of pre-exists in my nature. However, my soul recognises and responds to the truths contained in that doctrine which is implicit and explicit in the Qur'an. But these truths do not presuppose any sort of religion (if by religion we mean choosing to believe something one knows to be wholly or partially untrue, patching over the shortfall by drowning out experiential data on the basis of learned dogma). As we say in English: the devil is in the details. And, as the Traditionalist is so fond of pointing out, the Qur'an does not provide 'the details'. The Traditionalist argues that the Qur'an is deficient (a condition which can be corrected by means of his preferred literature); for my part, I argue that the Qur'an does not envisage a religion in the sense that the Traditionalist means it (or at least in the sense that I think he means it given what I see him do with what he claims to believe). There is nothing wrong with choosing a particular implementation of those basic principles one finds in the Qur'an and creating a jurisprudence around them; there is everything wrong with insisting that the methods one chooses to employ are themselves ordained by God when they have no explicit basis in the Qur'an; cf. 12:40.

30:30[5] Arabic: dīn. See Notepad V. This exact phrase occurs at 9:36, 12:40, 30:30.

30:38[2] Lit.: son of the road. See note to 2:177.

30:38[3] Cf. 2:5, 3:104, 7:8, 7:157, 9:88, 23:102, 24:51, 30:38, 31:5, 59:9, 64:16.

30:39[1] Arabic: ātā min zakāt. Naturally, the Traditionalist counts this as a reference to what is — though he is coy about the fact — a tax. But a tax is not what is under discussion, and certainly not at 30:38; there the narrative treats of free-will gifts to particular categories. But a tax — no matter how obfuscated by religious terminology — is not a free-will gift; it is extracted from a man by force, actual or implied. Consider also 9:79 where the noun is ṣadaqāt. Both 2:267-281 and 76:8-10 treat of free-will gifts with right motivations and mention the 'face of God' (as here); and it is at 2:257-276 and 2:278-280 that usury is most comprehensively treated in the Qur'an. See note to 2:43 and Article SZC.

30:39[2] I.e. such as give correctly.

30:40[1] See note to Arabic root: sh-r-k at 6:78 and Notepad VI. The concept of partners is said by the Traditionalist to refer only to fraudulent gods. I think the connotation is much wider than that and includes authorities of any kind (today: government, heavily promoted 'scientists', opinion-makers such as actors and other semi-fictitious personas) and all fiction-based belief systems, including most of what today passes for religion.

30:40[2] See note to s-b-ḥ root at 2:30.

30:40[3] See note to Arabic root: sh-r-k at 6:78 and Notepad VI.

¶30.5 30:41[1] This is of particular significance coming so close after 30:39. The fundamental reason — ignored by a compliant and suborned media — for environmental destruction (and perhaps most of the world's woes) is usury.

30:42[1] See note to Arabic root: sh-r-k at 6:78 and Notepad VI.

30:43[1] Or countenance.

30:43[2] Arabic: dīn. See Notepad V.

30:44[1] Arabic: mahada — to make a bed, spread flat; to prepare. This form I verb based on the m-h-d root occurs just once.

30:44[2] This is what we are doing in this life: making the bed in which we will lie in eternity.

30:45[1] Arabic: alladhīna āmanū. See note to 2:257 and Notepad II.iv.

30:50[1] Arabic: āthār — tracks, traces, signs, vestiges; clues; footsteps, footprints; effects, impressions.

30:51[1] I.e. what they grow.

30:51[2] Lit.: it.

30:52[1] Lit.: turn away turning backs. Found at 21:57, 27:80, 30:52, 37:90, 40:33.

30:53[1] Cf. 27:81.

30:53[2] See note to 58:4 for Qur'anic usage of to believe in.

30:53[3] Arabic: āyāt. See Notepad VIII.

30:53[4] This clearly has nothing to do with the Traditionalist's conception of what it is to be a 'Muslim'. See note to muslim at 2:128. Cf. 27:81.

¶30.6 30:56[1] Arabic: fī — typically means in or concerning; i.e. tarried in considering thoroughly and making a decision on that basis.

30:56[2] Arabic: al kitāb. See Notepad IX.ii.

30:56[3] Arabic: kitāb allah. See Notepad IX.vi.

30:58[3] Lit.: of every similitude.

30:58[4] Arabic: āya. See Notepad VIII.

30:58[5] Grammar: note the plural pronoun. The implication is that this is addressed to those who follow the Messenger.

30:58[6] Arabic: alladhīna kafarū. See note to 2:6 and Notepad II.i.

30:60[1] Arabic: ḥaqqun. See Notepad XVII (ḥaqq- vi.).

30:60[2] Arabic: yaqina. See note to 2:4.

30:60[3] Arabic: istakhaffa. This form X verb means — as sometimes rendered — to deem lightly or to hold in light esteem. However, it does so only where it takes an object using the preposition bi. Where it takes a direct object (as here) it means either to fluster, flurry, disquiet or to find light (the case here clearly that of swaying or sweeping or carrying along a person away from or towards a position) or to deem light (i.e. to carry) — the former set of connotations being correct in this case. The two senses are connected by the core concept which is to find easy to move (from place, position or opinion). It occurs in the first sense here at 30:60 and at 43:54, and in the second sense at 16:80.

1:1-7 (al fātiḥah).
32:2[1] I take the alif lām mīm above as the subject of this sentence. The fact of a missing verb in this sentence is made clear in, for example, the rendering by Saheeh International: [This is] the revelation of the Book about which there is no doubt from the Lord of the worlds. In my analysis of the mysterious letters, alif lām mīm is identified as a symbol indicating al fātiḥah (the first sūrah), which sūrah itself comprises what we are rendering here as 'the Writ about which there is no doubt'. I have refrained from interpolating 'Is' at the beginning of this sentence, and confined my thoughts to the notes. Cf. 41:2. See Article MLQ for a full analysis of the mysterious letters.

32:15[2] Arabic: āyāt. See Notepad VIII.
32:15[3] Arabic: sajada. See Notepad IV. At this, and comparable points in the Qur'an, it is customary for Traditionalist Muslims to perform a physical prostration. My argument would be that physical prostration — at this point or at any other — devoid of actual obedience in practical terms to the principles the Qur'an advances is nothing but a vain cultural superstition. One has only to look at 32:22; there, a recognisable part of the motif here repeats; and there it is the lawbreakers (i.e. those who commit sins in their lives — not those who forget to place their heads on the floor at the correct moment) who are to receive God's vengeance.
32:15[4] See note to s-b-ḥ root at 2:30.
32:16[1] We have now, perhaps, an indication of prayer which suggests that night is the time for such a practice. Instructions on how to 'perform' this are — as the Traditionalist rightly maintains — not found in the Qur'an; were they necessary, they would, surely, have been given (cf. 31:27).

32:23[2] The Traditionalist has various and fanciful interpretations of this sentence. The plain sense, however, is that the recipient of the Qur'an was not to be in doubt about Mūsā's encounter with God.
32:23[3] I.e. what was written that God gave Mūsā. This dispatches the entire 'oral Torah' narrative whereby the Rabbinic caste insinuates itself between the believer and the Torah. The implications for Traditionalist Muslims are many and obvious.

33:4[1] Lit.: in his interior.
33:4[2] The Traditionalist insists upon a fanciful, highly specialised interpretation here. In summary, his assertion (see also 58:1-4) is that pre-Islamic Arabs would divorce their wives by saying that a wife was 'like the back of' his mother, and that it is this practice which the verb at this juncture (rendered by me as assist) references. No support is found for this assertion in the text itself, we are expected simply to take the Traditionalist's word for it. Facts first: the form III verb based on ẓahara objectively and correctly means to assist, to help, to aid, to support — and the Traditionalist himself renders this form III verb in just this sense in all other instances outside of this specific context and its adjunct at 58:1-4 (see 9:4, 33:26, 60:9). Allowing the verb its natural meaning (i.e. that of assisting among your wives) fits the context exactly. The Qur'anic redress for those who swear off their wives (which is what the Traditionalist is claiming as the sense here though by another name) is entirely different and comprehensively treated at 2:226. Now to the application of reason: in a context which permits of limited polygeny a situation is possible in which one wife might not be able to have children while others might be able to have them. In such a case, a man — it may be reasoned — might decide (it is assumed within the Qur'anic principle of mutual consultation) to 'assist' both the fertile and infertile wives by allowing the infertile wife to raise a child born to the fertile wife. Thus, the infertile wife might experience something of the joys of motherhood, and the fertile wife — who may already have her hands full with existing children — might get support in the raising of a child. (Other comparable scenarios are where the husband has a child from a previous wife, or a wife brings an existing child into a marriage.) The point in such scenarios (i.e. in which a man 'assists' among his wives) is that we should remember who the true mother is and not obfuscate that fact. These points granted, it is possible to envisage a case in which a man has allowed a wife to raise a child of which she is not the natural mother, and that that decision has resulted either in regret on the part of the natural mother or in a change of mind on the part of the man. It is surely such a case which is the subject here, i.e. one in which a man has to go back on this arrangement (returning a child to the care of its natural mother, thus depriving the adoptive mother of her charge). This scenario is addressed also at 58:1-4, to which the present verse forms an adjunct.
33:4[3] This presages 33:37 which treats of Zayd, the Prophet's own adopted son, and indirectly makes it clear that Zayd was not to be considered heir to the prophet.

33:6[7] I regard the import here to be that connections of faith do not supersede those of blood in matters of inheritance. Muhammad Asad sees the verse in another light, and I include his note here for interest: [...]neither of these two passages (8:75 and 33:6) can be satisfactorily interpreted as bearing on the laws of inheritance: all endeavours to interpret them in that sense only do violence to the logical build-up and inner cohesion of the Qur'anic discourse. On the other hand, it is obvious that both passages have basically a similar (namely, spiritual) import - with the difference only that whereas the concluding sentences of Al-Anfal refer to the brotherhood of all believers in general, the present passage lays stress on the yet deeper, special relationship between every true believer and God's Apostle.

33:6[10] The Traditionalist associates this with what he calls The Preserved Slate (al-Lawḥ al-Maḥfūth). I cannot comment on that, but I can say that it is a fact that the Qur'an forms part of 'the Writ', and these words are certainly inscribed within it.

33:13[2] A city named Yathrib is specifically identified. Under the standard Traditionalist accounts this indicates the city today called Medinah (medinah simply means city or town and is, today, short for City of the Prophet) in modern Saudi Arabia. Dan Gibson (Quranic Geography, 2011), my source for what I call here the Petra thesis, accepts the Traditionalist's assertion on this point. I am inclined to accept it also as the town for which the Prophet left his home, and became its head. However, the Arabia Felix thesis advances a case for Yathrib as a place called Yatrib in the Dhamār province of Yemen. As ever, further work untainted by political agendas is needed. See Notepad XVI.

33:23[2] I.e. in that he fulfilled his commitment to participate in the battle in defence of the community of believers. A point which is now generally lost by those called Muslims is that a community of true believers is, by definition, obedient to its primary mission of witnessing the warnings and promises of God found in the Qur'an and of serving him alone. Battles in support of that end are legitimate. See also my work The God Protocol. The Traditionalist tends to see this as fulfilment of a vow on the part of the believer to die in battle.

¶33.4 33:28[1] The context speaks volumes. From the preceding verses it is clear that the community of believers had achieved some worldly success. The obvious backstory here is that the wives of the Prophet felt that this turn of events implied an improvement in their material circumstances also.
33:30[1] Arabic: fāḥiṯshat, faḥshā'. See Notepad XI.iii.
33:30[2] If the penalty for this were — as the Traditionalist claims on the basis of his non-Qur'anic sources — death by stoning, we would be left, albeit theoretically, with a situation in which a woman might be liable to be stoned to death twice.

33:33[3] Arabic: al zakāt. The woman's part of the sexual component of al zakāt is to insist upon the receipt of her bride price prior to any sexual relations; a woman is, by definition, able to be married to no more than one man at a time. See note to 2:43 and Article SZC.
33:33[4] I.e. what God sent through his messenger.
33:33[5] Arabic: bayt. I reject the idea that women are to be (or were) bound to one physical house. The context here is of households — families with which the wives of the Prophet had a connection, as the following context makes clear. The point is that they were to be chaperoned by family members and never to allow themselves to be in a situation where accusations could be made against them by malicious tongues. This was to provide a safeguard to the honour and integrity of the wider community. The list of those with whom they could freely associate is given at 33:55. Etiquette and protocol exist for persons of high standing in all societies. (The restrictions are the same for those found guilty of sexual misdeeds; see 4:15 and note thereto.)
33:33[6] Lit.: purify you with purification.
33:34[1] Arabic: āyāt. See Notepad VIII.
33:34[2] The reader should be aware that the Traditionalist makes specious claims for wisdom (ḥikma) as found here, ascribing to it on the basis of no Qur'anic evidence a value (here specifically, but at other times when it suits him) equal to those collections of a later and extraneous literature which he follows in preference to the revelation of God. The absence of any basis in the Qur'an for his claim may be demonstrated by comparing and considering all instances of this word as found therein: 2:129, 2:151, 2:231, 2:251, 2:269, 2:269, 3:48, 3:81, 3:164, 4:54, 4:113, 5:110, 16:125, 17:39, 31:12, 33:34, 38:20, 43:63, 54:5, 62:2 all of which have a note which references this verse. The operative verb here in any case is the passive mood of recite, and recite always relates to something read out or repeated from memory, so wisdom in this instance must — along with proofs of God — refer to something of that type. The Traditionalist has conflated the concept of a verse in the Qur'an with that of a proof (āya). To him all verses are proofs. However, the preponderance of evidence is that this is not correct. Some verses (or collections thereof) are proofs, others are wisdom; yet others comprise law. While I do not claim that such distinctions are mutually exclusive, I think it is safe to say that not every verse is in itself a proof if for no other reason than the fact that the verse divisions do not comprise part of the revelation, they were decided upon by men.

33:36[4] Lit.: of their matter, command or affair.
33:36[5] I.e. what God sent through his messenger.
33:36[6] It is not for believers to take their own opinions over judgments decided upon by God and His messenger. The convention 'God and His messenger' is appealed to ad nauseam by the Traditionalist to lend credence to his religion, one he himself admits, when pressed, to be largely — if not entirely — absent from the Qur'an. The Traditionalist would have us make three assumptions: firstly, that the actions of Muḥammad the man constitute those of 'the Messenger'; secondly, that the mass of stories ascribed to Muḥammad by Persian scribes centuries after his life constitute a reliable historical record of Muḥammad's actions; thirdly, that the expression 'obey God and His messenger' indicates a Qur'anic requirement for incorporating this extra-Qur'anic library into the process of understanding what God requires of those believers who accept the Qur'an. Regarding the first point, we should note that a careful reading of the present surrounding context makes clear that whatever is meant in the Qur'an by 'God and His messenger' applied here also to Muḥammad (what follows at 33:37 serves to bring Muḥammad himself into compliance with Qur'anic directives since one clearly detects, in the third and fourth clauses of 33:37, a reluctance on the part of Muḥammad — one which, in that context, may logically be taken only to indicate unwillingness to act on the Qur'anic judgment that the divorced wife of an adopted son may legally be taken to wife — a point which is implicit at 33:4). This assertion finds support in 'command' (Arabic: 'amr) — which word comprises the key note of the main argument — at the end of 33:37. Thus, Muḥammad the man — as a believing man (cf. first clause of 33:36) — is obliged to obey 'God and His messenger'. This fact renders the Traditionalist's first assumption false, which — when owned — leaves his second and third redundant.
33:37[1] See note to al muttaqūn at 2:2.
33:37[2] Sc. thou hadst gone astray into manifest error (cf. last clause of 33:36). Ellipsis is required, in my opinion, by dint of both the context and the structure. What 'God reveals' can, in the context, treat of one thing only: the approaching point that the divorced wife of an adopted son may legally be taken to wife, (which is implicit at 33:4 also). Before taking up arms against the suggestion that Muḥammad could in any way err, one should consider the following Qur'anic verses: 6:34-35, 8:67-68, 9:43, 9:113, 17:73-75, 18:23-24, 48:2, 66:1, 80:1-2, 93:7.
33:37[3] Or is worthier. Arabic: aḥaqq-. See Notepad XVII.

33:39[1] Sc. has not changed. Cf. 17:77, 33:38-39, 33:62, 35:43, 40:85, 48:23.
33:40[1] This statement serves as a corollary to the statements on adopted sons at 33:4 and 33:37, and precludes any later claim to sonship from any quarter.
33:40[2] It should be noted that it says seal of the prophets, not seal of the messengers; anyone who bears a message is a messenger. Also, we should remember what the function of a seal is: it is not only to close something (which is the emphasis the Traditionalist insists upon), but also to attest to its authenticity.

¶33.6 33:41[1] Arabic: alladẖīna āmanū. See note to 2:257 and Notepad II.iv.
33:41[2] Arabic: dẖikr — calling to mind, recalling, reminding; remembrance (of something past); history.
33:42[1] See note to ṣ-b-ḥ root at 2:30.
33:43[1] Arabic root: ṣ-l-w; i.e. does such duty as is incumbent. See note to 2:3 and Article SZC. Generically, ṣallā means to perform (the or one's) duty. At this point the Traditionalist's value for ṣallā as a verb denoting the performance of a five-times daily ritual found nowhere in the Qur'an fails him and he renders the verb in this instance as to bless or to send blessings. I continue using the same value as I do throughout, namely that of duty. The duty incumbent upon God and his angels is to guide us (which is God's part of our covenant with him as per 1:6-7). Consider also the same usage at the context at 33:56, for which see also notes thereto. See also note to the same verse below.
33:43[2] Arabic: ʿalā. It is a fact that meanings of verbs are modified as they form new collocations in combination with various prepositions. The Traditionalist, while he is fuzzy on the details, generally claims that ṣallā + ʿalā means to send blessings. Hilali & Khan's translation of the present verse will demonstrate the general tendency: He it is Who sends Salat (His blessings) on you, and His angels too (ask Allah to bless and forgive you), that He may bring you out from darkness (of disbelief and polytheism) into light (of Belief and Islamic Monotheism). And He is Ever Most Merciful to the believers. A careful study of the Traditionalist's treatment of the ṣ-l-w root (no matter as part of what collocation) leads one to the conclusion that his application is arbitrary. See also note to the same verse above.

33:48[3] Here Traditionalist translators emphasise harm (at least potentially or latently) to be inflicted by the recipient of the Qur'an upon those listed, whereas non-sectarians read this phrase as do I: that he is not to pay heed to hindrances inflicted upon him by those listed. To take the Traditionalists first: Saheeh International has here: And do not obey the disbelievers and the hypocrites but do not harm them; and Hilali & Khan have: And obey not the disbelievers and the hypocrites, and harm them not (till you are ordered). In the non-sectarian camp, N. J. Dawood renders: Do not yield to the unbelievers and the hypocrites: disregard their insolence; and A. J. Arberry has: And obey not the unbelievers and the hypocrites; heed not their hurt. The pivotal word here is in Arabic wadaʿ — comprising the conjunction wa and the second-person masculine singular imperative of the form I verb wadaʿa. As in so many cases where the Traditionalist puts a dissonant spin on the text, the word he leverages is found only once in the text. However, the form II is also found (and means to forsake) which should imply support for to disregard. That word occurs once at 93:3 and is rendered there by Saheeh International take leave of and by Hilali & Khan to forsake. Additionally, Wehr (p. 1240) lists the meanings for the form I verb wada'a as: to put down; to let, leave; to leave off, stop, cease; to give up, omit, skip. Arabic root: '-dh-y. 33:51[1] I have rendered literally here; most translators employ less direct means such as thou mayest defer. The same form IV verb is found at 7:111, 26:26.

33:51[2] See note to the same verse above.

33:51[3] Arabic: junāḥ. See Notepad XI.ii.

33:51[4] I.e. in returning to her.

33:52[1] Any ambiguity in the Arabic whether what is meant here is in addition to or after this time is cleared up by reviewing all instances of ba'du (2:230, 5:115, 8:75, 26:120, 30:4, 33:52, 47:4, 57:10, 95:7). More importantly: the allowances listed here (and those things found through to and including 33:57) refer to the life of the Prophet and those of his wives and other believers of that time. Without cognisance of this primary fact any other inferences we draw have no coordinates.

33:52[2] The Traditionalist forwards a number of calumnious claims against the Prophet, including that of marriage to a child, and of taking more wives than the number allowed by the Qur'an. Such claims find no support in the Qur'an. Supporters of the idea that Muḥammad took many wives must ignore the fact that the operative word at 33:52 is exchange; if the Prophet were not bound by the Qur'anic limit of four wives he could merely have added (rather than exchanged) wives. The wording itself suggests precisely how many wives the Prophet had: four.

33:53[4] I.e. of dismissing you.

33:53[5] Arabic: al ḥaqq. See Notepad XVII (al ḥaqq i.).

33:53[6] Lit.: them. Grammar: the Arabic allows us to see that this refers to a feminine plural object which can only mean his wives.

33:53[7] This verse and those that follow protect the wives of the Prophet from the slightest compromise. They had been offered the chance to leave the Prophet and be released from their bond to him. While we do not know if any chose this route, we do know that those who stayed freely complied with an etiquette befitting their station and that of their husband. For other people to practice this level of scrupulosity is excessive — even presumptuous — when their own station is of a different order.

33:53[8] Arabic root: '-dh-y. See Notepad X.

33:55[1] Arabic: junāḥ. See Notepad XI.ii.

33:55[2] Grammar: the feminine plural pronoun can refer only to the Messenger's wives.

33:55[3] Grammar: this second-person feminine plural imperative can only be directed to the wives of the Prophet. See note to al muttaqūn at 2:2.

33:56[1] Arabic root: ṣ-l-w; i.e. to do such duty as is incumbent. See note to 2:3 and Article SZC. Generically, ṣallā means to perform (the or one's) duty. Here the duty is that God and his angels protect the honour of the Prophet against future marriages to his wives, thus also safeguarding the community from strife and division.

33:56[2] Arabic: alladhīna āmanū. See note to 2:257 and Notepad II.iv.

33:56[3] Arabic root: ṣ-l-w; i.e. do such duty as is incumbent. See note to 2:3 and Article SZC. Generically, ṣallā means to perform (the or one's) duty. The duty binding upon the believers in the current context begins at 33:50 (to arrive on time and not to enter the Prophet's house early). With this comes the injunction to greet with a salutation (that is: loudly and clearly to announce one's presence before entering his house, and not to enter it without permission) for the purposes of protecting the modesty of the occupants, but also that there be no doubt as to the chastity of a wife (for reasons which in this context include ensuring complete moral transparency and integrity in the houses of the Prophet). The Qur'an does not say we are to greet the Prophet — though the Traditionalist assumes that it does, and often 'translates' accordingly; it says we are to greet with a salutation. In recognition of the lamentable and undeniable need to overstate the obvious, I would add that the Prophet is now dead. Just as there is today no need to arrive at his house on time, there is also no need to greet either him or his wives. The Traditionalist's practice of pouring honorifics upon a dead man and 'greeting' him as part of his prayer ritual has no basis in the Qur'an, is a clear case of shirk, and borders on necromancy. This sort of deviation from clear and obvious good sense is one result of accepting values for Qur'anic terms derived from an external, extraneous literature. By way of example of how this verse has been abused by the Traditionalist, Hilali & Khan's rendering of 33:56 follows: Allah sends His Salat (Graces, Honours, Blessings, Mercy, etc.) on the Prophet (Muhammad SAW) and also His angels too (ask Allah to bless and forgive him). O you who believe! Send your Salat on (ask Allah to bless) him (Muhammad SAW), and (you should) greet (salute) him with the Islamic way of greeting (salutation i.e. AsSalamu 'Alaikum).

33:56[4] It is a revealed principle to greet each person with a greeting at least as good as one receives (4:86). The context here (33:53 onwards) is one in which the Prophet is alive. The allusion is to 24:27-30, 24:60 which verses supply the etiquette for entering people's houses.

33:63[1] The Traditionalist knows better, of course, and has a complex eschatology of his own devising based on his favourite body of fiction which he ascribes to a messenger he claims to love. The lead character in this voluminous compilation of imaginative hagiographies demonstrates extensive knowledge about the end of the world: what to look for, and — most importantly — whom to expect to come and sort out all the problems (i.e. the mahdī), a personality nowhere found in the Qur'an. The invention and propagation of external saviours is standard operating procedure in the creation and management of passive, fatalistic, unproductive societies of the kind the Traditionalist exemplifies (cf. 8:53). Cf. 7:187.

34:10[1] Understood as God's praise.

34:10[2] The grammar here requires this addition in English.

34:11[1] The Saheeh International reading has it: [Commanding him], "Make full coats of mail and calculate [precisely] the links, and work [all of you] righteousness[...]". Muhammad Asad, on the other hand, notes: The adjective sabigh (fem. sabighan) signifies anything that is "ample", "abundant" and "complete" (in the sense of being perfect). In its plural form sabighat it assumes the function of the noun which it is meant to qualify, and denotes, literally, "things (or "deeds") ample and complete" or "perfect" - i.e., good deeds done abundantly and without stint: cf. the only other Quranic instance of the same stem in 31:20- "[God] has lavished (asbagha) upon you His blessings". The noun sard, on the other hand, denotes something "carried on consecutively", or something the parts (or stages) whereof are "following one another steadily", i.e., are continued or repeated. I see no mention of chain mail in the text, and concur with Asad's reasoning. See 21:80 and note thereto.

34:13[1] Cf. 3:37, 3:39, 38:21.

34:14[1] Muhammad Asad supplies a note which I repeat for interest: This is yet another of the many Solomonic legends which had become an inalienable part of ancient Arabian tradition, and which the Qur'an uses as a vehicle for the allegorical illustration of some of its teachings. According to the legend alluded to above, Solomon died on his throne, leaning forward on his staff, and for a length of time nobody became aware of his death: with the result that the jinn, who had been constrained to work for him, went on labouring at the heavy tasks assigned to them. Gradually, however, a termite ate away Solomon's staff, and his body, deprived of support, fell to the ground. This story - only hinted at in its outline - is apparently used here as an allegory of the insignificance and inherent brittleness of human life and of the perishable nature and emptiness of all worldly might and glory.

34:14[2] Arabic: al jinn. See Article SJC.

34:15[1] Typically identified with Sheba. See Notepad XV.

34:15[2] Arabic: āya. See Notepad VIII.

34:16[1] Muhammad Asad comments here: Lit., "the flooding of the dams" (sayl al-'arim). The date of that catastrophe cannot be established with any certainty, but the most probable period of the first bursting of the Dam of Ma'rib seems to have been the second century of the Christian era. The kingdom of Sheba was largely devastated, and this led to the migration of many southern (Qahtan) tribes towards the north of the Peninsula. Subsequently, it appears, the system of dams and dykes was to some extent repaired, but the country never regained its earlier prosperity; and a few decades before the advent of Islam the great dam collapsed completely and finally. This may reasonably be claimed by the Arabia Felix thesis as a point in its favour (see Notepad XVI).

34:17[1] I.e. Does God thus reward?

34:18[1] Arabic: ẓāhirūn — visible, dominant, manifest, visible, conspicuous.

34:18[2] I.e. in this land. Or in (i.e. in-between) them. Both readings are possible.

34:19[1] There are two readings here; I have opted for the second based on what I see as the superior reasoning of Muhammad Asad, but I will provide the reader both scenarios. One common reading, as given by Abdullah Yusuf Ali, is: But they said, "Our Lord! Place longer distances between our journey-stages[...]. His comment, reproduced in full is: The people of Saba were given every chance. They had prosperity, skill, trade and commerce, and a healthy and beautiful country. They also had, apparently, great virtues, and as long as they remained true to their virtues, i.e., to the law of God, they remained happy and contented. But when they became covetous and selfish, and became jealous of other people's prosperity instead of rejoicing in it, they fell from grace and declined. It may be that the climate changed, the rainfall became scantier, perhaps on account of the cutting down of hill forests: trade routes changed, on account of the people falling off in the virtues that make men popular: behind all the physical causes was the root-cause, that they began to worship mammon, self, greed, or materialism. They fell into the snare of Satan. They gradually passed out of history, and became only a name in a story. Moral: it is only God's Mercy that can give true happiness or prosperity, and happiness or prosperity is only a snare unless used for the highest service of God and man. As mentioned, incline towards the reasoning and reading of Muhammad Asad whose comment at this point I also reproduce in full: In its generally-accepted spelling - based on the reading adopted by most of the early scholars of Medina and Kufah - the above phrase reads in the vocative rabbana and the imperative ba'id ("Our Sustainer! Make long the distances ...", etc.), which, however, cannot be convincingly explained. On the other hand, Tabari, Baghawi and Zamakhshari mention, on the authority of some of the earliest Qur'an-commentators, another legitimate reading of the relevant words, namely, rabbuna (in the nominative) and ba'ada (in the indicative), which gives the meaning adopted by me: "Long has our Sustainer made the distances ...", etc. To my mind, this reading is much more appropriate since (as pointed out by Zamakhshari) it expresses the belated regrets and the sorrow of the people of Sheba at the devastation of their country, the exodus of large groups of the population, and the resultant abandonment of many towns and villages on the great caravan routes.

34:19[2] Arabic: aḥādīth.

34:19[3] Lit.: scattered them in every scattering. Cf. 34:7.

34:19[4] Arabic: āyāt. See Notepad VIII.

34:20[1] Arabic: (al) mu'minūn. See note to 8:2, also 17:62 and 7:17.

34:21[1] See note to 58:4 for Qur'anic usage of to believe in.

¶34.3

34:22[1] Arabic: min dūni. See note to 2:23.

34:22[2] Grammar: dual; i.e. in the heavens or the earth.

34:22[3] See note to Arabic root: sh-r-k at 6:78 and Notepad VI.

34:23[1] Arabic: ḥattā idhā. See note to 3:152.

34:23[2] Arabic: al ḥaqq. See Notepad XVII (al ḥaqq i.).

34:26[1] Arabic: bil ḥaqqi. See Notepad XVII (bil ḥaqqi ii.).

34:27[1] See note to Arabic root: sh-r-k at 6:78 and Notepad VI.

34:27[2] Arabic: kallā. This exclamation operates also as a pan-textual marker. See 74:16 and note thereto.

34:27[3] Arabic: bal. See note to 2:88.

34:27[4] Arabic: al 'azīz al ḥakīm. See note to 3:18.

34:29[1] See grammar note to 2:91.

¶34.4

34:31[1] Arabic: alladhīna kafarū. See note to 2:6 and Notepad II.i.

34:31[2] See note to 58:4 for Qur'anic usage of to believe in.

34:31[3] Arabic: qur'ān — reading, recital, recitation, something which is read out.

34:31[4] Lit.: between its hands. I understand this to mean here: what is within its scope; i.e. that which it treats of or concerns itself with. See note to 2:66.

34:31[5] Arabic: ẓālimūn. See note to 2:229.

34:31[6] Lit.: returning the word one to another. Sc. thou wouldst see a terrible sight!

34:32[1] Arabic: ṣadda + 'an. See note to 8:47.

34:32[2] Arabic: bal. See note to 2:88.

34:33[1] Arabic: bal. See note to 2:88.

34:33[2] Lit. the scheme. This description fits the ruling elite of most periods in history, certainly including our own. Their power hinges on separating men from their allegiance to the Creator. The means today are different, the goal is the same: tyranny and control.

34:33[3] Or confide.

34:33[4] Arabic: alladhīna kafarū. See note to 2:6 and Notepad II.i.

34:33[5] Cf. 7:147.

¶34.5

34:38[1] Or cause failure to.

34:38[2] Arabic: āyāt. See Notepad VIII.

34:41[1] See note to s-b-ḥ root at 2:30.

34:41[2] Arabic: min dūni. See note to 2:23.

34:41[3] Arabic: bal. See note to 2:88.

34:41[4] Arabic: al jinn. See Article SJC.

34:41[5] See note to 58:4 for Qur'anic usage of to believe in.

34:41[6] The analysis here is that al jinn (as distinct from other words typically rendered as jinn) are the dominant minority: the alphas, leaders, rulers. The fact is that most people serve them — and invest them with qualities beyond their qualifications. See Article SJC.

34:43[1] Arabic: āyāt. See Notepad VIII.

34:43[2] Arabic: ṣadda + 'an. See note to 8:47.

34:43[3] Arabic: alladhīna kafarū. See note to 2:6 and Notepad II.i.

34:43[4] Arabic: al ḥaqq. See Notepad XVII (al ḥaqq i.).

34:43[5] Arabic: siḥr — sorcery. See note to 2:102.

34:44[1] Arabic: kutub. See Notepad IX.ii.

34:45[1] So often man rejects (or accepts) a conception of God without having first done his due diligence.

¶34.6

34:46[1] Cf. 4:127 and see note to 2:238.

34:46[2] This is where it is possible to gain real insight. Large groups — especially ones which fall under the aegis of organised religion — serve usually to constrain and censure thought, not to encourage or develop it. According to Dan Gibson (Quranic Geography, 2011), the earliest mosques consisted of small rooms or cubicles, not the collective prayer halls of today.

34:46[3] Lit.: There is not in your companion any possession (cf. 7:184).

34:46[4] Lit.: between its hands. I understand this to mean here: at the time of. See note to 2:66; i.e. prior to.

34:47[1] Lit.: What I asked. Clear statements in the Qur'an confirm that Muḥammad asked for no payment.

34:47[2] I.e. incumbent upon.

34:48[1] Arabic: bil ḥaqqi. See Notepad XVII (bil ḥaqqi i.).

34:49[1] Arabic: al ḥaqq. See Notepad XVII (al ḥaqq i.).

34:50[1] See note to waḥī and awḥā at 3:44.

34:52[1] See note to 58:4 for Qur'anic usage of to believe in.

34:52[2] I.e. of faith. Arabic: al tanāwush. This form VI verbal noun means literally the reaching one another (Lane, p. 2928). Saheeh International has a note here which reads: Literally, "taking of something within easy reach," in other words, "How can they expect to obtain faith at this point?"

34:53[1] Lit.: hurled at. Understood also as guessed at.

34:53[2] Muhammad Asad comments here: The obvious implication is that man's fate in the hereafter will be a consequence of, and invariably conditioned by, his spiritual attitude and the manner of his life during the first, earthly stage of his existence. In this instance, the expression "from far away" is apparently used in a sense similar to sayings like "far off the mark" or "without rhyme or reason", and is meant to qualify as groundless and futile all negative speculations about what the Qur'an describes as al-ghayb ("that which is beyond the reach of human [or "a created being's"] perception"): in this case, life after death.

34:54[1] Arabic: ashyā'. I consistently render this literally as sects. It denotes ideologically aligned groups of any kind. The fact is that the 'new' sects of today such as earth-worship, man-worship (humanism), pleasure-worship, solipsism, plain foolishness, state-worship, Satanism etc. are not original. Such groups have existed and promoted similar dogmas down through history. There is nothing — or, at least, very little — new under the sun.

35

35:0[2] The thirty-fifth chapter of the Qur'an is by convention called fāṭir or Originator.

35:1[1] I repeat here part of Muhammad Asad's comment: The "wings" of the spiritual beings or forces comprised within the designation of angels are, obviously, a metaphor for the speed and power with which God's revelations are conveyed to His prophets. Their multiplicity ("two, or three, or four") is perhaps meant to stress the countless ways in which He causes His commands to materialize within the universe created by Him[...].

35:2[1] Arabic: al 'azīz al ḥakīm. See note to 3:18.

35:3[1] Cf. 2:255, 3:2, 3:6, 3:18, 3:18, 4:87, 6:102, 6:106, 7:158, 9:129, 13:30, 20:8, 20:98, 23:116, 27:26, 28:70, 28:88, 35:3, 39:6, 40:3, 40:62, 40:65, 44:8, 59:22, 59:23, 64:13, 73:9.

35:4[1] Lit.: the matters.

35:5[1] Arabic: ḥaqqun. See Notepad XVII (ḥaqq- vi.).

35:5[2] Arabic: al gharūr — the deluder; occurs at 31:33, 35:5, 57:14.

35:6[1] Or adversary (against the command of God). See Article SJC.

35:7[1] Arabic: alladhīna kafarū. See note to 2:6 and Notepad II.i.

35:7[2] Arabic: alladhīna āmanū. See note to 2:257 and Notepad II.iv.

¶35.2

35:8[1] See note to 3:162.

35:8[2] Sc. like one who sees things as they truly are.

35:8[3] See note to 2:272.

35:10[1] Arabic: 'izza — power, prestige, honour, respect and fame.

35:10[2] Arabic: sayyi'āt. See Notepad XI.x.

35:11[1] Arabic: kitāb. See Notepad IX.iii.

35:11[2] See note to dhālika 'alā at 22:70.

35:12[1] I.e. bodies of water.

35:12[2] Arabic: fulk — (m. and f.) ship, (also coll.) ships.

35:13[1] Arabic: min dūni. See note to 2:23.

35:14[1] See note to Arabic root: sh-r-k at 6:78 and Notepad VI.

¶35.3

35:17[1] See note to dhālika 'alā at 22:70.

35:18[1] I.e. call to another to assist in carrying his burden.

35:18[2] This formula is found at 5:106, 6:152, 35:18.

35:18[3] Arabic: al ṣalāt; i.e. such duty as is incumbent. See note to 2:3 and Article SZC. The text is clear: the Messenger is able to warn (i.e. to benefit by warning) only those who uphold the ṣalāt. The Traditionalist's value for ṣalāt here — as in numerous other places — makes no sense. If ṣalāt really did mean performing a ritual five times a day — and if that ritual were truly intrinsic to adherence to God's path — there would have been no reason for the Messenger to warn such people since he would be preaching to the converted. Cf. 36:11.

35:24[1] Arabic: bil ḥaqqi. See Notepad XVII (bil ḥaqqi i.).

35:25[1] Arabic: zubur. See note to 3:184.

35:27[1] Arabic: alam tara. See note to 2:243.

35:28[1] I.e. in a way comparable to that outlined to this point at 35:27-28.

35:29[1] Arabic: al kitāb. See Notepad IX.ii.

35:29[2] Arabic: kitāb allah. See Notepad IX.vi.

35:29[3] Arabic: al ṣalāt; i.e. uphold such duty as is incumbent. See note to 2:3 and Article SZC. Here al ṣalāt clearly denotes the duty found in the Writ of God.

35:31[1] See note to waḥī and awḥā at 3:44.

35:31[2] Arabic: al kitāb. See Notepad IX.ii.

35:31[3] Arabic: al ḥaqq. See Notepad XVII (al ḥaqq i.).

35:32[2] Arabic: dhālika huwa. See note to 22:11.

35:36[1] Arabic: alladhīna kafarū. See note to 2:6 and Notepad II.i.

35:37[1] Arabic: ẓālimūn. See note to 2:229.

35:39[1] Arabic: al kāfirūn. See note to 2:19 and Notepad II.iii.

35:39[2] Arabic: al kāfirūn. See note to 2:19 and Notepad II.iii.

35:40[1] Arabic: a ra'ayt-. See note to 6:40.

35:40[2] See note to Arabic root: sh-r-k at 6:78 and Notepad VI. The concept of partners is said by the Traditionalist to refer only to fraudulent gods. I think the connotation is much wider than that and includes authorities of any kind (today: government, heavily promoted 'scientists', opinion-makers such as actors and other semi-fictitious personas) and all fiction-based belief systems, including most of what today passes for religion.

35:40[3] Arabic: min dūni. See note to 2:23.

35:40[4] Arabic: am. See note to 21:21.

35:40[5] See note to Arabic root: sh-r-k at 6:78 and Notepad VI.

35:40[7] Arabic: am. See note to 21:21.
35:40[8] Arabic: kitāb. See Notepad IX.iii; i.e. if this is the claim.
35:40[9] I.e. if either of the previous claims is correct, they should be able to provide evidence; since neither is, the speakers are shown to be liars.

35:43[1] Lit.: people.
35:43[2] Arabic: sunnah; i.e. communication of God's message followed by rejection and destruction or (occasionally) by acceptance and submission. See 3:137, 17:77, 33:62, 35:43, 48:23.
35:44[1] Or cause failure to.
35:45[1] I.e. to task.
35:45[2] Lit.: back; i.e. of the earth.

36

36:0[2] The thirty-sixth chapter of the Qur'an is by convention called yā sīn or Yā Sīn.
36:1[1] See note to 2:1 and Article MLQ.
yā sīn:
yā: 19:16-33 (ʿĪsā), 19:51-53 (Mūsā)
sīn: 19:41-50 (Ibrāhīm).
36:2[1] Arabic: qur'ān — reading, recital, recitation, something which is read out.
36:5[1] I take the yā sīn here as the subject of the sentence. The fact of a missing verb in this sentence is made clear in, for example, the rendering by Saheeh International: [This is] a revelation of the Exalted in Might, the Merciful. Hilali & Khan render likewise. Once yā sīn is recognised as the subject of the sentence at 36:5, the need for interpolation ceases. However, I have refrained from interpolating 'Is' at the beginning of this sentence, and confined my thoughts to the notes. Cf. 32:2. See Article MLQ for a full analysis of the mysterious letters.
36:5[2] Lit.: (gradual or successive) sending down.
36:7[1] Cf. 10:33, 10:96, 10:103, 16:36, 16:38, 17:16, 22:18, 28:63, 30:47, 32:13, 36:7, 37:31, 38:14, 39:19, 39:71-72, 40:6, 41:25, 46:18, 50:12-14.
36:7[2] Arabic: lā yu'minūn. Qur'anic usage implies: (are those) lost in darkness. See note to 2:6 and Notepad II.ii.
36:10[1] Cf. 2:6. Arabic: lā yu'minūn. Qur'anic usage implies: (are those) lost in darkness. See note to 2:6 and Notepad II.ii.
36:11[1] I.e. successfully. Cf. 35:18 and note thereto.
36:11[2] Arabic: dhikr — calling to mind, recalling, reminding; remembrance (of something past); history.
36:11[3] Arabic: raḥmān. Typically rendered most merciful. See 36:23 and note thereto, note to 1:1, and Notepad I.
36:11[4] Or generous.
36:12[1] Lit.: traces, footsteps; i.e. their deeds upon the earth.
36:12[2] Cf. 78:29.
36:12[3] Or master-copy (of a book). Arabic: imām — leader; master; plumb line; standard, criterion; example, model. The sense in all cases is that of (right) standard.

¶36.2

36:19[1] Cf. 17:13.
36:19[2] I.e. the fact you want to stone us.
36:19[3] Arabic: bal. See note to 2:88.
36:20[1] Cf. 28:20.
36:23[1] Arabic: min dūni. See note to 2:23.
36:23[2] Arabic: raḥmān. Typically rendered most merciful. See 36:23 and note thereto, note to 1:1, and Notepad I. The verse here provides strong corroborative evidence that raḥmān means, as rendered throughout, almighty and not, as the Traditionalist claims, beneficent or most merciful since intending harm is nowhere a characteristic of mercy.
36:23[3] I parse this verse as do both N. J. Dawood and Muhammad Asad. Other translators continue the interrogative mood to the end of the verse.
36:25[1] See note to 58:4 for Qur'anic usage of to believe in.
36:26[1] The sudden shift of narrative is read by some as implying a violent death at the hands of those opposed to his message. However, the following verses perhaps do not bear that out: the community was destroyed in an act of God. Consider also, for example, 5:56, 10:103, 40:51.
36:28[1] Or (military) force.
36:30[1] See note to 2:207.

¶36.3

36:33[1] Arabic: āya. See Notepad VIII.
36:34[1] Grammar: the feminine object pronoun indicates the earth.
36:35[1] Or And what their hands made. Both readings are possible.
36:35[2] Arabic: afalā. See Notepad XIV.
36:36[1] See note to s-b-ḥ root at 2:30.
36:36[2] Arabic: azwāj — spouses, mates; kinds, types; species.
36:37[1] Arabic: āya. See Notepad VIII.
36:37[2] Arabic: salakha — to pull off, strip off; to skin, flay; to detach; to end, terminate, conclude, bring to a close.
36:38[1] Or flows or sails.
36:38[2] I.e. until such time as it stops; or unceasingly. Muhammad Asad includes the following in his note: 'Abd Allah ibn Mas'ud is reliably reported to have read these words as la mustaqarra laha (Zamakhshari), which gives us the meaning of "it runs [on its course] without having any rest", i.e., unceasingly.
36:38[3] Formula occurs at 6:96, 36:38, 41:12.
36:39[1] I.e. dried up and curved.
36:41[1] Arabic: āya. See Notepad VIII.
36:41[2] I.e. carried.
36:41[3] Interpretations exist some of which ascribe imaginative meanings to dhuriyyah (progeny); cf. 37:77.
36:45[1] The preceding image is of being saved from the storm; there then follows the opportunity for true rescue.
36:45[2] See note to al muttaqūn at 2:2.
36:45[3] Lit.: between your hands. I understand this to mean here: what is at your time. See note to 2:66.
36:45[4] Sc. they turn away therefrom (this ellipsis anticipates the close of the next verse).
36:46[1] Arabic: āya. See Notepad VIII.
36:46[2] Arabic: āyāt. See Notepad VIII.
36:47[1] Arabic: allaḏhīna kafarū. See note to 2:6 and Notepad II.i.
36:47[2] Arabic: allaḏhīna āmanū. See note to 2:257 and Notepad II.iv.
36:48[1] See grammar note to 2:91.

36:51[1] Cf. 21:96 and note thereto.
36:52[1] I have divided the verse into two segments of speech since this segment reads most naturally as a response to what precedes. Some other translators follow this practice, others do not.

36:52[3] Cf. 33:22.
36:55[1] Arabic: fakaha. This verb occurs in its participle form (fākihūn, fākihīn) only (36:55, 44:27, 52:18). The verb itself means to be happy, free of burden, glad. At 36:55 and 52:18 there is an obvious connection in the Arabic between this word and fākiha (fruit) which follows shortly.
36:58[1] Arabic: qawl — speech; teaching, doctrine; saying, word.
36:60[1] Or adversary (against the command of God). See Article SJC.
36:66[1] Cf. 54:37.
36:66[2] Muhammad Asad makes an apposite observation here: [...]a metaphor for "We could have created them morally blind" and, thus, devoid of all sense of moral responsibility - which, in its turn, would constitute a negation of all spiritual value in human life as such. (Cf. 2:20 - "if God so willed, He could indeed take away their hearing and their sight".)
36:67[1] Muhammad Asad's refined sentiments are of service to us here also: I.e., if it had been God's will that men should have no freedom of will or moral choice, He would have endowed them from the very beginning with a spiritually and morally stationary nature, entirely rooted in their instincts ("in their places"), devoid of all urge to advance, and incapable either of positive development or of retreat from a wrong course.

36:75[2] I.e. Those taken as gods.
36:75[3] I.e. For those who took them as gods.
36:75[4] I have rendered each part of the present clause in keeping with my rendering of that item across the entire text. The meaning is clear when we review similar instances of the operative word summoned (28:61, 30:16, 34:38, 36:32, 36:53, 36:75, 37:57, 37:127, 37:158) which invariably treats of being brought before the judgment seat of God. Thus, I take the sense here to be that those 'gods other than God' are no more than 'a force summoned' (i.e. before the judgment seat of God) on the Final Day; i.e. commanded to be present, then sent to Hell.
36:78[1] By making conceptual comparisons for Almighty God, who is beyond all comparison.

37:2[1] Arabic: zajara. There is very little to cross-reference this root with in the text. The underlying sense is of urging, rebuking; restraining; driving or driving away.
37:2[2] Lit.: those driving with driving.
37:3[1] Arabic: dhikr — calling to mind, recalling, reminding; remembrance (of something past); history.
37:5[1] Grammar: dual.

37:28[1] Sc. why then did you not guide us? Muhammad Asad comments here: *I.e., "claiming that what you were asking us to do was right and good". 37:40[1] This statement is the defining refrain of the chapter and occurs four times (37:40, 37:74, 37:128, 37:160), and is confirmed at 37:169. As I read the text, the salient force here is the counterpoint between those at 37:35 and the first instance of this defining motif here at 37:40, and I treat the intervening segment as an aside.
37:42[1] Sc. such as they desire. Cf. 77:42.

37:48[1] Arabic: qāṣirāt al ṭarf 'īn. See Notepad XIX.

37:54[1] Grammar: there is a shift to the plural in the Arabic; understood to indicate an appeal to a plurality of companions.
37:58[1] I read this as the principal speech of 'the sincere servants of God' at 37:50, the formula there providing clear counterpoint to the corresponding words of 'the lawbreakers' in Hell (cf. 37:27-28 and 37:34-39).
37:62[1] Cf. 44:43, 56:52, also: 17:60. Muhammad Asad comments here: According to the lexicographers, the noun zaqqam (which occurs, apart from the present instance, in 44:43 and in 56:52 as well) denotes any "deadly food"; hence, the expression shajarat az-zaqqum, a symbol of hell, may be appropriately rendered as "the tree of deadly fruit" (undoubtedly identical with "the tree cursed in this Qur'an", mentioned in 17:60), symbolizing the fact that the otherworldly sufferings which the Qur'an describes as "hell" are but the fruit - i.e., organic consequence - of one's evil deeds done on earth.

37:64[1] Cf. 17:60.
37:65[1] The allusion here — given our underlying definition for shayāṭīn of adversaries — suggests the age-old practice of displaying the heads of defeated enemies on spikes on castle battlements and similar places. See Article SJC.
37:66[1] Lit.: the.
37:70[1] Muhammad Asad comments here: I.e., blind imitation (taqlid) of the - obviously absurd - beliefs, valuations and customs of one's erring predecessors, and disregard of all evidence of the truth supplied by both reason and divine revelation, is here shown to be the principal cause of the suffering referred to in the preceding passage (Zamakhshari).

¶37.3

37:81[1] See note to (al) mu'minūn at 8:2.
37:83[1] Lit.: sect, persuasion. Cf. 28:4.
37:88[1] Lit.: looked with looking. I treat this clause and the one following as parenthetical to the main narrative. Typically, the verse here is rendered along the lines I have followed. While such is an acceptable rendering of the verb, to contemplate is also admissible, indicating a longer process of looking. This is in keeping with the broader narrative at 6:76-78.
37:89[1] Various understandings of this phrase exist. Muhammad Asad, for example, interpolates at heart. My own view is that if one sincerely considers the night sky, the quackery, fakery and vanity which constitute what most think of as Life pale into nothingness, and can result in a shift in one's accustomed habits of thought sufficient to induce a feeling which may be described as sickness.
37:90[1] Lit.: turned away turning backs. Found at 21:57, 27:80, 30:52, 37:90, 40:33.
37:93[1] Lit.: the right hand.

37:100[1] I.e. a son. Cf. 37:113.
37:102[1] Lit.: striving, running.
37:102[2] Ibrāhīm saw a dream. He then asked his son what he saw, so it is reasonable to conclude that a dream is implied in this second case also. Whatever the details, the Qur'anic narrative has Ibrāhīm and his son agreeing together on the matter. Unlike the Hebrew Bible in its present state, Ibrāhīm in the Qur'an does not unilaterally decide to sacrifice his son on the basis of no consultation.
37:102[3] Arabic: al ṣābirūn. See note to 2:155.
37:103[1] Grammar: dual.
37:103[2] Lit.: the.

37:130[1] Typically identified with the Elijah of the Hebrew scriptures. While I remain neutral on the point he raises, Muhammad Asad illustrates for us the problems here: The form Il-Yasin in which this name appears in the above verse is either a variant of Ilyas (Elijah) or, more probably, a plural - "the Elijahs" - meaning "Elijah and his followers" (Tabari, Zamakhshari, et al). According to Tabari, 'Abd Allah ibn Mas'ud used to read this verse as "Peace be upon Idrasin", which, apart from giving us a variant or a plural of Idris ("Idris and his followers"), lends support to the view that Idris and Ilyas are but two designations of one and the same person, the Biblical Elijah. I suspend judgment on this point absent further data. Muhammad Asad's comment below. My own thoughts will be found at Article SJC. Whereas most of the classical commentators are of the opinion that the term al-jinnah denotes here the angels, since they - like all beings of this category - are imperceptible to man's senses, I believe that the above verse refers to those intangible forces of nature which elude all direct observation and manifest themselves only in their effects: hence their designation, in this context, by the plural noun al-jinnah, which primarily denotes "that which is concealed from [man's] senses". Inasmuch as people who refuse to believe in God often tend to regard those elemental forces as mysteriously endowed with a purposeful creative power (cf. Bergson's concept of the elan vital), the Qur'an states that their votaries invent a "kinship" between them and God, i.e., attribute to them qualities and powers similar to His.

37:159[1] See note to s-b-ḥ root at 2:30.
37:164[1] Most think that the present verse treats of angels (cf. 37:150). This reading has merit, but I also allow that 37:164-166 reference 'the sincere servants of God' which is the dominant motif in the chapter (37:40, 37:74, 37:128, 37:160, 37:169) and as a collocation occurs nowhere outside it. Additionally, 37:165 and 37:166 refer back to established concepts within the chapter (at 37:1 and 37:143 respectively), and neither 'those lined up' nor 'givers of glory' occur outside the verses mentioned in this note. The import of this segment, seen in this light, is that each man among 'the sincere servants of God' has an 'appointed station', or particular role to play.

38:11[1] I.e. upon being faced with a challenge such as that outlined at 38:9-10.
38:11[2] This is a pivotal, crucial clause and absent any methodical approach to textual values has resulted in wild guessing as to its meaning. A. J. Arberry has: A very host of parties is routed there! M.K. Shakir has: A host of deserters of the allies shall be here put to flight. Muhammad Asad has: [But] there it is: any and all human beings, however [strongly] leagued together, are bound to suffer defeat [whenever they refuse to accept the truth]. N. J. Dawood has: Their faction is no more than a beaten army. Saheeh International has: [They are but] soldiers [who will be] defeated there among the companies [of disbelievers]. And Abdullah Yusuf Ali has: But there - will be put to flight even a host of confederates. The translators cited understand two things: 1. that there is a host of some kind and 2. that this host is defeated. What their presentations lack is any demonstration of the import of — and connection between — these two facts. Part of their problem is that they are trying to work blind: they have no pan-textual method; they do not understand the system of Qur'anic definitions; they do not understand the function of bal in 38:8 or of the hanging am at 38:9-10, and on top of that they are obliged to deal with the sandstorm of the Traditionalist's extraneous narrative interpolation. Under such circumstances it would be surprising if they were able to demonstrate any clarity. I will unpick the present clause within the framework of the methodology used here before going on to demonstrate what it means. Firstly, jund is a collective noun rendered force throughout (19:75, 36:28, 36:75, 37:173, 38:11, 44:24, 67:20) and indicates a group directed towards an aim of some kind, usually — though not always — with a military aspect; secondly, hunālika means there (at that place) or thereupon and is rendered in this second mode throughout (3:38, 7:119, 10:30, 18:44, 25:13, 33:11, 38:11, 40:78, 40:85); thirdly, we have the verb hazama. It occurs twice as a verb (2:251, 54:45) and once (here) as a passive participle. The first instance of the verb treats of the victory of the children of Israel under Ṭālūt (in which Dāwūd slew Jālūt), while the second instance treats of the inevitability of victory over the forces of denial (after a rehearsal of the defeat of Fir'awn). Hence, both contexts unquestionably treat of defeat, which may safely be relied upon as the value here (in passive mode). Fourthly, the plural noun al aḥzāb is rendered here as the parties throughout. A careful reading of all instances (11:17, 13:36, 19:37, 33:20, 33:20, 33:22, 38:11, 38:13, 40:30, 43:65) makes clear that this term has a particular meaning: it denotes those groups or factions into which men fall based on their reaction to the message given by God. That is: al aḥzāb are those who encounter and (usually) reject the message brought by the Messenger (this point is made explicitly here at 38:12-14). We are left with the meaning of mā and min. The latter consistently means among or of and is rendered thus here. The particle mā (which follows junb) has a range of meanings. However, following an indefinite noun (as here) it means some, certain (for example yawman mā — some day, sometime in the future). On this basis we render: Some force is thereupon defeated among the parties. To understand what this means we need to understand that the tone and content of the lead-up from the beginning of the chapter treats of the confrontation and defeat of the ruling elite of the day. On a verse-by-verse basis: 38:1 evokes the Qur'an; 38:2 states that those who ignore warning are lost; 38:3 reminds of the destruction of previous communities; 38:4-5 cite amazement at being warned by one of their own, and subsequent accusations against the message-bearer; 38:6-7 list initial strategies on the part of the ruling elite to refute the message; 38:8 gives a true assessment of the condition of those warned; 38:9-10 posit a challenge to two positions which fundamentally underpin the position supported by the ruling elite which is: then let them ascend into the causes! — i.e. let them make the heavens and the earth obey them (if they truly have dominion of the heavens and the earth and what is between them, etc.). However, the fact is that they do not have the treasures of the mercies of God nor do they have the dominion of the heavens and the earth (cf. 38:9-10); they have smoke, mirrors and threats. Thus, they and their claims are exposed. The crucial import of 38:11 lies in the fact that it is at this point (i.e. having taken the argument to this juncture) that some force is thereupon defeated among the parties. Under the aegis of the God Protocol (see my book The God Protocol) this juncture has legal significance. After this point, those who lead a community are guilty and that community is liable to punishment — a point made explicitly at 38:12-15. Cf. 39:71.

38:15[1] I.e. those who receive warning in the narrative present.

38:16[1] Some see this as a mocking demand to bring the punishment sooner. I read this as possibly meaning also: let us have as much fun and wealth as possible now.

¶38.2 38:17[1] The point of the story of Dāwūd (38:17-26) is repentance — learning the lessons from what happens in one's own life and regarding them as teachers in the science of drawing closer to God by repenting of one's own faults and sins, rather than being quick to judge and condemn others.

38:28[3] I.e. if this is the claim. Sc. then should we have created the sky and the earth and what is between them to no purpose.

38:28[4] Arabic: am. See note to 21:21.

38:28[5] See note to al muttaqūn at 2:2.

38:28[6] I.e. if this is the claim. Sc. then should we have created the sky and the earth and what is between them to no purpose. See 83:7 for an account of what such people have in store.

38:29[1] I.e. the Qur'an, which attests to the fact that God is not unrighteous or unfair. For why we know the Qur'an to be the reference see note to 6:92. Arabic: kitāb. See Notepad IX.iii.

38:29[2] Arabic: kitābun anzalnāhu ilayka mubārakun. See Notepad IX.ix.

38:29[3] Arabic: āyāt. See Notepad VIII.

38:31[1] Abdullah Yusuf Ali comments here: Safinat: literally, horses that stand, when at ease, on three legs, firmly planted, with the hoof of the fourth leg resting lightly on the ground. This would imply breeding and a steady temper, to match with the quality of swiftness mentioned[...].

38:32[1] The preposition 'an is problematical here. Some see it as an indication of comparison (for example, Saheeh International has here: And he said, "Indeed, I gave preference to the love of good [things] over the remembrance of my Lord[...]). However, Muhammad Asad places the emphasis as have I, and supplies a note: Lit,, "because of [or "out of"] ('an) the remembrance of my Sustainer". Leaving linguistic points to one side, it seems some Traditionalists are ideologically committed to the reading they have here since at the next verse they have Sulaymān hacking his horses into pieces — something which is nowhere found in the Arabic (I am unable to supply their reasons). Abdullah Yusuf Ali comments here: The story is not found in the Old Testament. I interpret it to mean that, like his father David, Solomon was also most meticulous in not allowing the least motive of self to be mixed up with his spiritual virtues. He was fond of horses: he had great armies and wealth; but he used them all in God's service[...]. His battles were not fought for lust of blood, but as Jihāds in the cause of righteousness. His love of horses was not like that of a mere race-goer or of a warrior: there was a spiritual element in it. He loved by a kind of love which was spiritual—the love of the highest Good.

38:32[2] Arabic: dhikr — calling to mind, recalling, reminding; remembrance (of something past); history.

38:32[3] Grammar: the verb here is in the feminine singular, agreeing with shams (sun) which is obliquely referenced by virtue of the fact that we know that it is evening ('ashiyya). Traditionalist interpretations for 38:31-33 vary. The facts as I see them are: Sulaymān loved horses out of love for God (seeing God's hand in their creation and maintenance); the sun then set (which indicated that it was time for prayer); Sulaymān stopped for prayer after which he asked for the horses to be brought back to him; he then anointed (or stroked or rubbed) their legs and necks. The lesson is simple: you can have good things in abundance and keep a right attitude towards them.

38:33[1] Arabic: masḥ — wiping, wiping off; cleaning; rubbing; anointing.

38:34[1] See note to fitnah at 2:102.

38:34[2] While I do not share his pre-existing allegiance to the dominant Egypt-Palestine thesis (see Notepad XVI), I reproduce Abdullah Yusuf Ali's comments here in full: The body (without life) on his throne has been variously interpreted. The interpretation that appeals to me most is that his earthly power, great as it was, was like a body without a soul, unless it was vivified by God's spirit. But Solomon did turn to God in true devotion, and his real power lay there. He did his best to root out idolatry, and he completed the Temple in Jerusalem for the worship of the One True God. Cf. his conversion of Bilqis the Queen of Sheba, 27:40. See also 7:148, where the same word jasad is used in connection with the image of a calf which the Israelites had set up for worship in the absence of Moses. Men may worship worldly Power as they may worship an idol, and there is great temptation in such Power, though Solomon withstood such temptation[...]. Muhammad Asad's comment adds to those provided by Abdullah Yusuf Ali: To explain this verse, some of the commentators advance the most fantastic stories, almost all of them going back to Talmudic sources. Razi rejects them all, maintaining that they are unworthy of serious consideration. Instead, he plausibly suggests that the "body" (jasad) upon Solomon's throne is an allusion to his own body, and - metonymically - to his kingly power, which was bound to remain "lifeless" so long as it was not inspired by God-willed ethical values. (It is to be borne in mind that in classical Arabic a person utterly weakened by illness, worry or fear, or devoid of moral values, is often described as "a body without a soul".) In other words, Solomon's early trial consisted in his inheriting no more than a kingly position, and it rested upon him to endow that position with spiritual essence and meaning.

38:35[1] Muhammad Asad notes here: I.e., a spiritual kingdom, which could not be inherited by anyone and, hence, would not be exposed to envy or worldly intrigue.

38:36[1] Sulaymān had power both over the direction and the intensity of the wind (cf. 21:81).

38:37[1] Or adversaries (against the command of God). See Article SJC. Cf. 21:82 and note thereto.

38:39[1] I.e. without a need to answer to anyone else on the part of the giver; without limit.

38:40[1] Arabic: ma'āb — place of return; place to which one returns.

¶38.4 38:41[1] Arabic: ayyūb. Typically identified with the Job of the Hebrew scriptures. See Notepad XV.

38:41[2] Or adversary (against the command of God). See Article SJC.

38:42[1] Or Hasten thou away on foot. This interpretation of rakaḍa bi rijlika as to tread the ground with thy foot is found in Lane, page 1151; however, the foundational sense for this verb is to flee or to hasten away (cf. 21:12, 21:13). While I am unconvinced by its contents, I include Muhammad Asad's comment here for interest: According to the classical commentators, the miraculous appearance of a healing spring heralded the end of Job's suffering, both physical and mental.

38:44[1] Arabic: ḍaraba. This verb means to beat or to strike. Under modern pressures, translators tend not to want to apply the clear sense to the same word at 4:34, but the sense there is as plain as it is here (see next note).

38:44[2] Arabic root: ḥ-n-th. See Notepad XI.viii. Muhammad Asad comments here: In the words of the Bible (The Book of Job ii, 9), at the time of his seemingly hopeless suffering Job's wife reproached her husband for persevering in his faith: "Dost thou still retain thine integrity? Curse God, and die." According to the classical Qur'an-commentators, Job swore that, if God would restore him to health, he would punish her blasphemy with a hundred stripes. But when he did recover, he bitterly regretted his hasty oath, for he realized that his wife's "blasphemy" had been an outcome of her love and pity for him; and thereupon he was told in a revelation that he could fulfil his vow in a symbolic manner by striking her once with "a bunch of grass containing a hundred blades or more". (Cf. 5:89 - "God will not take you to task for oaths which you may have uttered without thought."). The Arabic word dighth means bunch, mixed bunch, something muddled (such as flowers, grasses, thoughts).

38:48[1] Arabic: alyasa'. Typically identified with the Elisha of the Hebrew scriptures. See Notepad XV.

38:48[2] Arabic: dhūl kifl. Identified by some with Ezekiel; however, see note to 21:85.

38:49[1] Arabic: dhikr — calling to mind, recalling, reminding; remembrance (of something past); history.

38:49[2] See note to al muttaqūn at 2:2.

38:49[3] Arabic: ma'āb — place of return; place to which one returns.

38:50[1] I supply Muhammad Asad's note with some light editing for interest: In all the eleven instances in which the noun 'adn occurs in the Qur'an it is used as a qualifying term for the "gardens" (jannat) of paradise. This noun is derived from the verb 'adana, which primarily denotes "he remained [somewhere]" or "he kept (to something)", i.e., permanently: cf, the phrase 'adantu 'l-balad ("I remained for good [or "settled"] in the country"). In Biblical Hebrew - which, after all, is but a very ancient Arabian dialect - the closely related noun 'eden has also the additional connotation of "delight", "pleasure" or "bliss". Hence the combination of the two concepts in my rendering of 'adn as "perpetual bliss". As in many other places in the Qur'an, this bliss is here allegorized - and thus brought closer to man's imagination - by means of descriptions recalling earthly joys.

38:52[1] Arabic: qāṣirāt al ṭarf. See Notepad XIX.

38:52[2] Arabic: atrāb. See Notepad XIX.

38:55[1] Translators tend not to know what to do with the This here and at 38:57. My view is that it serves a rhetorical function. It provides an allusion to the This of 38:54, while anticipating (and inviting comparison with) the This of 38:59.

38:55[2] Arabic: ṭāghūn. See ṭāghūt at 39:17.

38:55[3] Arabic: ma'āb — place of return; place to which one returns.

38:57[1] Arabic: ghassāq. Lane (p. 2313) records various values for this word, including: intense cold or stinking (often it is found as pus). Occurs also at 78:25.

38:58[1] Lit.: other (i.e. punishments).

38:58[2] Or pairs. Lit.: of its type are kinds. Arabic: azwāj — spouses, mates; kinds, types; species. Muhammad Asad's translation is more interpretive than terse, but supplies the broader implication here: and, coupled with it, further [suffering] of a similar nature. See note to 15:88.

38:60[1] Arabic: bal. See note to 2:88.

38:60[2] I.e. you who brought this upon us.

38:70[1] See note to waḥī and awḥā at 3:44.
38:70[2] Muhammad Asad supplies the following comment here: Lit., "otherwise than that I be (illa annama ana) a plain warner" - i.e., of the prospect of spiritual self-destruction inherent in a wilful disregard of the fact of God's existence and oneness, which is the core of all religious cognition and, hence, of all true prophethood.

38:84[2] Arabic: al ḥaqq. See Notepad XVII (al ḥaqq i.).
38:86[1] Muhammad Asad comments here: The expression mutakallif denotes, primarily, "a person who takes too much upon himself", be it in action or in feeling; hence, a person who pretends to be more than he really is, or to feel what he does not really feel, In this instance, it indicates the Prophet's disclaimer of any "supernatural" status.
38:87[1] Arabic: dhikr — calling to mind, recalling, reminding; remembrance (of something past); history.

39:6[2] Muhammad Asad comments here: Lit., "by creation after creation, in three darknesses": an allusion to the successive stages of embryonic development, repeatedly spoken of in the Qur'an (cf. 22:5 and 23:12-14), and to the darkness of the womb, the membrane enveloping the embryo, and its pre-natal blindness.

39:17[1] Arabic: ṭāghūt. See note to 2:256.
39:18[1] Muhammad Asad comments here: According to Razi, this describes people who examine every religious proposition (in the widest sense of this term) in the light of their own reason, accepting that which their mind finds to be valid or possible, and rejecting all that does not measure up to the test of reason. In Razi's words, the above verse expresses "a praise and commendation of following the evidence supplied by one's reason (hujjat al-'aql), and of reaching one's conclusions in accordance with [the results of] critical examination (nazar) and logical inference (istidlal)." A somewhat similar view is advanced, albeit in simpler terms, by Tabari.

39:22[5] Sc. like one whose breast God has not thus expanded.
39:22[6] Arabic: dhikr — calling to mind, recalling, reminding; remembrance (of something past); history.
39:23[1] Arabic: ḥadīth — story; account; narrative, narration. The Qur'an's usage of this term appears at times to anticipate the later abuse of it by Muslims. Despite what the Traditionalist has done, the Qur'an is clear: the best ḥadīth is what God has sent down. Whatever ḥadīth the Traditionalist lays claim to as a source of religion, by the Qur'anic yardstick it is — and can only be — something other than the best ḥadīth.

39:27[3] Lit.: of every similitude.
39:28[1] Arabic: qur'ān — reading, recital, recitation, something which is read out.
39:28[2] Classical Arabic is not a holy language. However, it does possess certain useful characteristics, among which is the fact that it is possible to demonstrate values with reference to usage and root meanings in a way which is not possible — at least in the same way and to the same extent — in, for example, English. That the Qur'an claims to be 'free of deviation' points, at least in part, to the consistency present within it — the reality of which the current work attempts to reveal and free from the accretions imposed upon it in the name of religion.

39:45[1] See note to 58:4 for Qur'anic usage of to believe in.
39:45[2] Arabic: min dūni. See note to 2:23.
39:45[3] This not only applies to the idolaters and the atheists whom the Traditionalist likes so much to denigrate, but also to Trinitarian Christians and sectarian Muslims. This latter point is easily proven: go to your local church or mosque and see for how long it is possible to engage whomever you find there in conversation about God alone before 'special' additional personalities are inserted into the mix and made requisite; try insisting on God alone, and see how many friends you have when you leave.
39:47[1] The naked verb to ransom in English tends to be a perfective idea assuming a successful outcome. The uncertain outcome of a verb is made explicit in English by the inclusion of such words as to seek to, which I have done here.

40:31[2] See note to 2:207.

40:33[1] Lit.: turn away turning backs. Found at 21:57, 27:80, 30:52, 37:90, 40:33.

40:34[1] Arabic: ḥattā idhā. See note to 3:152.

40:34[2] Qur'anic definition: murtāb. Generally rendered (and not incorrectly) doubter or skeptic. The problem with this rendering is that such words hold a neutral or even positive connotation today, suggesting perhaps intellectual thoroughness and objectivity. This is demonstrably not the case here; it is clear from what follows at 40:35 that a fuller Qur'anic sense (particularly in combination with committer of excess) is baseless sceptic, i.e. a person who has no foundation or warrant for his position. This word occurs once only.

40:45[2] Arabic: fir'awn. See note to 2:49. Verses 40:38-45 summarise exactly the pattern of warning a people and taking refuge in God which is the prophetic model.

40:46[1] Arabic: fir'awn. See note to 2:49.

40:48[1] See note to 2:207.

40:50[1] Arabic: balā. See note to 2:81.

40:50[2] Or supplicate. Muhammad Asad notes here: According to the classical commentators, this answer implies no more than a refusal on the part of the "keepers of hell" to intercede for the doomed sinners, telling them, as it were, "Pray yourselves, if you can." It seems to me, however, that we have here an indirect allusion to the sinners erstwhile, blasphemous devotion to false objects of worship and false values the meaning being, "Pray now to those imaginary powers to which you were wont to ascribe a share in God's divinity, and see whether they can help you!" This interpretation finds support in the next sentence, which speaks of the delusion (dalal) inherent in the prayers of "those who deny the truth", i.e., during their life on earth - for, obviously, on the Day of Judgment all such delusions will have disappeared.

41:0[2] The forty-first chapter of the Qur'an is by convention called fuṣṣilat or Set Out And Detailed.

41:1[1] See note to 2:1 and Article MLQ.

ḥā mīm:

1:1-7 (al fātiḥah).

41:2[1] I take the ḥā mīm above as the subject of this sentence. The fact of a missing verb in this sentence is made clear in, for example, the rendering by Saheeh International: [This is] a revelation from the Entirely Merciful, the Especially Merciful. Once ḥā mīm is recognised as the subject of the sentence at 41:2, the need for interpolation ceases. I have refrained from interpolating 'Is' at the beginning of this sentence, and confined my thoughts to the notes. Cf. 32:2. See Article MLQ for a full analysis of the mysterious letters.

41:2[2] Lit.: (gradual or successive) sending down.

41:3[2] Arabic: āyāt. See Notepad VIII.

41:3[3] Arabic: faṣṣala — to set out (that is, present in a logical order, categorise) and to make plain or detail.

41:3[4] Arabic: qur'ān — reading, recital, recitation, something which is read out.

41:4[1] This exact phrasing is found in three other instances, each time referencing the messenger: 2:119, 34:28, 35:24. In this case, it references the Qur'an. This fact should be significant to those who insist on following sources other than the Qur'an under the impression that they are following the Messenger.

41:5[1] Lit.: from.

41:5[2] Or heaviness.

41:6[1] See note to waḥī and awḥā at 3:44.

41:6[2] See note to Arabic root: sh-r-k at 6:78 and Notepad VI.

41:7[1] Arabic: al zakāt. This instance of this frequent motif is preceded by a reference to idolaters; this is difficult to square with the Traditionalist's value for al zakāt as a tax — and his attempts to reconcile the two ring hollow. However, sexual misconduct and deviancy have been associated with idol-worship since time immemorial, and within that framework our value for al zakāt makes sense. See note to 2:43 and Article SZC.

41:9[1] Arabic: 'ayyām — days; aeons, eras.

41:10[1] Grammar: the feminine object pronoun indicates ard (earth).

41:10[2] Arabic: aqwāt (sg. qūt) — nutriment, nourishment, food. With A. J. Arberry, I supply diverse to convey the plural.

41:10[3] Arabic: 'ayyām — days; aeons, eras.

41:11[1] Grammar: dual.

41:11[2] Muhammad Asad comments here: Explaining this passage, Zamakhshari observes: "The meaning of God's command to the skies and the earth to 'come', and their submission [to

His command] is this: He willed their coming into being, and so they came to be as He willed them to be...: and this is the kind of metaphor (majaz) which is called 'allegory' (tamthil)... Thus, the purport [of this passage] is but an illustration (taswir) of the effect of His almighty power on all that is willed [by Him], and nothing else...." (It is obvious that Zamakhshari's reasoning is based on the oft-repeated Qur'anic statement, "When God wills a thing to be, He but says unto it, 'Be' - and it is.") Concluding his interpretation of the above passage, Zamakhshari adds: "If I am asked about the meaning of [the words] 'willingly or unwillingly', I say that it is a figurative expression (mathal) indicating that His almighty will must inevitably take effect."

41:11[3] Grammar: dual.

41:26[2] Arabic: qur'ān — reading, recital, recitation, something which is read out.
41:26[3] Arabic: laghiya — to talk, to talk nonsense. This is what the Traditionalist does, in effect, through the promotion of sources he adopts in preference to the Qur'an.
41:26[3] Arabic: fīhi. Translators treat this variously. Both Muhammad Asad and A. J. Arberry have 'about it', with which reading I agree, whereas Saheeh International and Hilali & Khan emphasise notions of during.

41:39[1] Arabic: āyāt. See Notepad VIII.
41:39[2] Lit.: reverent, humble.
41:40[1] I have applied the meaning for laḥada fī as given by Lane (p. 2712). The Traditionalist translators at Saheeh International render this clause: Indeed, those who inject deviation into Our verses, which they support with a note: Through deviant recitations or interpretations; their colleagues Hilali & Khan have: Verily, those who turn away from Our Ayat (proofs, evidences, verses, lessons, signs, revelations, etc. by attacking, distorting and denying them). By way of comparison, non-sectarian N. J. Dawood has: Those that deny Our revelations; while Arabist A. J. Arberry has: Those who blaspheme Our signs.
41:40[2] Arabic: āyāt. See Notepad VIII.
41:40[3] See note to 3:162.
41:41[1] Arabic: dhikr — calling to mind, recalling, reminding; remembrance (of something past); history.
41:41[2] Sc. will taste a severe punishment. Cf. 41:27. The Traditionalist Saheeh International has a note here: i.e., reject it or prefer deviant interpretation. What Saheeh International has in view, of course, is preference for anything which is not predicated upon Traditionalist orthodoxy — an ideology which precludes engagement with the Qur'an as a complete revelation as its sine qua non.
41:41[3] Arabic: kitāb. See Notepad IX.iii.
41:42[1] Cf. 41:14.
41:42[2] Lit.: (gradual or successive) sending down.

42:3[1] I would argue that this references what immediately precedes: i.e. the values for ḥā mīm and 'ayn sīn qaf. I see no logical alternative in the context. The corollary of the statement of purpose found here is at 42:7.

42:7[3] Taken by the Traditionalist to be the place known today as Mecca. Among the many problems with Mecca is the fact that it did not exist (at least it is mentioned on no map and in no historical record) until 300 years after the Qur'anic revelation according to Dan Gibson (Quranic Geography, 2011). On the other hand, Petra was a major regional centre of trade. The Arabia Felix thesis advances alternative possibilities. See Notepad XVI.

42:11[2] Or multiplies. Arabic: dhara'a. This verb has connotations of to sow (many or different things); to seed; to create; to produce. Occurs at 6:136, 7:179, 16:13, 23:79, 42:11, 67:24. Given its usage at all other points, I maintain created here. However, often translated multiplies.

42:13[7] I.e. to a message of warning followed by genuine repentance to God, or by destruction. Nowhere is there found a religion (in the sense of formulas, dogma and priests) in the Qur'an. Personal and social initiative to deliver a message of good news and warning in combination with personal and communal piety informed by set principles is too much for the idolatrous mentality to cope with. Unless it has a religion to worship and priests to obey instead of God such a mentality is lost.

42:15[1] I.e. to the fact that 'God chooses for Himself whom He wills, and guides to Himself him who turns in repentance' (42:13). But this is not what the Traditionalist calls to; he calls to a religion of his own contrivance.

42:15[6] Arabic: ḥujja - argument (as in justification or claim in court or elsewhere).
42:16[1] Or Him. I have given what seems the best reading in the context of what precedes. Those translators who render close to the text as do I read otherwise. A. J. Arberry has: after that answer has been made to Him; N. J. Dawood has: after pledging obedience to Him. Meanwhile, Hilali & Khan, for example, skirt around the problem: after it has been accepted (by the people).

42:52[2] Arabic: al kitāb. See Notepad IX.ii.
42:52[3] I.e. the Qur'an.
42:52[4] My inclination is to read this as a passive verb on the basis of common sense and the verses where the Messenger is told that he guides no one, and that it is God who guides (for example 10:43, 28:56). However, the standard reading is acceptable as long as we bear in mind that what is referenced here is the guidance given by God: namely, the Qur'an. See also: 27:81, 28:56, 30:53. Predictably, the Traditionalist seizes upon this verse and, ignoring what leads up to it, invests it with an outcome in keeping with his requirements; Hilali & Khan, for example, render here: And verily, you (O Muhammad SAW) are indeed guiding (mankind) to the Straight Path (i.e. Allah's religion of Islamic Monotheism). By way of comparison, the non-sectarian translator A. J. Arberry has: And thou, surely thou shalt guide unto a straight path.
42:53[1] Arabic: alā. See note to 2:12.
42:53[2] Or the affairs, the matters.
42:53[3] Muhammad Asad renders with more latitude than my remit allows me, but his sense here is correct: the way that leads to God, to whom all that is in the heavens and all that is on earth belongs. Oh, verily, with God is the beginning and the end of all things!

43:3[1] Arabic: qur'ān — reading, recital, recitation, something which is read out.
43:4[1] Arabic: al kitāb. See Notepad IX.ii. The Traditionalist tends at this juncture to claim this as a reference to what he calls the Preserved Slate (al-Lawḥ al-Maḥfūth). However, see: 3:7, 13:39.
43:5[1] Arabic: dhikr — calling to mind, recalling, reminding; remembrance (of something past); history.
43:5[2] Arabic: ḍaraba + ʻan ṣafḥan — to turn away, ignore, snub or pass over.
43:9[1] With N. J. Dawood I do not see this clause as a direct imperative, and thus do not use speech marks.
43:9[2] Instances where speech either trails off or is clipped through interruption are found at 2:138, 6:143, 6:144, 10:22, 12:94, 26:24, 26:26, 26:28, 43:9, 58:22, 77:11, 84:5.
43:12[1] Arabic: azwāj — spouses, mates; kinds, types; species. While I am neutral towards his thoughts here, I include Muhammad Asad's comment for interest: Lit., "all pairs". Some commentators regard the term azwaj as synonymous in this context with "kinds" (Baghawi, Zamakhsharl, Baydawi, Ibn Kathir): i.e., they take the above phrase to mean no more than that God created all kinds of things, beings and phenomena. Others (e.g., Tabari) see in it a reference to the polarity evident in all creation. Ibn 'Abbas (as quoted by Razi) says that it denotes the concept of opposites in general, like "sweet and sour, or white and black, or male and female"; to which Razi adds that everything in creation has its complement, "like high and low, right and left, front and back, past and future, being and attribute", etc., whereas God - and He alone - is unique, without anything that could be termed "opposite" or "similar" or "complementary". Hence, the above sentence is an echo of the statement that "there is nothing that could be compared with Him" (112:4).

43:17[3] Cf. 16:58.
43:18[1] I.e. a female.
43:19[2] I.e. if this is the claim — (the first part of which is at 43:16).
43:19[3] This is the response to the claim above.
43:19[4] This warning is surely, by extension, intended for those who create any fiction and ascribe it to God, as well as for those who inherit fiction and pass it on without questioning it or applying their own reason to it.

43:20[1] Arabic: raḥmān. Typically rendered most merciful. See 36:23 and note thereto, note to 1:1, and Notepad I.
43:20[2] Cf. 6:116, 6:148, 10:66, 51:10.

43:21[2] Arabic: kitāb. See Notepad IX.iii.
43:21[3] I.e. the Qur'an.
43:21[4] I.e. if this is the claim — i.e. if this is the argument advanced for refusing to accept the Qur'an. The response comes in the following verse. This applies equally to the Traditionalist Muslim who has latterly been exposed to the Qur'an as a complete revelation containing full guidance.
43:22[1] Arabic: bal. See note to 2:88.
43:22[2] I.e. following the teachings of a particular sect or group.
43:22[3] I.e. imitating what they saw their fathers do.
43:23[1] I.e. following the teachings of a particular sect or group.
43:23[2] Arabic: qadā. The form VIII of this verb means: to imitate, be guided by, follow, emulate. Muhammad Asad shares a pertinent thought here: Commenting on this passage, Razi says: "Had there been in the Qur'an nothing but these verses, they would have sufficed to show the falsity of the principle postulating [a Muslim's] blind, unquestioning adoption of [another person's] religious opinions (ibtal al-qawl bi't-taqlid): for, God has made it clear [in these verses] that those deniers of the truth had not arrived at their convictions by way of reason, and neither on the clear authority of a revealed text, but solely by blindly adopting the opinions of their forebears and predecessors; and all this God has mentioned in terms of blame and sharp disparagement."
43:24[1] I.e. each warner.
43:24[2] Muhammad Asad notes here: Whereas in some of the readings of the Qur'an the opening word of this verse is vocalized as an imperative, qul ("say"), the reading of Hafs ibn Sulayman al-Asadi - on which this translation is based - gives the pronunciation qala ("he said" or, since it is a repeated occurrence, "he would say").

¶43.3 43:27[1] Sc. They said: We found our fathers upon a community, and we are following in their footsteps. Cf. 43:22-24. According to my analysis, the people of Ibrāhīm were destroyed also in an act of God (see my book The God Protocol).

43:31[1] Arabic: qur'ān — reading, recital, recitation, something which is read out.
43:31[2] Arabic: lawlā. See Notepad XIV.
43:31[3] Under the Petra thesis as advanced by Dan Gibson (Quranic Geography, 2011), the two cities of note at this time in the region were Petra and Jerusalem. Under that thesis it is problematic to accept Mecca as a major city of any sort as it appears on no map until 300 years after the revelation. I am not aware of a specific claim under the Arabia Felix thesis on this point. See Notepad XVI.
43:32[1] Lit.: degrees.

¶43.4 43:36[1] Arabic: dhikr — calling to mind, recalling, reminding; remembrance (of something past); history.
43:36[2] Arabic: raḥmān. Typically rendered most merciful. See 36:23 and note thereto, note to 1:1, and Notepad I.

43:38[1] Arabic: ḥattā idhā. See note to 3:152.
43:39[1] See note to Arabic root: sh-r-k at 6:78 and Notepad VI.
43:39[2] Cf. 37:33.
43:41[1] I have rendered literally (cf. A. J. Arberry's rendering of the same clause: Whether We take thee away). The verb here is dhahaba which means simply to take away (i.e. from a place). It does not mean in Qur'anic parlance to take away (in death), despite the fact that Saheeh International treats as though it did (rendering: And whether [or not] We take you away [in death]). There is a verb which is commonly rendered to take in this sense in English, but that does not feature here (the form V verb tawaffā which occurs as a verb at 2:234, 2:240, 3:193, 4:15, 4:97, 5:117, 6:60, 6:61, 7:37, 7:126, 8:50, 10:46, 10:104, 12:101, 13:40, 16:28, 16:32, 16:70, 22:5, 32:11, 39:42, 40:67, 40:77, 47:27 and in participle form at 3:55). The Traditionalist translators are here bending the text in the direction of their preferences; the actual point in the present verses is that were the Messenger to be expelled (cf. 47:13), destruction would become binding upon the rejecting community. It is clear from my analysis of the Qur'an that this is what, in fact, happened in the case of Muhammad's primary mission (recognition of which fact exposes the Traditionalist's cult as both superfluous and idolatrous). See my book The God Protocol. The allusion here, given a rational reading of the surrounding text, is to the story of Mūsā which follows, particularly at 43:55 (see also 43:56).
43:42[1] I.e. either death followed by Judgment, or the Hour.
43:43[1] See note to waḥī and awḥā at 3:44.
43:44[1] Arabic: dhikr — calling to mind, recalling, reminding; remembrance (of something past); history.

43:51[2] Arabic: alaysa. See Notepad XIV.
43:51[3] Or (a) miṣr. See note to 2:61.
43:51[4] Fir'awn is appealing to his worldly wealth in support of his claim to veracity. The 'rivers' referred to here (as opposed to a single river — cf. the Nile) may perhaps be claimed as a point in its favour by the Arabia Felix thesis since the Yemen is home to multiple rivers whereas Egypt, famously, has one — albeit one with multiple outlets into the Mediterranean. See Notepad XVI.
43:51[5] Arabic: afalā. See Notepad XIV.
43:53[1] Arabic: lawlā. See Notepad XIV.
43:54[1] Arabic: istakhaffa. This form X verb means — as sometimes rendered — to deem lightly or to hold in light esteem. However, it does so only where it takes an object using the preposition bi. Where it takes a direct object (as here) it means either to fluster, flurry, disquiet or to find light (the case here clearly that of swaying or sweeping or carrying along a person away from or towards a position) or to deem light (i.e. to carry). The two senses are connected by the core concept which is to find easy to move (from place, position or opinion). In the event, my rendering of this word here falls within the same general area as that which other translators discern: A. J. Arberry has: So he made his people unsteady; N. J. Dawood has: Thus did he incite his people; and Saheeh International has: So he bluffed his people.

43:54[2] Arabic root: f-s-q. See note to 2:26 and Notepad XI.vii.

¶43.6 43:57[1] See Notepad XVI and Notepad XVIII.

43:57[2] I have rendered thus here after Lane (p. 1668); Muhammad Asad does similarly, rendering as 'raise an outcry'.

43:58[1] In my opinion, this is a disingenuous argument, one which assumes the premise it requires (in this case that ʿĪsā was a 'god') in order to generate a predetermined reaction; it is a standard rhetorical device, known popularly as the Straw Man. One sees it used in debates of all kinds, including by professional atheists and religionists today. The tactic consists in first misrepresenting the case one wishes to attack, and then appearing to beat that case apart.

43:58[2] Arabic: bal. See note to 2:88.

43:61[1] Some think this pronoun refers to him (ʿĪsā). I am not among them. Such a view suggests a lack of familiarity with the broader text (see 31:34, 41:47, 43:66, 43:85). Rather, I agree with those who understand the reference to be to the Qur'an. Among the features concerning the Hour which the Qur'an emphasises is that it is certainly coming, and that no one knows precisely when it will befall but God alone. Incidentally, we find the following words ascribed to Jesus in the Book of Matthew: But of that day and hour knoweth no man, no, not the angels of heaven, but my Father only (Matt. 24:36). I render the substance of this verse exactly as does Arabist A. J. Arberry. Muhammad Asad notes here: Whereas most of the commentators regard the pronoun hu in innahu as relating to Jesus and, consequently, interpret the above phrase as "he is indeed a means to know [i.e., an indication of the coming of] the Last Hour", some authorities - e.g., Qatadah, Al-Hasan al-Basri and Sa'id ibn Jubayr (all of them quoted by Tabari, Baghawi and Ibn Kathir) - relate the pronoun to the Qur'an[...]. The specific mention of the Last Hour in the above context is meant to stress man's ultimate responsibility before the Creator and, therefore, the fact that worship is due to Him alone: and so this parenthetic passage follows logically upon the mention of the false deification of Jesus.

43:61[2] Grammar: the feminine object pronoun refers to the Hour.

43:61[3] This, surely, is the point. Rather than engage in empty speculation about the Hour, we should concentrate on what we can do with what time we have. Cf. 43:66.

43:62[1] Or adversary (against the command of God). See Article SJC.

43:66[1] The implication, clearly, is that no one knows when the Hour will be.

43:77[1] Or master.

43:78[1] Arabic: bil ḥaqqi. See Notepad XVII (bil ḥaqqi i.).

43:79[1] Arabic: am. See note to 21:21.

43:79[2] Muhammad Asad comments here: The verb barama or abrama signifies, literally, "he twined" or "twisted [something] together", e.g., the strands that are to form a rope; or "he twisted [something] well" or "strongly". Tropically, it connotes the act of "establishing" or "determining" a thing, a proposition, a course of events, etc. (Jawhari). According to the Lisan al-'Arab, the phrase abrama al-amr has the meaning of "he determined (ahkama) the case". In the present context, the term amr, having no definite article, signifies "anything" or - in its widest sense - "anything that should [or "could"] be": and so, taking the preceding verse into account, we arrive at the meaning of arbitrarily "determining what [the truth] should be" - i.e., in contradiction to what the Qur'an postulates as the truth.

43:79[3] I.e. if this is the claim: that they have power over any matter.

43:79[4] Cf. the maxim man proposes but God disposes which comes down to us in translation from the Latin of Thomas à Kempis' The Imitation of Christ.

43:80[1] Arabic: am. See note to 21:21.

43:84[1] More properly, this might be rendered in English as deity; I have reservations about deity because of its New Age connotations.

43:84[2] See note above.

43:85[1] Grammar: dual.

43:86[1] Arabic: min dūni. See note to 2:23.

43:86[2] The truth is that God has no partners. Arabic: bil ḥaqqi. See Notepad XVII (bil ḥaqqi i.).

43:86[3] I.e. they know this to be the case (cf. 2:22, 2:42, 2:75, 2:146, 2:188, 3:71, 3:75, 3:78, 3:135, 8:27, 43:86, 58:14).

43:88[1] My view is that this masculine personal pronoun either refers to ʿĪsā (the only person to say 'my Lord' in the chapter), to Mūsā, and to Muḥammad, drawing together the main prophetic strands treated of within the chapter, or that it refers to all messengers by means of allusion to 23:44. Muhammad Asad, meanwhile, offers a different perspective: Razi (on whose commentary the above interpolation is based), regards this as a reference to the Prophet Muhammad. It seems, however, that the meaning is wider, embracing every believer, of whatever denomination, who is distressed at the blindness of people who attribute divinity or divine qualities to any being other than God Himself.

43:88[2] Arabic: lā yu'minūn. Qur'anic usage implies: (are those) lost in darkness. See note to 2:6 and Notepad II.ii.

44:3[2] The Traditionalist relates this to what he calls The Night of Decree; however, for why he does not understand what that term means Qur'anically (his narrative derives from his non-Qur'anic sources), see sūrah 97 and notes thereto.

44:9[1] Arabic: bal. See note to 2:88.

44:10[1] Or manifest or visible.

44:12[1] See note to (al) mu'minūn at 8:2.

44:13[1] I.e. when people have been warned there is no further requirement for their destruction. My personal thought is that if this section refers — as it seems to — to the industrial-scale spraying of the world's skies by all governments (many of which are ostensibly in conflict on other fronts), that the suffering of those thus afflicted is alluded to here. Meanwhile, the massive propaganda against the Qur'an originating in the actions of 'terrorist' groups (all of which happen to forward New World Order agendas) as well as in the ignorance, immorality, and intellectual torpidity among those who claim to be Muslims does not mitigate the responsibility a man has to investigate the Qur'an on its merits when it reaches him, or his accountability when he turns away from warning based on the same.

44:14[1] These are two of the accusations which some level at Muḥammad: that he received his information from others, or that he was possessed. If one cares to read what the Messenger himself brought — the Qur'an — rather than extraneous materials, one finds these accusations comprehensively addressed.

44:15[1] The construction here mirrors to a noticeable degree that at 44:12. I see a relationship between the two verses, an implicit contrast between the fickle nature of the 'repentant' sinners on the one hand, with God's willingness to abstain from punishment on the other — up to the point of decision. This sets up the story of Mūsā and Firʿawn which follows. I indicate the presence of the grammatical anchor here (Arabic: innā) as we proceed by means of the colon followed by a long dash, to give the reader the best visual representation I can of a stylistic cadence which is clear in the Arabic.

44:32[1] I.e. the children of Israel.

44:33[1] Arabic: āyāt. See Notepad VIII.

44:34[1] I take the refrain which follows as a common assertion among those whom the Messenger was addressing (cf. 45:25). While I remain unconvinced of all points of Muhammad Asad's note, I include it for interest: Although, on the face of it, by "these people" the Israelites are meant, the reference is obviously a general one, applying to all who hold the views expressed in the sequence, and in particular to the pagan contemporaries of the Prophet Muhammad. Nevertheless, there is a subtle connection between this passage and the preceding allusion to the "test" with which the children of Israel were to be faced: for it is a historical fact that up to the time of the destruction of the Second Temple and their dispersion by the Roman emperor Titus, the priestly aristocracy among the Jews, known as the Sadducees, openly denied the concepts of resurrection, divine judgment and life in the hereafter, and advocated a thoroughly materialistic outlook on life.

44:35[1] I.e. that death which is the lot of man; cf. 44:56.

44:36[1] See grammar note to 2:91.

44:37[1] From the context this clearly refers to yet another people destroyed for rejecting its messenger; a subject for further study. Muhammad Asad supplies the following note which I reproduce for interest: "Tubba'" was the title borne by a succession of powerful Himyar kings who ruled for centuries over the whole of South Arabia, and were finally overcome by the Abyssinians in the fourth century of the Christian era. They are mentioned elsewhere in the Qur'an (50:14) as having denied the truth of resurrection and God's judgment.

45:17[1] Muhammad Asad — who renders this line And We gave them clear indications of the purpose [of faith] — provides a comment which I include for interest: This, I believe, is the meaning of the phrase min al-amr in the above context, although most of the classical commentators are of the opinion that amr signifies here "religion" (din), and interpret the whole phrase, accordingly, as "of what pertains to religion". Since, however, the common denominator in all the possible meanings of the term amr - e.g., "command", "injunction", "ordinance , matter [of concern]", "event", "action", etc. - is the element of purpose, whether implied or explicit, we may safely assume that this is the meaning of the term in the above elliptic phrase, which obviously alludes to the purpose underlying all divine revelation and, consequently, man's faith in it. Now from the totality of the Qur'anic teachings, becomes apparent that the innermost purpose of all true faith is, firstly, a realization of the existence of God and of every human being's responsibility to Him; secondly, man's attaining to a consciousness of his own dignity as a positive element - a logically necessary element - in God's plan of creation and, thus, achieving freedom from all manner of superstitions and irrational fears; and, lastly, making man aware that whatever good or evil he does is but done for the benefit, or to the detriment, of his own self (as expressed in verse 15 above).
45:17[2] Arabic: baghy. See note to 2:90 and Notepad XII.
45:18[1] Arabic: sharīʿa. Lit.: watering-place, which I take to be a poetic indication of the Qur'an. This word sharīʿa has come to mean 'religious legal system'. However, this is a later value — one coined, one assumes, by those who created or benefited from such a system. This is the only instance of this word in the Qur'an. See note to 5:48. Muhammad Asad comments: It is to be borne in mind that the literal meaning of the term shari'ah is "the way to a watering-place", and since water is indispensable for all organic life, this term has in time come to denote a "system of laws", both moral and practical, which shows man the way towards spiritual fulfilment and social welfare: hence, "religious law" in the widest sense of the term.

46:8[3] Arabic: *ʿafāḍa. S*ee note to 2:198. Lit.: expound (upon). This word at this place produces stylistically divergent renderings among translators. I provide examples below, both to corroborate my own, perhaps plainer, reading, and to give the reader a broader sense of the import. N. J. Dawood has: He well knows what you say about it; A. J. Arberry has: He knows very well what you are pressing upon; Saheeh International has: He is most knowing of that in which you are involved; Hilali & Khan have: He knows best of what you say among yourselves concerning it (i.e. this Quran); and Muhammad Asad — in keeping with his expansive style — has: He is fully aware of that [slander] into which you so recklessly plunge.
46:9[1] Lit.: innovation. This word (Arabic: bidʿ) has a triggering effect on the more excitable, and perhaps less intelligent, Traditionalist; it is used on him — and then by him — as a truncheon: a sort of stop-word of the type of shaming language used also in so-called democracies to bludgeon the herd into conformity with whatever is the current dogma. By it, this type of Traditionalist means anything which runs counter to that part of what is currently called Islam to which he, personally, subscribes. The irony — utterly lost on him, sadly, — is that his entire worldview falls into that category, when seen from the standpoint of the Qur'an's use of this word. His own ideology was cobbled together over centuries, and has nothing in common with the paradigm of warning prior to the punishments of God becoming binding which was the practice of those prior to Muḥammad, and of Muḥammad himself.
46:9[2] See note to waḥī and awḥā at 3:44.
46:10[1] Arabic: a raʾayt-. See note to 6:40. I include Abdullah Yusuf Ali's comment here for interest. While I neither agree with his assessment that 'Islam' is a religion (at least, not in the sense that he means it) nor with some of his other assumptions, I think his general point here is pertinent enough to merit consideration: Another side of the argument is now presented, You pagan Arabs! You are puffed up with pride, though you are an ignorant nation. Among Israel there are men who understand the previous scriptures, and who find the Qur'ān and its Preacher a true confirmation of the previous scriptures. They accept Islam as a fulfilment of the revelation of Moses himself! (See Deut 18:18-19). And yet you hold back, though the Qur'ān has come in your own language, in order to help you to understand. How unjust and how shameful! In that case, with what face can you seek guidance from God?'
46:10[2] Said to indicate an Israelite. I think Abdullah Yusuf Ali's assertion above is further borne out by the use of the verb istakbarra (to wax proud) which is associated with the rejection of messengers by the children of Israel (2:87), a situation which is both offset and augmented by this statement.
46:10[3] Sc. would you then not be wrongdoers.

46:20[1] Arabic: alladhīna kafarū. See note to 2:6 and Notepad II.i.
46:20[2] Lit.: removed; took away. Rendered commonly here received or exhausted.
46:20[3] I.e. without (genuine) cause. Arabic: bi ghayri (al) ḥaqq. See Notepad XVII.
46:20[4] Arabic root: ḥ-s-q. See note to 2:26 and Notepad XI.vii.

¶46.3 46:21[1] I.e. Hūd.
46:21[2] The image favoured by translators is that of a man standing amongst 'the wind-curved sandhills' warning his people. The particle here is bi and in conjunction with the form IV verb andhara means to warn of. Thus, Hūd was warning the people of 'Ād of what was coming: a wind which was to blow until their land was, in time, entirely covered by sand dunes (cf. 41:15-16, 51:41, 54:18-20, 69:6-8).
46:24[1] I.e. the approaching punishment.
46:24[2] Arabic: ʿāriḍ. Generally rendered as cloud, Lane (p. 2063) includes the notions of breadth and suddenness to that of clouds.

A. J. Arberry includes sudden in his rendering here.
46:24[3] Arabic: bal. See note to 2:88.
46:26[1] Arabic: āyāt. See Notepad VIII.
¶46.4 46:27[1] Under the Petra thesis the locations for the destruction visited upon former peoples are in northern Arabia and in Judea; under the Felix Arabic thesis they are in the south of the Arabian Peninsula. Neither general area is close to Mecca where the Traditionalist places Muḥammad's city of origin. See Notepad XVI.

47:13[1] At this point in the Qur'anic narrative the Messenger has been evicted from his city — an event entirely in keeping with the prophetic tradition Muḥammad was following as outlined in the Qur'an. Under the Petra thesis that city is Petra. The Arabia Felix thesis advances a location in the Yemen region. Under the Traditionalist's assertions, Muḥammad was from Mecca. As stated before, objective evidence for Traditionalist's claim is conspicuous by its absence. As ever, more work on the ground is needed. See Notepad XVI. According to my broader work, the original community which Muḥammad warned was destroyed in an act of God (see my book The God Protocol).
47:14[1] See note to 3:162.
47:14[2] This introduces two questions. The first follows immediately; the second comes towards the end of 47:15. The relationship between the two and the initial question here is demonstrated by the use in both cases of ka (like) and the third person singular moving directly into the third person plural.

47:24[4] Lit.: upon hearts; i.e. if this is the claim (i.e. that they are not able to understand the Qur'an — a claim common among those with a Traditionalist background). The answer follows.
47:25[1] Cf. 5:21.
47:25[2] Or adversary (against the command of God). See Article SJC.
47:25[3] This is the plain meaning of the text. Translators sometimes attempt by various means to avoid the result that it is the shayṭān who grants respite, or — while allowing here that the subject is the shayṭān — adopt new values for this collocation in order to soften the blow. However, by reading through to 47:28 it is clear that such respite — one which is founded upon compromise and aversion to God's guidance — is illusory.
47:26[1] Arabic: dhālika bianna. See note to 22:6 and Notepad XIV.
47:26[2] I.e. that believers should fight.

47:36[1] See note to al muttaqūn at 2:2.
47:37[1] Many translators attempt to soften the language into a more conditional form (for example, Saheeh International renders here as: If He should ask you for them and press you, you would withhold, and He would expose your hatred [i.e., unwillingness].) Along with A. J. Arberry, I have remained guided by the original (Arberry renders the verse: If He asks you for them, and presses you, you are niggardly, and He brings to light your rancour.)
47:38[1] Cf. 9:39.

48:0[2] The forty-eighth chapter of the Qur'an is by convention called al fatḥ or The Victory.
48:2[1] Arabic: dhanb. See Notepad XI.iv.
48:2[2] This verse comprehensively dispatches the myth popular with the Traditionalist that Muḥammad was faultless or sinless. Cf. 6:34-35, 8:67-68, 9:43, 9:113, 16:37, 17:73-75, 18:23-24, 28:56, 33:37, 66:1, 80:1-2.

48:9[1] See note to 58:4 for Qur'anic usage of to believe in.
48:9[2] Arabic: 'azzara. This form II verb occurs three times only (at 5:12, 7:157 and here at 48:9). The verb means to honour or to support. In both cases outside of the present instance the context seems to favour the latter. I render there accordingly and enforce consistency here.
48:9[3] This form II verb occurs only once and means to reverence, to revere, to honour.
48:9[4] I.e. the Messenger. The preceding two verbs in this phrase — and especially the first, given its other instances — mean this must reference the Messenger. While all messengers are to be supported (5:12), the Traditionalist sees this as his cue to abandon the Qur'an in favour of writings which no messenger saw or approved. Additionally, just as all the other messengers of whom the Qur'an treats are now dead, so is Muḥammad.
48:9[5] See note to s-b-ḥ root at 2:30.
48:9[6] In view of what precedes in this verse, it is worth pointing out that the verb to give glory is used only in relation to God (all instances are found at: 2:30, 3:41, 7:206, 13:13, 15:98, 17:44, 17:44, 19:11, 20:33, 20:130, 20:130, 21:20, 21:79, 24:36, 24:41, 25:58, 32:15, 33:42, 38:18, 39:75, 40:7, 40:55, 41:38, 42:5, 48:9, 50:39, 50:40, 52:48, 52:49, 56:74, 56:96, 57:1, 59:1, 59:24, 61:1, 62:1, 64:1, 68:28, 69:52, 76:26, 87:1, 110:3).

48:16[2] Lit.: called to.
48:16[3] I.e. to fight to the end (death or victory). Translators sometimes strain here to ascribe to this verb a sense of embrace Islam (by Islam they mean a religion founded entirely upon later writings) when such a sense is nowhere supported either here or in the Qur'an in general.

48:17[1] I.e. for not joining the fight.

48:17[2] In this case, the directive to fight a specific enemy.

48:23[5] Cf. 35:43.

48:24[1] Arabic: makkah — destruction. This is the only occurrence in the Qur'an of makkah; it is a common noun which, when translated as such makes perfect sense in the context: مكة — from the m-k-k root — means destruction in the same way that نكبة following the same pattern in n-k-b means disaster (I am indebted to Brother Ayman for this point); see, for example, Steingass (p. 1045) who includes to destroy as a value for the verb makka. However, even if the collocation here is claimed to denote a physical location, the city of Petra fits that description as it was located in an enclosed valley and was thus very much belly-like. The city today called Mecca fails to impress on this latter count entirely; it is no secret that many Traditionalist Muslims return from pilgrimage to Mecca confused and disappointed, finding the geography at odds with Qur'anic descriptions. This nuance is something the Traditionalist is keen to hide from the reader with no access to Arabic. He typically inclines to a value here for the Arabic baṭn (belly, womb) which obfuscates for the reader its actual meaning, preferring here values such as valley or midst. Consideration of all instances of this word across the remainder of his translation confirm this point (2:174, 3:35, 4:10, 6:139, 16:66, 16:69, 16:78, 22:20, 23:21, 24:45, 37:66, 37:144, 39:6, 44:45, 48:24, 53:32, 56:53). 48:27[2] Arabic: al masjid al ḥarām. See Notepad VII.ii.

48:27[3] See 2:196 and notes thereto.

48:27[4] The point of this history is to relate the Messenger's obedience to the directive he received to witness to the truth of God alone at al masjid al ḥarām. In any event, al masjid al ḥarām is now closed to believers (see 9:28). The religion which became Islam was invented later and is in no sense the doctrine of truth mentioned in the next verse; it is simply another created control mechanism. The doctrine of truth is that God is One and our obligation is to serve him alone (and not a religion, or any other type of idol) and that, having been warned, a population becomes liable to the punishments of God. This is the message the Qur'an conveys.

48:28[4] It is, perhaps, of note that the Traditionalist's ideological edifice is constructed upon the claimed witness of men (so-and-so supposedly told somebody else such-and-such). God is clear in the only book Muhammad saw which those called Muslims today read: God is sufficient as witness.

48:29[1] Cf. 63:1 and notes thereto.

48:29[8] Arabic: athar. See note to 30:50.

48:29[9] As understood here the Submission (al sujūd) as a definite noun indicates a full reading of one of a number of specific portions of the Qur'an between chapter 50 and the end of chapter 114 forming the basis of a nightly vigil to which outsiders were also invited to hear the message of the Qur'an. See Notepad XXI. Cf. 50:40, 68:42, 68:43. At the time of the Messenger, attendees will have comprised a mix of believers, mockers, rejecters, the merely curious, and others. What is in view here is that the faces of those who have submitted to God bear testimony to their changed spiritual life. (The Traditionalist — lamentably, comically, and predictably — maintains that this refers to achieving an imprint in one's forehead as a result of pressing it into the floor long and hard enough to produce a mark sufficiently deep to be visible to others; this nonsense has spawned no end of foolishness among those who put their faith in it.) Arabic: sajada. See Notepad IV.

48:29[10] Arabic: dhālika — that. This word consistently points to what precedes, not what follows in Qur'anic usage — a point which some translators miss. Here, I take it to reference the substance of the first part of 48:29.

48:29[11] I.e. those with the messenger of God.

48:29[12] I.e. those with the messenger of God.

48:29[13] Arabic: injīl. See note to 5:46. One of the very few parts of that which Christians call the Gospel which is clearly identifiable in the Qur'an is at this verse, and is called by Christians the Parable of the Mustard Seed. It is worth noting that this parable is found only in the Synoptic Gospels (Matthew, Mark, Luke), and nowhere in John, which is where — outside the writings attributed to Paul — most of the more extravagant claims about Jesus made by Christians have their anchor.

49:13[1] See note to al muttaqūn at 2:2. Claims to racial or tribal preference have no basis in the Qur'an. Being an Arab or descended from a long line of those called Muslims means nothing — the measure of a man's nobility is the extent of his taqwā.

49:14[1] Arabic: (al) aʿrāb. See note to 9:90.

49:14[2] Arabic: aslama. This is the verb which, when it suits him, the Traditionalist claims means to embrace Islam (by which he means the religion he claims to be Islam). The fault line here is obvious. If it is possible to embrace Islam without belief, then Islam is not a faith. Yet the Traditionalist claims faith as a necessary component of his religion. The reason for the muddle which rational and consistent analysis of the Traditionalist's claims exposes is that the Traditionalist brings his definitions and assumptions from outside sources and imposes them upon the Qur'an. Since such sources and the Qur'anic text are cut from entirely different cloth, it is not only not surprising that they do not fit, it is impossible that they should (cf. 49:16).

49:14[3] I.e. what God sent through his messenger.

¶50.2 50:17[1] Or receivers. Arabic root: l-q-y. The form V of this verb means to learn, to be informed; to receive; to accept, to take; to get, to obtain. The form V of this verb is found at 2:37, 21:103, 24:15 and 50:17. Muhammad Asad supplies interesting additional information here: The first part of the above sentence - i.e., the phrase yatalaqqa al--mutalaqqiyan - may be understood in either of two senses: "the two that are meant to receive do receive", or "the two that aim at meeting each other do meet". The classical commentators adopt, as a rule, the first sense and, consequently, interpret the passage thus: "...the two angels that are charged with recording man's doings - do record them, sitting on his right and on his left". In my opinion, however, the second of the two possible meanings ("the two that aim at meeting each other") corresponds better with the preceding verse, which speaks of what man's innermost self (nafs) - whispers within him", i.e., voices his subconscious desires. Thus, "the two that aim at meeting" are, I believe, the two demands of, or, more properly, the two fundamental motive forces within man's nature: his primal, instinctive urges and desires, both sensual and non-sensual (all of them comprised in the modern psychological term "libido"), on the one side, and his reason, both intuitive and reflective, on the other. The "sitting (qa'id) on the right and on the left" is, to my mind, a metaphor for the conflicting nature of these dual forces which strive for predominance within every human being: hence, my rendering of qa'id as "contending". This interpretation is, moreover, strongly supported by the reference, in verse 21, to man's appearing on Judgment Day with "that which drives and that which bears witness" - a phrase which undoubtedly alludes to man's instinctive urges as well as his conscious reason.

50:20[1] Arabic: wa'īd — threats, warnings; promises.

50:21[1] While I am neutral on Muhammad Asad's comments here, they follow with some light editing: Lit., "with that which drives (sa'iq) and that which bears witness (shahid)". While the former term evidently circumscribes man's primal urges - and particularly those which drive him into unrestrained self-indulgence and, thus, into sin - the term shahd [...]alludes here to the awakening of the deeper layers of man's consciousness, leading to a sudden perception of his own moral reality - the "lifting of the veil" referred to in the next verse - which forces him to "bear witness" against himself (cf. 17:14, 24:24, 36:65, 41:20).

50:22[1] Those who experience what are called near-death experiences report that their powers of perception are expanded beyond compare with what they have in life.

50:23[1] This term (Arabic: qarīn) generally treats of the shayṭān (see 4:38, 4:38, 43:36, 43:38; see also 41:25, 50:27). That shayṭān treats of an adversary (against the command of God). See Article SJC. The Traditionalist typically sees this as a reference to an angel. Muhammad Asad, meanwhile, offers another perspective in his note to this verse: Lit., "his intimate companion" (qarinuhu). The term qarin denotes something that is "connected", "linked" or "intimately associated" with another thing (cf. 41:25 and 43:36, where qarin is rendered as "[one's] other self"). In the present instance - read together with verse 21 - the term apparently denotes "one part" of man, namely, his awakened moral consciousness.

50:24[1] The fact of the dual is important here, so I have made it explicit.

50:26[1] The fact of the dual is important here, so I have made it explicit.

50:27[1] See note to 50:23. The Traditionalist typically sees this as a reference to a shayṭān. Muhammad Asad's thoughts at this juncture, with light editing, follow: Lit., as in verse 23, "his intimate companion" (qarin): but whereas there it may be taken as denoting man's moral consciousness or reason, in the present instance the "speaker" is obviously its counterpart, namely, the complex of the sinner's instinctive urges and inordinate, unrestrained appetites summarized in the term sa'iq ("that which drives") and often symbolized as shaytan ("satan" or "satanic force") In this sense, the term qarin has the same connotation as in 41:25 and 43:36.

50:36[2] The lesson is clear: the great empires of the past — where are they now? Likewise, the present tyranny will pass also.

50:37[1] Muhammad Asad comments here: Lit., "or lends ear and is withal a witness (wa-huwa shahid)", which latter phrase Zamakhshari explains as meaning "is present with his intellect", i.e., with a conscious mind. (Cf. the same use of the term shahid in verse 21.) The conjunctive particle "or" (aw) which precedes the above clause does not signify an alternative but has - as is often the case in Quranic usage - an explanatory function, similar to phrases like "that is" or "in other words", followed by an amplification of what was said before.

51:3[1] Lit.: flowing (used also to describe ships in motion).

51:4[1] Renderings here diverge, which is understandable given the terse, elliptical nature of the text. The core of my rendering of this phrase coincides with that of Hilali & Khan, who have: And those (angels) who distribute (provisions, rain, and other blessings) by (Allah's) Command.

51:6[1] Arabic: dīn. See Notepad V. In this case rendered Judgment (as in all those cases where it occurs in the collocation Day of Judgment) in anticipation of 51:12.

51:8[1] Arabic: qawl — speech, teaching, doctrine, word.

51:9[1] I take this as a reference to remembrance of Judgment, although others regard it as a reference to the Qur'an. Muhammad Asad supplies some additional reflections, which I include for interest: Lit., "perversely turned away from this [truth] is he who is made to lie" - or, according to the Taj al-'Arus, "he who is perverted in his reason and opinion", i.e., who is a priori disposed to deceive himself: implying that belief in God and, hence, in life after death is inherent in man's mind and feeling, and that, therefore, a departure from this belief is but an outcome of intellectual perversion.

51:10[1] Lit.: Killed are.

51:12[1] Arabic: dīn. See Notepad V. For Day of Judgment see 82:17-19.

51:15[1] See note to al muttaqūn at 2:2.

51:17[1] Arabic: haja'a. This word occurs only once in the text. It can have the connotation of sleeping through the first portion of the night. Historically, people have used different sleeping patterns to that common today. Certainly, in medieval England, it was common to have two phases of sleep (first sleep and second sleep) broken by an hour for prayer or other activities, typically between two and three in the morning. Roger Ekirch, author of At Day's Close: Night in Times Past writes: [...]in 'The Squire's Tale' in The Canterbury Tales, Canacee slept "soon after evening fell" and subsequently awakened in the early morning following "her first sleep"; in turn, her companions, staying up much later, "lay asleep till it was fully prime" (daylight). Elsewhere he says: Although in some descriptions a neighbor's quarrel or a barking dog woke people prematurely from their initial sleep, the vast weight of surviving evidence indicates that awakening naturally was routine not the consequence of disturbed or fitful slumber. Medical books, in fact, from the fifteenth to the eighteenth centuries frequently advised sleepers, for better digestion and more tranquil repose, to lie on their right side during "the fyrste slepe" and "after the fyrste slepe turne on the lefte side." And even though the French historian Emmanuel Le Roy Ladurie investigated no further, his study of fourteenth-century Montaillou notes that "the hour of first sleep" was a customary division of night, as was 'the hour halfway through the first sleep." Indeed, though not used as frequently as expressions like "candle-lighting," the "dead of night", or cock-crow," the term "first sleep" remained a common temporal division until the late eighteenth-century. As described in La Demonolatrie (1595) by Nicholas Remy, "Comes dusk, followed by nightfall, dark night, then the moment of the first sleep and finally dead of night." Cf. 73:1-6.

51:19[2] I.e. of the opportunity to ask. Abdullah Yusuf Ali makes some excellent points which I have extracted from his broader comment here: True charity remembers not only those in need who ask, but also those who are prevented by some reason from asking. The man of true charity seeks out the latter. There may be various reasons which prevent a man from asking for help: (1) he may be ashamed to ask, or his sense of honour may prevent him from asking; (2) he may be so engrossed in some great ideal that he may not think of asking; (3) he may even not know that he is in need, especially when we think of wealth and possessions in a spiritual sense, as including spiritual gifts and talents; (4) he may not know that you possess the things that can supply his needs; and (5) he may be a dumb and helpless creature, whether a human being or a dumb animal, or any creature within your ken or power. Charity in the higher sense includes all help, from one better endowed to one less well endowed.

51:47[1] Arabic: mūsi'ūn. This is the form IV active participle from the w-s-ᶜ root. The form IV of the w-s-ᶜ root has two main senses: to be or become rich or wealthy, and to extend, widen or enlarge. Clearly, the two meanings are connected; the question is: which is meant here? Modern translations tend to use values such as enlarge or expand under the influence of popularised theories about the nature of the universe. The methodology here, however, is in cases of doubt where there exists a clear Qur'anic sense, to default to that sense. On that basis, I must render as I do. Firstly, because the form IV verb occurs only twice, both times as the active participle: here and at 2:236; at 2:236 it unambiguously means to be wealthy — a value with which all agree, and the context admits of nothing else; secondly, because to achieve the value of expand and synonyms here at 51:47 requires the addition of an object, and while some translators make their own additions, such an object is absent from the text. The present reading is supported also at 51:57-58.

51:48[1] The m-h-d root has two main senses: to order, to prepare and to flatten, to make even.

51:59[1] I.e. the companions of the Fire; more precisely, those who rejected the messengers before as outlined in this chapter.
51:60[1] Arabic: alladhīna kafarū. See note to 2:6 and Notepad II.i.

52

52:0[2] The fifty-second chapter of the Qur'an is by convention called al ṭūr or The Mount.
52:1[1] Namely, a tree-covered or fertile mountain. See note to 2:63.
52:2[1] Arabic: kitāb. See Notepad IX.iii.
52:4[1] The Traditionalist typically makes claims for this verse which have a specious, cultic connotation nowhere specified in the Qur'an.
52:6[1] Or swollen. According to some lexical understandings: filled with fire.
52:9[1] Lit.: shakes[...] with shaking.
52:10[1] Lit.: move[...] with moving.
52:11[1] Found at 52:11, 77:15, 77:19, 77:24, 77:28, 77:34, 77:37, 77:40, 77:45, 77:47, 77:49, 83:10.
52:12[1] See note to 4:140.
52:13[1] Lit.: shoved[...] with shoving.
52:15[1] Arabic: siḥr — sorcery. See note to 2:102.
52:17[1] See note to al muttaqūn at 2:2.
52:18[1] Arabic: fakaha. This verb occurs in its participle form (fākihūn, fākihīn) only (36:55, 44:27, 52:18). The verb itself means to be happy, free of burden, glad. At 36:55 and 52:18 the Arabic implies an obvious connection between this and fākiha (fruit) which follows shortly.
52:20[1] Muhammad Asad comments here: As explained by Razi[...] the "reclining on couches" or "on carpets" in paradise is a symbol of inner fulfilment and peace of mind; and he points out that this is also alluded to in the identity of the verbal root sarra ("he was [or "became"] happy") in both the nouns sarir ("happiness") and sarir ("couch").
52:20[2] Arabic: ḥūr ʿīn. See Notepad XIX.
52:21[1] Arabic: alladhīna āmanū. See note to 2:257 and Notepad II.iv.
52:21[2] Lit.: a hostage.
52:23[1] Or contend (with one another) for. Consideration of this form VI verb in all contexts will supply the reader with the nuance of contention or dispute which is present in the Arabic (3:152, 4:59, 8:43, 8:46, 18:21, 20:62, 52:23).
52:24[1] Arabic: ṭawafa. See note to 2:125.
52:24[2] Muhammad Asad — who renders this phrase: [as if they were children] of their own, — comments here: Thus Razi, explaining the selfless devotion implied in the pronoun lahum (lit., "for them", i.e., "of their own").
52:24[3] Abdullah Yusuf Ali comments here: Maknun: well-guarded, kept close, concealed from exposure: the beautiful nacreous lustre of Pearls is disfigured by exposure to gases, vapours, or acids; when not actually in use they are best kept in closed caskets, guarded from deteriorating agencies.

¶52.2

52:30[1] Arabic: am. See note to 21:21.
52:30[2] Or uncertainty, misfortune.
52:30[3] I.e. if this is the claim (i.e. watch him: the vicissitudes of Fate will trip him up in the end). The answer follows.
52:32[1] Arabic: am. See note to 21:21.
52:32[2] Arabic: aḥlām (pl.), ḥilm (sg.) — reason, intelligence, insight. Lit.: their intelligences, their insights.
52:32[3] I.e. if this is the claim (i.e. we have made a full investigation and reject on the basis of reason). The answer follows.
52:32[4] Arabic: am. See note to 21:21.
52:32[5] I.e. if this is the claim (i.e. we do not recognise moral law). Arabic: ṭāghūn. See ṭāghūt at 39:17.
52:33[1] Arabic: am. See note to 21:21.
52:33[2] I.e. if this is the claim. The answer follows.
52:33[3] Arabic: bal. See note to 2:88.
52:33[4] Arabic: lā yu'minūn. Qur'anic usage implies: (are those) lost in darkness. See note to 2:6 and Notepad II.ii.
52:34[1] Arabic: ḥadīth — story; account; narrative. The Qur'an's usage of this term appears at times to anticipate the later abuse of it by Muslims.
52:34[2] I.e. let them produce the basis for their claims — one which is equal to the Qur'an. If they fail to do so, they may safely be disregarded.
52:35[1] Arabic: am. See note to 21:21.
52:35[2] I.e. if this is the claim. At the time of writing, a sophistic philosopher who describes himself as a scientist, Lawrence Krauss, tickles the ears of the weak-minded with precisely this assertion. The answer follows.
52:35[3] Arabic: am. See note to 21:21.
52:35[4] I.e. if this is the claim (i.e. we created ourselves by some pre-eternal act of will). The answer follows.
52:36[1] Arabic: am. See note to 21:21.
52:36[2] I.e. if this is the claim (i.e. all that exists is purely subjective, a projection from the inner consciousness). The answer follows.
52:36[3] Arabic: bal. See note to 2:88.
52:36[4] Arabic: yaqina. See note to 2:4.
52:37[1] Arabic: am. See note to 21:21.
52:37[2] I.e. if this is the claim. The answer follows.
52:37[3] Arabic: am. See note to 21:21.
52:37[4] I.e. if this is the claim. The answer follows.
52:38[1] Arabic: am. See note to 21:21.
52:38[2] I.e. if this is the claim. The answer follows.
52:38[3] I.e. those who make any of the three cases listed at 52:37-38 are told to bring proof.
52:39[1] Arabic: am. See note to 21:21.
52:39[2] I.e. if this is the claim. The answer follows.
52:40[1] Arabic: am. See note to 21:21.
52:40[2] I.e. if this is the claim. The answer follows.
52:40[3] Both to acquire daughters and to give the Messenger a reward.
52:41[1] Arabic: am. See note to 21:21.
52:41[2] I.e. if this is the claim (i.e. we ourselves have access to the Unseen Realms from which the Qur'an comes). The answer follows.
52:41[3] I.e. then should we be able to read what they receive from the Unseen Realms — so where is it?
52:42[1] Arabic: am. See note to 21:21.
52:42[2] I.e. if this is the claim (i.e. we can contrive some means of escaping God, or thwarting God's purposes). The answer follows.
52:42[3] Arabic: alladhīna kafarū. See note to 2:6 and Notepad II.i.
52:42[4] Cf. 4:76, 52:46.
52:43[1] Arabic: am. See note to 21:21.
52:43[2] I.e. if this is the claim (i.e. we believe in God, but what you mean by God is something other than what we mean). The response follows at 52:45.
52:43[3] See note to s-b-ḥ root at 2:30.

53

53:0[2] The fifty-third chapter of the Qur'an is by convention called al najm or The Star.
53:2[1] The portion which follows deals with an encounter beyond the common experience of men. The Traditionalist has, naturally, a stock of stories to which he refers here, but which seem to me a distraction from the main point. What Muḥammad personally saw, I do not know. I do not need to know; I know what matters: that it was a true encounter. What men choose to write about it after the fact is of little interest to me, and in no way changes what for me is a key point of this chapter, which is quite the reverse of what the Traditionalist claims for it. The Traditionalist says that the principal subject here is the Angel Gabriel. Frankly, an untrained reading more readily suggests that the subject is God. Since the subject at 53:10 is obviously (and by common consent) God, absent a firm textual marker, one inclines to the view that God is the subject at 53:5-9 also. For me, confirmation of the key lesson of this part of the chapter is found at 53:19-25 which presents the consideration (lit.: seeing) of false gods as a counterpoint to what precedes (i.e. mention of the one true God). Additionally, I would argue that the pan-textual evidence is against the Traditionalist's reading of an angel here, since it is God who taught the Qur'an (see 55:2; cf. 53:5). Nevertheless, I have resisted the temptation to capitalise the masculine personal pronouns at 53:6-8 and 53:13 and confined my thoughts to the notes.
53:4[1] See note to waḥī and awḥā at 3:44.
53:4[2] See note to waḥī and awḥā at 3:44.
53:5[1] Cf. 55:2 and 55:4.
53:6[1] Or was established or rose.
53:7[1] Or He (see note to 53:2).
53:7[2] Or possibly is. There is no verb in the Arabic in this clause, the tense being inferred by the surrounding context.
53:7[3] Cf. 81:23.
53:8[1] Or He (see note to 53:2).
53:10[1] This pronoun is universally acknowledged to pertain to God (see note to 53:2).
53:10[2] See note to waḥī and awḥā at 3:44.
53:10[3] See note to waḥī and awḥā at 3:44.
53:12[1] As concerns the Traditionalist, the answer here is objectively in the affirmative (cf. 53:23-25). He has a version other than that which God gave him, which he prefers to the guidance of God on this subject; such a response falls firmly within the definition of 'disputing with him about what he saw'.
53:13[1] Or Him (see note to 53:2).
53:13[2] This is claimed by the Traditionalist as a reference to what he calls al miʿrāj. Since his religion is predicated upon a mythology built upon sources extraneous to the Qur'an, he must both obfuscate that fact, and conflate his later compositions with the Qur'an in the mind of the ignorant, gullible, inattentive, or indifferent reader.
53:18[1] Arabic: āyāt. See Notepad VIII.
53:20[1] Three gods independently verified as objects of worship among the people of Petra on the basis of architectural and archaeological fact. See Notepad XVI.
53:23[1] Lit.: the.
53:24[1] Arabic: am. See note to 21:21.
53:24[2] I.e. if this is the claim — and it is a popular one at this time. The answer follows.
53:25[1] Or the Hereafter and this life or the Last and the First; cf. 28:70.

53:27[1] See note to 58:4 for Qur'anic usage of to believe in.
53:27[2] My thought here is that the names of the branches of knowledge today called sciences come from Greek terms which are feminine nouns. Meanwhile, Muhammad Asad has a different view: Lit., "that name the angels with a female name" - i.e., think of them as being endowed with sex and/or as being "God's daughters". As the Qur'an points out in many places, the people spoken of in this context do believe in life after death, inasmuch as they express the hope that the angels and the imaginary deities which they worship will "mediate" between them and God, and will "intercede" for them. However, their belief is far too vague to make them realize that the quality of man's life in the hereafter does not depend on such outside factors but is causally, and directly, connected with the manner of his life in this world: and so the Qur'an declares that their attitude is, for all practical purposes, not much different from the attitude of people who reject the idea of a hereafter altogether.
53:28[1] Arabic: al ḥaqq. See Notepad XVII (al ḥaqq i.).
53:29[1] Arabic: dhikr — calling to mind, recalling, reminding; remembrance (of something past); history.
53:30[1] I.e. that is all they know.
53:32[1] Arabic: ithm. See Notepad XI.i.
53:32[2] Arabic: fāḥishat, faḥshā'. See Notepad XI.iii.
53:32[3] Arabic: lamam. This is the only instance of this noun. Wehr (p. 1029) records a value of slight mental derangement. The root verb lamma has three core senses: that of gathering or uniting, that of visiting, and that of misfortune or mistake. It also has the nuance of something small or slight. In the context, it is the sense of misfortune or mistake which holds up, and I render it here slight mistakes. Most translators render in similar fashion. There is no question but that complete sexual continence outside of marriage is the Qur'anic standard.
53:32[4] Arabic: zakkā. See note to 2:129; i.e. vaunt not your own sense of purity.
53:32[5] See note to al muttaqūn at 2:2.

¶53.3

53:35[1] I.e. sees that God will not repay him bountifully and save him from need. I am indebted to Saheeh International for this insight.
53:36[1] Arabic: am. See note to 21:21.
53:37[1] I.e. if this is the claim. Sc. then here it is. The essence of both scriptures follows. Arabic: waffā — to fulfil, to pay in full, to discharge in full (so that there is nothing left outstanding).
53:38[1] What is introduced at 53:36-37 is set out at 53:38-54.
53:38[2] Cf. 6:161-164, 17:15, 35:18, 39:7.
53:39[1] Cf. 79:35.
53:45[1] Arabic: zawj — spouse, mate; kind, type; specie.
53:47[1] Lit.: other.
53:49[1] Sirius is of particular importance on more than one count. Firstly, it is the brightest fixed star in the sky. Secondly, it will be recognised as a luminary of significance by any reader with pre-existing occult learning; whatever special connection those who believe they are privy to secrets feel that star has for them, the Qur'an is clear: God is the Lord of Sirius.

53:52[1] Arabic: ẓālimūn. See note to 2:229.
53:53[1] I.e. the cities of Lūṭ.
53:53[2] The examples given at 53:50-53 were all either prior to, or in the time of, Ibrāhīm and were thus known both to him and to Mūsā (cf. 53:36-37).
53:56[1] Or warning.
53:56[2] Lit.: of.
53:56[3] Or warnings.
53:57[1] Cf. 40:18.
53:58[1] Arabic: min dūni. See note to 2:23.
53:59[1] Arabic: ḥadīth — story; account; narrative, statement.
53:61[1] Arabic: samada — to raise the head proudly, to thrust out the chest in pride; to be heedless, to be careless. I have rendered so as to capture something of the core senses. This instance (in participle form) of this verb occurs only once.
53:62[1] Arabic: sajada. See Notepad IV.
53:62[2] I.e. him.

54

54:0[2] The fifty-fourth chapter of the Qur'an is by convention called al qamar or The Moon.
54:1[1] The narrative function of 54:1 is that of the prophetic past (a device found frequently in the Qur'an) whereby future events are given greater inevitability by treating them as accomplished facts; such instances are usually presented in English in the future tense. Thus, the current phrase has a fully future application. However, there is a second layer to it. In order to grasp that layer, one needs to understand several things: 1. The use of the verb here in the Qur'an (Arabic: iqtaraba), (see note to 21:2). 2. That the latter portion of the Qur'an forms a series of night vigils the purpose of which is to warn those who reject and to fortify those who accept (see Notepad XXI). 3. That Muḥammad's station as a prophet and messenger meant that he was executing the mechanism of warning followed by destruction (when rejected) that runs through the Qur'an (detailed in my work The God Protocol). 4. That, given point 3, Judgment was itself closing in upon the people to whom the messenger-prophet was preaching. 5. That the statement here 'Drawn nigh has the Hour' echoes the sense of what precedes at 53:57 — immediately following which we read that God alone can forestall its advent.
54:1[2] Claims are made for this verse by the Traditionalist which I do not accept. While I do not share Asad's confidence in the 'reports' he mentions to any degree at all, his comments here are worthy of consideration, and will be helpful in equipping the student with a broader perspective: Most of the commentators see in this verse a reference to a phenomenon said to have been witnessed by several of the Prophet's contemporaries. As described in a number of reports going back to some companions, the moon appeared one night as if split into two distinct parts. While there is no reason to doubt the subjective veracity of these reports, it is possible that what actually happened was an unusual kind of partial lunar eclipse, which produced an equally unusual optical illusion. But whatever the nature of that phenomenon, it is practically certain that the above Qur'an-verse does not refer to it but, rather, to a future event: namely, to what will happen when the Last Hour approaches. (The Qur'an frequently employs the past tense to denote the future, and particularly so in passages which speak of the coming of the Last Hour and of Resurrection Day; this use of the past tense is meant to stress the certainty of the happening to which the verb relates.) Thus, Raghib regards it as fully justifiable to interpret the phrase inshaqqa 'l-qamar ("the moon is split asunder") as bearing on the cosmic cataclysm - the end of the world as we know it - that will occur before the coming of Resurrection Day (see art. shaqq in the Mufradat). As mentioned by Zamakhshari, this interpretation has the support of some of the earlier commentators; and it is, to my mind, particularly convincing in view of the juxtaposition, in the above Qur'an-verse, of the moon's "splitting asunder" and the approach of the Last Hour. (In this connection we must bear in mind the fact that none of the Qur'anic allusions to the "nearness" of the Last Hour and the Day of Resurrection is based on the human concept of "time".)
54:2[2] Arabic: siḥr — sorcery. See note to 2:102.

54:3[2] Arabic: mustaqirr — settled; firmly established; firm, solid, enduring. Muhammad Asad supplies the following note: Lit., "everything is settled in its [own] being": i.e., everything has an intrinsic reality (haqiqah) of its own, and is bound to reveal that reality either in this world or in the next (Baghawi, on the authority of al-Kalbi); hence, everything must have a purpose or "goal" of its own (Zamakhshari). These two - mutually complementary - interpretations reflect the repeated Qur'anic statement that everything that exists or happens has a meaning and a purpose: cf. 3:191, 10:5 and 38:27[...]. In the present context, the phrase relates both to the truth referred to in the preceding verses and to its rejection by those who are "wont to follow [but] their own desires".
54:5[1] See note to wisdom (ḥikma) at 33:34.
54:5[2] Or warners.
54:6[1] Or invites.
54:6[2] Or terrible. Muhammad Asad comments here: Lit., "something not known (nukur)" that is, "something that human beings cannot know [i.e., visualize] because they have never met with anything like it" (Zamakhshari).

54:22[1] Arabic: qur'ān — reading, recital, recitation, something which is read out.
54:22[2] Arabic: dhikr — calling to mind, recalling, reminding; remembrance (of something past); history.

¶54.2 54:24[1] I.e. Ṣāḥiḥ. It is a mistake common to man to think that something is true by dint of number of supporters.
54:25[1] Arabic: dhikr — calling to mind, recalling, reminding;

remembrance (of something past); history.
54:25[2] Arabic: bal. See note to 2:88.
54:26[1] Lit.: tomorrow. Muhammad Asad comments here: I.e., soon. In classical Arabic, the term ghadan ("tomorrow") often applies to a relatively near future, signifying "tomorrow" (in its literal sense) as well as "in time" or "soon". Hence - as pointed out by all authorities - it may have been used in the above context with reference to the Last Hour, which in the first verse of this very sūrah is spoken of as having "drawn near".
54:27[1] Arabic: fitnah. See note to 2:102.
54:28[1] I.e. by its turn. The context indicates that herds of camels belonging to particular tribes or families had set days in which they could use the watering-hole.
54:29[1] Cf. 26:157.
54:30[1] Or warners.

¶54.3 54:41[1] Arabic: fir'awn. See note to 2:49.
54:42[1] Arabic: āyāt. See Notepad VIII.
54:43[1] Arabic: kuffār. See note to 2:109.
54:43[2] I.e. is your situation really any different? The same imperative to warn remains today; the same types of person exist today. God's practice does not change.
54:43[3] Arabic: am. See note to 21:21.
54:43[4] If this is the claim: that you have safety in the scriptures you say you follow. Arabic: zubur. See note to 3:184. The answer follows at 54:46.
54:44[1] Arabic: am. See note to 21:21.
54:44[2] Or supporting (one another). If this is the claim (i.e. that by dint of numbers and mutual support they will be the victors). The answer follows at 54:46.
54:45[1] I.e. an enemy host consisting of the believers.
54:45[2] I.e. if this is the claim (i.e. they can win militarily against those who warn of the judgments of God). The answer follows.
54:46[1] Arabic: bal. See note to 2:88.
54:46[2] This answers both claims above. Firstly, it serves as a warning to those who possess scripture (in this case, the Qur'an may be indicated given the use of the pronoun 'you' at 54:43) that merely possessing the message of God is no protection against the Judgment; secondly, it serves notice to those who think arms and military might will save them: there is no escape from the Hour.
54:48[1] A name for Hell. See note to 74:26 for fuller Qur'anic definition.
54:50[1] Lit.: As the glance of an eye. Sc. and it will be upon you.
54:51[1] I.e. have destroyed groups with your ideologies before you. Arabic: ashyā'. I render this literally as sects. It denotes ideologically aligned groups of any kind. The fact is that the 'new' sects of today such as earth-worship, man-worship (humanism), pleasure-worship, solipsism, plain foolishness, state-worship, Satanism etc. are not original. Such groups have existed and promoted similar dogmas down through history. There is nothing — or, at least, very little — new under the sun.
54:51[2] The perfective mood in qad is more typically rendered already, or by means of some auxiliary emphasis such as indeed. Here, the implication is clearly of something already done but with implications for the present.
54:52[1] Arabic: zubur. See note to 3:184.
54:54[1] See note to al muttaqūn at 2:2.

In terms of what man can demonstrate by fact rather than claim by fiction, he has never drilled more than a few miles into the earth or journeyed higher than a modest number of miles above it — CGI, Photoshop, green-screen technology and obviously faked moon landings notwithstanding. (My views on these subjects are not ideologically driven; I do not care one way or the other what shape the earth is or how far men have travelled from it or into it. I am interested in truth. And having considered the evidence — rather than allowing myself to be kettled by fiction and pre-existing consensus — it is clear to me that the Space industry is fraudulent, a psyop the core tasks of which are to generate money for black-budget projects, to keep 'Space' in the minds of the masses to facilitate further frauds aimed at steering the herd into the arms of a one world government, and to make men feel small and insignificant. NASA and related agencies have taken the place of the priesthood. All the spectacular things they claim can only be seen by them; we have to trust them for the veracity of their claims. Having looked at the evidence they present, I do not consider them credible witnesses in much the same way I do not consider the ḥadīṯh and those who promulgate them credible witnesses.)

55:62[2] Grammar: dual. The segment at 55:56-61 speaks of a plurality of gardens, as evinced by the use of the feminine plural object pronoun (the notion of which is resumed at 56:70) as opposed to the dual as here. In the light of this I treat 55:56-61 parenthetically. However, at 55:62 there is a return to the dual, which fact I regard as a signal connecting this verse to what precedes 55:56.
55:62[3] Muhammad Asad comments here: Most of the commentators assume - not very convincingly - that the "two other gardens" are those to which believers of lesser merit will attain. As against this weak and somewhat arbitrary interpretation, it seems to me that the juxtaposition of "two other gardens" with. the "two" previously mentioned is meant to convey the idea of infinity in connection with the concept of paradise as such: gardens beyond gardens beyond gardens in an endless vista, slightly varying in description, but all of them symbols of supreme bliss. While I agree with that part of Asad's assertion which treats of an infinity of types of reward, it is clear that there exist degrees in the Garden, as the next chapter makes plain.

56:44[1] Or goodly.
56:46[1] Arabic: ḥinṯh — sin; perjury, falsehood under oath. I have opted for the second of the valid senses for two reasons: firstly, the verb (which occurs only once and is in form II) denotes the breaking of an oath (38:44); secondly, because deep down man knows he is created and must give account, such knowledge being pre-existent in his true nature (cf. 7:172). In the immediate context, we can see verses 56:47-48 as the definition. See also Notepad XI.viii.

56:62[1] I.e. the first.
56:62[2] Arabic: lawlā. See Notepad XIV.
56:63[1] Also gain, acquire (in wealth) (Lane, p. 544).
56:65[1] Arabic: tafakkaha. This form V verb occurs only once. Literally, it means to amuse oneself, be amused; to joke, make fun. Read thus, the line could have a value of: Then would it remain to you only to put a brave face on it. A. J. Arberry, for example, takes this tack, though adding an adverb to achieve good sense: and you would remain bitterly jesting. Other values and opinions exist, though they seem interpretive in nature, rather than based in lexical fact (see Lane, p. 2487), in which regard Muhammad Asad has: and you would be left to wonder [and to lament] and Saheeh International has: and you would remain in wonder. A. J. Arberry's reading seems closest to the textual sense to me, and I have followed it here for that reason.
56:67[1] Arabic: bal. See note to 2:88.
56:70[1] Arabic: lawlā. See Notepad XIV.
56:73[1] Grammar: the feminine singular object pronoun relates to fire.
56:73[2] Muhammad Asad comments here: The participial noun muqw is derived from the verb qawiya, "it became deserted" or "desolate". From the same root is derived the noun qawa' (or qiwa), which signifies "desert", "wilderness" or "wasteland" as well as "hunger" or "starvation". Hence, muqw denotes "one who is hungry" as well as "one who is lost [or "who wanders"] in a deserted place". In the above verse this expression is evidently used tropically, for it is difficult to imagine that, as some commentators assume, it relates merely to "wayfarers in the desert".
56:74[1] See note to s-b-ḥ root at 2:30.
56:74[2] Here begins within the qāf-nūn set, in my opinion, a convention which functions as a type of altar call; it repeats exactly at 56:96 and 69:52, and in substance in many other places. See Article MLQ and XXIV.

56:75[1] Or positions.
56:75[2] Contrary to well-funded 'scientific' fictions driven into the mind before the age of rational thought is reached and fortified endlessly by TV and cinema fictions, any objective investigation into this question by calm, adult minds shows that the earth is level and fixed, and that the heavens go round above it. While I do not agree fully with Muhammad Asad's comment here (he renders: [...]the coming-down in parts [of this Qur'an]), I include it (with some light editing) for interest: Lit.: "the setting of the stars". The term mawqi' (of which mawaqi is the plural) denotes the "time [or "place" or "manner"] at which something comes down". Although many of the commentators think that the phrase mawaqi an-nujum relates to the break-up of the stars at the Last Hour, Ibn 'Abbas, 'Ikrimah and As-Suddi were definitely of the opinion, strongly supported by the subsequent verses, that this phrase refers to the step-by-step revelation or "coming-down in parts (nujum)" - of the Qur'an (cf. Tabari and Ibn Kathir). By "calling to witness" the gradual manner of its revelation, the Qur'an points implicitly to the astounding fact that it has remained free of all inconsistencies and inner contradictions (cf. 4:82) despite all the dramatic changes in the Prophet's life during the "unfolding" of the divine writ: and this explains, too, the subsequent parenthetic clause (verse 76).
56:77[1] Arabic: qur'ān — reading, recital, recitation, something which is read out.
56:78[1] Arabic: kitāb. See Notepad IX.iii.
56:79[1] Muhammad Asad comments here: I.e., which only the pure of heart can truly understand and derive benefit from.
56:80[1] Lit.: (gradual or successive) sending down.

56:81[1] Arabic: ḥadīth — story; account; narrative, narration. The Qur'an's usage of this term appears at times to anticipate the later abuse of it by Muslims.
56:82[1] Lit.: And make your provision that you reject. In the case of the professional Traditionalist religionist, the answer here, regrettably, is in the affirmative. This may account for the fact that Traditionalist translators seem impervious to the sense of the words on the page. For example, Saheeh International renders here: And make [the thanks for] your provision that you deny [the Provider]?, while Hilali & Khan have: And instead (of thanking Allah) for the provision He gives you, on the contrary, you deny Him (by disbelief)! However, non-sectarian translators render directly. N. J. Dawood has: and earn your daily bread denying it?, while A. J. Arberry has: and do you make it your living to cry lies?
56:83[1] Grammar: the feminine subject refers to nafs (soul). Cf. 40:18.
56:83[2] Arabic: lawlā. See Notepad XIV. Sc. you did not look on. Cf. 56:84.
56:85[1] I.e. the throat. The word rendered throat here — ḥulqūm — occurs only once. However, synonyms occur (see 33:10, 40:18); these are contexts in which it is clear that the throat is the place where the thoughts of the heart are given voice. See also 50:16. Others see the narrative here as directed to angels, and render the masculine pronoun here him (meaning a man or soul).

¶57.3 57:20[1] Or tillers. Arabic: kuffār. See note to 2:109. The Arabic root k-f-r has the connotation of to cover over and is rendered here a tiller of the ground on that basis by some translators. I prefer to retain the value I use throughout here also since it supplies an additional insight: atheists are indeed impressed by increase; for them, the equation is simple: more is better. But all things pass; and it is only by recognising and embracing eternal verities that Man embarks upon his God-given purpose.

57:25[3] Or hurt, injury.
57:25[4] Muhammad Asad offers some interesting observations here: Side by side with enabling man to discriminate between right and wrong (which is the innermost purpose of all divine revelation), God has endowed him with the ability to convert to his use the natural resources of his earthly environment. An outstanding symbol of this ability is man's skill, unique among all animated beings, in making tools; and the primary material for all tool-making - and, indeed, for all human technology - is iron: the one metal which is found abundantly on earth, and which can be utilized for beneficial as well as destructive ends. The "awesome power" (ba's shadid) inherent in iron manifests itself not merely in the manufacture of weapons of war but also, more subtly, in man's ever-growing tendency to foster the development of an increasingly complicated technology which places the machine in the foreground of all human existence and which, by its inherent - almost irresistible - dynamism, gradually estranges man from all inner connection with nature. This process of growing mechanization, so evident in our modern life, jeopardizes the very structure of human society and, thus, contributes to a gradual dissolution of all moral and spiritual perceptions epitomised in the concept of "divine guidance". It is to warn man of this danger that the Qur'an stresses - symbolically and metonymically - the potential evil (ba's) of "iron" if it is put to wrong use: in other words, the danger of man's allowing his technological ingenuity to run wild and thus to overwhelm his spiritual consciousness and, ultimately, to destroy all possibility of individual and social happiness.

58:4[4] Qur'anic usage: The expression believe in at 58:4 requires an action in order to be valid, and therefore presupposes something distinct from mere verbal or intellectual assent, or even an event in the heart — although all are certainly some part of what is meant by believe in. In order for believe in to be achievable here one must do something; perhaps the expression prove faithful to better conveys in English what is implicit in the statement. From this we can deduce that in the Qur'anic worldview to believe in is not merely a matter of what claims or feels. It is that which governs how a man makes his choices in the world. With the division of church and state men have gained the impression that their religion is what they do — if they do so at all — for an hour in a church on a Sunday, or in a mosque on a Friday. This is a false impression. What a man does for an hour here and there is more properly called a hobby. It is what he does with the rest of the time which is his religion. Within the Qur'anic model, works are not an add-on to — or confirmation of — 'belief in'; they are a direct function of what belief in means.

58:11[4] My own view is that the core sense of this verse is that a man's talents make room for him. I provide below, for interest, two distinct Traditionalist readings. The more adamant Traditionalist tends to see this verse primarily in terms of his religion and Caliphate-building project. Typical of this view are Hilali & Khan, whose rendering of the verse follows: O you who believe! When you are told to make room in the assemblies, (spread out and) make room. Allah will give you (ample) room (from His Mercy). And when you are told to rise up [for prayers, Jihad (holy fighting in Allah's Cause), or for any other good deed], rise up. Allah will exalt in degree those of you who believe, and those who have been granted knowledge. And Allah is Well-Acquainted with what you do. Traditionalist convert Muhammad

Asad takes a less vociferous view, and his numbered notes to this verse follow his rendering of the verse itself: O YOU who have attained to faith! When you are told, "Make room for one another in your collective life",1 do make room: [and in return,] God will make room for you [in His grace].2 And whenever you are told, "Rise up [for a good deed]", do rise up;3 [and] God will exalt by [many] degrees those of you who have attained to faith and, [above all,] such as have been vouchsafed [true] knowledge:4 for God is fully aware of all that you do. 1. Lit., "in the assemblies (al-majalis)". Although it is frequently assumed that this refers to the assemblies held by the Prophet, when his followers would throng around him in their eagerness the better to hear what he had to say, or - more generally - to congregations in mosques, etc., in later times, I am (with Razi) of the opinion that the plural noun majalis is used here in a tropical or metaphorical sense, denoting the totality of men's social life. Taken in this sense, the "making room for one another" implies the mutual providing of opportunities for a decent life to all - and especially to the needy or handicapped - members of the community. 2. Commenting on this passage, Razi says: "This verse indicates that if one widens the means (abwab) of happiness and well-being of God's creatures ('ibad), God will widen for him all that is good in this life and in the hereafter. Hence, no reasonable person (al-'aqil) could ever restrict [the purport of] this 'verse to merely making room for one another in an [actual) assembly." 3. The interpretation implied in the words "for a good deed" interpolated by me above is analogous to that offered by most of the classical commentators, and most explicitly by Tabari; in the words of Qatadah (ibid.), "Whenever you are called upon to do a good deed, respond to this call." 4. Cf. the saying of the Prophet: "The superiority of a learned man ('alim) over a [mere] worshipper ('abid) is like the superiority of the moon on the night when it is full over all other stars" (Ibn Hanbal, Abu Da'ud, Tirmidhi, Nasa'i, Ibn Majah and Darimi).

59:4[2] The attentive reader will observe that the expression God and His messenger is generic; while it certainly relates to the recipient of the Qur'an, it refers in places to different messengers sent at various times. As believers, we are required to follow guidance and to make no distinction among the messengers of God (2:136, 2:253, 2:285, 3:84, 4:152, 17:55, 37:181, 38:45-48).

59:7[3] The central portion of 59:7 is habitually, mightily, and comically abused at the hands of the Traditionalist; his abuse of it is intended to open the floodgates to his preferred literature. It is a feint — a form of bait-and-switch — by which means he achieves an end-run around the psychological defences of the unwary or of those unprepared to do their own due diligence on the Qur'an. The context at 59:7 treats of the allocation of material things exclusively — at the time the Messenger was alive. To ascribe to it any other value is, frankly, deceit. The way the Traditionalist quotes this small part of one verse out of context is analogous to claiming that the Tanakh (Hebrew Bible) says there is no God. Of course, it does indeed say that (at Psalms 14:1, for example). However, the whole verse reads: The fool hath said in his heart, There is no God. They are corrupt, they have done abominable works, there is none that doeth good. The Qur'an warns against those who twist the words of God (5:41). The Traditionalist's problem here (aside from his requirement to find Qur'anic authority for his religion where there is none) is that he has not understood the concept of implicit punctuation. Verse 59:8 begins with For the poor émigrés[...].

The Traditionalist translator is forced to insert words of his own composition here such as It is[...]. However, when we understand that there is no oversight or deficiency in the text, but rather that the mechanics of the syntax implicitly force us to break the narrative into blocks on the basis of our own intelligence (and that this mechanism is itself a safeguard against the very type of abuse under discussion) then we begin to appreciate the beauty and wisdom of this mechanism, and to regard it as an ally.

The Petra thesis points to sites local to its location — but without acceptance of the Egypt as the locus for Fir'awn. The Arabia Felix thesis points to sites in the Yemen region for all locations, including that of Fir'awn. Mecca is geographically removed from both regions. See Notepad XVI.

61:6[4] Arabic: aḥmad. This is the comparative of the ḥ-m-d root whence the name Muḥammad derives, and means more laudable or more praiseworthy. While I do not follow him in my rendering, the reader should know what the Traditionalist claims in this regard. Muhammad Asad summarises the point as well as anybody: This prediction is supported by several references in the Gospel of St. John to the Parakletos (usually rendered as "Comforter") who was to come after Jesus. This designation is almost certainly a corruption of Periklytos ("the Much-Praised"), an exact Greek translation of the Aramaic term or name Mawhamana. (It is to be borne in mind that Aramaic was the language used in Palestine at the time of, and for some centuries after, Jesus, and was thus undoubtedly the language in which the original - now lost - texts of the Gospels were composed.) In view of the phonetic closeness of Periklytos and Parakletos it is easy to understand how the translator - or, more probably, a later scribe - confused these two expressions. It is significant that both the Aramaic Mawhamana and the Greek Periklytos have the same meaning as the two names of the Last Prophet, Muhammad and Aḥmad, both of which are derived from the verb hamida ("he praised") and the noun hamd ("praise"). An even more unequivocal prediction of the advent of the Prophet Muhammad - mentioned by name, in its Arabic form - is said to be forthcoming from the so-called Gospel of St. Barnabas, which, though now regarded as apocryphal, was accepted as authentic and was read in the churches until the year 496 of the Christian era, when it was banned as "heretical" by a decree of Pope Gelasius. However, since the original text of that Gospel is not available (having come down to us only in an Italian translation dating from the late sixteenth century), its authenticity cannot be established with certainty. It is my opinion that the Gospel of St. Barnabas — which I have read several times — while interesting, was written within the Islamic period. It contains references and assumptions which identify it as a piece of — perhaps pious — Islamic extemporisation rather than an original scripture containing the words and deeds of ʿĪsā. See also 7:157 and note thereto.
61:6[5] Arabic: siḥr — sorcery. See note to 2:102.
61:7[1] Arabic: al islām. This is one of those junctures in the Qur'an where the Traditionalist attempts to impress upon the ignorant and unwary the idea that the wording implies support for his religion. This word is an abstract noun and means peace or submission (to God). See 3:18-19 and notes thereto. That this does not (and cannot) imply acceptance of the Traditionalist's religion is particularly obvious given that the preceding context treats of first Mūsā and then of ʿĪsā, both of whom appealed to their respective people and neither of whom were Muslims in the sense the Traditionalist uses the word. Rather, the term indicates the submission of the will to that of another. This is clear when we compare this clause with 47:35 where the same collocation (in the active voice) is used in the purely prosaic sense of sue for peace in a war setting. Consider also 40:10 which treats of the invitation to faith (not to a specific 'religion'); and see also 68:42-43 where the setting is the Day of Judgment. Given the typical Traditionalist treatment of the notion of al islām in this context, this verse and the one following should make sobering reading for any Traditionalist capable of reflective thought.
61:7[2] Arabic: ẓālimūn. See note to 2:229.
61:8[1] Arabic: al kāfirūn. See note to 2:19 and Notepad II.iii.
61:9[1] Arabic: dīn. See Notepad V.
61:9[2] Arabic: al ḥaqq. See Notepad XVII (al ḥaqq i.).
61:9[3] Traditionalist translators are coy about exactly who is the subject here, God or the Messenger, with both Saheeh International and Hilali & Khan opting to omit either he or He at this juncture, and rendering instead by means of the infinitive (a form which, in point of fact, does not feature in Arabic). By way of illustration of how he injects the text with his required outcomes, here is Hilali & Khan's rendering of the whole verse: He it is Who has sent His Messenger (Muhammad SAW) with guidance and the religion of truth (Islamic Monotheism) to make it victorious over all (other) religions even though the Mushrikun (polytheists, pagans, idolaters, and disbelievers in the Oneness of Allah and in His Messenger Muhammed SAW) hate (it). But the subject of the clause under question can only be God, and the point is better made explicitly, which Muhammad Asad does. His rendering of the phrase reads: to the end that He make it prevail over all [false] religion, which he supports with following note: Cf. 3:19 - "the only [true] religion in the sight of God is [man's] self surrender unto Him".
61:9[4] Arabic: dīn. See Notepad V.
61:9[5] See note to Arabic root: sh-r-k at 6:78 and Notepad VI.
61:9[6] The Qur'anic position is that setting up anything along with God as a focus of worship is idolatry. There are obvious forms of idolatry, of course. But there are subtle forms also such as self, career, reputation, possessions, and doctrines which deny God's authority.

61:10[1] Arabic: alladhīna āmanū. See note to 2:257 and Notepad II.iv.
61:11[1] Translators typically treat 61:11 as subjunctive (that you should believe[...]) or the imperative (believe you[...]). But such a reading is absent from the text. The text is the plain imperfective, a statement of fact: You believe[...].
61:11[2] See note to 58:4 for Qur'anic usage of to believe in.
61:12[1] Arabic: dhunūb. See Notepad XI.iv.
61:13[1] This clause is typically rendered out of all recognition by means of interpolations and other devices (Saheeh International, for example, has it: And [you will obtain] another [favor] that you love). However, no interpolation is necessary if we treat 61:11 as the text reads on the page, and do not infuse it with a subjunctive mood it does not possess (see note to 61:11), and understand that 61:12 is an aside. Then the point cannot be obfuscated which is that we are not to deviate from our central calling in our affections. The battles, victories, and gains are all very well — and God, indeed, promises to strengthen us against our enemies — but battles and victories are not the point; we are to keep God at the centre of our affections and our motivations. I would correlate the feminine object pronoun here with tijāra (rendered here trade) at 61:10 although, naturally, opinions here differ.

61:14[6] I.e. in response to the witness from ʿĪsā and those who helped him. Muhammad Asad's comments here presuppose acceptance of the Christian extension of the dominant Egypt-Palestine thesis and provide some useful additional information from that perspective: [...]I.e., some of them recognized him as a prophet - and, therefore, as no more than a created, human being - whereas others denied this truth in the course of time by regarding him as "the son of God" - and, therefore, as "God incarnate" - while still others rejected him and his message altogether. The fact that the earliest followers of Jesus regarded him as purely human is evident from the many theological controversies which persisted during the first three or four centuries of the Christian era. Thus, some renowned theologians, like Theodotus of Byzantium, who lived towards the end of the second century, and his followers - among them Paul of Samosata, Bishop of Antioch in the year 260 - maintained that the "sonship of God" mentioned in the then-existing texts of the Gospels was purely symbolic, denoting no more than that Jesus was a human being exalted by God. The originally widespread teachings of Bishop Arius (280-326) centred in the concept of Jesus as a mortal man chosen by God for a specific task, and in the concept of God as absolutely One, unknowable, and separate from every created being; this doctrine, however, was ultimately condemned by the Councils of Nicaea (325) and Constantinople (381), and gradually ceased to have any influence on the Christian masses. How the ʿAsīr-Ḥejāz and Arabia Felix theses would address this point is beyond the purview of this work. See Notepad XVI.

62:9[2] Arabic: ṣalāt; i.e. such duty as is incumbent. See note to 2:3 and Article SZC. Generically, ṣalāt denotes duty. Here by dint of context, the ṣalāt must be the duty to mobilise for military action (see note below).
62:9[3] Arabic: jumuʿa — assembly. This word has come to mean Friday over time, but the contrived nature of that position is clear when we consider the days of the week in the Arabic language in translation: we have the first day (Sunday), the second day (Monday), the third day (Tuesday), the fourth day (Wednesday), the fifth day (Thursday), the day of assembly (Friday), and the Sabbath day (Saturday). It does not require much analysis to see what has happened. To equate Friday with the day of assembly is on a par with arguing that Monday (moon-day) is the day the moon comes out. Given the language in the passage (specifically 'disband' at 62:11 with its military implication, and the fact that the Jews are addressed in terms of their fear of death at 62:7-8) I must regard the assembly mentioned here as implying military muster: the call to arms to defend the community, or to fight in the way of God. One also notes that the Arabic speaks of al ṣalāt min yawm al jumuʿa. This is a very odd construction if what is meant is what the Traditionalist understands by it, namely: al ṣalāt on the day of al jumuʿa. The Arabic is clearly: al ṣalāt of the day of al jumuʿa.
62:9[4] Arabic: dhikr — calling to mind, recalling, reminding; remembrance (of something past); history.
62:10[1] Arabic: al ṣalāt; i.e. such duty as is incumbent. See note to 2:3 and Article SZC.
62:10[2] I.e. when the tour of duty is over; cf. 4:103.
62:11[1] Cf. disband at 3:159 and, particularly, at 63:7 (which chapter it is difficult to view as anything other than a continuation of this one).

63

63:0[2] The sixty-third chapter of the Qur'an is by convention called al munāfiqūn or The Waverers (see note to 4:138).
63:1[1] Arabic: munāfiqūn. See note to 4:138.
63:1[2] The Traditionalist claims that acceptance of the religion he calls Islam is achieved upon declaration of a statement which he calls the shahāda (namely: I bear witness that there is no god but God, and I bear witness that Muḥammad is the messenger of God). The latter half of this popular statement is found here at 63:1 in the mouths of the waverers — who are directly stated by God to be liars. The Traditionalist typically bawls the entire formula from the rooftops five times a day. Nowhere is the Traditionalist's 'shahāda' found in the Qur'an as a single statement, and nowhere is it — or anything like it — presented in the Qur'an as a means of accepting a religion of any sort.
63:1[3] Arabic: munāfiqūn. See note to 4:138.
63:2[1] I.e. their worldly obligations.
63:2[2] Arabic: junna — protection, shelter, shield, cover; concealment.

63:3[1] Arabic: dhālika bianna. See note to 22:6 and Notepad XIV.
63:3[2] Cf. 9:87.
63:4[1] I take this as an idiom indicating treating someone overly carefully and timidly (since propped up pieces of dry wood can fall over in the slightest breeze). A more natural idiom in English might be to treat with kid gloves.
63:4[2] Arabic: ṣayḥah. I have purposely left this as blast (as I have consistently rendered it throughout) since it allows the attentive reader to connect the multiple instances where this word occurs (which treat of impending or actual destruction of populations after rejection of their respective messengers). However, there is also a sense that such people take everything personally. This is also the case with those whose identity is bound up in religions — especially ones with cultural history attached to them. We see the language of outrage and hypersensitivity on such a basis represented in media at the present time as a currency of power.
63:4[3] Lit.: God fights them.
63:6[1] Arabic root: f-s-q. See note to 2:26 and Notepad XI.vii.
63:7[1] I.e. they encourage spending on a campaign only once the result is known.
63:7[2] Arabic: munāfiqūn. See note to 4:138.
63:8[1] The Traditionalist has constructed a narrative here from the collections of hearsay he chooses to occupy himself with in preference to the Qur'an.
63:8[2] Arabic: 'izza — power, prestige, honour, respect and fame.
63:8[3] See note to (al) mu'minūn at 8:2.
63:8[4] Arabic: munāfiqūn. See note to 4:138.

63:9[2] Arabic: dhikr — calling to mind, recalling, reminding; remembrance (of something past); history.
63:9[3] This wider point — often missed — arising from this and similar statements is that we are not to let our desire to add to wealth and children lead us into wrong behaviour. Many think compromising their integrity to provide better for their children is justified. The Qur'an exhorts us against such a course. Cf. 102:1-2.
63:10[1] I.e. kept him in the earthly realm.
63:11[1] I.e. keeps it in the earthly realm.

It is not possible to render 'amr in English so as to achieve the consistent emphasis on this word which is a feature of the Arabic in this chapter. I render it here matter (65:1), purpose (65:3), command (65:4, 65:5, 65:8, 65:12), and affair (65:9, 65:9).

65:4[3] Lit.: and.
65:4[4] Often said by the Traditionalist — on the basis of his library of dubious fiction — to mean female children who have not started menstruation. To those who claim that the mood is perfect under the influence of lam (i.e. who have not yet[...]) I would point out that the relative pronoun and the verb are in the feminine plural and refer to (in fact, can only refer to) women (Arabic: nisā') in the preceding clause. The Qur'an speaks of women as legally competent females (who can own property, take oaths, bear witness, swear fealty, incur punishment for crimes). Minors can do none of those things. Cases of women not menstruating while not pregnant are not unusual, and it is this which is referenced here.

66:3[1] Arabic: ḥadīth — story; account; narrative, statement.
66:3[2] The Traditionalist's understanding is that the reference here is to God, and he capitalises here accordingly. While I am tempted to capitalise these attributes also, I have refrained for two reasons: 1. Had revelation been the agency, the words themselves would form part of the Qur'an; but they are not found within it; the words 'and God made it known to him' can easily imply human agency since all things are ultimately attributable to God. 2. This combination of attributes ('the knowing, the aware') occurs nowhere in the Qur'an beyond this single instance. On this basis, my view is that this formulation is a tactful and discreet means of avoiding naming the source of the information directly.
66:4[1] Grammar: dual.
66:4[2] Grammar: dual.
66:4[3] I.e. to God. This is the meaning of this word at its only other instance in the text (6:113), and A. J. Arberry renders here also inclined. To me the sense is clear: if you have repented, then (that means that) your hearts have inclined (back to God). However, some read this clause to mean that the hearts of the women have deviated (i.e. inclined away from what was pleasing to God or to the Messenger).
66:4[4] Grammar: dual.
66:4[5] See note to (al) mu'minūn at 8:2.
66:4[6] Lit.: after that.
66:5[1] Grammar: feminine plural object.
66:5[2] See note to muslim at 2:128.
66:5[3] Arabic: sāḥa. Frequently translated as oft-fasting and synonyms. This is only tenable if we take an extremely mystical view of the text. In one sense we are all on a journey — a pilgrimage — and are thus fasting from the comforts of our true home. Yet, if we are to apply such a rationale here, we should apply it everywhere. I am not infected by or interested in that cultural virus called Feminism, and am indifferent to its dogmas. I am interested only in applying a consistent reading to the Qur'an. And on that basis alone, my view is that the case here seems to be that certain male commentators have found distasteful the idea that women should travel — that women should be on a journey as significant as their own — and have applied a sense to this word which keeps the woman in what they have seen as her place. In summary, sāḥa properly means to travel, to journey; to flow and I, in common with many translators, have rendered here accordingly.
66:6[1] Arabic: alladhīna āmanū. See note to 2:257 and Notepad II.iv.

66:8[4] Cf. 57:12.
66:8[5] Lit.: between their hands. I understand this to mean here: under their authority. See note to 2:66.
66:8[6] Interpretations here vary. My view is that since in Arabic the right hand also denotes authority and ownership, the reference is not to some arbitrary light which so happens to behave in a particular way; it is to something owned and deserved. Cf. the parable of the wise and foolish virgins (Matt. 25:1-13).

66:12[2] Arabic: 'imrān. Typically identified with the Amram of the Hebrew scriptures, father of Moses. See Notepad XVIII and Notepad XV.
66:12[3] Arabic: farj (sg.), furūj (pl.). Lit.: openings, gaps, apertures; vulvas. More generally it means chastity or modesty.
66:12[4] While the pronoun object here is the masculine singular, it is typically rendered her in English so as not to break continuity. However, N. J. Dawood takes the masculine pronoun as a reference to the masculine noun womb (Arabic: baṭn). This is understandable given the correlation between this verse and 21:91. The Traditionalist tends to include a note here referring to an item of clothing, which he takes to be the object, and which I assume comes from his preferred supplanting literature. Muhammad Asad furnishes a useful comment to 21:91 which I repeat here also: This allegorical expression, used here with reference to Mary's conception of Jesus, has been widely - and erroneously - interpreted as relating specifically to his birth. As a matter of fact, the Qur'an uses the same expression in three other places with reference to the creation of man in general - namely in 15:29 and 38:72, "when I have formed him... and breathed into him of My spirit"; and in 32:9, "and thereupon He forms [lit., "formed"] him fully and breathes lit., "breathed"] into him of His spirit". In particular, the passage of which the last-quoted phrase is a part (i.e., 32:7-9) makes it abundantly and explicitly clear that God "breathes of His spirit" into every human being. Commenting on the verse under consideration, Zamakhshari states that "the breathing of the spirit [of God] into a body signifies the endowing it with life": an explanation with which Razi concurs. As for the description of Mary as allati ahsanat farjaha; idiomatically denoting "one who guarded her chastity" (lit., "her private parts"), it is to be borne in mind that the term ihsan - lit., "[one's] being fortified [against any danger or evil]" - has the tropical meaning of "abstinence from what is unlawful or reprehensible" (Taj al-'Arus), and especially from illicit sexual intercourse, and is applied to a man as well as a woman: thus, for instance, the terms muhsan and muhsanah are used elsewhere in the Qur'an to describe, respectively, a man or a woman who is "fortified [by marriage] against unchastity". Hence, the expression allati ahsanat farjaha, occurring in the above verse as well as in 66:12 with reference to Mary, is but meant to stress her outstanding chastity and complete abstinence, in thought as well as in deed, from anything unlawful or morally reprehensible: in other words, a rejection of the calumny (referred to in 4:156 and obliquely alluded to in 19:27-28) that the birth of Jesus was the result of an "illicit union". Cf. 3:49, 15:29, 32:9.

67:0[2] The sixty-seventh chapter of the Qur'an is by convention called al mulk or Dominion.
67:3[1] Or overspreading. Arabic: ṭibāq. This word occurs in adjectival form twice (at 67:3 and 71:15). It has two core ranges of sense. These one might summarise as congruency, and overspreading. Most translations employ the first option, beginning from a starting point of congruency, conformity and compatibility to reach the commonest renderings of layers and one above another. These are acceptable meanings; but one cannot escape the suspicion that their popularity is driven by modern conceptions. Muhammad Asad commits to this side of the etymological line fully but without any interpretative infusion, rendering this word as: in full harmony with one another. But, as mentioned, this word has another range of applicable meanings: to overspread, to cover fully. Lane (p. 1879) supplies: what fills, or would fill the earth; extending over it in general. On this basis, the statement here is that the seven heavens overspread (the earth in its entirety). In my own translation, I have opted to use in harmony, which is acceptable, and compatible with values such as layers and one above another, but which does not assume the conclusions those values frequently engender.
67:3[2] Arabic: raḥmān. Typically rendered most merciful. See 36:23 and note thereto, note to 1:1, and Notepad I.
67:3[3] Arabic: tafāwūt — disparity; disharmony.
67:3[4] Lit.: the vision.
67:3[5] Arabic: fuṭūr — cracks, fissures, rifts, ruptures.
67:4[1] Lit.: the vision.
67:4[2] Lit.: the vision.
67:4[3] Or dazzled.
67:5[1] Arabic: miṣbāḥ, maṣābiḥ. This word occurs at 24:35, 24:35, 41:12, 67:5 and is used only of stars and lamps (i.e. small lights). The word denoting the sun is sirāj (here: torch); it occurs at 25:61, 33:46, 71:16, 78:13 and is used for the physical sun and to indicate the Prophet himself (i.e. large lights — one literal and the other metaphorical). Since the Qur'an treats those lights which are the sun and the stars by means of different words, one assumes on that basis that the stars are not suns, nor is the sun a star.
67:5[2] Also possible is it (referring to the sky).
67:5[3] Arabic: rujūm — things thrown (such as conjectures or missiles).
67:5[4] Or adversaries (against the command of God). See Article SJC. Cf. 15:16-18, 37:6-10.
67:7[1] Arabic: s̲hahīq — sobbing; sighing, sighs; inhalation, breathing in.
67:9[1] Arabic: balā. See note to 2:81.
67:10[1] One of the many errors supported by sizeable factions within what is called Christianity is the idea that faith is in some way illogical; that there is virtue in believing something contrary to good sense. The Qur'an appeals both to the intuition and to reason.
67:11[1] Arabic: d̲hanb. See Notepad XI.iv.
67:11[2] Lit.: distance, remoteness; depth, vastness (of an abyss).
67:13[1] Arabic: qawl — speech, teaching, doctrine, word.

¶67.2 67:15[1] Arabic: d̲halūl. This word treats often of animals and indicates a nature which is susceptible to being tamed or trained by men, a characteristic which is often rendered in English as docile or tractable. In the present context responsive seems a better fit.
67:17[1] Arabic: awalam yaraw. See note to 13:41.
67:19[1] Or forming ranks. See note to 24:41.

67:19[2] Arabic: qabaḍa — to clutch, to grasp; to contract. This is generally understood as birds above them with wings outstretched and closing — and I have rendered accordingly here. Alternatively, the contrast could, in my view, be between birds in flight and birds 'clutching' (which many birds do whenever they alight). Seen outside of flight, birds seldom look as if they could fly, and are often ungainly.
67:19[3] Arabic: raḥmān. Typically rendered most merciful. See 36:23 and note thereto, note to 1:1, and Notepad I.
67:20[1] Arabic: am. See note to 21:21.
67:20[2] I.e. if this is the question: who holds the birds aloft in flight (other than God, supposedly)? The claim follows.
67:20[3] Arabic: min dūni. See note to 2:23.
67:20[4] This is the claim: that there is present some force which can assist one besides God, and that it is this force which holds the birds in the air (such as, for example, the modern gods known as the Laws of Nature and Gravity). The rebuttal follows.
Arabic: raḥmān. Typically rendered most merciful. See 36:23 and note thereto, note to 1:1, and Notepad I.
67:20[5] Arabic: al kāfirūn. See note to 2:19 and Notepad II.iii.
67:21[1] Arabic: am. See note to 21:21.
67:21[2] I.e. if this is the question: who holds the birds aloft in flight (other than God, supposedly)? The claim follows.
67:21[3] This is the claim: that this imaginary force which holds birds in the air, other than God, will provide for one should God withhold his provision. The rebuttal follows immediately and in the verses following.
67:21[4] Arabic: bal. See note to 2:88.
67:24[1] Arabic: d̲hara'a. This verb has connotations of to sow (many or different things); to seed; to create; to produce. Occurs at 6:136, 7:179, 16:13, 23:79, 42:11, 67:24.
67:25[1] See grammar note to 2:91.
67:27[1] I.e. the Inferno (cf. 67:5 and 67:11).

67:28[2] Arabic: al kāfirūn. See note to 2:19 and Notepad II.iii.

68:0[1] Arabic: raḥmān. Typically rendered most merciful. See 36:23 and note thereto, note to 1:1, and Notepad I.
68:0[2] The sixty-eighth chapter of the Qur'an is by convention called al qalam or The Pen.
68:1[1] See note to 2:1 and Article MLQ.
nūn:
1:1-7 (al fātiḥah), 19:16-33 ('Īsā), 19:41-50 (Ibrāhīm), 19:51-53 (Mūsā), 19:54-55 (Ismā'īl), 19:56-57 (Idrīs).
68:2[1] This is seen by some to refer to what the angels write. The context, in my view, points to a different conclusion. I see this oath as an anticipation of the calumny written about Muḥammad, most prolifically by those who claim to follow him, but by others also, filled as such writing is with personal calumny and direct contradictions with the Book he was commissioned to convey. For his part, the Traditionalist has, among his stock of such stories about Muḥammad, the assertion that the prophetic process was for him such that an objective observer would find indistinguishable from a form of possession. Naturally, such a narrative is found nowhere in the Qur'an.
68:4[1] Arabic: k̲huluq. This is often translated character, nature, way. This is not incorrect, but has been used to obfuscate the broader sense by those who would pour honours upon the Messenger which the Qur'an denies him. The word k̲huluq occurs at just one other place (26:137). There it is found in the mouths of those who disbelieve as something pertaining only to the tradition of former peoples. From this it follows that k̲huluq denotes an accepted code of practice, a way of doing things pertaining to a wider purview than that of mere personal morality or character — which is the value the Traditionalist ascribes to k̲huluq at 68:4. The case I am making is more than supported by the use of the preposition 'alā here which, when used without reference to a particular verb (as here), indicates on, or upon and is used often to denote adherence to or standing upon (in the sense of basing one's assumptions upon). The sense, then, is that the Messenger is upon a 'tremendous tradition' — the tradition of all the messengers: the tradition of those who came with their warnings, were (typically) rejected, and whose ministries were followed by punishment from God — a pattern to which verses 68:5-6 allude. My analysis was conducted entirely without reference to Muhammad Asad, but I find it noteworthy that his conclusions comport to a significant extent with my own, and I reproduce part of his comment here for interest: The term khuluq, rendered by me as "way of life", describes a person's "character", "innate disposition" or "nature" in the widest sense of these concepts, as well as "habitual behaviour" which becomes, as it were, one's "second nature" (Taj al-'Arus). My identification of khuluq with "way of life" is based on the explanation of the above verse by Abd Allah ibn Abbas (as quoted by Tabari), stating that this term is here synonymous with din: and we must remember that one of the primary significances of the latter term is "a way [or "manner"] of behaviour" or "of acting" (Qamus).
68:13[1] Lit.: after that.
68:13[2] Or bastard; outsider; ignoble. I include Muhammad Asad's note to this word for interest: The commentators give the most divergent interpretations to the term zanim, which is evidently derived from the noun zanamah, denoting either of the two wattles, or fleshy skin protuberances, hanging below the ears of a goat. Since these wattles do not seem to have any physiological function, the term zanim has come to signify "someone [or "something"] not needed" (Taj al-'Arus): in other words, redundant or useless. It is, therefore, logical to assume that in the above context this term describes a person who is entirely useless in the social sense.
68:15[1] Arabic: āyāt. See Notepad VIII.
68:16[1] Muhammad Asad comments here: Lit., "We shall brand him on the snout" (khurtum). All commentators point out that this idiomatic phrase has a strictly metaphorical meaning, namely, "We shall stigmatize him with indelible disgrace" (cf. Lane II, 724, quoting both Raghib and Taj al-'Arus).
68:18[1] I.e. for the will of God. See 68:28-29.
68:19[1] This is the plain meaning of the participle here (lit.: one who wanders about), although other meanings are possible, such as affliction or visitation. I incline to this reading since it finds support at 68:24. Arabic: ṭawafa. See note to 2:125.
68:19[2] Arabic: ṭawafa. See note to 2:125.
68:24[1] Arabic: 'alaykum — some translators omit this thinking it superfluous. The meaning, as A. J. Arberry has it, is against your will.
68:25[1] Arabic: ḥard. This is the only instance of this root. Non-sectarian lexicons connect the root with annoyance, anger. Sectarian lexicons simply state later opinions as objective facts, which is of no practical use. My sense, given such facts as we have and the context, is that the spirit in which they left was of anticipatory dismissal of — or anger toward — any who might presume to enter 'their' garden. I have rendered with A. J. Arberry: determined upon their purpose.

68:26[1] My opinion is that at this point they simply do not recognise the garden, and think they have lost their way. It is only in the next verse that they realise they have lost everything.

68:27[1] Arabic: bal. See note to 2:88.

68:27[2] This verse mirrors exactly 56:67.

68:33[1] I.e. those mentioned prior to 68:16 will be punished in accordance with the moral of the story above.

¶68.2 68:34[1] See note to al muttaqūn at 2:2.

68:35[1] Often rendered treat; with A. J. Arberry I have rendered literally.

68:35[2] See note to muslim at 2:128.

68:37[1] Arabic: am. See note to 21:21.

68:37[2] Arabic: kitāb. See Notepad IX.iii.

68:37[3] I.e. if this is the claim: that you have a genuine Writ (but something other than what God himself gave).

68:38[1] This is, in summary, the contents of such "writs" which do not originate with God. The answer follows at 68:40.

68:39[1] Arabic: am. See note to 21:21.

68:39[2] I.e. if this is the claim: that you have obtained an oath from God to follow something other than what He has given.

68:38[1] This is, in summary, the contents of such oaths which men would make binding upon God. The answer follows at 68:40.

68:41[1] Arabic: am. See note to 21:21.

68:41[2] I.e. if this is the claim. The response follows. See note to Arabic root: sh-r-k at 6:78 and Notepad VI.

68:41[3] See note to Arabic root: sh-r-k at 6:78 and Notepad VI. The concept of partners is said by the Traditionalist to refer only to fraudulent gods. I think the connotation is much wider than that and includes authorities of any kind (today: government, heavily promoted 'scientists', opinion-makers such as actors and other semi-fictitious personas) and all fiction-based belief systems, including most of what today passes for religion.

68:42[1] Or Dread Event. Arabic: shāq — shank, leg, shin. However, kashafa 'an shāq (which is the formulation here) is a set phrase which means to prepare oneself for difficulty or to prepare oneself for terror; and a time when a calamity or difficulty is uncovered (Lane, p. 1471). Accordingly, N. J. Dawood renders here: dread event.

68:42[2] Arabic: sajada. See Notepad IV. As understood here the Submission (al sujūd) indicates a particular reading of one of a number of specific portions of the Qur'an between chapter 50 and the end of chapter 114 which forms the basis of a nightly vigil to which outsiders are also invited to hear the message of the Qur'an. See Notepad XXI. Cf. 48:29, 50:40, 68:43.

68:42[3] I understand this clause to be parenthetical in anticipation of the last clause of 68:43. As understood here the Submission (al sujūd) indicates a particular reading of one of a number of specific portions of the Qur'an between chapter 50 and the end of chapter 114 which forms the basis of a nightly vigil to which outsiders are also invited to hear the message of the Qur'an. See Notepad XXI. Cf. 48:29, 50:40, 68:43. My understanding here is that such people are invited to the Submission, but they 'are not able' to attend — and that there will come a time after death when they will regret this. This point is explicitly confirmed in the next verse. This segment itself, obviously, forms part of those sections of the Qur'an which comprise the Submission.

68:43[1] Arabic: khāshi'ūn. See 2:45.

68:43[2] Arabic: sajada. See Notepad IV; as understood here the Submission (al sujūd) indicates a particular reading of one of a number of specific portions of the Qur'an between chapter 50 and the end of chapter 114 which forms the basis of a nightly vigil to which outsiders are also invited to hear the message of the Qur'an. See Notepad XXI. Cf. 48:29, 50:40, 68:42.

68:44[1] Arabic: ḥadīth — story; account; narrative, statement.

68:44[2] Arabic: min ḥaythu. See note to 2:149.

68:45[1] The plan of the shayṭān, however, is weak. See 4:76. That shayṭān treats of an adversary (against the command of God). See Article SJC.

68:46[1] Arabic: am. See note to 21:21.

68:46[2] I.e. if this is the claim. The response follows directly.

68:47[1] Arabic: am. See note to 21:21.

68:47[2] I.e. if this is the claim. The response follows directly.

68:47[3] I.e. then are they writing messages from the Unseen — so let's see them.

68:48[1] I.e. Yūnus (typically identified with the Jonah of the Hebrew scriptures). Jonah was impatient at God's mercy towards the people to whom he had been sent. See Notepad XV.

68:48[2] Or distressed or constrained. However Muhammad Asad (who emphasises anger here) notes: This is a reference to the Prophet Jonah - see 21:87[...]. As mentioned in 37:140, "he fled[...]" from the task with which he had been entrusted by God, because his people did not all at once accept his preaching as valid: and so Muhammad is exhorted not to give in to despair or anger at the opposition shown to him by most of his contemporaries[...], but to persevere in his prophetic mission.

68:51[1] Arabic: alladhīna kafarū. See note to 2:6 and Notepad II.i.

68:51[2] Arabic: dhikr — calling to mind, recalling, reminding; remembrance (of something past); history.

68:52[1] Arabic: dhikr — calling to mind, recalling, reminding; remembrance (of something past); history.

69

69:0[2] The sixty-ninth chapter of the Qur'an is by convention called al ḥāqqah or The Inevitable Reality.

69:1[1] Arabic: ḥāqqah. One will see ḥāqqah rendered also in terms which emphasise catastrophe or inevitability, and this is understandable given what follows. However, the core sense of the root is truth (hence: reality), and this is followed by Saheeh International (Inevitable Reality); Hilali & Khan (Reality); and Muhammad Asad (The Laying-Bare of the truth). This word occurs only at 69:1-3.

69:4[1] The Calamity is a precise term in the Qur'an. Surely, Thamūd and 'Ād rejected the judgment that was to come upon them, but that judgment was a function of their denial of the Calamity from which no man can escape (see 101:3). This point is in no way original to me, being widely recognised, and expressed also by other translators.

69:5[1] Arabic: ṭāghiya — tyrant, one who transgresses bounds, one who overpowers. This is the only instance of this word. Nouns such as blast or cry are frequently added to supply sense.

69:7[1] Or fallen.

69:8[1] For this to make logical, contextual sense the locus of the revelation has to be close to those places where these events took place. Both the Petra thesis and the Felix Arabic thesis can advance arguments in their favour. Mecca is close to neither location. See Notepad XVI.

69:9[1] Arabic: fir'awn. See note to 2:49.

69:9[2] Arabic root: kh-ṭ-'. See Notepad XI.vi. This possibly references the cities of Lūṭ.

69:10[1] I.e. exceeding other punishments, or vehement punishment (Lane, p. 1030).

69:11[1] I.e. carried.

69:11[2] I.e. your ancestors.

69:12[1] I.e. the running ship.

69:12[2] I.e. of the reminder.

69:19[2] Arabic: kitāb. See Notepad IX.iii.

69:25[1] Arabic: kitāb. See Notepad IX.iii.

69:25[2] Arabic: kitāb. See Notepad IX.iii.

69:29[1] Lit.: Perished.

69:33[1] See note to 58:4 for Qur'anic usage of to believe in.

69:36[1] Muhammad Asad comments here: The noun ghislin, which appears in the Qur'an only in this one instance, has been variously - and very contradictorily - explained by the early commentators. Ibn Abbas, when asked about it, frankly answered, "I do not know what ghislin denotes" (Razi)[...] Such reasonable honesty is refreshing — would that the Muslims had continued thus. Some render filth or washing of wounds, etc. A. J. Arberry uses foul pus, and I have followed him in that for the sake of completion.

69:37[1] Arabic root: kh-ṭ-'. See Notepad XI.vi.

69:41[1] Arabic: qawl — speech, teaching, doctrine, word.

69:41[2] The reference to 'poet' addresses all those — Traditionalist Muslims, Orientalists and plain rejecters of the Qur'an alike — who attribute to the recipient of the revelation some influence over it, be it as its originator, or as one possessed of knowledge originating outside the Qur'anic revelation.

69:43[1] Lit.: (gradual or successive) sending down.

69:44[1] For example, any part of that voluminous literature upon which the Traditionalist bases his religion.

69:47[1] Or prevented it.

70:1[1] Cf. 70:25.

70:2[1] Arabic: al kāfirūn. See note to 2:19 and Notepad II.iii.

70:3[1] Muhammad Asad's comment here bears consideration: Lit., "He of the [many] ascents": a metonymical phrase implying that there are many ways by which man can "ascend" to a comprehension of God's existence, and thus to spiritual "nearness" to Him - and that, therefore, it is up to each human being to avail himself of any of the ways leading towards Him (cf. 76:3).

70:5[1] This echoes the words of Ya'qūb at 12:18 and 12:83.

70:8[1] Or (murky) oil.

70:9[1] Or coloured wool, or tufts of wool.

70:11[1] Perhaps sight of the angels and the Spirit at 70:4, but possibly refers to friends gaining sight of one another.

70:15[1] Arabic: kallā. This exclamation operates also as a pan-textual marker. See 74:16 and note thereto.

70:20[1] Or restless; worried.

70:22[1] Arabic root: ṣ-l-w. See note to 2:3 and Article SZC. Generically, ṣallā means to perform duty. The active participle of the form II verb (muṣall–) as here, occurs only at 70:22, 74:43, 107:4 — comparison of the instances of which is instructive. The Traditionalist's value here is those who pray (i.e. who perform the daily routine which he, the Traditionalist, calls prayer some of the time, but which he cannot find in the Qur'an). Innumerable people have lived over the centuries who have kept this ritual habitually but who have led lives devoid of the virtues listed in this segment. It is only when we understand the value as duty in a general sense (i.e. including to maintain the virtues listed in this segment) that the statement becomes true logically.

70:23[1] Qur'anic definition: al muṣallūn — those who are constant in their duty (see note to 70:22 above). Thus, this category pertains to those who demonstrate constancy in performing their duties, and do not do so on an erratic basis. Cf. 70:34. Arabic root: ṣ-l-w; i.e. performers of such duty as is incumbent. See note to 2:3 and Article SZC.

70:24[1] Arabic: ḥaqqun. See Notepad XVII (ḥaqq- viii.).

70:24[2] Arabic: ma'lūm — known; fixed, appointed, determined, given; fixed sum, fixed rate (money), duty, fee; sum, amount.

70:25[1] Cf. 70:1.

70:26[1] Arabic: dīn. See Notepad V. For Day of Judgment see 82:17-19.

70:29[1] Arabic: farj (sg.), furūj (pl.). Lit.: openings, gaps, apertures; vulvas. More generally it means chastity or modesty. See note to 23:4.

70:30[1] See note to 23:6.

70:34[1] Arabic: ṣalāt; i.e. such duty as is incumbent. See note to 2:3 and Article SZC. I have preserved the use of the same verb found in the Arabic at 70:29 and here at 70:34, which is sadly lost in many translations.

¶70.2 70:36[1] Arabic: alladhīna kafarū. See note to 2:6 and Notepad II.i.

70:37[1] Arabic: 'izīn. This word occurs once only and no Qur'anic definition is furnished so we are confined to dictionaries for definitions. Related meanings refer to relationship (between family or tribe) and sorts or types of men who assert connection to one another; other meanings relate to dispersal (i.e. groups dispersed). Muhammad Asad's comments here (with light editing) are as follows: This, again, connects with the statement in verse 19[...] People who do not want to see the truth of God's existence and have, therefore, no solid basis on which to build their world-view, are, by the same token, unable to conceive any definite standards of personal and social ethics. Hence, whenever they are confronted with anyone's positive assertion of faith, they "run about to and fro" in spiritual confusion, trying, in order to justify themselves intellectually, to demolish the premises of that faith by means of many-sided, contradictory arguments - an endeavour depicted in the metaphor, "coming upon thee from the right and from the left"; and since they derive all their strength from a conformity with shallow mass-opinions, they can do this only "in crowds".

70:39[1] Arabic: kallā. This exclamation operates also as a pan-textual marker. See 74:16 and note thereto.
70:41[1] Lit.: outrun.
70:42[1] See note to 4:140.
70:43[1] We moderns might consider how crowds push to get as close as possible to their idols at a rock concert. This clause serves as a corollary to 70:36-37.
70:44[1] Arabic: khāshiʿūn. See 2:45.

71:0[2] The seventy-first chapter of the Qur'an is by convention called nūḥ or Noah.
71:1[1] Grammar: I have rendered thus in English because such punishment is dependent upon a given community's response (as made clear in the verses which follow). One need only consider Yūnus' mission, for example. A. J. Arberry and Muhammad Asad meet this requirement by means of ere.
71:3[1] See note to al muttaqūn at 2:2.
71:3[2] I.e. what God sent through his messenger.
71:4[1] Arabic: dhunūb. See Notepad XI.iv.
71:7[1] Lit.: waxed proud with pride.
71:10[1] Cf. 20:82.
71:12[1] Some translators close these speech marks at the end of 71:20. Clearly, it is a matter of interpretation. With Hilali & Khan, I close them here, regarding the following verses as speech originating with God and having an application broader than would otherwise be the case.
71:15[1] Or overspreading. See note to ṭibāq at 67:3.
71:16[1] Arabic: nūr. See note to 10:5.
71:18[1] Lit.: will bring you forth in a bringing forth.
71:19[1] Or expanse. Arabic: bisāṭ — carpet, rug. The underlying verb (basaṭa) means to spread, spread out; to level, flatten; expand; unroll, unfold.

71:23[2] Arabic: wadd — love, affection, friendship.
71:23[3] Arabic: suwāʿ. The root of this word relates to time.
71:23[4] Arabic: yaghūth. The root of this word relates to aid, succour; call for help.

71:23[6] Arabic: nasr — eagle (perhaps indicating speed).
71:24[1] Arabic: ẓālimūn. See note to 2:229.
71:24[2] That these are the words of Nūḥ is established by comparison with the last clause of 71:28.
71:25[1] Arabic root: kh-ṭ-ʿ. See Notepad XI.vi.
71:25[2] Arabic: min dūni. See note to 2:23.
71:26[1] Arabic: al kāfirūn. See note to 2:19 and Notepad II.iii.
71:27[1] Grammar: licentious ingrates is generally rendered as the object of beget — which convention I have followed here. However, it may be read also as denoting instrumentality (i.e. beget as licentious ingrates). I have favoured both views at different stages in my studies, but have come down on the side of the standard reading. My reasoning is based less in internal factors (generally, each man is responsible for himself; additionally, a similar structure is found in the next verse: [...] as a believer) and more in external sources which make plain that this antediluvian race became corrupted in their genetic foundations — a condition we find mirrored today in elite policies which impose miscegenation upon discrete races, undermine the genetic stock of the wider herd by means of injections, diet, and other soft-weapon delivery systems, and which is geared to reducing the slave class to mere wetware: programmed automata running elite-sanctioned software.

72:0[2] The seventy-second chapter of the Qur'an is by convention called al jinn or The Domini.
72:1[1] See note to waḥī and awḥā at 3:44.
72:1[2] Many chapters have defining characteristics. Here that characteristic is annahu or that (it), and closely-related constructions. The verse at 72:1 identifies what was revealed to the Messenger, and other translators tend to render along the lines I have here in terms of the construction mentioned above. Thereafter, translators tend to elide this construction where it reappears. I can understand that because where this feature appears elsewhere in the broader text of the Qur'an it is often redundant in English. So on first blush it makes sense to elide it in the remainder of the sūrah also. But it occurs in the present sūrah with such frequency that I was compelled to consider this feature as significant in some way. My conclusion is that it appears so repeatedly in the chapter for two reasons. Firstly, the subject matter itself treats of al jinn, whom we understand to be representative of the dominant men who sit atop any society — including ours — and rule. In our broader discussion of that topic (see Article SJC), we identify a correlation between the powers wielded by ruling elites and the effective use of esoteric or occult powers by those elites. Thus, this repeated feature emphasises the fact of this sūrah's revelation to the Messenger, effectively linking all sentences which contain the feature with the opening statement: Say thou: it is revealed to me, that[...]. Moreover, the recurrent accent upon the word that, while easily (and, again, correctly) elided in other circumstances, serves here not only to put the reader in mind of this sūrah as something revealed to Muḥammad, but juxtaposes that fact with the words of al jinn who describe historical attempts to force access to the heavenly realms to obtain information, and that such attempts are now all but futile. Thus, this format itself makes plain that the revelation given to Muḥammad is superior to whatever the schemes of al jinn might be. Secondly, this same mechanism sets in place an emphasis on the revealed nature of verse 72:19 — which falls outside that segment which comprises the words of al jinn — effectively pulling it back into a focus with the same emphasis on revelation as the statements of al jinn. Finally, the same mechanism serves a different but related function at 72:27. Without the, perhaps, pedantic emphasis which results from my rendering of this sūrah, these important points would be lost.
72:1[3] Arabic: nafar: men (as a collective); band, party, troop. This word is used in the opening verse of both segments which deal most extensively with al jinn in the Qur'an: 46:29-31 and 72:1-14 . The construction has a partitive emphasis: it is 'a band of the domini' (i.e. some portion of the total number of domini), not all members of that group. This nuance will be of increasing interest as we progress through the present sūrah.

72:3[2] Muhammad Asad understands this statement to support his view that the speakers are Jews, since the position here refutes the calumnies heaped upon God by Christians. I agree with this view within the context of my identification of al jinn as dominant rulers, for which see Article SJC. See also note to 72:4 below.
72:4[1] Read here as further revelation given to the Messenger. See note to 72:1.
72:4[2] Generally thought by those who hold to the Traditionalist view of this chapter to refer to Iblīs. Like me, Muhammad Asad does not accept uncritically the view that al jinn are non-human entities — at least, he does not do so at this point. Asad, himself a Jew (born Leopold Weiss), supplies a comment which I include for interest: If we accept the supposition that the beings spoken of here were Jewish strangers, the "outrageous things" (shatat) which they mention would appear to be an allusion to the deep-set belief of the Jews that they were "God's chosen people" - a belief which the Qur'an consistently rejects, and of which the new converts now divested themselves. The reference could also be to the foolish in general — for example, by analogy with the construction most moderate of them (i.e. among them) at 68:28 — or to the creators of lies about God, such as the inventors of the Talmud, or Saul of Tarsus. However, my view is that since it is al jinn who are speaking — whom I identify as representative of the dominant men or ruling elites of the time — I think it most likely that they are referring to one of their own on that basis. Accordingly, I think the reference most likely to indicate Emperor Constantine who, it will be remembered, convened and presided over the Council of Nicaea in 325 CE. The result of this Council, at least according to Wikipedia as of January 2021, was that: The Council declared that the Son was true God, coeternal with the Father and begotten from His same substance, arguing that such a doctrine best codified the Scriptural presentation of the Son as well as traditional Christian belief about him handed down from the Apostles. This belief was expressed by the bishops in the Creed of Nicaea, which would form the basis of what has since been known as the Niceno-Constantinopolitan Creed. Emperor Constantine undoubtedly meets our criteria for al jinn, and so while the speakers in the sūrah seem most likely to have been Jews, as per Muhammad Asad's comment, their defining characteristic within the Qur'anic framework is not here Jewishness, but membership of a ruling caste. And on that basis, the speakers would regard Emperor Constantine as one of their own. This understanding comports both with my view of al jinn as representatives of a dominant minority (the Jewish aspect of which is identified by Asad), and with the refutation of common Christian errors at 72:3. For a fuller discussion of al jinn see Article SJC.
72:4[3] Arabic: shaṭaṭ. See Notepad XI.xi.

72:5[3] Arabic: al ins. See Article SJC.
72:5[4] Arabic: al jinn. See Article SJC.
72:5[5] The implication is clearly that the speakers were wrong in their assumption. If we grant that the reference at 72:4 is to Emperor Constantine as I assert, the present verse makes sense. Constantine (as a member of the ruling elite, or domini) presided over a gathering at the Council of Nicaea in 325 CE of around 300 bishops, men whose political position at that time in Church history was unambiguously that of servi. 72:6[2] Arabic: al ins. See Article SJC.
72:6[3] I.e. aid, assistance.
72:6[4] The issue of how to understand the word min (Arabic: مِن) in this context is a thorny one. The fact is that min forms a standard part of the construction in which the verb which precedes it here occurs, and does so in combination with its complement particle (Arabic: bi / بِ). Thus, a construction familiar to most Muslims is: I seek protection with (Arabic: bi / بِ) God from (Arabic: min / مِن) — i.e. against — the accursed Satan. We find this construction unambiguously used at 19:18, 23:97, 40:27, 113:1-2, 114:1-4. The remaining instances of the form I of this verb (2:67, 11:47, 23:98, 44:20) use lest or that (Arabic: an / ان), and we can disregard those here. The question is whether one is to regard 72:6 as divergent from those structures with identical components at 19:18, 23:97, 40:27, 113:1-2, 114:1-4, and if so, on what basis. I will present in my own wording the two possible alignments, then give other translators' renderings with my comments, before presenting my conclusions. If we are to read the first clause of the present verse in alignment with its fellows in min, then we must understand it as: Men among the servi sought protection with men against the domini. Here the import is that men among the servi sought protection with others like themselves against the domini. This reading, using my own terminology, is consistent with all other instances which employ the same grammatical components. However, the divergent reading (i.e. one which, though possible to Arabic is anomalous to 19:18, 23:97, 40:27, 113:1-2, 114:1-4) is: Men among the servi sought protection with men among the domini. Here the import is that men of one kind sought refuge with men of another kind and the complement is left unfulfilled. We will now consider some translators. Here we are interested in the constructions used, not translators' understanding of key terminology. A. J. Arberry has: But there were certain men of mankind who would take refuge with certain men of the jinn; Hilali & Khan, keen to avoid textual evidence pointing to humans in the second case, have: 'And verily, there were men among mankind who took shelter with the masculine among the jinns; Asad has: Yet [it has always happened] that certain kinds of humans would seek refuge with certain kinds of [such] invisible forces; lastly, Saheeh International has: And there were men from mankind who sought refuge in men from the jinn. We see that the first three translators favour what I am calling the divergent reading, while Saheeh International fudges the issue by using the ambiguous from, which can mean both from among and against. The problem, in my view, is less one of grammar than one of exegesis. The Traditionalist does not possess an understanding of each of the types of human and non-human entities discussed in Article SJC which is consistent in all places in the Qur'an (he derives it from extraneous sources), so it is natural that he struggles in his exegesis here. We have been able to present a textually consistent identification of the key types, and that has assisted us in presenting an exegesis of the verses of this sūrah to this point, one which comports both with that identification and with the text on the page. The question is whether we can continue in that vein here while applying Occam's razor, i.e. the principle that the option requiring the smallest number of assumptions is probably the correct one. In our case, provided our exegesis is not unduly disrupted, it requires less assumptions — given that 72:6 contains the same grammatical components as 19:18, 23:97, 40:27, 113:1-2, 114:1-4 — to accept that 72:6 comports with its fellows and that the meaning of the troublesome min in this verse is what it is in all other comparable cases: from in the sense of against. This results in a full verse in: Men among the servi sought protection with men against the domini, so they increased them in baseness. Understood thus, we find a ready fit in the Servile Wars, three periods of slave uprisings in Rome (135–132 BC, 104–100 BC, 73–71 BC) which were brutally put down by the Romans, resulting in the wholesale crucifixion, torture, and death by other horrific means of the rebellious slave armies. While I cannot prove definitively that this is the reference, it fits both with the identifications I have provided and with historical reality, and aligns easily with a reading of the grammatical components found in the verse which is consistent across all comparable instances. In order to avoid an ambiguity of the type found in the Saheeh International translation I have rendered min in this case against.

72:6[5] Arabic: al jinn. See Article SJC.

72:6[6] I.e. the domini increased those among the servi in baseness. See note to 72:6 above. Arabic: rahaq. The Arabic senses include: lowness, vileness, meanness; weakness (Lane, p. 1777).

72:7[1] Read here as further revelation given to the Messenger. See note to 72:1.

72:7[2] I take the speakers here to have in view the domini in the preceding verse. Seen in this light, the implication is that the rulers of the time in question dismissed the idea of God raising up any messenger or prophet (see also other notes to this verse). Interestingly, the leader of the first slave uprising mentioned in the note above, Eunus, rose to prominence among the slaves through his claim to be both prophet and a wonder-worker. Clearly, the Roman elites did not see subscribe to Eunus' assertions. See notes to 72:6 and 72:7.

72:7[3] I.e. the broader group of al jinn which the speakers are addressing. I take this broader group to comprise non-Jewish elites. See note to 72:7 below.

72:7[4] We need to address the question of what the verb ba'atha means here. It is used in two main senses in the Qur'an: to raise up (i.e. a messenger or prophet) and to raise up (i.e. after death). Among the translators I frequently review, the Traditionalists Hilali & Khan, Saheeh International, and Muhammad Asad all render after the first view, whereas the non-Traditionalist N. J. Dawood renders after the second with: that God could never resurrect the dead; non-Traditionalist A. J. Arberry is ambiguous: that God would never raise up anyone. I can only assume that the first three translators were primed to incline to their view by the usual sources, whereas the non-Traditionalists remained relatively ignorant of those sources and simply followed the Arabic on the page to the best of their abilities. The Qur'an contains 52 instances of the form I of this verb (2:56, 2:129, 2:213, 2:246, 2:247, 2:259, 3:164, 4:35, 5:12, 5:31, 6:36, 6:60, 6:65, 7:14, 7:103, 7:167, 10:74, 10:75, 15:36, 16:21, 16:36, 16:38, 16:84, 16:89, 17:5, 17:15, 17:79, 17:94, 18:12, 18:19, 18:19, 19:15, 19:33, 22:7, 23:16, 23:100, 25:41, 25:51, 26:36, 26:87, 27:65, 28:59, 36:52, 37:144, 38:79, 40:34, 58:6, 58:18, 62:2, 64:7, 64:7, 72:7), and both usages are frequent among them. We need a concrete criterion by which to align the present case with one of these two meanings. We find that the construction here at 72:7 of an active verb in the negative (Arabic: lan / لَن) is found at one other place only (40:34). There the text expressly mentions 'a messenger'. On that basis, we can concur with the Traditionalist reading: the import here is of raising up a messenger. This leaves us with the question of the broader meaning. Muhammad Asad notes here: Thus Tabari (on the authority of Al-Kalbi) and Ibn Kathir [states that] the overwhelming majority of the Jews were convinced that no prophet would be raised after those who were explicitly mentioned in the Old Testament: hence their rejection of Jesus and, of course, Muhammad, and their "reaching out towards heaven" (see next verse) in order to obtain a direct insight into God's plan of creation. While I agree in general terms with Asad here, there exists a broader aspect to the present case. I would agree more readily and fully with him if the text read 'we thought' rather than 'you thought' in this verse. There are, of course, cases in the Qur'an where you is used where we is clearly the import (dialogue among the companions of the cave at 18:19 comes readily to mind), but in addition to the fact that we and us are routinely and consistently used by the speakers in this segment of this sūrah outside the present instance (see 72:1, 72:2, 72:3, 72:4, 72:5, 72:8, 72:9, 72:10, 72:11, 72:12, 72:13, 72:14) we must not disregard the fact that the speakers here are identified in both segments which treat most expansively of al jinn in the Qur'an (72:1-14 and 46:29-31) as some portion of a greater number (see 72:1, 46:29). Thus, I am of the view that the change in personal pronoun here at 72:7 to you indicates a shift in addressee beyond that of the core group of speakers — or one which at the least embraces a group broader than the core group indicated by the peppering of first-person plural pronouns. On that basis, I believe that the speakers here are addressing, or at least indicating, the full complement of al jinn, perhaps including the speaking Jewish element also, but extending beyond it to include the non-Jewish elements. When we consider the remaining segment in which we can derive details for al jinn (46:29-31) we find that 'they turned back to their people, warning' (46:29), and that a speaker among them twice uses the warning phrase which is so central to our work in The God Protocol, namely, O our people. Thus, given the available Qur'anic evidence, the case seems strongest that the shift to you at 72:7 implies a cut to the scene where the speakers appeal to their own people at 46:30-31 and, in my view, verses 72:8-15 continue in the same vein. Supposing this is correct, who are their people? Other Jews? I think not. At the level of the apex of temporal power, certainly in our own day, racial and other affiliations mean little. And in any case, a call to one's own people presupposes a connection of the basis of the stated defining characteristic, and the stated defining characteristic in either of the contexts listed is not Jewishness, but temporal dominance. Thus, given a group of Jewish dominant rulers as the subject of this part of the sūrah, an appeal to their people — especially given my reading of 72:4-6 — presupposes other dominant rulers, not other Jews. Supposing we are right, what does this mean? It means that here al jinn — either including the Jewish element or without it — was of the view that God would never raise up a messenger. And if our understanding of the Roman component in verses 72:4-6 is correct, this produces a tension with the (false) prophet and would-be freer of slaves from tyranny Eunus (see notes to said verses above). The implication here, of course, is that those addressed are wrong in their assumption: God was to raise up someone.

72:8[1] Read here as further revelation given to the Messenger. See note to 72:1.

72:8[2] In my analysis, 72:8-15 treat of the appeal of al jinn to their own people (see note to 72:7 above). Muḥammad Asad (whose own process of investigation was not much dissimilar to mine on this point) feels that in the first instance this refers to the Jewish people, but also humanity at large and: [...]may be understood as alluding not only, metaphorically, to the arrogant Jewish belief in their being "God's chosen people", but also, more factually, to their old inclination to, and practice of, astrology as a means to foretell the future. Apart from this - and in a more general sense - their "reaching out towards heaven" may be a metaphorical description of a state of mind which causes man to regard himself as "self-sufficient" and to delude himself into thinking that he is bound to achieve mastery over his own fate. My own view is that the reference is to the broader ruling elite — both Jewish and non-Jewish — and references their application of dark arts by which occult means they fortify their power and advance their agenda (see Article SJC).

72:8[3] Arabic: lamasa. This form I verb occurs four times in the Qur'an. In the remaining cases (4:43, 5:6, 6:7) it treats of physical touching of various kinds in a direct sense, despite efforts by some translators to obfuscate that plain nuance here. Given that al jinn are dominant human beings we can understand the phrasing of the present verse to indicate the offices of satans in their service (see note below).

72:8[4] The association in this portion is clearly with the satans (Arabic: al shayāṭīn); see also in this connection 15:16-18, 37:6-10, 67:5 as well as 26:210-212, 81:25. It is my view that both houses of the ruling elite — Jewish and non-Jewish — utilise demonic forces. For a fuller discussion of the connection between the ruling elite and demonic forces see Article SJC.

72:9[1] Read here as further revelation given to the Messenger. See note to 72:1.

72:9[2] In my analysis, 72:8-15 treat of the appeal of al jinn to their own people (see note to 72:7 above).

72:9[3] This indicates a strict limitation placed by God upon the powers of the ruling elite and their access to the heavenly realms. This limitation contrasts with the feature of the present sūrah which emphasises this narrative as something revealed (i.e. sent down by God) to the Prophet. See note to 72:1.

72:10[1] Read here as further revelation given to the Messenger. See note to 72:1.

72:10[2] In my analysis, 72:8-15 treat of the appeal of al jinn to their own people (see note to 72:7 above).

72:10[3] This statement provides a further indication of the limits which apply to the ruling elite to that supplied at 72:8-9.

72:11[1] Read here as further revelation given to the Messenger. See note to 72:1.

72:11[2] I.e. among the ruling elites. In my analysis, 72:8-15 treat of the appeal of al jinn to their own people (see note to 72:7 above). See also Article SJC.

72:12[1] Read here as further revelation given to the Messenger. See note to 72:1.

72:12[2] I.e. the ruling elites. In my analysis, 72:8-15 treat of the appeal of al jinn to their own people (see note to 72:7 above). See also Article SJC.

72:12[3] Or frustrate or cause failure i.e. to God.

72:12[4] Or frustrate or cause failure i.e. to God.

72:12[5] It is my view that the dominant minority maintains power in large part by means of demonic forces (see Article SJC). These forces mean that elites have known for hundreds of years that escape either into the earth or into the heavens is impossible. This sets in some relief the claims made by modern scientists and government agencies which specialise in the popular forms of cosmology and cosmogony which NASA typifies. Cf. 55:33.

72:13[1] Read here as further revelation given to the Messenger. See note to 72:1.

72:13[2] In my analysis, 72:8-15 treat of the appeal of al jinn to their own people (see note to 72:7 above).

72:13[3] See note to 58:4 for Qur'anic usage of to believe in.

72:13[4] I take this to mean that when the ruling elite of the time in question heard the guidance given to Muḥammad, they believed in it. This fits with my broader thesis which is that a) the inhabitants of Muḥammad's place of origin rejected his message and — in keeping with the Qur'anic narrative — were destroyed, and that b) since Muḥammad was the messenger for all mankind, the acceptance of his message by the ruling elites of that time explains both the rapid spread of the Islamic empire and the fact that God did not destroy the entire world at that time.

72:13[5] See note to 58:4 for Qur'anic usage of to believe in.

72:13[6] This choice of words invites contrast with 72:6; see notes to 72:6 and 72:7.

72:14[1] Read here as further revelation given to the Messenger. See note to 72:1.

72:14[2] In my analysis, 72:8-15 treat of the appeal of al jinn to their own people (see note to 72:7 above).

72:14[3] See note to muslim at 2:128. Clearly, the ruling elites of that time submitted, as evinced by the rapid capitulation of the surrounding empires to Muslim rule (see note to 7:13).

72:14[4] The point is made that the same dominant group contains evil men also. It remains to be seen which category best typifies the elites of today in the face of a call to guidance which follows the Qur'anic protocols, although I suspect it is the latter. See my work The God Protocol.

72:15[1] Most classical commentators close the speech of al jinn at this point, a view which seems to me also to be correct.

72:17[1] See note to fitnah at 2:102.

72:17[2] Arabic: dhikr — calling to mind, recalling, reminding; remembrance (of something past); history.

72:18[1] Arabic: masjid, masājid. See Notepad VII.i.

72:19[1] Read here as further revelation given to the Messenger. See note to 72:1.

72:19[2] The reappearance here of the grammatical feature we identified in the note to 72:1 indicates to me that the subject of this clause is again al jinn. Some Traditionalists understand the verse along the same lines, although without sharing my identification of al jinn (for which see Article SJC). Given my analysis of the pivot in personal pronoun from we to you (see note to 72:7 above), 72:8-15 treat of the appeal of al jinn to their own people, and I see the return to the subject of al jinn here as a continuation of that analysis: a Jewish portion of the ruling elites of that time addressing their peers, which is primarily treated at 46:29-31. At 46:29 we read that 'they turned back to their people, warning.' This is followed by two O my / our people statements (46:30-31), which format is crucial to the Qur'anic protocol of warning (see my work The God Protocol). The second of these reads: 'O our people: respond to the caller to God[...].' I believe it is the speaker in this instance which is referenced to at 72:19 as 'the servant of God', and that 'they' are al jinn of non-Jewish types (as discussed in notes above to this sūrah). Others are of the view (I assume derived from extraneous sources) that the reference is to pagan Arabs. Muhammad Asad covers that base while entertaining other possibilities. While I disagree with this analysis, I include it for interest: Lit, "would almost be upon him in crowds (libad, sing. libdah)" - i.e., with a view to "extinguishing God's [guiding] light" (Tabari, evidently alluding to 9:32). Most of the commentators assume that the above verse refers to the Prophet Muhammad and the hostility shown to him by his pagan contemporaries. While this may have been so in the first instance, it is obvious that the passage has a general import as well, alluding to the hostility shown by the majority of people, at all times and in all societies, to a minority or an individual who stands up for a self-evident - but unpopular - moral truth.

72:19[3] I.e. the dominant men to whom this group of al jinn were calling as discussed in the notes to this sūrah above flocked to the side of their messenger (see note to this verse above) in such numbers that he was hemmed in. As a result of their acceptance, the world at this time was not destroyed (see particularly note to 72:14), and there ensued a rapid capitulation of huge territories to Muslim rule.

¶72.2 72:20[1] See note to Arabic root: sh-r-k at 6:78 and Notepad VI.

72:20[2] This was the extent of the Messenger's 'religion'. This is not enough for those who want something other than that which God sent down, however.

72:21[1] The Traditionalist would do well to consider this verse.

72:22[1] Arabic: min dūni. See note to 2:23.

72:24[1] Arabic: ḥattā iḏhā. See note to 3:152.

72:27[1] The argument is compact, but the implication is that Muḥammad is a messenger of the type mentioned as evinced by both the final instance in this sūrah of the mechanism which emphasises revelation which we identified at 72:1 and have noted throughout, combined with a disclosure from the Unseen in what remains of the sūrah. However, it is clear from other statements that the Messenger himself had no knowledge of the Hour (for example, 33:63, 46:9), which point is anticipated at 72:25.

72:27[2] Arabic: salaka — to insert, cause to enter (a road). The imagery here is of placing a watcher ahead and behind one journeying along a road.

72:27[3] I.e. each 'messenger He has approved'.

72:28[1] This closing statement is particularly relevant to what follows in sūrah 73 since that sūrah contains within its opening and closing portions fractions and calculations based thereon which comport exactly with the length of segments of the Qur'an between sūrahs 50 and 114 identified in our analysis of the mysterious letters. See Article MLQ.

73

73:0[2] The seventy-third chapter of the Qur'an is by convention called al muzzammil or One Enwrapped.

73:4[1] Arabic: qur'ān — reading, recital, recitation, something which is read out.

73:4[2] Muhammad Asad comments here: [...]The term tartil primarily denotes "the putting [of something] together distinctly, in a well-arranged manner, and without any haste" (Jawhari, Baydawi; also Lisan al-'Arab, Qamus). When applied to the recitation of a text, it signifies a calm, measured utterance with thoughtful consideration of the meaning to be brought out. While, certainly, this word has acquired this meaning as the standard nomenclature for a formalised style of Qur'anic singing, see 25:32 where God is the subject.

73:5[1] Arabic: qawl — speech; teaching, doctrine; saying, word.

73:6[1] Arabic: waṭ' — low, smooth land between eminences. The allusion here is to an easily traversed stretch of land between the 'mountains' of this day and the next. The verb also carries sense of treading. Implicit in the imagery is the idea that one can more easily cover spiritual distance at night.

73:6[2] Night is best suited to spiritual reflection and contemplation of Reality. It is worth mentioning that this verse is rendered across a range of assumptions resulting in a wide degree of divergence. At one end of the spectrum, non-sectarian A. J. Arberry has: surely the first part of the night is heavier in tread, more upright in speech; at the other, the vehemently Traditionalist Hilali & Khan have: Verily, the rising by night (for Tahajjud prayer) is very hard and most potent and good for governing (the soul), and most suitable for (understanding) the Word (of Allah). We might consider Saheeh International as the midway point between the two: Indeed, the hours of the night are more effective for concurrence [of heart and tongue] and more suitable for words.

73:7[1] Arabic: ṭawīl — long; large, tall; high. The rendering has been adapted to the requirements of the noun.

73:7[2] The Arabic noun here (sabḥ) is related to the form I verb sabaḥa. Lane (p. 1299) gives both to swim and to travel far and other concepts of movement among the primary meanings for the verb; I have been guided by this since it continues the image from 73:6.

73:8[1] Arabic: tabattala. This form V verb means: to retire from the world, to devote one's life to God or to apply oneself to his service, to be pious, self-denying; to live in chastity. This is the only instance of this form, and the only two instances of this root occur in this verse.

73:8[2] Arabic: tabtīl — devotion. This is the form II noun, although it clearly has much in common with the form V verb described above. Lit.: devote thyself to Him with devotion.

73:9[1] Cf. 2:255, 3:2, 3:6, 3:18, 3:18, 4:87, 6:102, 6:106, 7:158, 9:129, 13:30, 20:8, 20:98, 23:116, 27:26, 28:70, 28:88, 35:3, 39:6, 40:3, 40:62, 40:65, 44:8, 59:22, 59:23, 64:13, 73:9.

73:10[1] Or avoid thou them with a comely avoidance.

73:15[1] Arabic: fīr'awn. See note to 2:49.

73:16[1] Arabic: fīr'awn. See note to 2:49.

73:17[1] I.e. avoid through prudent action. See note to al muttaqūn at 2:2.

73:17[2] I.e. if you deny God and your duty to him.

¶73.2 73:20[1] Lit.: and.

73:20[2] Arabic: tayassara. This form V verb has the primary connotation of to be (made) easy, but also has the sense of to be prepared (i.e. by another). The form V verb based on this root occurs only twice, both times in this verse. See end of Article MLQ for its significance.

73:20[3] Arabic: qur'ān — reading, recital, recitation, something which is read out.

73:20[4] Arabic: aqīmū al ṣalāt; i.e. uphold such duty as is incumbent. See note to 2:3 and Article SZC.

73:20[5] Arabic: ātū al zakāt. See note to 2:43 and Article SZC.

73:20[6] I.e. wealth spent on fighting in the way of God. See note to 2:245.

73:20[7] Cf. 2:110.

74

74:0[2] The seventy-fourth chapter of the Qur'an is by convention called al muddaththir or One Covering Himself.

74:5[1] Or avoid thou.

74:9[1] I.e. the time of the sounding of the Trumpet.

74:9[2] Cf. 25:26.

74:10[1] Arabic: al kāfirūn. See note to 2:19 and Notepad II.iii.

74:12[1] I.e. over the course of his life. Cf. 56:30.

74:14[1] Arabic: mahhada — as well as senses connected to smoothing, levelling, and making easy, it means to smooth out (i.e. a bed) or make ready (such as a cradle or cot).

74:14[2] Lit. smoothing, spreading.

74:16[1] The subject of this chapter is the complacent, comfortable man who rejects warning. His assumptions are countered here by kallā (No, indeed!). A number of chapters make use of what one might call defining mechanisms (i.e. particular words or word combinations which feature conspicuously in a given chapter). In this case, the defining mechanism or characteristic is kallā. It occurs four times in a staccato-like sequence throughout the chapter (thus drawing attention to itself), occurring twice at the very end of the chapter, after which we are told that it is a reminder (a formula which repeats at 80:11). My investigations show kallā to have a secondary function as a marker (or reminder) by means of which the attentive reader is directed to all other instances where kallā occurs — and that all these instances complement each other and are beneficial when read together. The central point of the set is here at 74:16 since this provides the most extensive treatment of the archetype with which the entire set deals, and does so within the dominant topic of the chapter. Thus, the student of the Qur'an finds he is given a single and extensive argument which comprehensively treats of one of his dominant concerns when he draws the text together by means of these easily identified coordinates. The complete set is found at 19:79, 19:82, 23:100, 34:27, 70:15, 70:39, 74:16, 74:32, 74:53, 74:54, 75:11, 75:20, 75:26, 78:4, 78:5, 80:11, 80:23, 82:9, 83:7, 83:14, 83:15, 83:18, 89:17, 89:21, 96:6, 96:15, 96:19, 102:3, 102:4, 102:5, 104:4. All instances reference this verse.

74:16[2] Arabic: āyāt. See Notepad VIII.

74:19[1] Lit.: Killed is.

74:20[1] Lit.: Killed is.

74:24[1] Arabic: siḥr — sorcery. See note to 2:102.

74:24[2] I.e. from people who lived before.

74:25[1] Arabic: qawl — speech, teaching, doctrine, word.

74:26[1] Qur'anic definition: saqar — that which spares not and leaves not, scorching mortal man (74:28-29).

74:27[1] See note to 74:26.

74:29[1] Rendered often the flesh or the skins, I retain my value for bashar here as throughout: mortal or mortal man. Muhammad Asad and N. J. Dawood render similarly here. Asad comments: Most of the commentators interpret the above elliptic phrase in the sense of "changing the appearance of man" or "scorching the skin of man". The rendering adopted by me, on the other hand, is based on the primary significance of the verb laha - "it appeared", "it shone forth" or "it became visible". Hence, the primary meaning of the intensive participial noun lawwah is "that which makes [something] visible". In the above context, it relates to the sinner's belated cognition of the truth, as well as to his distressing insight into his own nature, his past failings and deliberate wrongdoings, and the realization of his own responsibility for the suffering that is now in store for him: a state neither of life nor of death. (cf. 87:12-13).

74:30[1] See notes to Guardians of the Fire below; in a literal sense, since 19 instances of this key phrase are 'over it' — i.e. over the word Saqar here — and the instance of aṣḥāb al nār which follows is the last in the text.

74:30[2] Typically understood — not without justification given the context — to be the number of those entrusted with the management of Saqar. I offer an alternative analysis (for which, see notes immediately above and below). Additionally, much is made by some of the number nineteen based on the work of Rashad Khalifa about whose mathematical computations (and later developments based thereon) there is plenty of information online. I am not a mathematician, so I cannot pronounce on the correctness or otherwise of his and other people's results, but it does seem like fishing for numbers to me. I can't help but find those thus enthused somewhat tedious given that they expend vast amounts of (what seems to me, anyway) autistic energy trying to prove something I already know: that the Qur'an is preserved and complete. I regard the Qur'an as a book of guidance, something one is supposed to do something with. My objective is to apply what I call the God protocol in order to allow 'the punishments of God to become binding', as a last-ditch checkmate against the New World Order's drive towards all-out and permanent tyranny. On this backdrop, the fact that certain ways of adding (occasionally arbitrary) features of the Qur'an result in the number nineteen is not something I can feel strongly about.

74:31[1] This expression, which I render outside the present instance the companions of the Fire (Arabic: aṣḥāb al nār), occurs a total of 20 times (2:39, 2:81, 2:217, 2:257, 2:275, 3:116, 5:29, 7:36, 7:44, 7:47, 7:50, 10:27, 13:5, 39:8, 40:6, 40:43, 58:17, 59:20, 64:10, 74:31) and in all cases outside the one under discussion at 74:31 unquestionably references those who are to suffer in Hell (see also note to 74:30 above). In the absence of explicit evidence to the contrary, a reasonable man must assume that what is meant in each of the remaining 19 instances is what is meant here also. However, we do have explicit evidence in the words 'Over it are nineteen'. I take this as recognition of the distinction between the meaning of aṣḥāb al nār in those cases and its meaning here; thus, the fact that there are nineteen cases different to the present one is allowed for by the text. This provides also a reasonable answer to what is referenced by the number nineteen here (which itself has served as the catalyst for so much generative and speculative output of a mathematical nature beginning with Rashad Khalifa), namely: all other cases of aṣḥāb al nār. Thus understood, the number nineteen found at 74:30 merely indicates the number of the remaining cases aṣḥāb al nār is found meaning something other than what it means here, which fact also provides a parity bit supportive of the Qur'an's claim to be complete and preserved.

74:31[2] I take their to refer not only to men in general, but in the first instance to the complacent rejecters discussed in the notes at 74:16, since an archetype of this category has occupied the majority of the narrative hitherto and is identified by name in this clause. A careful reading indicates that the force of their number extends to the additional categories of person which follow. Unlike the Khalifa interpretation (which considers that their relates a number of angels in the previous verse and proceeds to make much hay on that basis), my attention is on the broader narrative, and my instinct is to corroborate or reject values on that basis. In recognition of the distinction made here between aṣḥāb al nār in all nineteen other cases and the one at hand — and given that other verses clearly reference angels in similar scenarios — I render this collocation here Guardians of the Fire which general line is taken by most other translators here.

74:31[3] The Arabic 'idda is used both to denote a cardinal number and a number of days (count of time) throughout and so it is understandable that one might take it in the first sense, coming so close to mention of a cardinal number. However, if we regard the chapter as a whole, the broader narrative treats of human beings (and not angels which is what both the Traditionalist and Rashad Khalifa claim is being referenced in this clause) and therefore the stronger case is that the reference here is either to the number of human beings or to the number of days they live. Given what follows, the second of these two options is the one convincing to me. We each have a number of days to live, the core point of which is that we should decide for or against God. However, since we do not know how long we shall live, this fact allows those who reject to feel no great urgency about their heedlessness towards God — which serves as the cause of their denial. That same span of time allows those men who heed God's warning to respond in their respective ways also. Cf. 19:84-94.

74:52[1] Arabic: bal. See note to 2:88.

74:52[2] I.e that he be sent an individual revelation on the wings of angels, as it were. The above is the earliest illustration of the "arrogance" or "false pride" to which the Qur'an so often refers.*

75:5[3] Muhammad Asad supplies the comment: Literally, "to sin ahead of him." This refers to the disbeliever, who denies the Day of Account. Arabic: fajara. At 17:90 (the only other instance of this verb in this form) fajara undeniably means to cause to gush forth. This being the case, my inclination is always to default to the established Qur'anic meaning of any word and render in keeping with that. However, I have done so here in a way which allows the reader to catch a sense of the verb's secondary meaning which is give oneself up to sin, to fornication, to wrong action and its tertiary meaning of to deny, to disbelieve.

75:8[1] Or sinks or disappears. Also rendered darkens.

75:15[1] Sc. they would not be sufficient.

75:16[1] At 75:16-19 the Traditionalist — as is so often the case — has some stories he prefers to the Qur'an and around which he has constructed a mythology which now forms a lens through which he construes the verses themselves. But if we are to deal with the words on the page, the sense surely is: 75:16: Move thou not thy tongue with it to hasten it (it being the Day of Resurrection which has been the dominant subject of the chapter to this point) — that is: do not claim it to be coming sooner than thou knowest or speak before thou knowest; 75:17: Upon us is its gathering and its recitation (both the realisation of the material fact in the future and the creation of the reading which describes it are incumbent upon God); 75:18: And when We recite it, follow thou the recitation thereof (the Messenger is to follow only what God reveals concerning the Day of Judgment); 75:19 Then upon Us is its clarification (i.e. God has taken upon himself the clarification or elucidation of that day, or the implementation thereof as a reality — or both).

75:17[1] Arabic: qur'ān — reading, recital, recitation, something which is read out.

75:18[1] Arabic: qur'ān — reading, recital, recitation, something which is read out.

75:19[1] Arabic: bayān. See note to 3:138.

75:20[1] Arabic: kallā. This exclamation operates also as a pan-textual marker. See 74:16 and note thereto.

75:20[2] Arabic: bal. See note to 2:88.

75:24[1] This is a direct reference to 74:22 which uses the same verb.

75:25[1] Lit.: back-breaking.

75:25[2] Or will be done to them.

75:26[1] Arabic: kallā. This exclamation operates also as a pan-textual marker. See 74:16 and note thereto.

75:26[2] I.e. the soul.

75:27[1] Lit.: an enchanter. In modern parlance: a doctor.

75:29[1] Lit.: shin merges with shin. Many explanations exist for this expression. Muhammad Asad provides the following: Lit., "when shank is wrapped around shank" - an idiomatic phrase denoting "the affliction of the present state of existence... combined with that of the final state" (Lane IV, 1471. quoting both the Qamus and the Taj al-'Arus). As pointed out by Zamakhshari, the noun saq (lit., "shank") is often used metaphorically in the sense of "difficulty", "hardship" or "vehemence" (shiddah); hence the well-known phrase, qamat al-harb ala saq, "the war broke out with vehemence" (Taj al-'Arus).

¶75.2 75:31[1] Arabic root: ṣ-l-w; i.e. to do such duty as is incumbent. See note to 2:3 and Article SZC. Generically, ṣallā means to perform duty. In this case, I believe it is a man's duty to respond to the call when he receives it to believe in and serve God alone.

75:36[1] Or futilely, to no end.

75:38[1] Arabic: 'alaqa. See note to 22:5.

75:39[1] Arabic: zawj — spouse, mate; kind, type; specie.

75:40[1] Arabic: alaysa. See Notepad XIV.

76

76:0[2] The seventy-sixth chapter of the Qur'an is by convention called al insān or Man.

76:1[1] Views of this verse vary; my understanding of its import is: is there a time that man remembers when he did not exist?

76:4[1] Arabic: al kāfirūn. See note to 2:19 and Notepad II.iii.

76:8[1] See note to 4:2.

76:10[1] My opinion is that rather than an imperative to say this to each and every person we help, these sentiments should inform our attitude and bearing; if the recipient of our charity wishes us to enlarge upon the reasons for our actions, that is a different matter and 76:9-10 provide us with the best answers.

76:14[1] Lit.: are low[...] with lowness; i.e. within easy reach.

76:15[1] Arabic: ṭawafa. Here in passive voice. See note to 2:125.

76:15[2] Lit.: And cups are crystal.

76:16[1] Lit.: determined[...] with a determination. Cf. 74:19-20.

76:18[1] Or Seek Thou A Way. Muhammad Asad comments here: This is how Ali ibn Abi Talib - as quoted by Zamakhshari and Razi - explains the (obviously compound) word salsabilan, dividing it into its two components, sal sabilan ("ask [or "seek"] the way"): namely, "seek thy way to paradise by means of doing righteous deeds".

76:19[1] Arabic: ṭawafa. See note to 2:125.

¶76.2 76:23[1] Arabic: qur'ān — reading, recital, recitation, something which is read out.

76:23[2] Lit.: (gradual or successive) sending down.

76:26[1] Arabic: sajada. See Notepad IV.

76:26[2] See note to s-b-ḥ root at 2:30.

76:26[3] Muhammad Asad understands this clause in the following way: I.e., "whenever unhappiness oppresses thee and all seems dark around thee".

76:28[1] Or joints.

76:28[2] Lit.: change[...] with a changing.

76:31[1] Arabic: ẓālimūn. See note to 2:229.

77

77:0[2] The seventy-seventh chapter of the Qur'an is by convention called al mursalāt or The Emissaries.

77:1[1] Or emissaries.

77:1[2] Or with benefit. Highly subjective interpretations — and hence translations — of this verse exist. One will frequently see it translated as successively and synonyms, and I have followed this convention. Lane (p. 2067) records the main meanings as: consecutively, like the [several portions of] the 'urf [or mane] of the horse; or the meaning is[...] with beneficence or benefit.

77:4[1] I.e. truth from error.

77:5[1] Lit.: hurling — used also in Qur'anic Arabic in the sense of to deliver (e.g. a message or letter).

77:5[2] Arabic: dhikr — calling to mind, recalling, reminding; remembrance (of something past); history.

77:10[1] See note to 20:97.

77:11[1] Instances where speech either trails off or is clipped through interruption are found at 2:138, 6:143, 6:144, 10:22, 12:94, 26:24, 26:26, 26:28, 43:9, 58:22, 77:11, 84:5.

77:12[1] Or appointed. This form II verb occurs only here and at 6:128.

77:15[1] Found at 52:11, 77:15, 77:19, 77:24, 77:28, 77:34, 77:37, 77:40, 77:45, 77:47, 77:49, 83:10.

77:17[1] Arabic: 'atba'a. See note to 2:262.

77:20[1] I.e. liquid (semen).

77:30[1] Lit.: shadow of three branches or off-shoots. After considering the lexicons, the context, and looking at a number of existing translations I agreed with Muhammad Asad's rendering of the close of this statement, and have followed his lead. His comment here reads: I.e., of death, resurrection and God's judgment, all three of which cast dark shadows, as it were, over the sinners' hearts.

77:32[1] Or like the palace — perhaps indicating a burning fortress made from wood.

77:33[1] Since being guided by Muhammad Asad at 7:40, I take his point here as well. While I do not admit Bukhari et al as authorities of any kind, I repeat Asad's note here with non-essential information only removed: Lit., "like yellow twisted ropes", yellow being "the colour of fire" (Baghawi). The conventional rendering of jimalat (also spelt jimalat and jimalah) as "camels", adopted by many commentators and, until now, by all translators of the Qur'an, must be rejected as grossly anomalous; see[...] the second part of 7:40 - "they shall not enter paradise any more than a twisted rope can pass through a needle's eye". In the above verse, too, the plural noun jimalah (or jimalat) signifies "twisted ropes" or "giant ropes" - a connotation that has been forcefully stressed by Ibn Abbas, Mujahid, Sa'id ibn Jubayr and others (cf. Tabari, Baghawi, Razi, Ibn Kathir; also Bukhari, Kitab at-Tafsir). Moreover, our observation of the trajectory of shooting stars fully justifies the rendering "giant fiery ropes". Similarly, my rendering of qasr, in this context, as "[burning] logs" - instead of the conventional (and utterly meaningless) "castles", "palaces", etc. - goes back to all of the above-mentioned authorities.

¶77.2 77:41[1] See note to al muttaqūn at 2:2.
77:48[1] Arabic: rakaʿa — to be lowly (i.e. before God). See Notepad III.
77:48[2] Arabic: rakaʿa — to be lowly (i.e. before God). See Notepad III.
77:50[1] Arabic: ḥadīth — story; account; narrative, narration. The Qur'an's usage of this term appears at times to anticipate the later abuse of it by Muslims.
77:50[2] I.e. the Qur'an.
77:50[3] The answer in the case of most professing Muslims is: a vast literature written much later and supported by the pseudo-science of isnād, and countless derivatives therefrom.

78

78:0[2] The seventy-eighth chapter of the Qur'an is by convention called al naba' or The Report.
78:2[1] I.e. the Day of Judgment.
78:3[1] The first three verses can be read together as a single question, in which case the implication is that those described are, in fact, not asking each other about the 'tremendous report' (due to indifference). This is how I personally understand this segment. But this is not the standard understanding, and I have refrained from imposing my view upon the translation, confining my dissent to the notes. Muhammad Asad, who reads the segment as per its common parsing (and as I present it in the translation) supplies a comment which I reproduce for interest: The question which preoccupies man above all others - the question as to whether there is life after death - has been variously answered throughout the ages. It is, of course, impossible to describe the innumerable variations of those answers; nevertheless, a few main lines of thought are clearly discernible, and their mention may be useful for a better understanding of the Qur'anic treatment of this problem. Some people - probably a minority - seem to be convinced that bodily death amounts to total and irreversible extinction, and that, therefore, all talk about a hereafter but an outcome of wishful thinking. Others are of the opinion that after individual death the human "life-essence" returns to the supposed source of its origin - conceived as the "universal soul" - and merges with it entirely. Some believe in a successive transmigration of the individual soul, at the moment of death, into another body, human or animal, but without a continuation of individual consciousness. Others, again, think that only the soul, and not the entire human "personality", continues to live after death - that is, in a purely spiritual, disembodied form. And, lastly, some believe in an undiminished survival of the individual personality and consciousness, and regard death and resurrection as the twin stages of a positive act of re-creation of the entire human personality, in whatever form this may necessarily involve: and this is the Qur'anic view of the life to come.
78:4[1] Arabic: kallā. This exclamation operates also as a pan-textual marker. See 74:16 and note thereto.
78:5[1] Arabic: kallā. This exclamation operates also as a pan-textual marker. See 74:16 and note thereto.
78:6[1] Arabic: mihād — a resting-place; bed. The root conveys senses of flattening and smoothing.
78:7[1] The Qur'an is clear that the mountains are set firmly, they do not move, and they act as ballast, preventing the earth from shaking (cf. 15:19, 21:31, 79:32). This only makes sense within the broader context of the plane-earth conception which the Qur'an consistently describes. Some modern-leaning Muslim apologists attempt to square Qur'anic statements with what 'Science' currently claims, but their arguments require the Qur'an to mean something other than what it says.
78:8[1] Arabic: azwāj — spouses, mates; kinds, types; species.
78:11[1] Arabic: maʿāsh. This word occurs only once. It conveys the sense of life, manner (or style) of living; livelihood, subsistence, living; means of subsistence; income (Wehr, p. 775). Lane (p. 2262) includes senses such as that by which one lives and time wherein one seeks sustenance. Muhammad Asad comments: According to Zamakhshari, the term ma'ash ("that whereby one lives") is here synonymous with "life". In the polarity of sleep (or "death") and wakefulness (or "life") we see the allusion to bodily death and subsequent resurrection already touched upon in 6:60. I take maʿāsh to indicate here what we mean by a living in English in the expression to earn a living.
78:12[1] Understood generally to indicate heavens.
78:16[1] Muhammad Asad comments here: Implying that the overwhelming evidence of purpose and plan in all observable nature points to the existence of a conscious Creator who has "not created [anything of] this without meaning and purpose" (3:191), and who - as is stressed in the sequence will one day pronounce His judgment on every human being's willingness or unwillingness to live up to the standards of morality made clear to him through inborn instinct as well as through divine revelation.
78:22[1] Arabic: ṭāghūn. See ṭāghūt at 39:17. Cf. 38:55.
78:22[2] Arabic: maʿāb — place of return; place to which one returns.
78:25[1] Arabic: ghassāq. Lane (p. 2313) records various values for this word, including: intense cold or stinking (elsewhere it is found as pus). Occurs also at 38:57.
78:28[1] Arabic: āyāt. See Notepad VIII.
78:28[2] Lit.: denied[...] with denial.
78:29[1] Arabic: kitāb. See Notepad IX.iii.

¶78.2 78:31[1] See note to al muttaqūn at 2:2.
78:33[1] Arabic: atrāb. See Notepad XIX.
78:33[2] Arabic: kawāʿib. I am including Muhammad Asad's comment at this verse because I respect his mind and considerable academic and contemplative talents. While I am temperamentally inclined to agree with him on this point, in the event I cannot. The reading I have followed (which is the commonest one — from which Asad explains his divergence), is not only in full agreement with the best lexicons (which, of course, do not take precedence over the Qur'an's own definitions, nor are to be trusted blindly) but is also confirmed by my full analysis of this point (see Notepad XIX). I would add that while the Qur'an directs itself principally to men as head of tribes and families, while women and men have different essential functions, they are of equal value and their efforts are equally rewarded — a point which the Qur'an makes clearly. That being the case, when dealing with such metaphorical and highly symbolic parts of the text as this, one naturally extrapolates equivalent pleasures and rewards for women. I make this point not because I am infected with the current social viruses called political correctness and feminism, but because it is objectively the case. As a translator and interpreter and believer, I bear a responsibility for the words as they appear on the page, and it is with cognisance of that responsibility that I have both rendered as I have in this instance and felt moved to include the relevant part of Muhammad Asad's comment for the edification and broader perspective of the interested reader: [...]it is to be remembered that the term ka'b - from which the participle ka'ib is derived - has many meanings, and that one of these meanings is "prominence", "eminence" or "glory" (Lisan al-Arab); thus, the verb ka'ba, when applied to a person, signifies "he made [another person] prominent", "glorious" or "splendid" (ibid.) Based on this tropical meaning of both the verb ka'ba and the noun ka'b, the participle ka'ib has often been used, in popular parlance, to denote "a girl whose breasts are becoming prominent" or "are budding" hence, many commentators see in it an allusion to some sort of youthful "female companions' who would entertain the (presumably male) inmates of paradise. But quite apart from the fact that all Quranic allegories of the joys of paradise invariably apply to men and women alike, this interpretation of kawa'ib overlooks the purely derivative origin of the above popular usage - which is based on the tropical connotation of "prominence" inherent in the noun ka'b - and substitutes for this obvious tropism the literal meaning of something that is physically prominent: and this, in my opinion, is utterly unjustified. If we bear in mind that the Quranic descriptions of the blessings of paradise are always allegorical, we realize that in the above context the term kawa'ib can have no other meaning than "glorious [or "splendid"] beings", without any definition of sex; and that, in combination with the term atrab, it denotes, "splendid companions well matched" - thus alluding to the relations of the blest with one another, and stressing the absolute mutual compatibility and equal dignity of all of them[...].

78:35[1] I.e. of truth.
78:37[1] Grammar: dual.
78:37[2] Arabic: raḥmān. Typically rendered most merciful. See 36:23 and note thereto, note to 1:1, and Notepad I.
78:38[1] Arabic: raḥmān. Typically rendered most merciful. See 36:23 and note thereto, note to 1:1, and Notepad I.
78:39[1] Arabic: al ḥaqq. See Notepad XVII (al ḥaqq i.).
78:39[2] Lit.: take to his Lord a journey's end. Arabic: maʿāb — place of return; place to which one returns.
78:40[1] Arabic: al kāfir. Typically rendered the unbeliever. See note to 2:19 and Notepad II.iii.

79

79:0[2] The seventy-ninth chapter of the Qur'an is by convention called al nāziʿāt or Those Who Remove.
79:1[1] Or violently. Creative interpretations exist about what verses 79:1-5 refer to, none of them conclusive. I have abstained from interpretation and defaulted to those meanings of the words established elsewhere in the text or to acceptable lexical values, and list common renderings to illustrate the range of possible views. There follow five translations of the present verse: N. J. Dawood: By those who snatch away men's souls; A. J. Arberry: By those that pluck out vehemently; Saheeh International: By those [angels] who extract with violence (the translators note: i.e., those who tear out the souls of those destined for Hell); Muhammad Asad: Consider those [stars] that rise only to set; Hilali & Khan: By those (angels) who pull out (the souls of the disbelievers and the wicked) with great violence. The fact is that ghariq occurs also at 10:90 and objectively means there drowning, and the form IV verb aghraqa consistently means to drown (verb: 2:50, 7:64, 7:136, 8:54, 10:73, 17:69, 17:103, 18:71, 21:77, 25:37, 26:66, 26:120, 29:40, 36:43, 37:82, 43:55, 71:25; passive participle: 11:37, 11:43, 23:27, 44:24). Clearly, drowning is a violent event, but to elide the core sense entirely is to deprive the reader of what is plain in the Arabic, so I have rendered literally and supplied additional information in the notes. Muhammad Asad's thoughts here are characteristically mystical and scholarly, and are supplied for interest: The early commentators differ widely in their explanations of verses 1-5 of this surah. The most popular interpretation is based on the view that the descriptive participles an-nazi'at, an-nashitat, as-sabihat, as-sabiqat and al-mudabbirat refer to angels and their activities with regard to the souls of the dying: an interpretation categorically rejected by Abu Muslim al-Isfahani, who - as mentioned by Razi - points out that the angels are never referred to in the Qur'an in the female gender, as is the case in the above five participles, and that the present passage cannot be an exception. Almost equally unconvincing - because somewhat laboured - are the explanations which link those five participles to the souls of the dying, or to warriors engaged in holy war, or to war-mounts, and so forth. The clearest and simplest interpretation is that advanced by Qatadah (as quoted by Tabari and Baghawi) and Al-Hasan al-Basri (quoted by Baghawi and Razi), who maintain that what is meant in this passage are the stars - including the sun and the moon - and their movements in space: and this interpretation is fully in tune with many other passages in the Qur'an in which the harmony of those celestial bodies in their multiform orbits and graded speeds is cited as an evidence of God's planning and creativeness. In accordance with this interpretation, the participle an-nazi'at occurring in the first verse denotes the daily "ascending" or "rising" of the stars, while their subsequent "setting" is indicated by the expression gharqan, which comprises the two concepts of "drowning" (i.e., disappearing) and, tropically, of the "completeness" of this daily phenomenon (Zamakhshari).
79:2[1] Or draw forth with drawing forth. Arabic: nashiṭa. This root occurs only in this verse, so there is nothing to cross-reference with. Wehr (p. 1133) lists values including: to be lively; to be energetic. Lane (p. 2857) includes the value preferred by translators: to draw forth (i.e. like a bucket from the well). I have deferred to this reading, although I cannot tell whether the value is genuine, or an interpretative development based on common understandings of this context. N. J. Dawood renders: and those who gently release them; A. J. Arberry: and those that draw out violently; Muhammad Asad: and move [in their orbits] with steady motion; Hilali & Khan: By those (angels) who gently take out (the souls of the believers).
79:3[1] Lit.: swimming with swimming.
79:4[1] Lit.: the foremost in (being) foremost.
79:6[1] Taken to be the blast of the Trump.
79:7[1] I.e. the first convulsion or blast of the Trump.
79:7[2] I.e. the second convulsion or blast of the Trump.
79:9[1] Arabic: khāshiʿūn. See 2:45.
79:10[1] Arabic: ḥāfira — this word is originally connected with concepts related to digging, making holes in the earth, thence to those of tracks (i.e. those left by cattle and horses) and from there to: the way by which one comes. In finer extractions it has the connotation translators often give it of former state.
79:13[1] Cf. 37:19.
79:14[1] Arabic: sāhira — sleepless, awake, wakeful. The word is recorded by Lane (p. 1462) as a tract of land, surface of the earth, and some translators render accordingly. It is said to have this meaning due to the distance an Arab could traverse in a night. I am wary of these attributions and render according to the primary sense, as do also A. J. Arberry and Muhammad Asad.
79:15[1] Arabic: ḥadīth — story; account; narrative, statement.
79:16[1] See note to 20:12.

79:17[1] Arabic: fir'awn. See note to 2:49.
79:20[1] Arabic: āya. See Notepad VIII.
79:24[1] Muhammad Asad notes here: Pharaoh's claim to divine status is the cardinal sin whereby "he has transgressed all bounds of what is right" (verse 17 above).
79:25[1] Or the Hereafter and this life or the last and first; cf. 28:70. The Arabic may be read in more than one way. It could mean either for his last and first transgression, or it could indicate the last and first states (namely, the Hereafter and the world that is).

¶79.2 79:27[1] Distinct from modern image-assisted imaginings of the heavens, the Qur'an consistently describes the sky as something built as a structure.
79:28[1] Arabic: samk — roof, ceiling. This is the only instance of this root.
79:28[2] Or levelled. Arabic: sawwā. This form II verb conveys senses of to fashion, to form, and to proportion. It can also mean to level, and A. J. Arberry renders thus here.
79:29[1] Arabic: ḍuḥan — forenoon; morning.
79:30[1] Arabic: daḥā — to spread out, to flatten. This is the only instance of this root. Claims are made for this verb which attempt to associate it with ostrich eggs, and thereby to link it with that concept of roundness which is found in popular assertions about the shape of the earth. What is true is that there exists in Arabic the word udḥiyy (ostrich nest) which is based on the same root; however, this word derives from the fact that the female ostrich has no nest in the traditional sense, but rather spreads out and flattens a place on the ground where she lays her eggs. An ostrich nest comprises a flat circle edged about by a rim. N. J. Dawood, A. J. Arberry, Saheeh International, Muhammad Asad, and Hilali & Khan, likewise, all render here to spread or to spread out.
79:36[1] Cf. 26:91.
79:40[1] Arabic: maqām. See note to 2:125. Cf. 14:14.
79:40[2] Cf. 55:46.
79:42[1] Lit.: resting or establishment. I am indebted to Saheeh International here. Cf. 7:187.
79:43[1] Lit.: In what art thou of any reminder thereof? The frequent Qur'anic limitations on the remit of the Messenger are typically ignored by the Traditionalist — or, at least, he is does not see any contradiction between them and the character called Muḥammad in his non-Qur'anic material who demonstrates near-limitless knowledge of future events.
79:46[1] Muhammad Asad comments here: As in many other places in the Qur'an (e.g., in 2:259, 17:52, 18:19, 20:103-104, 23:112-113, 30:55 etc.), this is a subtle indication of the illusory, earthbound nature of man's concept of "time" - a concept which, we are told, will lose all its meaning in the context of the ultimate reality comprised in the term "hereafter" (al-akhirah).
79:46[2] Lit.: an evening.
79:46[3]Arabic: ḍuḥan — forenoon; morning.

80

80:0[2] The eightieth chapter of the Qur'an is by convention called 'abasa or He Frowned.
80:3[1] I.e. for all thou knowest.
80:5[1] Or rich.
80:7[1] I.e. thou art not to blame.
80:8[1] I.e. for knowledge.
80:9[1] Lit.: And he fears.
80:11[1] Arabic: kallā. This exclamation operates also as a pan-textual marker. See 74:16 and note thereto.
80:13[1] The Qur'an regards itself as something carefully written down from the very beginning. The Traditionalist, perhaps predictably, has a different account of how the Qur'an came to be written down, one which contradicts the Qur'an both in terms of generalities and specifics.
80:17[1] Lit.: Killed is.
80:17[2] Or ungrateful.
80:23[1] Arabic: kallā. This exclamation operates also as a pan-textual marker. See 74:16 and note thereto.
80:23[2] I.e. man.
80:25[1] Lit.: poured[...] with pouring.
80:26[1] Lit.: split[...] with splitting.
80:33[1] Qur'anic definition: al ṣākhkha. Generally rendered, as here, shout or blast; the Qur'an provides us with a definition at 80:34-42.
80:41[1] Or dirt.

81

81:0[2] The eighty-first chapter of the Qur'an is by convention called al takwīr or The Wrapping-Up.
81:1[1] This is the passive voice of the verb which occurs also (in the active voice) twice at 39:5. It means to roll, coil; to wind; to make round or ball-shaped. Translators incline to values here which emphasise darkness, perhaps due to modern pressures.
81:2[1] The connotation here is of hawks or other birds dropping from the sky.
81:4[1] Lit.: ten-month camels. Ten months is the gestation period of camels, so young would be expected, providing an increase in wealth. The salient point is of worldly interests faded to nothing.
81:6[1] Or set boiling.
81:7[1] Understandings here include: with their past deeds; with another soul; or with those of their own group or sect.
81:8[1] Societies have repeatedly practiced the killing of children to curry favour with the gods. The Greeks practiced exposure; the Arabs practiced the killing of female infants. Today, unborn children are sacrificed in their millions on the altars of materialism, narcissism, and selfishness. The object is always the same no matter the cult: to improve one's lot.
81:9[1] Arabic: dhanb. See Notepad XI.iv.
81:16[1] Arabic: jawār. This word has been consistently rendered as ships (lit.: those flowing) throughout, a decision supported not only etymologically but contextually. While some translators choose to abandon that value here, I stay with it. I agree with the translators and others who say the reference is to stars. I believe the metaphor is twofold: that of ships passing over the horizon and that of stars traversing the sky and entering a hidden (safe) place.
81:16[2] The Arabic khunnas denotes something returning to — or hiding in — its place of origin, such as a fox to its covet.
81:17[1] Arabic: 'as'asa. This quadrilateral verb occurs here only. It is derived from 'assa which means to go round by night and keep watch. The verb 'as'asa has two main meanings: to depart and to grow dark, to darken, and one will see both senses used by translators.
81:18[1] Or pauses (for breath).
81:19[1] Arabic: qawl — speech, teaching, doctrine, word.
81:19[2] The Traditionalist himself admits that the context discounts Muḥammad. He interprets the verse as a reference to Gabriel; within that framework, then, Muḥammad himself was following both God and — in a literal sense — the Messenger.

81:23[1] I capitalise the masculine singular object here for reasons which comport with those which govern my understanding of 53:1-18 (see notes thereto).
81:23[2] Cf. 53:1-18.
81:25[1] Arabic: qawl — speech, teaching, doctrine, word.
81:25[2] Or outcast.
81:25[3] Or adversary (against the command of God). See Article SJC.
81:27[1] Arabic: dhikr — calling to mind, recalling, reminding; remembrance (of something past); history.

82

82:0[2] The eighty-second chapter of the Qur'an is by convention called al infiṭār or The Splitting.
82:2[1] Arabic: intathara. This form VIII verb occurs only here and has both a passive sense: to be scattered about, to be strewn about, to be dispersed, and an intransitive one: to scatter, to disperse.
82:5[1] Muhammad Asad comments here: I.e., what he has done and what he has omitted to do. An alternative rendering would be "what he has placed forward and what he has placed behind", i.e., what he prized more and what less in his erstwhile, subjective valuation. Thus, at the moment of resurrection man will suddenly understand the true motivations and moral implications of whatever he did - or consciously refrained from doing - during his life in this world: and this applies to all the good deeds he did and the sins he refrained from, as well as to all the sins he committed and the good deeds he failed to do.
82:6[1] Or the Generous.
82:7[1] Arabic: 'adala — to balance, make equal, act justly. This phrase is rendered by A. J. Arberry: and wrought thee in symmetry; and by Hilali & Khan: and gave you due proportion.
82:9[1] Arabic: kallā. This exclamation operates also as a pan-textual marker. See 74:16 and note thereto.
82:9[2] Arabic: bal. See note to 2:88.
82:9[3] Arabic: dīn. See Notepad V. See 51:6 and note thereto.
82:15[1] Arabic: dīn. See Notepad V. For Day of Judgment see 82:17-19.
82:17[1] Arabic: dīn. See Notepad V. For Day of Judgment see 82:17-19.
82:18[1] Arabic: dīn. See Notepad V. For Day of Judgment see 82:17-19.
82:18[2] Qur'anic definition: yawm al dīn. Rendered throughout Day of Judgment, we have at 82:19 the Qur'an's own full definition. All instances appear in the notes and reference this verse.
82:19[1] Lit.: a.

83

83:0[2] The eighty-third chapter of the Qur'an is by convention called al muṭaffifīn or The Unfair Traders.
83:1[1] Qur'anic definition: muṭaffifūn. The definition is provided at verses 83:2-3 which is, in summary, that they take from men in full but cause loss when they give. This value is rendered variously (and correctly) by Traditionalist translators as stinters, those who give less than is due, or those who deal in fraud.
83:7[1] Arabic: kallā. This exclamation operates also as a pan-textual marker. See 74:16 and note thereto.
83:7[2] Arabic: al kitāb. See Notepad IX.ii.
83:8[1] Qur'anic definition: sijjīn. Verse 83:9 informs us what sijjīn is and 83:10-11 set out for us what the kitāb of sijjīn says.
83:9[1] Arabic: kitāb. See Notepad IX.iii.
83:10[1] Found at 52:11, 77:15, 77:19, 77:24, 77:28, 77:34, 77:37, 77:40, 77:45, 77:47, 77:49, 83:10.
83:11[1] Arabic: dīn. See Notepad V. For Day of Judgment see 82:17-19.
83:13[1] Arabic: āyāt. See Notepad VIII.
83:14[1] Arabic: kallā. This exclamation operates also as a pan-textual marker. See 74:16 and note thereto.
83:14[2] Arabic: bal. See note to 2:88.
83:14[3] Arabic: rāna — to take possession of, seize, overcome (said of passion); to descend or come upon; to reign, prevail. Often translated by means of rusted or corroded and synonyms.
83:15[1] Arabic: kallā. This exclamation operates also as a pan-textual marker. See 74:16 and note thereto.
83:18[1] Arabic: kallā. This exclamation operates also as a pan-textual marker. See 74:16 and note thereto.
83:18[2] Arabic: al kitāb. See Notepad IX.ii.
83:19[1] Qur'anic definition: 'illiyyūn. Verses 83:20-21 inform us what 'illiyyūn is and 83:22-23 set out for us what the kitāb of 'illiyyūn says.
83:20[1] Arabic: kitāb. See Notepad IX.iii.
83:21[1] All references concerning those brought near in the life to come are found at 3:45, 56:88, 83:21, 83:28.
83:26[1] Or let compete those who compete. While I do not allow myself such flourishes, Muhammad Asad's rendering here is illustrative of the underlying sense: To that [wine of paradise], then, let all such aspire as [are willing to] aspire to things of high account.
83:27[1] Qur'anic definition: tasnīm. Verse 83:28 serves as an immediate definition of tasnīm with 83:29-36 providing, perhaps, further exposition. I include Muhammad Asad's comment here for interest: Whereas most of the classical commentators regard the infinitive noun tasnim as the proper name of one of the allegorical "fountains of paradise ", or, alternatively, refrain from any definition of it, it seems to me that the derivation of tasnim from the verb sannama - "he raised [something]" or "made [it] lofty" - points, rather, to the effect which the "wine" of divine knowledge will have on those who "drink" of it in paradise. Hence, the tabi'i 'Ikrimah (as quoted by Razi) equates tasnim with tashrif, "that which is ennobling" or "exalting".
83:28[1] All references concerning those brought near in the life to come are found at 3:45, 56:88, 83:21, 83:28.
83:29[1] Arabic: alladhīna āmanū. See note to 2:257 and Notepad II.iv.
83:34[1] Arabic: alladhīna āmanū. See note to 2:257 and Notepad II.iv.

83:36[1] Arabic: kuffār. See note to 2:109.

84

84:0[2] The eighty-fourth chapter of the Qur'an is by convention called al inshiqāq or The Splitting Asunder.
84:2[1] Lit.: and it is obliged.
84:5[1] Lit.: and it is obliged. Instances where speech either trails off or is clipped through interruption are found at 2:138, 6:143, 6:144, 10:22, 12:94, 26:24, 26:26, 26:28, 43:9, 58:22, 77:11, 84:5.

84:7[1] Arabic: kitāb. See Notepad IX.iii.
84:10[1] Arabic: kitāb. See Notepad IX.iii.
84:14[1] Or recede or decrease, be reduced. This is the only instance of this form of the form I of the ḥ-w-r root.
84:15[1] Arabic: balā. See note to 2:81.
84:17[1] Arabic: wasaqa. The prosaic and general meaning of this verb is to load, heap up or gather yet it has a secondary meaning of to enshroud, to cover or to envelop (with a covering). This is the only instance of the form I of the w-s-q root; the only other instance of the root comes in the following verse.
84:18[1] Arabic: ittasaqa. The form VIII of the w-s-q root occurs just once. It means to be in harmony, to reach full potential, to be well-ordered. It also means to be full of the moon.
84:19[1] Or state after state.
84:20[1] Arabic: lā yu'minūn. Qur'anic usage implies: (are those) lost in darkness. See note to 2:6 and Notepad II.ii.
84:21[1] Arabic: qur'ān — reading, recital, recitation, something which is read out.
84:21[2] Arabic: sajada. See Notepad IV. Here the Traditionalist assumes his value of physical prostration, naturally. However, physical prostrations in no way equate adherence to the message of the Qur'an, as is plain by observing life in any nominally Muslim community.
84:22[1] Arabic: bal. See note to 2:88.
84:22[2] Arabic: alladhīna kafarū. See note to 2:6 and Notepad II.i.
84:23[1] Understood generally here to have a nuance of hoard within themselves or conceal within themselves, or gather (of good and bad deeds). Cf. 70:18.
84:24[1] Elsewhere rendered glad tidings.
84:25[1] Arabic: alladhīna āmanū. See note to 2:257 and Notepad II.iv.

85

85:0[2] The eighty-fifth chapter of the Qur'an is by convention called al burūj or The Constellations.
85:1[1] Arabic: burūj — constellations; signs (of the zodiac); towers.
85:4[1] Lit.: Killed are.
85:4[2] The Traditionalist has some stories which he connects with these verses to derive particular meanings. I ignore them on the basis that whatever lessons we need to take from the Qur'an are found within it. Muhammad Asad here, as so often, provides an oasis of sanity and sense in a desert of intellectual torpidity and imitation: Lit., "those responsible (ashab) for the pit of fire abounding in fuel". In order to explain this parabolic passage, the commentators interpret it - quite unnecessarily - in the past tense, and advance the most contradictory legends meant to "identify" those evildoers in historical terms. The result is a medley of stories ranging from Abraham's experiences with his idolatrous contemporaries (cf. 21:68-70) to the Biblical legend of Nebuchadnezzar's attempt to burn three pious Israelites in a fiery furnace (The Book of Daniel iii, 19 ff.), or the persecution, in the sixth century, of the Christians of Najran by the King of Yemen, Dhu Nawas (who was a Jew by religion), or the entirely apocryphal story of a Zoroastrian king who burnt to death those of his subjects who refused to accept his dictum that a marriage of brother and sister was "permitted by God"; and so forth. None of these legends needs, of course, to be seriously considered in this context. As a matter of fact, the very anonymity of the evildoers referred to in the above Qur'anic passage shows that we have here a parable and not an allusion to "historical" or even legendary events. The persecutors are people who, having no faith whatsoever, hate to see faith in others (see verse 8 below); the "pit of fire" is a metaphor for the persecution of the latter by the former: a phenomenon not restricted to any particular time or to a particular people but recurring in many forms and in varying degrees of intensity throughout recorded history.

85:20[1] Muhammad Asad notes here: Lit., "from behind them", an idiomatic phrase denoting a happening imperceptible to those whom it closely concerns.
85:21[1] Arabic: bal. See note to 2:88.
85:21[2] Arabic: qur'ān — reading, recital, recitation, something which is read out.

86

86:0[2] The eighty-sixth chapter of the Qur'an is by convention called al ṭāriq or The Night-Comer.
86:1[1] Arabic: al ṭāriq. Generally rendered as night-star or night-comer or synonyms; however, see note below.
86:2[1] Qur'anic definition: al ṭāriq. Verse 86:3 defines al ṭāriq. However, I include Muhammad Asad's comment here for interest: Some commentators assume that what is described here as at-tariq ("that which comes in the night") is the morning-star, because it appears towards the end of the night; others - like Zamakhshari or Raghib - understand by it "the star" in its generic sense. Now if we analyze the origin of this noun, we find that it is derived from the verb taraqa, which primarily means "he beat [something]" or "knocked [at something]"; hence, taraqa 'l-bab, "he knocked at the door". Tropically, the noun signifies "anything [or "anyone"] that comes in the night", because a person who comes to a house by night is expected to knock at the door (Taj al-'Arus). In the Qur'anic mode of expression, at-tariq is evidently a metaphor for the heavenly solace which sometimes comes to a human being lost in the deepest darkness of affliction and distress; or for the sudden, intuitive enlightenment which disperses the darkness of uncertainty; or, finally, for divine revelation, which knocks, as it were, at the doors of man's heart... and thus fulfils the functions of both solace and enlightenment.
86:7[1] Arabic: tarā'ib. The lexicons I consulted have breast-bones or (higher) ribs. Of note is the fact that tarā'ib shares a root with turāb (dust) from which man is made (3:59). The rendering I have used here is found in the least sectarian lexicons, and is used by A. J. Arberry. I include Muhammad Asad's comment for interest: The plural noun tara'ib, rendered by me as "pelvic arch", has also the meaning of "ribs" or "arch of bones"; according to most of the authorities who have specialized in the etymology of rare Quranic expressions this term relates specifically to female anatomy (Taj al-'Arus).
86:11[1] I.e. of clouds and heavenly bodies.
86:17[1] I.e. bear thou with them. Cf. 73:11.

86:17[2] Arabic: al kāfirūn. See note to 2:19 and Notepad II.iii.

87

87:0[2] The eighty-seventh chapter of the Qur'an is by convention called al a'lā or The Most High.
87:1[1] See note to s-b-ḥ root at 2:30.
87:5[1] Arabic: ghuthā' — rubbish, particles of rubbish, refuse, scum, rotten leaves mixed with scum, dried-up or decaying herbage. See also 23:41.
87:6[1] See latter part of following note.
87:7[1] Muhammad Asad comments here: The classical commentators assume that the above words are addressed specifically to the Prophet, and that, therefore, they relate to his being taught the Qur'an and being promised that he would not forget anything thereof, "save what God may will [thee to forget]". This last clause has ever since given much trouble to the commentators, inasmuch as it is not very plausible that He who has revealed the Qur'an to the Prophet should cause him to forget anything of it. Hence, many unconvincing explanations have been advanced from very early times down to our own days, the least convincing being that last refuge of every perplexed Qur'an-commentator, the "doctrine of abrogation". However, the supposed difficulty of interpretation disappears as soon as we allow ourselves to realize that the above passage, though ostensibly addressed to the Prophet, is directed at man in general[...]. My own view is that the case is simpler: the classical commentators have not sufficiently embraced the Qur'an's use of implicit punctuation (i.e. how certain portions of the text cry out that they are asides and should be regarded as parenthetical); thus, this clause relates to the climax of 87:2-5 above. The outline of stages of growth such as we see at 87:2-5 is quite a common one (cf. 22:5, 23:14-15, 40:67), and the implication in such cases is that the continuance or completion of such growth or progression is contingent upon the will of God — a point stated explicitly here. The clause in parenthesis at 87:6 is merely a precursor to the only place in the Qur'an where the Prophet is told personally (i.e. in the second person singular imperative) to recite (Arabic root: q-r-') — which occurs in chapter 96. This is another nail in the coffin of the Traditionalist's stock of fictions which holds that the ninety-sixth chapter was the first revelation Muḥammad received. On the basis of the internal Qur'anic evidence that view is unsustainable since 87:6 must have preceded chapter 96. The instance of the form IV of the same verb which means to make recite found here at 87:6 is the only one in the text.
87:15[1] Arabic root: ṣ-l-w; i.e. to do such duty as is incumbent. See note to 2:3 and Article SZC. Generically, ṣallā means to perform duty. In this case, I suggest it indicates a man's duty to respond to 'the reminder' (87:9) when he receives it, and to believe in and serve God alone. Cf. 75:31 and note thereto.
87:16[1] Arabic: bal. See note to 2:88.
87:19[1] See 53:36-57.

88

88:0[2] The eighty-eighth chapter of the Qur'an is by convention called al ghāshiyah or The Enveloping.
88:1[1] Arabic: ḥadīth — story; account; narrative, statement.
88:2[1] Arabic: khāshi'ūn. See 2:45.
88:6[1] Qur'anic definition: ḍarī'. I have used one of the accepted meanings for this word. However, we have a contextual definition at 88:7.
88:13[1] See note to 52:20.
88:17[1] Arabic: afalā. See Notepad XIV.

89

89:0[2] The eighty-ninth chapter of the Qur'an is by convention called al fajr or The Dawn.
89:1[1] I take this to refer to the beginning of the day which opens upon those peoples who rejected God and his messengers and were destroyed (see below).
89:2[1] The Traditionalist has some stories he prefers here rather than to apply himself to the Qur'an. I am not interested in his stories and limit myself to the Qur'an, Arabic, real history, and the application of reason. The question at 89:5 is a challenge to think — and clearly indicates for whom what follows is intended; so let us presume to apply intelligence. This form (i.e. the plural form of night: layāl) occurs only four times (19:10, 34:18, 69:7 and here at 89:2). At 19:10 it says 'Thy proof is that thou shalt not speak to men three nights being sound'. At 69:7 it says: 'Which he compelled against them seven nights[...]'. If we take the three nights of 19:10 and the seven nights of 69:7 we have the ten nights of 89:2. The verse at 34:18 has no mention of number and simply states nights, and itself serves to connect this part of the riddle with the next (see note on travel by night below).
89:4[1] Or it, however I think he is what is meant. See note to travel by night below
89:4[2] This form I verb means to travel by night or depart by night. The instances where travelling or departing at night are portrayed in the Qur'an by means of this verb in this form all treat of destruction for the rejecters: 11:81, 15:65 (Lūṭ leaving his city prior to destruction), 20:77, 26:52, 44:23 (Mūsā crossing water prior to the destruction of Fir'awn), and 34:18 (the people of Saba' allowed the chance to travel by day and night prior to their destruction). Thus, there is a total of six instances (even number) treating of a total of three scenarios (odd number). The narrative then picks up at 89:6-13 with reminders of those whom God destroyed.
89:5[1] Arabic: lidhi ḥijr — this collocation means for one of understanding or for one of intelligence.
89:6[1] Arabic: alam tara. See note to 2:243.
89:10[1] Arabic: fir'awn. See note to 2:49.
89:14[1] Cf. 78:21.
89:17[1] Arabic: kallā. This exclamation operates also as a pan-textual marker. See 74:16 and note thereto.
89:17[2] Arabic: bal. See note to 2:88.
89:17[3] See note to 4:2.
89:19[1] Lit.: consume[...] with consuming. Abdullah Yusuf Ali comments here: Inheritance is abused in two ways. (1) Guardians and trustees for the inheritance of minors or women or persons unable to look after their own interests should fulfil their trusts with even more care than they devote to their own interests. Instead of that they selfishly "devour" the property. (2) Persons who inherit property in their own rights should remember that in that case, too, it is a sacred trust. They must use it for the purposes, objects, and duties which they also inherit. It gives them no licence to live in idleness or waste their days in riotous show. Cf. 4:8.
89:21[1] Arabic: kallā. This exclamation operates also as a pan-textual marker. See 74:16 and note thereto.
89:21[2] Lit.: levelled with levelling or crushed with crushing.

90

90:0[2] The ninetieth chapter of the Qur'an is by convention called al balad or The Land.

90:1[1] Said by the Traditionalist to refer to Mecca. Mecca cannot be shown to have existed at the time of the revelation and, according to Dan Gibson (Quranic Geography, 2011), appears on no map until around 900 CE. See Notepad XVI.

90:4[1] Arabic: kabad — difficulty; distress; affliction; trouble. I have rendered as adversity in order to encompass as many of these nuances as possible. This is the only instance of this root.

90:6[1] Lit.: destroyed.

90:10[1] I.e. that of right, and that of wrong.

91:7[1] Lit.: what.

91:8[1] See note to al muttaqūn at 2:2.

91:9[1] I.e. his soul.

91:9[2] Arabic: zakkā. See note to 2:129.

91:10[1] Arabic: dassa — to put, slip, thrust; bury; instil, infuse. This is the only instance of this root in the text. Without a broader context, it is not possible to claim the correct nuance here with a high degree of confidence. With Muhammad Asad, I feel that bury best suits the context, my own reasons for choosing bury being that it is related to the concept of kufr (to deny, to hide, to cover over) and in consideration of the levelling of the earth which follows at 91:14. N. J. Dawood has: corrupted; A. J. Arberry has: seduces; Saheeh International has: instils it [with corruption]; meanwhile Hilali & Khan present: who corrupts his ownself (i.e. disobeys what Allah has ordered by rejecting the true Faith of Islamic Monotheism or by following polytheism, etc. or by doing every kind of evil wicked deeds).

91:10[2] I.e. his soul. I read the segment at 91:11-14 as an aside.

91:12[1] I.e. the one who killed the she-camel of God.

91:13[1] Lit.: and her drink.

91:14[1] Cf. 7:64, 10:73, 16:113, 26:139, 26:189, 29:37, 37:127, 91:14.

91:14[2] Muhammad Asad comments here: The verb ʿaqara primarily denotes "he hamstrung [an animal]"- i.e., before slaughtering it, so that it might not run away. This barbarous custom was widely practiced in pre-Islamic Arabia, so that ʿaqr ("hamstringing") gradually became synonymous with slaughtering in a cruel manner (Razi; see also Lane V, 2107 f.).

91:14[3] Cf. 7:77.

91:14[4] Arabic: dẖanb. See Notepad XI.iv.

91:15[1] I read the segment at 91:11-14 as an aside. To me, it is obviously intended as such, but it is not recognised as such by the Traditionalist; at this juncture, his reading is that it is God who does not fear.

92

92:0[2] The ninety-second chapter of the Qur'an is by convention called al layl or The Night.

92:3[1] Lit.: what.

92:5[1] See note to al muttaqūn at 2:2.

92:6[1] I.e. the best reward in the Hereafter.

92:9[1] I.e. the best reward in the Hereafter.

92:11[1] Or what will his wealth avail him when he falls? In Arabic both readings are possible here.

92:13[1] Or Hereafter.

92:13[2] Or temporal life.

92:15[1] Cf. 87:11.

92:17[1] See note to al muttaqūn at 2:2.

92:17[2] This is a passive verb, and I have rendered to convey that. Also commonly rendered avoid or far removed.

92:19[1] I.e. not in order that the recipient should owe him a favour.

93

93:0[2] The ninety-third chapter of the Qur'an is by convention called al ḍuḥā or The Morning Light.

93:2[1] Arabic: sajā — to grow dark; to grow still. This word has a connotation of covering which I have included.

93:4[1] Or Hereafter. Cf. 92:13.

93:4[2] There are at least two readings here. One is that the Hereafter (the latter) is better than the former (this life); the other that what is to come is better than what went before. Cf. 92:13.

93:6[1] See note to 4:2.

93:7[1] The assertion that messengers of God were sinless (which the Traditionalist claims) is comprehensively undone. The Qur'an is clear: the recipient of the Qur'an was astray and then guided (cf. 26:20). Guidance comes from God. It is not complicated to grasp once one gets past tribalism, non-Qur'anic invented stories, and man-worship shoehorned into the mind of the intellectually passive under the auspices of respect for a messenger. Those who respect a messenger follow what he himself brought, not hearsay later ascribed to him by others.

93:9[1] See note to 4:2.

93:10[1] This refers — in the light of Qur'anic usage — to one who asks either for material or spiritual assistance.

94

94:0[2] The ninety-fourth chapter of the Qur'an is by convention called al s̲harḥ or The Expansion.

94:4[1] Raised, in addition, above the untruths later ascribed to the Messenger both by those openly against him and many of those who claim to follow him. Part of the remit of the Qur'an is to restore the reputations of the messengers of God of previous times from the insinuations and calumnies levelled against them — most often at the hands of those who claim to follow them.

94:4[2] Arabic: dẖikr — calling to mind, recalling, reminding; remembrance (of something past); history.

94:7[1] Arabic: naṣaba. This verb has a range of meanings, which includes: to raise, rear, erect; set up, put up; prepare, get ready. Non-sectarian A. J. Arberry uses labour here, and N. J. Dawood uses resume your toil. Sectarian translators tend to see here an imperative to stand up for worship.

95

95:0[2] The ninety-fifth chapter of the Qur'an is by convention called al tīn or The Fig.

95:2[1] Namely, a tree-covered or fertile mountain. See note to 2:63.

95:2[2] Assumed by the Traditionalist to mean Sinai (however, see 23:20 and notes thereto). Badawi-Haleem say of this word: sīnīn [n. occurring once in the Qur'ān] the commentators differ as to the origin and meaning of this word. The majority consider it a modification of saynā' (q.v.) [Sinai] but some others regard it as a borrowing from Ethiopic meaning splendour. Others derive it from the Arabic root s-n-w meaning splendour or blessings, while others regard it as a plural of sīniyyatun, a type of tree. This is a question concerning which the Arabia Felix thesis merits further investigation. See Notepad XVI.

95:3[1] Assumed by the Traditionalist to refer to Mecca. The Petra thesis — or, at least, the Petra pilgrimage thesis — points to the fact that Petra was a city of sanctuary. The Arabia Felix thesis makes an alternative claim here. Mecca is unsustainable as a value since, according to Dan Gibson (Quranic Geography, 2011) it cannot be shown to have existed as a fortified or dominant location at the time in question. See Notepad XVI.

95:4[1] Arabic: taqwīm — mould, symmetry, form, nature, constitution.

95:6[1] Arabic: alladẖīna āmanū. See note to 2:257 and Notepad II.iv.

95:7[1] Arabic: dīn. See Notepad V. This is translated by many here to convey the Day of Judgment. Muhammad Asad stays firm on his value here, however, as do I. I include his comment with light editing: I.e., to the validity of the moral law - which, to my mind, is the meaning of the term din in this context - outlined in the preceding three verses. The above rhetorical question has this implication: Since the moral law referred to here has been stressed in the teachings of all monotheistic religions (cf. verses 1-3), its truth ought to be self-evident to any unprejudiced person; its negation, moreover, amounts to a negation of all freedom of moral choice on man's part and, hence, of justice on the part of God, who, as the next verse points out, is - by definition - "the most just of judges". Cf. 107:1.

95:8[1] Arabic: alaysa. See Notepad XIV.

96

96:0[2] The ninety-sixth chapter of the Qur'an is by convention called al ʿalaq or The Clinging Thing.

96:1[1] Claimed by the Traditionalist to be the first chapter revealed, the preponderance of Qur'anic evidence is strongly against him (see latter part of note to 87:7).

96:2[1] See note to min ʿalaq at 22:5.

96:3[1] Or Most Generous.

96:6[1] Arabic: kallā. This exclamation operates also as a pan-textual marker. See 74:16 and note thereto.

96:9[1] Arabic: a ra'ayt-. See note to 6:40.

96:10[1] Arabic root: ṣ-l-w; i.e. to do such duty as is incumbent. See note to 2:3 and Article SZC. Generically, ṣallā means to perform duty. In this case, I believe it is a man's duty to respond to the call to believe in and serve God alone when he receives it.

96:11[1] Arabic: a ra'ayt-. See note to 6:40.

96:12[1] See note to al muttaqūn at 2:2.

96:13[1] Arabic: a ra'ayt-. See note to 6:40.

96:13[2] This formula is found at 20:48, 75:32, 92:16, 96:13.

96:15[1] Arabic: kallā. This exclamation operates also as a pan-textual marker. See 74:16 and note thereto.

96:16[1] Arabic root: k̲h-ṭ-ʿ. See Notepad XI.vi.

96:18[1] Arabic: al zabāniyah. The root senses of this word are to push, to thrust. Said to be the guards of Hell which thrust into the Fire.

96:19[1] Arabic: kallā. This exclamation operates also as a pan-textual marker. See 74:16 and note thereto.

96:19[2] Arabic: sajada. See Notepad IV.

97

97:0[2] The ninety-seventh chapter of the Qur'an is by convention called al qadr or The Determination.

97:1[1] I.e. the Qur'an. For why we know the Qur'an to be the reference see note to 6:92. There is much to unpack in this chapter. The first question here is: what is sent down? The Traditionalist asserts that the pronoun object refers to revelation, his view being confirmed as the correct one (albeit for reasons other than those he typically offers). In treating the Traditionalist's existing presentation, we must address 44:3-4 where some see a foreshadowing of, or reference to, what we have here at chapter 97, namely, layla al qadr — the value of which such people assume to be the night of divine decree in which all affairs are destined for the year ahead, an assumption based entirely on sources other than the Qur'an (for more on which see notes below). Verses 44:3-4 read: "We sent it down on a blessed night, — We are warning — Wherein is separated every wise command"; the context there indisputably treats, at least to some degree, of revelation (see 44:2); moreover, we agree with the Traditionalist that it is only reasonable that the same is the case here at chapter 97: that which is referenced by 'it' is, likewise, revelation. However, at chapter 44, the Traditionalist tends to concentrate on the sending down of the revelation to Muḥammad as a special, private event focused on the Prophet himself, and he leverages and extends that assumption in order to inform the sense one is to derive under his guidance here at chapter 97 — and it is this aspect of this topic we now wish to address. To the extent that the revelation of God reaches those men who are not prophets, God 'sent it down' to them also (albeit in a general and more diffused sense — a sense which the Traditionalist also accepts where it suits him) and it must be this broader, more general sense which is implied in 44:3-4 since the following context (in fact, the entire chapter) treats of warning — that is: the emphasis throughout is not on the private receipt of revelation from God by the Prophet, but on the delivery of that revelation to people more generally. If we are to claim a correlation between 44:3-4 and chapter 97 — and the Traditionalist does — on the strength of the similarities in their references to God sending down revelation on a particular night (and I certainly accept that correlation) then we should insist upon equivalence between the two segments: if receipt of revelation (whether heeded or not) by the generality of men (rather than an initial, private receipt by the Prophet) be accepted as operative in the first case, it should be accepted in like manner in the second case also.

97:1[2] The etymological options available to the Arabic qadr

(often rendered here divine decree) may be gathered into five general groupings, which are separated by semi-colons: extent, scope, quantity, amount, scale, rate, measure, number; sum, amount; degree, grade; worth, standing, value, rank; divine decree. My opinion is that the sense of divine decree is a lexical development originating in another place. Be that as it may, it is certainly the case that such a value for qadr occurs nowhere outside of the present chapter, even according to the Traditionalist's own assessment. In order to find which of the remaining semantic groupings is referenced here, we should look to all remaining instances of qadr in the text (6:91, 22:74, 39:67, 65:3). We find that at 6:91, 22:74 and 39:67 qadr means measure in the sense of appraisal or estimation ("and they measured God not with the measure due Him..."). In the sole remaining case outside the present chapter the context is also that of extent or measure (the limits of God at 65:1, and [waiting] term at 65:2.). Thus in all cases outside the present chapter, measure or extent is either the explicit sense, the dominant context, or both. I must, therefore, assume it to be the sense here also. Since at 6:91, 22:74 and 39:67 the connotation of measure implied is that of appraisal or determination (in the sense of evaluation), this is the value I identify and use here. The question remains as to who the active agent is in the determination on such a night: God or man. The Traditionalist assumes the former (typically, that God is referenced here, seen as establishing his decree on this special night over all affairs for the coming year). However, this is an assumption, and one for which one can point to no explicit Qur'anic support. The only other place at which the construction night + definite article + noun occurs in the Qur'anic text is at 2:187 ("On the night of the fast"); the active agents — i.e. the doers of the noun value — in that case are men (for it is not God who fasts but men). If we are interested in consistency — and the Qur'an cites consistency in support of its claim to originate with God — we should incline to the view that the operation of "al qadr" here pertains, likewise, primarily to men rather than to God (although, naturally, in both cases — that of determination as here and of fasting as at 2:187 — God is the ultimate instigator, witness, and giver of reward). The above points accepted, the import of this collocation here is that God sent down the Qur'an on the night on which men are — or were — to make a determination, evaluation or assessment; but a determination, evaluation or assessment of what? The key to this question is grasped by understanding the full sense of the word salām as found at 97:5 (for which see notes thereto) as well as the points covered in the remainder of the notes to this chapter. However, in summary: the believers are to form a determination of the hearers (to decide whether they be friends, believers, rejecters, ignorant ones, etc.) based upon the hearers' own determination of that portion of the Qur'an recited to them by the believers. Additional contextual and linguistic support for the points found in this note will be gained by reading 74:18-25.

97:2[1] The formulation here is telling. The convention 'And what will convey to thee...?' always indicates something which Muḥammad is not expected to understand, and for which there follows an explanation (69:3, 74:27, 77:14, 82:17, 82:18, 83:8, 83:19, 86:2, 90:12, 97:2, 101:3, 101:10, 104:5). Such is the case here; thus, at 97:2 the Qur'an presents a Muḥammad ignorant of the meaning of layla al qadr — a point which contrasts starkly with the ḥadīth literature, which ascribes to Muḥammad here — as so often — knowledge the Qur'an denies him. The ḥadīth literature has Muslims looking for a special night in the hopes of gaining some uncommon access to God who, on the correct night — so it is claimed — determines all affairs for the year ahead. Such exegesis supplies superficial but Qur'anically unfounded support to those who are temperamentally inclined to abdicate personal responsibility to do so. Thus, they can refuse to correlate the results of their lives with their actions, and look rather for benefit to particular times — instead of to the observation of the extant and operative laws of God — which practice is properly regarded as a form of polytheism.

97:3[1] Arabic: shahr — moon, month. A thousand months is equal to just over 83 solar years — a long life by any reckoning. Thus 'the Night of Determination' is better than a long life — and as the second clause of 97:4 shows — no matter how spent.

97:4[1] Having properly understood and parsed the rest of the chapter the present clause falls naturally into a nested parenthetical statement; thus, on 'the Night of Determination' it is 'by the leave of their Lord' (i.e. by the leave of the Lord of those who make the determination or, possibly, the Lord of the angels and the Spirit themselves) that the angels and the Spirit descend — and not because one happened rightly to guess at and observe a particular night, one whose expectation is drawn from an entirely different literature and whose characteristics require (in order for such a phenomenon to seem to be discerned within the Qur'an) the mangling of Arabic usage in the local context out of all alignment with those senses established throughout the corpus (for more see notes below).

97:4[2] Arabic: min kulli. See note to 2:164.

97:4[3] The translators render min kulli here as [...]on every (errand) or [...]with each (decree). Nowhere in the remaining 44 instances of min kulli in the Qur'an do we find anything close to such a value. The task in hand is not to try to bend the Qur'an to what one's favourite school of 'Islam' has constructed on the basis of the ḥadīth, but to seek coherence and sense within the integrity of the Qur'an's own fabric. On such a basis, min kulli can only mean every sort of, of every, among every or from (among) every. And 'amr means command, matter or affair. By treating the phrase above as a nested statement (see note thereto) and min kulli in accordance with its commonest pan-textual value (for more see note to 2:164) the sense becomes The Night of the Determination is better than a thousand months[...] of every sort of affair — the import of the second part of this statement being: no matter how lived, or of any type whatsoever.

97:5[1] Arabic: salām — soundness, well-being; peace, peacefulness; safety, security. Contextual comparison of all instances of salām as found here (i.e. without following modifiers such as 'be unto you') outside the present one (10:10, 11:69, 11:69, 14:23, 15:52, 33:44, 36:58, 43:89, 51:25, 51:25, 56:26, 56:26, 56:91) reveals this convention to possess the following applications: 1. as a general greeting (for persons either known or not known); 2. as a means of respectfully extricating oneself from interaction with those who are either ignorant or who reject faith; 3. God's greeting to the believers (specifically, upon their being received into the joys of the Fuller Life). The first two applications are fully consonant with the present context as understood and expounded upon here, and the third is aptly and beautifully prefigured (see also note below).

97:5[2] Grammar: feminine pronoun agreeing with night. Based on the totality of my investigations — the results of which comprise this translation and the notes thereto — the collocation 'the Night of Determination' is a function of what is identified in the broader work as 'the Submission' (Arabic: al sujūd), i.e. that night vigil to which others are invited to hear the word of God (see Notepad XXI; cf. 48:29, 50:40, 68:42, 68:43) the chapters for which comprise a subset of the Qur'an (and of which subset the present chapter forms part of the closing section); on 'the Night of Determination' men make their determinations: some among those outside the fold of believers accept, and others reject; meanwhile, believers themselves make their determinations concerning those to whom the words of God have been recited, whether they should be regarded as believers, rejecters, friends or ones lost in ignorance. Understood as presented here and expounded in the supporting notes, this chapter forms an entirely natural precursor to the next.

98

98:0[2] The ninety-eighth chapter of the Qur'an is by convention called al bayyinah or The Clear Evidence.

98:1[1] Arabic: alladhīna kafarū. See note to 2:6 and Notepad II.i.

98:1[2] Arabic: ahl kitāb. See Notepad IX.iv.

98:1[3] See note to Arabic root: sh-r-k at 6:78 and Notepad VI.

98:1[4] Arabic: munfakkīn. This is the form VII active participle of the f-k-k root and the only instance of this verb form from this root. Lane (p. 2486) lists meanings as diverse as desisting, experiencing rest and separating (into parties). Given the clear and uncontested meaning at 98:4 — and given that 98:4 itself contains echoes of 98:1 — I personally identify the last of the three options forwarded by Lane as the most likely, however, I have complied with the dominant view (that of desisting) in my translation, and confined my thoughts to the notes.

98:3[1] Arabic: kutub. See Notepad IX.ii.

98:4[1] Arabic: alladhīna ūtū al kitāb. See Notepad IX.xi.

98:4[2] Arabic: al kitāb. See Notepad IX.ii.

98:4[3] I.e. that mentioned above at 98:2-3.

98:5[1] Arabic: dīn. See Notepad V.

98:5[2] Arabic: ḥanāfa — inclining to a right state or tendency; spurning falsehood. See note to 2:130.

98:5[3] Arabic: al ṣalāt; i.e. such duty as is incumbent. See note to 2:3 and Article SZC. In its primary sense it is the duty both to serve and seek help from God alone as per the covenant at 1:1-7 of which the statement at 1:5 forms our part — commitment to which also satisfies the pre-existing obligation every man has to acknowledge God's authority (see 7:172).

98:5[4] Arabic: al zakāt. See note to 2:43 and Article SZC.

98:5[5] Arabic: dīn. See Notepad V.

98:5[6] I have rendered grammatically consistently as does A. J. Arberry. It is debatable whether it refers here finally to God or to one who follows the doctrine of God.

98:6[1] Arabic: alladhīna kafarū. See note to 2:6 and Notepad II.i.

98:6[2] Arabic: ahl kitāb. See Notepad IX.iv.

98:6[3] See note to Arabic root: sh-r-k at 6:78 and Notepad VI.

98:7[1] Arabic: alladhīna āmanū. See note to 2:257 and Notepad II.iv.

99

99:0[2] The ninety-ninth chapter of the Qur'an is by convention called al zalzalah or The Shaking.

99:1[1] Lit.: shaken[...] with its shaking.

99:4[1] Arabic: akhbār — news; information; reports, communications; stories. Occurs at 9:94, 47:31, 99:4.

99:5[1] See note to waḥī and awḥā at 3:44.

99:6[1] Often rendered to indicate separated groups; however, see the only other instance of this word at 24:61 where the sense is clearly separately (i.e. alone, individually). Muhammad Asad supplies the following thought which confirms the point just made but by another route: Lit., "as separate entities" (ashtatan). Cf. 6:94 - "And now, indeed, you have come unto Us in a lonely state, even as We created you in the first instance": thus stressing the individual, untransferable responsibility of every human being.

100

100:0[2] The one-hundredth chapter of the Qur'an is by convention called al ʿādiyāt or The Chargers.

100:11[1] Arabic: afalā. See Notepad XIV.

101

101:0[2] The one-hundred-and-first chapter of the Qur'an is by convention called al qāriʿa or The Calamity.

101:1[1] See note to 101:3.

101:2[1] See note to 101:3.

101:3[1] Qur'anic definition: al qāriʿa. Rendered throughout as per its primary value, we have at 101:4-11 the full Qur'anic definition. All instances appear in the notes and reference this verse.

101:9[1] Or home. Lit.: mother. (Arabic: ummah — mother; community, nation.) Muhammad Asad comments here: Lit., "his mother [i.e., goal] will be an abyss", sc., of suffering and despair. The term "mother" (umm) is used idiomatically to denote something that embraces or enfolds.

102

102:0[2] The one-hundred-and-second chapter of the Qur'an is by convention called al takāthur or The Competition For Increase.

102:1[1] Muhammad Asad comments here: The term takathur bears the connotation of "greedily striving for an increase", i.e., in benefits, be they tangible or intangible, real or illusory. In the above context it denotes man's obsessive striving for more and more comforts, more material goods, greater power over his fellow-men or over nature, and unceasing technological progress. A passionate pursuit of such endeavours, to the exclusion of everything else, bars man from all spiritual insight and, hence, from the acceptance of any restrictions and inhibitions based on purely moral values - with the result that not only individuals but whole societies gradually lose all inner stability and, thus, all chance of happiness.

102:3[1] Arabic: kallā. This exclamation operates also as a pan-textual marker. See 74:16 and note thereto.

102:4[1] Arabic: kallā. This exclamation operates also as a pan-textual marker. See 74:16 and note thereto.

102:5[1] Arabic: kallā. This exclamation operates also as a pan-textual marker. See 74:16 and note thereto.

102:5[2] Sc. You would have put everything into the Hereafter.

102:8[1] I understand this to mean that a man will be asked about that for which he strove. Each of us wants bliss. In what we consider bliss to consist is the measure of who we are.

103

103:0[2] The one-hundred-and-third chapter of the Qur'an is by convention called al 'aṣr or The Span Of Time (see note to 103:1).
103:1[1] Or time. Arabic: al 'aṣr. Translated often as time and also as afternoon, such renderings deprive the reader in English of a crucial point. A wider acquaintance with Arabic reveals that 'aṣr is used for age (as in Ice Age, Bronze Age, etc.), and epoch, and period. That is, 'aṣr denotes a span of time, time with a beginning and an end. Both time and afternoon have some connection with this most important point rattling about in them somewhere, but to render thus in English excludes the reader from the core point. The salient sense here is a span of time (i.e. a period with a beginning and an end), not simply time as an open-ended concept, or as something which happens after lunch. Muhammad Asad has a similar perspective and renders this word: the flight of time, and supplies the following comment: The term "asr denotes "time" that is measurable, consisting of a succession of periods (in distinction from dahr, which signifies "unlimited time", without beginning or end: i.e., "time absolute"). Hence, asr bears the connotation of the passing or the flight of time - time which can never be recaptured.
103:3[1] Arabic: alladhīna āmanū. See note to 2:257 and Notepad II.iv.
103:3[2] Arabic: bil ḥaqqi. See Notepad XVII (bil ḥaqqi i.).

104

104:0[2] The one-hundred-and-fourth chapter of the Qur'an is by convention called al humazah or The Slanderer.
104:4[1] Arabic: kallā. This exclamation operates also as a pan-textual marker. See 74:16 and note thereto.
104:4[2] Qur'anic definition: al ḥuṭama. I have rendered in line with the commonest readings, however the Qur'an's own definition is found at 104:6-9.
104:7[1] Frequently rendered will rise over and similar. However, Wehr (p. 660) lists this form VIII verb with 'alā (as it is found here) with values which include to see; to look; to behold; to study, come to know; to inspect, to examine. In the event, I have followed Lane (p. 1920), whose exact turn of phrase allowed me to convey something of the more typical renderings also.
104:8[1] I.e. the Fire.

105

105:0[2] The one-hundred-and-fifth chapter of the Qur'an is by convention called al fīl or One Weak In Judgment (see note to 105:1).
105:1[1] Arabic: alam tara. See note to 2:243.
105:1[2] The expression the companions of can be used to mean those belonging to or those living in or those forming part of or those possessing (a particular quality).
105:1[3] Arabic: fīl. The Traditionalist has some fanciful ideas about this chapter whose origins have no Qur'anic basis, and which posit that fīl here means elephant. It is true that one of the meanings of fīl is elephant. However, fīl also means base, weak; a man weak in judgment or opinion; ignoble; (see Lane, p. 2529). For those interested in the Qur'an rather than in hearsay, the following points are worth noting: firstly, this instance of fīl is the only one in the Qur'an, so there is nothing to cross-reference the word with; secondly, we find in this chapter ḥijārati min sijjīl which means — and is rendered as — stones of baked clay. This exact expression occurs twice more (at 11:82 and 15:74) and in both instances unequivocally references the people of Lūṭ. We also know that the people of Lūṭ are described as lacking 'a right-minded man' among them (11:78). Thus, if we are to judge this chapter on the basis of the Qur'anic evidence as opposed to something else, al fīl denotes one weak in judgment, base, weak, ignoble — which we should correlate with an inhabitant of the city of Lūṭ.
105:2[1] Given our identification of this as a reference the inhabitants of the city of Lūṭ (see note to 105:1), this statement is demonstrably correct within the bounds of the Qur'anic narrative: God frustrated the people of Lūṭ in their designs against him and his guests.
105:3[1] Arabic: ṭayr. This does mean bird (as per the Traditionalist's stories), however the word for bird is simply the active participle from ṭāra — to fly and also means flying things, flights and omens.
105:3[2] Arabic: abābīl — flocks, droves; successive waves.
105:4[1] Arabic: sijjīl. Occurs at 11:82, 15:74, 105:4.

106

106:0[2] The one-hundred-and-sixth chapter of the Qur'an is by convention called quraysh or Quraysh (see note to 106:1).
106:1[1] The Traditionalist claims 106:1 to refer to the tribe known as Quraysh and 106:3 to a house used during pilgrimage. He may be right; I really cannot say with certainty. And nor can he — at least not on the basis of the Qur'an. Certainly the Arabs made pilgrimage to Petra; according to Dan Gibson's work (Quranic Geography, 2011), no such evidence exists for Mecca until well after the Qur'anic revelation. Today, Petra is a ruin and its interest merely historical; in any case the point is moot (see note to 9:28 and Notepad XVI). The text does not say serve the lord at this house, it says serve the lord of this house. One can do that anywhere. Whether the Quraysh tribe pre-existed the Qur'anic revelation or was concocted along with the ḥadīth literature afterwards in order to benefit certain people is a question which requires objective historical investigation. We do know that various groups claimed to be Sabaeans in order to garner privileges under Muslim kings and priesthoods, and that there are countless millions more in the world today who claim direct descent from the Prophet than can genuinely be the case. Such points are of anthropological, social, and political interest but do not have a direct bearing on the chapter in question. What was of more immediate interest to me is the fact that quraysh means shark (Blackwell Companion to the Qur'an, p. 130, Michael Carter, contributor, writes concerning the foreign source of certain words: 'It is only the word quraysh "shark" which is traced to Greek [via Syriac][...]') and that, as recently as the 1980s, it was discovered that many sharks migrate — travelling great distances across oceans in summer and winter — to feed or reproduce; prior to that it was believed that they lived regionally. Lastly, bayt — rendered here house — also means family. While it is not a point of doctrine with me, I entertain the idea that what is meant is the family (in the generic sense of species) of the shark. Such thoughts — as with the Traditionalist's assertions on this point — are purely speculative, and God knows best.
106:2[1] Arabic: riḥla — journey, travel, trip, tour. This word is frequently bent into caravan by Traditionalist translators to make it comport with expectations derived from other sources. The word for caravan (Arabic: 'īr) is found in the Qur'an at 12:70, 12:82, 12:94.

107

107:0[2] The one-hundred-and-seventh chapter of the Qur'an is by convention called al mā'ūn or Small Things.
107:1[1] Arabic: a ra'ayt-. See note to 6:40.
107:1[2] Arabic: dīn. See Notepad V. See note to 95:7.
107:2[1] See note to 4:2.
107:4[1] Arabic root: ṣ-l-w. See note to 2:3 and Article SZC. Generically, ṣallā means to perform duty. The active participle of the form II verb (muṣall–) as here, occurs only at 70:22, 74:43, 107:4 — comparison of the instances of which is instructive.
107:5[1] Arabic: ṣalāt; i.e. such duty as is incumbent. See note to 2:3 and Article SZC.
107:7[1] Muhammad Asad notes here: the term al-ma'un comprises the many small items needed for one's daily use, as well as the occasional acts of kindness consisting in helping out one's fellow-men with such items. In its wider sense, it denotes "aid" or "assistance" in any difficulty.

108

108:0[2] The one-hundred-and-eighth chapter of the Qur'an is by convention called al kawthar or Abundance.
108:1[1] Arabic: kawthar — abundance. The Traditionalist makes claims for the meaning of kawthar which have no Qur'anic basis; the plain meaning of kawthar is as rendered here.
108:2[1] Arabic root: ṣ-l-w; i.e. to do such duty as is incumbent. See note to 2:3 and Article SZC. Generically, ṣallā means to perform duty. What God gave the Prophet in abundance was that revelation contained in the Qur'an. It is my opinion that this chapter serves to encourage the Messenger (and those who would follow him) to share this revelation with others. See end of Article MLQ.
108:2[2] Arabic: naḥara. This root occurs only once, which fact makes it vulnerable to corruption by interested parties. This form I verb has come to mean to slaughter, to butcher and it is claimed in the sense of to sacrifice, generally speaking, by the Traditionalist in support of one of his favourite pastimes: killing things. I argue that this meaning has attached itself over time. The concept of animal sacrifice is demonstrably alien to the Qur'an as we see '[...]Their flesh does not reach God, nor their blood. But prudent fear reaches Him from you[...]' (22:37). These values at 22:37 are uncontested and fully supported pan-textually. On that basis, it is impossible to consider slaughter or sacrifice the meaning at 108:2 because the text reads 'to thy Lord' (which is a natural object for both imperatives in the verse — and the Traditionalist himself typically assumes as much). But God cannot expect one to sacrifice to Him that which He has told us does not reach Him. We must, if we are to be intellectually honest and consistent, look to other accepted meanings for naḥara. It has two: to master (superlatively) (Lane, p. 2835); and to do something as soon as it becomes due (meanings which both Lane and Badawi-Haleem include). Since to my mind, if one has fully mastered something one does it in a timely manner, I feel that to master includes within it mastery of time as a given, and I render on that basis.

109

109:0[2] The one-hundred-and-ninth chapter of the Qur'an is by convention called al kāfirūn or The False Claimers Of Guidance (see note to 2:19).
109:1[1] Arabic: al kāfirūn. See note to 2:19 and Notepad II.iii. This is the only instance where this category of person is addressed directly (i.e. in the vocative). This chapter is typically understood — and thus rendered in translation — in a way which strikes a sadly mistaken tone. The dominant assumption — given a wrong value for al kāfirūn – is that those addressed are 'unbelievers' (i.e. a fundamentally distinct group; one possessed of a wildly different set of beliefs to those held by believers) and that God is directing the Messenger to say something along the lines of: you and I have different doctrines, so let's just accept the fact. But this is not exactly what is being said. The function of the chapter is to distance the speaker (one who truly believes and whose actions issue forth from that fact) from a group which wears the garb of faith — that is, from people who put themselves about as believers but whose actions are not commensurate with their claims. Thus, this chapter is making a point entirely different to the one claimed by the Traditionalist; namely: that religion you have — that which simulates virtue but which rejects the requisite guidance virtue demands — that is not what I believe (no matter how much you might like to have it otherwise).
109:6[1] Arabic: dīn. See Notepad V.
109:6[2] Arabic: dīn. See Notepad V.

110

110:0[1] Arabic: raḥmān. Typically rendered most merciful. See 36:23 and note thereto, note to 1:1, and Notepad I.
110:0[2] The one-hundred-and-tenth chapter of the Qur'an is by convention called al naṣr or Help.
110:2[1] Arabic: dīn. See Notepad V.
110:3[1] See note to s-b-ḥ root at 2:30.

111

111:0[2] The one-hundred-and-eleventh chapter of the Qur'an is by convention called al masad or The Twisted Strands.
111:1[1] Grammar: dual. In Arabic the word for hand also denotes power, wealth, substance.
111:1[2] Arabic: 'abu lahab. The Traditionalist has stories which he attaches to this chapter which have no Qur'anic basis, and which I ignore. The type of person this denotes is made perfectly clear in the chapter.
111:2[1] Or What will his wealth avail him or what he earned? In Arabic both readings are visually identical. Muhammad Asad, for example, renders here in the interrogative mood.
111:4[1] Arabic: ḥaṭab — fuel, firewood; tales, slander. Both senses are certainly contained here.
111:5[1] Muhammad Asad comments here: The term masad signifies anything that consists of twisted strands, irrespective of the material (Qamus, Mughni, Lisan al-Arab). In the abstract sense in which it is evidently used here, the above phrase seems to have a double connotation: it alludes to the woman's twisted, warped nature, as well as to the spiritual truth that "every human being's destiny is tied to his neck"[...].

112

112:0[2] The one-hundred-and-twelfth chapter of the Qur'an is by convention called al ikhlāṣ or Sincerity.
112:2[1] Arabic: ṣamad — eternal, everlasting; one to whom one repairs or appeals in cases of extremis; one without whom no affair is accomplished; one upon whom all creation is dependent. One struggles to render succinctly here in English. Muhammad Asad, for example, renders freely as the Eternal Uncaused Cause of All Being.

113

113:0[2] The one-hundred-and-thirteenth chapter of the Qur'an is by convention called al falaq or Daybreak.

113:3[1] Lit.: becomes dark or gloomy.

113:4[1] I include Muhammad Asad's comment here for interest despite the fact that he appears to treat witchcraft as something capable only of imagined results, a position with which I do not agree: [...]"of those that blow (an-naffathat) upon knots": an idiomatic phrase current in pre-Islamic Arabia and, hence, employed in classical Arabic to designate all supposedly occult endeavours; it was probably derived from the practice of "witches" and "sorcerers" who used to tie a string into a number of knots while blowing upon them and murmuring magic incantations. The feminine gender of naffathat does not, as Zamakhshari and Razi point out, necessarily indicate "women", but may well relate to "human beings" (anfus, sing. nafs, a noun that is grammatically feminine).'

114

114:0[2] The one-hundred-and-fourteenth chapter of the Qur'an is by convention called al nās or Mankind.

114:4[1] Arabic: al khannās. The kh-n-s root denotes that which retreats, goes back, recedes. Generally, al khannās is said to be an epithet for the shayṭān since he retires — or hides himself — and retreats when God is remembered. That shayṭān treats of an adversary (against the command of God). See Article SJC.

114:4[2] Arabic: waswās. The core meanings of this word are devilish insinuation, temptation; wicked thought; doubt, misgiving, suspicion; delusion, fixed idea; uneasiness, anxiety, concern; melancholy; and is an epithet for the shayṭān.

114:6[1] Arabic: min — of, among, from, from among. While this verse is generally understood in the same light as 114:4 (i.e. as referencing that from which the speaker seeks refuge in God), it can be read also to reference that by means of which 'the evil of the retreating whisperer' reaches the breasts of men.

114:6[2] Signifies hidden forces (of the unseen realm), or fully demonic or demonised humans. Arabic: al jinna. See Article SJC.

114:6[3] An allusion also, surely, to the phrase 'I will fill Gehenna with the jinna and mankind all together' found at 11:119 and 32:13 — the only other formula (and the only other places) in which the exact phrase 'min al jinnati wa al nās' (among, from, or with al jinna and men) occurs.

THE GOD PROTOCOL

THE QUR'AN claims to be a complete revelation to mankind from the creator of the heavens and the earth.

Traditionalist Islam, while paying lip service to the Qur'an, is predicated chiefly upon other texts — the aḥādīth — and interpretations and schools of thought derived from the same, the result of which is an ossified and increasingly discredited cultural narrative.

SAM GERRANS is an English writer and independent thinker with backgrounds in languages, media, strategic communications, and technologies. He is driven by commitment to ultimate meaning and focused on authentic approaches to revelation and Realpolitik. Whereas most translations and expositions of the Qur'an assume Traditionalist Islam's conclusions, his principal work The Qur'an: A Complete Revelation is built upon a system of hermeneutics in which preference is given to definitions originating in the Qur'an itself and to values derived by processes of pan-textual analysis. Values for key terms thus demonstrated are enforced across the text and documented.

While The Qur'an: A Complete Revelation exposes unambiguous tensions between Traditionalist Islam and the book that religion claims as its foundational scripture, that result was not Gerrans' motivation for writing it. Sam Gerrans believes in God and accepts the veracity of the Qur'an. His identification of Traditionalist Islam's preoccupations as a usurping narrative is a function of his process of due diligence upon the contents of the Qur'an rather than his primary interest. The motivation driving The Qur'an: A Complete Revelation was to provide a textual corpus in the English language which could supply a legitimate formal basis for his principal objective which is described now in full in his book The God Protocol.

The God Protocol identifies that mechanism in the Qur'an by which miscreant ruling elites of the past were made accountable before God and applies the same principle to the worldwide ruling elite of today.

QURANITE.COM

Dedicated to those who remember that the practice of God does not change.

O my people: yours is the dominion this day, you being dominant in the land, but who will help us against the wrath of God if it comes to us?

O my people: I fear for you the like of the day of the parties, the like of the case of the people of Noah, and ʿĀd, and Thamūd, and those after them; and God desires not injustice for the servants.

And O my people: I fear for you the Day of Calling, the day you will turn and go having not against God any defender; and whom God sends astray, for him there is no guide. And Joseph brought you the clear signs before, but you ceased not to be in doubt about what he brought. When he had perished, you said: 'Never will God raise up after him a messenger.' Thus does God lead astray him who is a committer of excess and a baseless sceptic: those who dispute concerning the proofs of God without an authority having come to them; great is the hatred in the sight of God and in the sight of those who heed warning; thus does God seal every proud and tyrannical heart.

O my people: follow me; I will guide you to the path of rectitude.

O my people: the life of this world is but an enjoyment; and the Hereafter — that is the house of the fixed lodging. Whoso does evil will not be rewarded save with the like thereof; and whoso works righteousness — whether male or female — and is a believer: those enter the Garden, wherein they are given provision without reckoning.

And O my people: how is it that I invite you to deliverance, and you invite me to the Fire? You call me to deny God, and to ascribe a partnership to Him with that whereof I have no knowledge; and I invite you to the Exalted in Might, the Forgiver. Without doubt, you but invite me to that to which there is no calling in the World or in the Hereafter; and our return is to God. And the committers of excess will be the companions of the Fire. And you will remember what I say to you. And I commit my affair to God; God sees the servants.

Acknowledgements

My first debt of gratitude is to God, the Subtle, the Aware: for His guidance; for this task and everything necessary for its fulfilment, and for my inability to be truly satisfied with anything other than its completion.

My next debt of gratitude is to my wife, Karina Gerrans. Her faith, kindness, and belief in this mission have never wavered for a moment, and her reflections, observations and questions have helped greatly.

Our daughter Edith also saw much less of Daddy in her early years than she should have due to my commitment to this project. I tell myself that one day she will understand why this was important, and that we can make up for lost time.

I gratefully acknowledge all those who made financial contributions to this project. They were seeking the pleasure of God, and I understand that, but the fact is that their donations and personal messages of support (all of which I read) helped sustain me during this project. The result is the new edition of The Qur'an: A Complete Revelation, publication of The God Protocol, and a substantially improved solution to the mysterious letters. None of this would have been possible without their support.

I wish to acknowledge Hakim Sahin for his kind assistance expunging minor errors from the final manuscripts.

And I wish particularly to thank Said Mirza. His generous support on all fronts as well as his personal friendship made a difficult path easier to walk.

Preface

The premise for this book is that individual societies are ruled by individual, small castes of dominant men; that it is natural for societies to be ruled by small castes of dominant men; and that the world today comprises a single and unified system ruled by a single, small caste of dominant men. This book does not argue against the model of "elite" governance; rather, it calls the ruling elite to engage in its proper function: of training its populations along trajectories which tend to godly fear and righteousness.

It is clear today that the ruling elites have abandoned all semblance of noblesse oblige, having detached their interests entirely from those of the peoples they rule. They have destroyed traditional forms of religions, perverted norms of gender, race, and caste, and dismantled all objective standards of modesty and morality. And they are presently engaged in removing the last vestiges of reason and instinct for God within those they manage and in establishing a perfected form of slavery for those they leave alive to serve them.

In short, the ruling elites of the present unified system are aberrant, miscreant, deviant — and highly effective.

Conspicuous among the elites' practices of dealing with those they rule is the principle of issuing notifications or warnings prior to executing certain policies, usually via entertainment or news media outlets, but by other means also. The elites follow a protocol of warning because it is important to them that one be morally and legally culpable. But what is sauce for the goose is sauce also for the gander.

The Qur'an contains within it a clear protocol of warning — one which was used by many messengers and prophets — for holding miscreant elites to account. This mechanism has nothing to do with the Traditionalist Islamist's dominant preoccupations; rather, it comprises a legal framework for warning a ruling elite that has transgressed all bounds, and serves as the prerequisite for the punishments of God to become binding thereafter upon a society whose rulers reject that warning. I call this mechanism the God protocol. Historically, such punishment impacted a limited area only. Since today the world is effectively under a single ruling elite, the implication is that the impact of an execution of the same protocol in such circumstances would be universal.

This book features anthologies of verses from the Qur'an attended by introductions, summaries, comments and conclusions which together support a formal warning under the protocol to the ruling elite of today's one world government.

One can press the wrong buttons as many times as one likes — it won't make any difference. But one has only to press the right button once. This is that button. I am not pressing it because I want to, but because the alternative is a future which, in conscience, I cannot leave to my children.

Introduction to the protocol

Introduction to the protocol

Introduction

I have resisted the temptation to burden the reader here with much information about myself.[1] And I have aimed also to keep each section as streamlined as possible.

The Preface to the present work provides a short summary of our premises and approach. As stated there, this book largely features anthologies of verses from the Qur'an attended by introductions, summaries, comments and conclusions.

The present work is intended in support of that warning already delivered to a visible portion of the ruling elite (discussed later in this book), and is supplemented extensively by The Qur'an: A Complete Revelation.[2]

It is not the object here to convince the reader of the relevance of the Qur'an, or to disentangle that scripture from the interpolations and impositions practiced upon it by the religion which claims it as its foundational scripture. Those duties are covered principally by The Qur'an: A Complete Revelation.

Nor do I attempt here to convince the reader of the existence of the ruling elite or to supply proof of their operations. A primary audience for this work is the ruling elite themselves for whom such details are unnecessary, and it is expected that other readers will have either conducted such investigations for themselves or be motivated to do so now, if it is still possible.

I have also resisted the temptation to base this presentation upon extensive external references, the Qur'anic imperative to remind by means of the Qur'an[3] here being the principal guide.

In this work, I outline a process of warning demonstrated by a number of messengers whose histories are found in the Qur'an, leveraging facets of the text to derive a core set of actions required of a warner under that mechanism we will be calling here the God protocol.

I then identify within the text of the Qur'an what I call the detonating statement: the single component required to activate Muḥammad's second, unique and universal mission of warning to a single world elite such as we live under today.

Finally, I summarise the means by which we have executed that protocol with regard to the ruling elite of our day.

1 For those interested in my background, this is covered in brief in the first few pages to Solution to the Mysterious Letters of the Qur'an.

2 My principal work. For details see quranite.com.

3 See 50:45.

The Preface to my larger work *The Qur'an: A Complete Revelati*on is replicated below by way of further introduction to the present project:

> The Qur'an claims to be a complete revelation to mankind from the creator of the heavens and the earth. Within that framework, The Qur'an: A Complete Revelation has two principal objectives.
> The first is to provide the technical and legal platform for my book The God Protocol. That work shows that the Qur'an repeatedly demonstrates a formal protocol of warning as the mechanism by which aberrant ruling elites are held to account before God. It catalogues how former messengers followed this protocol, as did Muḥammad himself. That protocol of warning was in each case the legal prerequisite — the switch, if you will — for the punishments of God thereafter to become binding upon a community resulting in its total destruction, absent a meaningful change of direction by the elites of those times.
> The principal intended audience for both works is the ruling caste of our time, which comprises a small coterie of elites united in purpose to degrade, enslave, and then to eradicate most of those over whom they rule. Their policies over the last century or more have resulted in such debasement of the human stock that there can be no doubt that, left to their present course, they will be entirely successful in effecting a profitable genocide and a total and unending tyranny over those whom they leave alive to serve them.
> Most historical implementations of the protocol I mention pertained to areas ruled by elites with limited geographical reach. The ensuing destructions were, likewise, local in nature. Today, as at no other time in history, the world comprises a single community with a single ruling elite. Thus, the application of the same protocol in our time has worldwide implications.
> While potentially providing the detonator to the Eschaton is an unenviable task, the consequences of not doing so will be infinitely worse for all but the elites themselves.
> Identification of the protocol is in no way dependent upon my translation, but it was necessary to clear away some of Traditionalist Islam's more unhelpful impositions upon the Qur'an before proceeding to the main task. A legal protocol is a matter of meeting certain requirements, beginning with the fact that persons served under a protocol must have full access to the legal foundation upon which that protocol rests, even if they choose not to acquaint themselves with its details. The legal foundation in this case is the text of the Qur'an. As the language of the present ruling elite is English, the Qur'an must be presented in English. To import the meanings of certain key words as the Traditionalist does from an extraneous literature would compromise the validity of the English text as the basis for the application of the protocol. Thus, a hermeneutic was developed which treats the Qur'anic text itself as the source of definitions for important key terms. Additionally, norms of due process require that documentation and annotations attend principal legal texts in order to ensure maximum transparency. The Qur'an: A Complete Revelation meets both these requirements.

> The elites are most particular about the legal processes they use against the general population; they understand the principle of culpability: once one has been formally warned on the basis of a body of laws, he enters a fresh context legally, a context in which he is either newly culpable, or still culpable but in new way. But no one ever uses the same principles against the elites themselves. This denotes a lack of strategic awareness given that the elites' observance of legal conventions itself demonstrates that they recognise them as binding. Therefore, what is sauce for the goose may be sauce also for the gander.
> The second principal objective behind The Qur'an: A Complete Revelation is to offer the Qur'anic text to a wider audience free of the impositions made upon it by what I call brand Islam. I am not on a crusade against the Traditionalist Muslim, but I am obliged to critique his claims and check his excesses in order to illustrate where and how they are at unambiguous variance with the book he claims as his foundational scripture. I accept that righteous Traditionalist Muslims exist, as I accept that righteous men exist in a number of religions. But since the Traditionalist's religion is the principal obstacle to meaningful access to the Qur'an I am bound to address it on that basis.

I will now provide an expanded overview of the present work.

Expanded overview

This work proceeds upon the Qur'an's estimate of itself: that it is a revelation from God; that it is complete; that it is preserved — that is, that it is a complete textual narrative, one which contains the material and tools necessary within its own purview to understand its core teachings.

Within this framework, it is clear that the principle of a warner addressing his own people — and with a focus on the elites thereof — with a message urging repentance to God and submission to His laws, followed by denial on the part of those warned and the destruction of that people in toto in an act of God as a consequence is standard.[4] Moreover, it is clear that the recipient of the Qur'anic narrative was himself following in this tradition as the latest in the sequence of warners.

The Qur'an relates a number of histories pertaining to former peoples in some detail (e.g. the people of ʿĀd, and the people of Thamūd) and refers to others for which little or no detail is supplied (e.g. the people of Tubbaʿ). One narrative is found in significantly greater detail than all others, namely the mission of warning by Moses to Pharaoh. That narrative is referenced within the Qur'an as 'a precedent and an example for those who came later'[5] and thus is seen here as the one with the greatest application both for Muḥammad's missions within his lifetime,[6] as well as for the implications of Muḥammad's unique, universal mission pertinent at this time.

4 With one exception: the case of Jonah.

5 See 43:56.

By means of what we call here generic narrative summaries (i.e. statements which list events which happened in all cases of warning), we are able to construct a set of core actions which must be undertaken by a warner to fulfil the requirements of the God protocol. This list of core actions, then, comprises the bulk of that mechanism of warning which we are calling here the God protocol and which must, in the event of denial by the ruling elite, result in annihilation in an act of God.

Since all previous communities thus warned were of limited geographic extent and ruled locally by their respective elites, the instances of annihilation which pertained to them were locally contained. In the present context the world is a single community ruled — de facto if not yet openly de jure — by a single elite. The expectation here is that execution of the protocol in this time will, in the event of the punishments of God becoming binding under that protocol, result in universal destruction. On that basis, we infer that implementation of the protocol in such a context effectively implies also the advent of what the Qur'an calls the Hour — or what is referred to in Christian literature as the eschaton — namely, the end of the current age and the appearance of all men before the Judgment of God.

We noted above the relevance of Moses' mission of warning to Pharaoh and the relative wealth of detail that narrative provides. In our study of that mission we shall see that Moses himself is not able to deliver a single core component required by the protocol for the reason that he was not a member of that society; that is, he was unable to address Pharaoh and his people on the basis of shared affiliation. In that case, this vital component is supplied by a man who belonged to the people of Pharaoh, and is described in the text simply as a 'believing man'. This expansion in our understanding of the mechanism of the protocol will provide the key to the execution of the same mechanism in our time.

We will come to appreciate also that Moses had two key missions to Pharaoh — one to deliver warning to Pharaoh under the protocol, and another to deliver the children of Israel out of his hand — and then see the multiplicity of Moses' missions reflected in the narrative which treats of Muḥammad.

Muḥammad preached to his community of origin as per the God protocol. While mention of its destruction is elided from the text, the fact of its annihilation must be taken as given since no alternative exists within the framework of the mechanics of that tradition of warning Muḥammad was following.

However, it is clear also from the broader narrative that, subsequent to the original destruction

6 It is certain that Muḥammad fulfilled the requirements of the God protocol to the people of his place of origin, and clear also under the protocol that they must have been destroyed as a result. The text of the Qur'an provides further narratives which treat of later successes and of Muḥammad's later role as a leader and judge. Many of those details are part of the narrative present, i.e. related to Muḥammad's missions current in his lifetime the specifics of which are history for us now.

visited by God upon his place of origin, Muḥammad removed to a new location and led a successful campaign to win people to the Faith:

> 1 When the help of God and the victory come,
> 2 And thou seest mankind enter the doctrine[1] of God in crowds,
> 3 Give thou glory[1] with the praise of thy Lord, and ask thou forgiveness of Him; He is accepting of repentance.
> (110:1-3)

But, as already indicated, Muḥammad had a further mission:

> 158 (Say thou: "O mankind: I am the messenger of God to you all together — to whom belongs the dominion of the heavens and the earth. There is no god save He.[1] He gives life and He gives death." So believe in[2] God and His messenger, the unschooled[3] prophet, who believes in[4] God and His words; and follow him,[5] that you might be guided.)
> (7:158)

This mission is one Muḥammad could not fulfil within the constraints of the God protocol for the same reason Moses could not appeal on the basis of shared affiliation to Pharaoh. In his role as "the messenger of God to you all together" Muḥammad could not, while living, have correctly addressed a unified, single world community as a member thereof. Such a community did not exist within his lifetime, nor did there exist a single language uniting all peoples in which he could have addressed them. Muḥammad belonged to a geographically limited community in 7th century Arabia and spoke the local language.

But all parts of the protocol which pertain to Muḥammad's universal mission are preserved within the revelation he was given, including what we are calling the detonating statement required to initiate his universal mission.

And today, there exists in effect a single world state under a single ruling elite — one to which a single message of warning can be delivered. And today also, the elites of this one-world state understand a single language.

And that language is English.

This work provides the detonating statement of warning required to initiate Muḥammad's mission to "mankind[...] all together" and delivers that statement to the elites of our times. That statement is supported in the first instance by the present work and, beyond that, by our larger work The Qur'an: A Complete Revelation.

Details of those to whom the detonating statement has been addressed may be found at warningtotheelite.org.

While every effort has been made to produce a work equal to its purpose, the later writing stages of The God Protocol were completed at a time of intense pressure;[7] at a certain point[8] I judged the need for publication to outweigh whatever benefit that could possibly accrue from time spent on further improvements to style, syntax, or grammar.

7 I mean here principally for those who understand what the roll-out of the Covid agenda signifies.

Chapter One

Warning

1. Warning

The manufacture of culpability

Before we look at the details of the Qur'an's own statements, we should note that man's societies accept — and have accepted for millennia — the legal force of warning as the means to manufacture culpability.

Let us take the Miranda warning the opening section of which is known to most from American movies; this reads:

> You have the right to remain silent. Anything you say can and will be used against you in a court of law. You have the right to have an attorney. If you cannot afford one, one will be appointed to you by the court. With these rights in mind, are you still willing to talk with me about the charges against you?

While other countries have their own formulas, all such protocols have in common a shift in legal status as a function of this type of issuance of warning.

Other protocols with similar outcomes exist. In the UK for example, before work requiring planning permission is undertaken, a notice must be placed in public view near the location the permission has been applied for. A notice is typically placed in a local newspaper also. Some areas require that inhabitants adjacent to the site be informed. In short, in order to achieve what may be considered consent, the relevant agencies simply have to provide local residents with reasonable opportunity to become apprised of the facts, an opportunity which they may or may not avail themselves of.

Non-action by the same implies consent. Black's Dictionary of Law defines consent as:

> A concurrence of wills. Express consent is that directly given, either lira voce or in writing. Implied consent is that manifested by signs, actions, or facts, or by inaction or silence, which raise a presumption that the consent has been given.[1]

The significance of this point will be clear towards the end of this work.

1 Emphasis added.

The elites' use of warning

The ruled rarely understand the law; they assume an understanding of the words used in law, but rarely possess the same understanding of those words as those who write them.

The elites understand the meaning of laws; and when they inform — that is, issue legal warnings to — the populous they rule, the implications are clear to those who issue those warnings even if they are not to those to whom they are directed.

The format of the elites' general warnings vary. Some are issued in the form of blockbuster films, some via major news outlets or other corporate media, all of which are owned or controlled by the elites themselves. The fact that the population at large will not understand the legal implication of a particular warning is immaterial, or even that most individuals choose not to apprise themselves of its substance. Once the masses have been warned, the elite's hands, as they see it, are clean.[2]

We find also certain public monuments functioning as warnings. For example, the Georgia Guidestones logically require for realisation of their premises the reduction of the present world population by some seven billion people.[3]

At the time of writing,[4] the Agenda item called Covid-19 is in its second year of implementation. To date, to my knowledge, nowhere has there been enacted a law which compels the population to take the so-called vaccines; the decision to comply with the Media imperatives remains for now technically the choice of the individual. This is yet another demonstration of the importance to those rolling out the Agenda that culpability for compliance rest with the individual.

In summary, the ruling elites follow strict protocols as they implement their plans at the heart of which lies the concept of the manufacture of culpability.

Warning is the mechanism by which God makes men culpable

Despite what the elites may believe about themselves and their role and destiny, they are men and subject to the common fate of men, being created by God and destined to stand before Him at the Judgment. And the elites are able to leverage warning in order to manufacture culpability

2 These types of warnings function also as what is known as predictive programming: that is, as cultural narratives which serve to produce in the target audience a sense of inevitability or naturalness in the events described by the propaganda becoming fact.

3 The Georgia Guidestones open in English with: Maintain humanity under 500,000,000[...]. I have personally visited the Georgia Guidestones; the main feature at the site is an astrological monument comprising large stones on which a single statement is found in eight languages: English, Spanish, Swahili, Hindi, Hebrew, Arabic, Chinese and Russian. I was interested to note that while the English is grammatically correct, the Russian contains multiple basic errors, as do several of the other languages. On that basis, I conclude that English is the only language at the site with legal force.

only because that mechanism is itself expressive of principles extant in the creation of God. Thus, the principle of warning which the elites practice with such punctiliousness upon the populations they rule may be applied also to them, and that expectation is implicit in the Qur'anic method.

It is true that the Qur'an cites God's mercy frequently. However, it is unfounded wishful thinking to proceed upon the basis that the punishments of God upon the guilty are anything but terrible and permanent. God allows men time in which to repent and seek forgiveness and, if they do so, He is entirely merciful. But when man is obdurate in the face of warning and dies unrepentant, the result is Hell:

> 71 And those who ignore warning[1] will be driven into Gehenna in companies. When[2] they have come to it, the gates thereof will be opened, and the keepers thereof will say to them: "Came there not to you messengers from among you, reciting to you the proofs[3] of your Lord, and warning you of the meeting of this day of yours?" They will say: "Verily."[4] But the word of punishment is binding[5] upon the false claimers of guidance.[6]
> 72 It will be said: "Enter the gates of Gehenna, abiding eternally therein"; and evil is the dwelling of the proud.
> (39:71-72)

Refusal to acknowledge God's warning is no defence

Just as most of those who comprise the populations managed and owned by today's elites mock or flatly refute the veracity of the words of those who attempt to explain to them the workings of the systems by which they are controlled, so certain categories of men treat lightly the warnings brought through the ages by messengers of God. But failure to take seriously warning originating with God does nothing to mitigate the consequences.

> 11 Woe, that day, to the deniers[1]
> 12 — Who in vain discourse[1] are playing —
> 13 The day they are shoved, with violence,[1] into the fire of Gehenna!
> 14 "This is the Fire which you denied:
> 15 "Is this sorcery?[1] Or do you not see?
> 16 "Burn therein! And be you patient or be you not patient — it is the same for you; you are but being rewarded for what you did."
> (52:11-16)

The Qur'an uses the word translated above deniers frequently. While the cultural narrative I call brand Islam would have one believe that it signifies those who reject the construct it calls Islam, systematic analysis[5] shows that such a value contradicts many Qur'anic contexts.

5 For a full dissection of the Traditionalist's conflation of his later religion with terms found throughout the Qur'an, see The Qur'an: A Complete Revelation.

Rather, the emphasis is upon one's response to the warnings brought either directly by a man sent by God or, indirectly, via a scripture:

> 35 And We said: "O Adam: dwell thou and thy wife in the garden, and eat[1] thereof freely wheresoever you[2] will; but approach[3] not this tree lest you[4] be of the wrongdoers."[5]
> 36 But the satan[1] caused them[2] to fall therefrom, and turned them[3] out of what they[4] were in; and We said: "Get you all[5] down, an enemy to one another; and for you in the earth are a dwelling-place and provision for a time."
> 37 Then received Adam words from his Lord, and He[1] turned towards him; He is the Accepting of Repentance, the Merciful.
> 38 We said: "Get you down from it all together. And if[1] there comes to you guidance from Me, whoso follows My guidance: no fear will be upon them, nor will they grieve.
> 39 "But those who ignore warning[1] and deny Our proofs:[2] those are the companions of the Fire; therein they abide eternally."
> (2:35-39)

A further category of men chooses to ignore warning, something akin to the manner in which some choose to disregard the clear statements of warning and intent which the ruling elite issue. But here again, the fact that a man elected to remain ignorant of the existence of such statements does nothing to mitigate or modify his culpability:

> 45 And those before them denied; and they attained not a tenth[1] of what We gave them but they denied My messengers — then how was My rejection!
> 46 Say thou: "I but exhort you to one thing: that you stand up for[1] God in twos and alone, then reflect."[2] Your companion is not possessed;[3] he is only a warner to you before[4] a severe punishment.
> (34:45-46)

Summary

We have seen that issuance of warning is the means to manufacture culpability under their own laws practiced by the elite upon those they rule, and that issuance of warning, even when disregarded, places the burden of responsibility upon the one addressed.

We have seen that warning is also the mechanism by which God makes men culpable, and in what follows we will identify the details of this mechanism from the Qur'an. We are calling this mechanism and its application the God Protocol. It is a formal process, and one implemented many times in the past, under which the punishments of God were made binding upon communities ruled by men who had become miscreant and tyrannical.

Given the worldwide system of tyranny now in place, this protocol is of central relevance today.

Chapter Two

Warners in the Qur'an

2. Warners in the Qur'an

Warning in times past: messengers, prophets, and lay believers

One who reads the Qur'an (at least, one who reads the text unencumbered by Traditionalist Islam's pre-existing commitment to assert itself as the Book's purpose and expression) cannot fail to note a recurring pattern: a warner comes to a people from God; that people — and generally the ruling elites thereof — reject that warning; the people are destroyed suddenly.

Most conspicuous in the text among those prophets and messengers whose historical narratives treat of the God protocol are the following:

- Noah: sent to the people of Noah[1]
- Hūd: sent to ʿĀd
- Ṣāliḥ: sent to Thamūd
- Lot: sent to the people of Lot[2]
- Shuʿayb: sent to Madyan
- Moses: sent to Pharaoh
- Jonah: sent to the people of Jonah
- Muḥammad: sent both to his people and to mankind "all together"

We will cover these messengers of warning in some detail further into our presentation. Of note at this juncture is the fact that, according to the Qur'anic narrative, repentance and avoidance of destruction occurs in one case only:

> 98 Oh, that a city had but[1] believed and profited by its faith save the people of Jonah![2] When they believed, We removed from them the punishment of disgrace in the life of this world, and gave them enjoyment for a time.
> (10:98)

A point elided from the Islamist's presentation is that, according to the Qur'an, common believers are called upon also to convey a message to mankind:

> 143 And thus[1] We made you [i.e. adherents of the Qur'an] an intermediary community that you might be witnesses to mankind, and that the Messenger might be a witness to you.[2]
> (2:143)

---

1 In my translation, I use the anglicised naming conventions wherever possible, but that should not be seen as a full endorsement of all dominant geographical claims regarding location. For our purposes, it does not matter where precisely the events covered in our review took place. In those cases where positive identification with known Bible figures is not possible, I render using transliteration from the Arabic.

2 Also referred to as 'the cities thrown down' in the Qur'an.

In support of this assertion, we point to the fact that the Qur'an presents narratives which treat of laymen who supported messengers of warning. For example, consider the following:

> 20 And a man came running from the furthest part of the city.[1] He said: "O my people: follow the emissaries!
> 21 "Follow those who ask of you no reward, and they are guided.
> 22 "And why should I not serve Him who originated me, and to whom you will be returned?
> 23 "Shall I take gods besides[1] Him? If the Almighty[2] intends me harm, their intercession will avail me nothing, nor can they rescue me;[3] > 24 "Then should I be in manifest error.
> 25 "I believe in[1] your Lord; so hear me!"
> 26 It was said: "Enter thou the Garden."[1] He said: "I would that my people knew
> 27 "Of how my Lord has pardoned me, and placed me among the honoured!"
> 28 And We sent not down upon his people after him any host[1] from the sky; — and nor would We have sent down —
> 29 It was only one Blast, and then were they extinguished.
> (36:20-29)

And as we shall come to appreciate, it is a Qur'anic principle that, to be effective, the mechanism of warning delivered to a community must include an expression of affiliation by a member of that community. In the case of the house of Pharaoh — a people to which Moses, though sent, did not belong — this office is supplied by one of his own house:

> 28 And there said a believing man[1] of the house of Pharaoh[2] who concealed his faith: "Would you kill a man because he says: 'My Lord is God,' and has brought you clear signs from your Lord? If he is lying, then upon him is his lie; and if he is truthful, some of what he promises you will befall you. God guides not him who is a committer of excess and a liar.
> 29 "O my people: yours is the dominion this day, you being dominant[1] in the land, but who will help us against the wrath of God if it comes to us?" Pharaoh[2] said: "I only show you what I see, and I only guide you to the path of rectitude."
> 30 And he who heeded warning[1] said: "O my people: I fear for you the like of the day of the parties,
> 31 "The like of the case[1] of the people of Noah, and ʿĀd, and Thamūd, and those after them; and God desires not injustice for the servants.[2]
> 32 "And O my people: I fear for you the Day of Calling,
> 33 "The day you will turn and go[1] having not against God any defender; and whom God sends astray, for him there is no guide.
> (40:28-33)

We will consider the role of the 'believing man' of the segment above in detail later in our presentation.

Summary

We have noted that the process of warning, followed (almost invariably) by denial and thus in destruction in an act of God, is a pattern which occurs multiple times in the Qur'an.

Delivery of all parts of God's warning to a people as the mechanism for making that people culpable before God is, within the Qur'anic narrative, normally the preserve of chosen messengers and prophets, but we have seen that laymen are found to take a role in this mechanism on occasion.

Lastly, we have noted that the God protocol requires an expression of affiliation as one of its components, and have pointed to the precedent of a layman supplying that component in the case of a prophet and messenger who himself could not do so, as was the case of Moses in his mission of warning to Pharaoh and his house.

Chapter Three

Muḥammad and the protocol of warning

3. Muḥammad and the protocol of warning

Introduction

The purpose of the present chapter is to provide a broader context for our principal analysis. Here we will show that Muḥammad's mission was presented to him, and was to be understood by him, as that of a further warner following in a sequence of earlier warners admonishing their communities prior to events of localised destruction, but with an emphasis also in his case on the Hour itself; that the revelation he received, the Qur'an, was to form the basis of his message of warning; that his principal obligation was to convey that message, with responsibility for their fate lying with those who heard it and responsibility for the outcome of that process resting with God alone; and that the imperative to warn placed upon Muḥammad remains operative today for his mission as the messenger of God to mankind "all together" noted in the Introduction.

Following the sections comprising segments of verses below we will summarise the system and format by which we will consider each of those messengers of warning in that sequence which begins with Noah and ends with Muḥammad, and then indicate what will follow from that analysis.

Following in a tradition of former warners

The revelation Muḥammad received assumes the model of former warners — of warning issued to a people, and of complete destruction at the hand of God in the event of denial[1] — with his own role being entirely consonant with that model:

> 50 And that He destroyed the former ʿĀd,
> 51 And Thamūd He spared not,
> 52 And the people of Noah before — they were worse in wrongdoing,[1] and worse in transgression —
> 53 And the overthrown cities[1] He cast down,[2]
> 54 And covered them with what He covered.
> 55 Then which of the blessings of thy Lord dost thou dispute?
> 56 This is a warner[1] like[2] the former warners.[3]
> (53:50-56)

The evidence of the outcome of previous implementations of that mechanism of warning we are calling the God protocol was abundant, annihilation having occurred at various times and places, the proof of which remained for those with eyes to see.

---

1 What responses constitute denial is addressed later in this presentation.

36 And We raised up in every community a messenger: "Serve God and avoid idols."[1] And among them was he whom God guided; and among them was he upon whom misguidance was binding.[2] So travel in the earth and see how was the final outcome of the deniers.
(16:36)

The protocol followed by Muḥammad's predecessors was fixed and its principles unchanging:

42 And they swore by God their strongest oaths that if a warner came to them, they would be more guided than any of the communities; but when a warner came to them, it increased them only in aversion,
43 Waxing proud in the land, and scheming evil; but the evil scheme surrounds none save its authors.[1] Then look they save for the practice[2] of the former peoples? And thou wilt not find in the practice of God any change; and thou wilt not find in the practice of God any alteration.
44 Have they not travelled in the earth and seen how was the final outcome of those who were before them? And they were stronger than them in power; but God is not such that anything in the heavens or in the earth should frustrate[1] Him; He is knowing and powerful.
(35:42-44)

This, then, was the backdrop on which Muḥammad himself was commissioned by God to stand up and warn:

1 O thou, one covering himself:
2 Arise thou and warn thou!
3 And magnify thou thy Lord,
4 And purify thou thy garments,
5 And forsake thou[1] defilement,
6 And show thou not favour seeking gain,
7 And to thy Lord be thou patient.
(74:1-7)

While his mission contained the immediate emphasis common to former warners, he was to stress also a universal event, one for which all instances of temporal destruction at the hand of God served as signposts and were prefigurements: the end of all things:

39 And warn thou them of the Day of Regret, when the matter will be concluded; but they are in heedlessness, and they do not believe.[1]
40 We will inherit[1] the earth and whoso is thereon, and to Us will they be returned.
(19:39-40)

18 And warn thou them of the Day of the Drawing Near,[1] when the hearts will choke[2] in the throats:[3] — No loyal friend for the wrongdoers![4] No intercessor who is obeyed!
19 He knows the treachery of the eyes and what the breasts conceal.
20 And God decides in justice.[1] And those to whom they call besides[2] Him decide not anything; God, He is the Hearer, the Seeing.
(40:18-20)

In keeping with those in whose footsteps he was following (as we shall come to appreciate more later in our presentation), Muḥammad himself had no knowledge of when the punishment of God might occur:

187 They ask thee concerning the Hour: "When is its arrival?"[1] Say thou: "Knowledge thereof is but with my Lord; none reveals its time save He. It weighs heavily in the heavens and the earth; it comes not upon you save unexpectedly." They ask thee as though thou wert privy[2] thereto; say thou: "Knowledge thereof is but with God";[3] but most men know not.
188 Say thou: "I have no power to do myself benefit or harm save that God should will. And had I knowledge of the Unseen, I would have acquired abundance of wealth, and evil would not have touched me; I am only a warner and bearer of glad tidings to people who believe."
(7:187-188)

105 And We decreed in the Psalms[1] after the remembrance:[2] "My righteous servants will inherit the earth."
106 In this[1] is a notification for people who serve.[2]
107 And We sent thee only as a mercy for all mankind.
108 Say thou: "It is revealed[1] to me that your God is One God. Will you then be submitting?"[2]
109 And if they turn away, say thou: "I have proclaimed to you all alike;[1] and I know not whether near or far is what you are promised.
110 "He knows what is public of speech, and He knows what you conceal.
111 "And I know not; it might be a means of denial[1] for you and enjoyment for a time."
(21:105-111)

As we have said, Muḥammad was also to understand his mission in terms of the sequence of denials, rejections, and subsequent destruction which preceded him:[2]

184 And if they deny thee, then denied were the messengers who were before thee, who came with the clear signs, and the writings,[1] and the Illuminating Writ.[2]
(3:184)

And, in the event of denial, as per the template provided by the narrative histories of the previous messengers, Muḥammad was to disavow those who opposed him:

214 And warn thou thy relatives.
215 And lower thou thy wing[1] to those who follow thee among the believers.[2]
216 And if they oppose thee, say thou: "I am quit of what you do."
(26:214-216)

2 That the place of Muḥammad's initial preaching was destroyed also is elided from the text but amenable to identification on the basis of correlations between certain textual phenomena. These will be presented in due course.

Muḥammad was to warn by the Qur'an itself

The source material for Muḥammad's mission of warning is contained within the scripture he was given: the Qur'an:

> 2 A Writ[1] sent down to thee — so let there be no distress in thy heart therefrom — that thou warn thereby, and as a reminder to the believers.[2]
> 3 Follow what has been sent down to you from your Lord, and follow not allies besides[1] Him; little do you take heed.
> 4 And how many a city have We destroyed! Our might came upon it by night, or while they slept at noonday,
> 5 And their cry when Our might came to them was only that they said: "We were wrongdoers!"[1]
> 6 Then will We question those to whom were sent, and We will question the emissaries,[1]
> 7 And We will relate to them with knowledge; and We were not absent.
> (7:2-7)

> 9 This Qur'an[1] guides to what is most upright, and brings glad tidings to the believers[2] who do righteous deeds, that they have a great reward,
> 10 And that those who believe not in[1] the Hereafter: — We have prepared for them a painful punishment.
> (17:9-10)

Moreover, the Qur'an formed the sum total of that repository of knowledge which informed Muḥammad's mission of warning; he had access to no other:

> 50 Say thou: "I say not to you: 'I possess the treasuries of God,' or: 'I know the Unseen,'[1] nor do I say to you: 'I am an angel.' I follow only what is revealed[2] to me." Say thou: "Are the blind and the seeing equal?" Will you then not[3] take thought!
> 51 And warn thou thereby[1] [i.e. with the Qur'an] those who fear that they will be gathered to their Lord, — they have no ally or intercessor besides[2] Him — that they might be in prudent fear.[3]
> (6:50-51)

Finally, Muḥammad's message of warning as contained in the revelation he was given was pertinent not only to his immediate audience but to all that it should later reach:

> 19 Say thou: "What thing is greatest in witness?" Say thou: "God is witness between me and you; and this Qur'an[1] has been revealed[2] to me that I might warn you thereby, and whom it reaches. Do you bear witness that there are other gods with God?" Say thou: "I bear not witness." Say thou: "He is but One God, and I am quit of that to which you ascribe a partnership."[3]
> (6:19)

The Qur'an: responses and features

As with previous messengers of warning, Muḥammad himself would be denied and rejected, as we shall see later. But more than that, the Qur'an itself — the sole source and expression of his mission — would also be ignored and denied:

> 41 And We have expounded[1] in this Qur'an,[2] that they take heed; but it increases them only in aversion.
> (17:41)

> 89 And We have expounded[1] for men in this Qur'an[2] every[3] similitude,[4] but most men refuse save denial.
> (17:89)

> 54 And We have expounded[1] for men in this Qur'an[2] every[3] similitude,[4] but man is, more than anything, contentious.
> (18:54)

> 58 And We have struck for men in this Qur'an[1] every[2] similitude.[3] And if thou come to them with a proof,[4] those who ignore warning[5] will say: "You[6] are only creators of vanity."
> 59 Thus does God seal the hearts of those who know not.
> (30:58-59)

> 31 And those who ignore warning[1] say: "We will never believe in[2] this Qur'an,[3] nor in what was before it."[4] But if thou couldst see when the wrongdoers[5] are brought before their Lord, refuting each other's word[...].[6] Those who were despised will say to those who had waxed proud: "Were it not for you, we would have been believers!"
> (34:31)

At a time when the language of the Torah was no longer in wide use and understanding thereof had become the preserve of a religious elite, the Qur'an was revealed in a language which the common people of Muḥammad's time and place spoke: Arabic.

> 27 And We have struck for mankind in this Qur'an[1] every[2] similitude,[3] that they might take heed;
> 28 An Arabic recitation,[1] free of deviation,[2] that they might be in prudent fear.[3]
> (39:27-28)

The purpose of the Arabic tongue[3] is clarified:

---

3 Some among the Traditionalist sects exalt Arabic as a holy language. Modern Arabic is, in fact, a basket of dialects and these are the base languages in which modern Arabs converse generally and grow up speaking. In addition, there is Modern Standard Arabic which is used as a lingua franca among educated Arabs as well as within education itself, literature, and Media. Then there is Classical Arabic. This is the language of the Qur'an. It is similar to MSA, but MSA includes the neologisms necessary for modern life, often applies different meanings to the shared stock of words, and is used with a simplified grammar. So, strictly speaking, the Arabic of the Qur'an is no more a spoken language today as is Latin, although it is much more in evidence than is Latin today. That said, while Arabic possesses a number of features which make it a highly effective means for preserving (and recovering) the meanings of words, claims for the "holiness "of Arabic (the implication being the exclusivity both of Arabic as the means for reading the Qur'an and Arabs as those most qualified to understand it) made by some are not only regrettable, they are also — if not dishonest — at least lacking full 97 And We have made it[1] easy[2] in thy tongue,[3] only that thou bear glad tidings therewith to those of prudent fear,[4] and thou warn therewith a contentious people.

(19:97)

Nevertheless, on the Day of Judgment the Messenger will lament the fact that his own people, descendants of those who spoke his language, will have abandoned the Qur'an:[4]

30 And the Messenger will say: "O my Lord: my people took this Qur'an[1] as a thing abandoned."[2]
(25:30)

But despite attempts made upon the Qur'an both from within and without the religion which claims it as its scripture, God appointed Himself its custodian:

9 We sent down the remembrance,[1] and We are its custodian.[2]
(15:9)

Principal responsibility only to convey message

Like those in whose footsteps he was following, Muḥammad's task was to follow what he was given by God and to communicate that as a message of warning:

35 And those who ascribe a partnership[1] say: "Had God willed, we would not have served, besides[2] Him, anything — neither we nor our fathers — nor would we have forbidden anything contrary to[3] Him";[4] thus did those before them. Then is there upon[5] the messengers save the clear notification?
36 And We raised up in every community a messenger: "Serve God and avoid idols."[1] And among them was he whom God guided; and among them was he upon whom misguidance was binding.[2] So travel in the earth and see how was the final outcome of the deniers.
37 Though[1] thou desire their guidance, God will not guide him whom He leaves to stray; and they have no helpers.
(16:35-37)

20 And if they argue with thee, then say thou: "I have submitted my face[1] to God, as have[2] those who follow me." And say thou to those given[3] the Writ[4] and to the unschooled:[5] "Have you submitted?"[6] And if they have submitted, then are they guided; but if they turn away, then upon thee is only the notification; and God sees the servants.[7]
(3:20)

92 And obey God and obey the Messenger,[1] and beware;[2] but if you turn away, then know that upon Our messenger is only the clear notification.
(5:92)

99 Upon the Messenger is only the notification; and God knows what you reveal and what you conceal.
(5:99)

40 And whether We show thee part of what We promise them, or We take thee, but upon thee is the notification; and upon Us is the reckoning.
(13:40)

82 And if they turn away, upon thee is only the clear notification.
(16:82)

54 Say thou: "Obey God and obey the Messenger." Then if you turn away, then upon him is what he has been given to bear, and upon you is what you have been given to bear. And if you obey him,[1] you will be guided. And upon the Messenger is only the clear notification,
(24:54)

12 And obey God, and obey the Messenger;[1] but if you turn away — then upon Our messenger is only the clear notification.
13 God, there is no god save He.[1] And in God then let the believers[2] place their trust.
(64:12-13)

Such was a longstanding principle, and one known to the great Patriarch Abraham:

16 And Abraham: when he said to his people: "Serve God, and be in prudent fear[1] of Him; that is best for you, if you would know.
17 "You but serve, other than[1] God, idols,[2] and create falsehood; those whom you serve, besides[3] God, possess for you no provision. So seek provision with God, and serve Him. And be grateful to Him; to Him will you be returned.
18 "But if you deny, then communities have denied before you; and upon the Messenger[1] is only the clear notification."
(29:16-18)

Muḥammad, then, would bear no responsibility for those who denied his message; that lay squarely with those who heard it. Meanwhile, responsibility for the outcome lay with God:

119 We sent thee with the truth[1] as a bearer of glad tidings and a warner; and thou wilt not be questioned about[2] the companions of Hell.
(2:119)

disclosure. Certainly, there is an advantage to learning to read the Qur'an in the original Arabic, not least because it is the only means by which it is possible to see for oneself where and how impositions are made upon the text by externally derived exegesis. However, the fact is that one may legitimately be warned or given glad tidings (which is the emphasis above) only in a language which one understands.

4 Furthermore, as has long been the case with those who claim most vociferously to follow Muḥammad, they follow, rather, a literature of their own contrivance which they ascribe to him but which he never saw, and upon which basis they have constructed a religion with a number of tributary ideologies, certain strains of which are today called Islam. While this subject is beyond the remit of the present work, the interested reader will find much to sustain him in my work The Qur'an: A Complete Revelation.

44 So leave thou Me with those who deny this narrative.[1] We will lead them by degrees, whence[2] they know not;
(68:44)

11 And leave thou Me with the deniers, the possessors of prosperity, and grant thou them respite a little.
(73:11)

11 Leave thou Me with him whom I created alone,
(74:11)

The Messenger had no power to induce those who heard him to believe and, like those before him, was to remain steadfast in his mission of warning and not to seek to accelerate the punishments of God:

41 And if they deny thee, then say thou: "To me be my work, and to you be your work; you are quit of what I do, and I am quit of what you do."
42 And among them are some who listen to thee — canst thou make the deaf to hear, though they do not reason?
43 And among them is he who looks at thee — canst thou guide the blind when they do not see?
44 God wrongs not men in anything; but men wrong their souls.
(10:41-44)

35 So be thou patient, as those of determination among the messengers were patient, and seek thou not to hasten for them.[1] The day they see what they are promised, it will be as though they had not tarried an hour of a day. Notification![2]
And will there be destroyed save the perfidious[3] people?
(46:35)

Finally, the act of imparting the warning to its intended audience was the only protection the Messenger himself had against punishment:

20 Say thou: "I but call to my Lord, and ascribe not a partnership[1] with Him to anyone."[2]
21 Say thou: "I have no power over you for harm or for rectitude."[1]
22 Say thou: "None will grant me protection against God, nor will I find, besides[1] Him, a refuge
23 "Save notification from God and His messages." And whoso opposes God and His messenger, for him is the fire of Gehenna; they abiding eternally therein forever.
(72:20-23)

Muḥammad: the messenger of God to mankind "all together"

But beyond his mission of warning to the people of his own time, Muḥammad was uniquely tasked also as the messenger of God to all mankind:

158 (Say thou: "O mankind: I am the messenger of God to you all together — to whom belongs the dominion of the heavens and the earth. There is no god save He.[1] He gives life and He gives death." So believe in[2] God and His messenger, the unschooled[3] prophet, who believes in[4] God and His words; and follow him,[5] that you might be guided.)
(7:158)

This distinction conferred upon Muḥammad is central to our broader analysis and one to which we will return.

And, finally, while Muḥammad was mortal and his role that of a messenger, his work was not to end with his demise but to be continued by those who followed him:[5]

143 And thus[1] We made you [i.e. adherents of the Qur'an] an intermediary community that you might be witnesses to mankind, and that the Messenger might be a witness to you.[2]
(2:143)

144 And Muḥammad is only a messenger; messengers have passed away before him. If then he dies or is killed, will you turn back on your heels? And he who turns back on his heels does no harm to God at all; and God will reward the grateful.
(3:144)

Summary

Warning as the means of creating culpability is central both to the function of the Qur'an as a whole and to the message and missions of Muḥammad as contained within it. It informs each of the historical narratives which treat of those warners in whose footsteps Muḥammad was following, and we will examine each case in some detail in subsequent chapters.

The means by which Muḥammad was to warn was the Qur'an itself, which book both provided the source material for his own mission and is explicitly intended to reach people outside the Messenger's own time, location, and community. Meanwhile, God named Himself its guardian.

We have seen that while Muḥammad is told to declare himself the messenger of God to mankind "all together" — a distinction bestowed upon no other warner — the fact of his own mortality and eventual natural demise was not to discourage men of faith from following what he had brought.

Despite his honoured role and mission, Muḥammad had no information beyond that communicated to him, and via him to us, in the Qur'an.

5 This expectation is elided from the Traditionalist's presentation having been supplanted by (often unthinking) re-enactments of a later imagining of Muḥammad's example drawn from an entirely different literature.

We have seen also that the Qur'an would be denied by those who rejected the Messenger, scorned by many it was to reach, and later abandoned by the descendants of those who first followed him.

This, then, comprises a useful backdrop upon which to consider the principal narrative segments treating of the historical messengers of warning contained in the revelation given to Muḥammad, and in the light of which we will be best able to understand the details of Muḥammad's own missions of warning.

Notes on structure and approach

Our default structure in presenting each in that sequence of warners which begins with Noah and ends with Muḥammad which comprises much of this study will be to present some introductory information on the warner who forms the subject of the chapter, then to list the principal segments of the Qur'an which treat of his implementation of that mechanism we are calling here the God protocol. Following each segment or multiples thereof any commentary will be provided.

When the principal segments are exhausted, we will list the features of that warner's mission using a set of standardised descriptions attended by a set of Qur'anic references drawn from the segments supplied under the following headings:

- Characteristic sins of those the warner addressed
- Actions of the warner
- Actions of those the warner addresses
- Other key features[6]
- The conclusion of the matter

The use of standardised descriptions[7] to list the features of each warner's mission allows us to compile and then to compare the presence or otherwise of such features across multiple missions, our goal being to identify patterns of comparable behaviour where they exist across multiple cases. The results are also summarised in visual form in the Tables section at the end of this book.

Finally, we provide a commentary under a further heading entitled Contemporary echoes of sins

6 Where required.

7 It may be felt that the set of standardised descriptions we are using is subjective; that particular features could be better named in particular cases; or that the application of a term used fits some instances more perfectly than others. However, we are attempting to create a system of taxonomy to describe the topography of histories each of which has its own colour, emphasis, and linguistic and narrative features, and in order that our results should not become unduly atomised and unwieldy, we are willing to err on the side of approximation in some cases so that the output should be a dataset we can work with.

characteristic of that time. We shall see as we progress that those sins characteristic of each of the individual communities to which messengers were sent are all actively promoted today by the unified worldwide system under which we live, one directed, as we have said, by a single cabal of ruling elites.

While our intention is to keep our personal commentary and annotations to a minimum, we are required by the nature of our primary object of identifying the protocol to supply on occasion some extended analysis, particularly in our consideration of the cases of Abraham and Moses.

Additionally, we supply a full discussion of what we are calling generic narrative summaries in Chapter 8 upon which platform we will be able to summarise those actions required by a warner in order to execute a legitimate implementation of the God protocol.

Towards the close of our presentation we will consider the detonating statement mentioned in the Introduction in the case of Muḥammad's mission to mankind "all together" and how it is to be delivered in the present context: that of a unified world under a single ruling elite.

Chapter Four

Noah

4. Noah

Noah: the first warner

The basic storyline of Noah's flood is known across the world, and a summary of the Biblical narrative follows:

> Noah was a righteous man and walked with God. Seeing that the earth was corrupt and filled with violence, God instructed Noah to build an Ark in which he, his sons, and their wives, together with male and female of all living creatures, would be saved from the waters. Noah entered the Ark in his six hundredth year, and on the 17th day of the second month of that year "the fountains of the Great Deep burst apart and the floodgates of heaven broke open" and rain fell for forty days and forty nights until the highest mountains were covered to a depth of 15 cubits, and all earth-based life perished except Noah and those with him in the Ark.[1]

The Biblical account seems woven together from two versions which are in some tension with each other. It also includes notions found nowhere in the Qur'anic account such as Noah as 'a drinker of wine'.

From the point of view of our analysis, the Qur'an's account of Noah is the first historical instance of the application of that mechanism of warning followed by destruction which we are calling the God protocol.

While it is clear from the historical record that a major deluge affected a wide geographical area in the ancient world, we leave here the question of whether the Flood impacted the entire earth and proceed to the features of this implementation of the God protocol as outlined in the Qur'an.

We list nine principal segments in this chapter and provide any commentary in note form below.

Segment 1

> 1 We sent Noah to his people: "Warn thou thy people before a painful punishment come[1] to them."
> 2 He said: "O my people: I am to you a clear warner:
> 3 "Serve God, and be in prudent fear[1] of Him, and obey me.[2]
> 4 "He will forgive you of your transgressions,[1] and delay you to a stated term; the term of God, when it comes, cannot be delayed, if you but knew."
> 5 He said: "My Lord: I have called my people night and day,

1 https://en.wikipedia.org/wiki/Genesis_flood_narrative

6 "But my calling increased them not save in flight.
7 "And whenever I called them, that Thou mightest forgive them, they put their fingers in their ears and covered themselves with their garments, and persisted, and waxed proudly insolent.[1]
8 "Then I called to them openly;
9 "Then I proclaimed to them, and confided to them in secret,
10 "And I said: 'Ask forgiveness of your Lord: — He is all-forgiving[1] —
11 "'He will send the sky upon you in torrents,
12 "'And will supply you with wealth and sons, and make for you gardens, and make for you rivers.'"[1]
13 What ails you that you look not for majesty in God,
14 When He has created you in stages?
15 Have you not considered how God created seven heavens in harmony,[1]
16 And made the moon therein a light[1] and made the sun a torch?
17 And God caused you to grow as a growth from the earth.
18 Then He will return you into it, and bring you forth again.[1]
19 And God made for you the earth as a carpet,[1]
20 That you might follow the broad ways thereof.
21 Noah said: "My Lord: they have opposed me, and followed him whose wealth and children increase him not save in loss.
22 "And they have schemed a mighty scheme,"
23 (And they said: "You are not to leave your gods;[1] and you are not to leave Wadd,[2] or Suwāʿ,[3] or Yaghūth,[4] and Yaʿūq,[5] and Nasr."[6])
24 "And they have led many astray. And increase Thou not the wrongdoers[1] save in error!"[2]
25 Because of their offences[1] they were drowned, and made to enter a Fire, and they found for them, besides[2] God, no helpers.
26 And Noah said: "My Lord: leave Thou not upon the earth, among the false claimers of guidance,[1] an inhabitant.
27 "If Thou leave them, they will lead Thy servants astray, and beget not save licentious ingrates.[1]
28 "My Lord: forgive Thou me and my parents, and him who enters my house as a believer,[1] and the believing men,[2] and the believing women.[3] And increase Thou not the wrongdoers[4] save in ruin!"
(71:1-28)

The wording of the opening verse implies that punishment was conditional upon the response of the people to whom Noah was sent.

It is clear from the broader context that idolatry and polytheism were rife. We note Noah's statement of affiliation with his people in "O my people", a formula with which we shall become increasingly familiar.

The people of Noah then reject him and follow the powerful among them who appeal to them to follow the gods[2] current at that time.

2 It is worth knowing that wadd in Arabic means love, and suwāʿ is connected with the concept of time. If one considers contemporary popular idols, that pantheon contains a mental altar to the god of Love (in a highly sexualised form devoid of higher purpose); and if one considers the dumbed down philosophical sound bites such as Just Do It or yolo (you only live once) — what are they when properly understood but mantras at the altar of the god of Time?

When it becomes clear to Noah that the case is hopeless, he asks God to show no mercy.

Verse 71:27 indicates degeneration of the genetic strain; we touch on this again towards the end of the chapter.

Segment 2

59 We sent Noah to his people, and he said: "O my people: serve God; you have no god but He; I fear for you the punishment of a tremendous day."
60 Said the eminent ones among his people: "We see thee in manifest error."
61 He said: "O my people: there is no error in me; but I am a messenger from the Lord of All Creation:
62 "I convey to you the messages of my Lord, and give sincere counsel to you; and I know from God what you know not.
63 "Do you marvel that there has come to you remembrance[1] from your Lord through a man among you, that he should warn you, and that you should be in prudent fear,[2] and that you might obtain mercy?"
64 Then they denied him;[1] so We delivered him and those with him in the ship, and drowned those who denied Our proofs;[2] they were a blind people.
(7:59-64)

One concludes that the ruling elite of the day was Noah's principal audience (called 'the eminent ones' in the text), since it is they who respond to him. We will see as we proceed through the sequence of warners that addressing the elites is standard under the God protocol.

Segment 3

71 And recite thou to them the report of Noah, when he said to his people: "O my people: if my presence[1] and my reminding you of the proofs[2] of God be grievous to you, then in God have I placed my trust; so resolve upon your plan[3] and your partners;[4] then let not your plan[5] be unclear[6] to you;[7] then move decisively[8] against me, and grant me no respite.
72 "And if you turn away, then have I asked of you no reward; my reward is only upon[1] God; and I have been commanded to be among those submitting."[2]
73 Then they denied him;[1] so We delivered him, and those with him in the ship, and made them successors, and We drowned those who denied Our proofs.[2] Then see thou how was the final outcome of those who had been warned!
(10:71-73)

Noah here resorts to what we will come to see is a common stratagem: he places his affair entirely in the hands of God and challenges the unbelievers to do their worst.

We see also that denial on the part of those warned triggers destruction, while Noah and those with him are saved. This too is a motif with which we will become familiar as we progress through the sequence of warners, denial, and resultant destruction.

Segment 4

25 And We sent Noah to his people: "I am to you a clear warner,
26 "That you serve not save God; I fear for you the punishment of a painful day."
27 Then said the eminent ones who disbelieved[1] among his people: "We see thee not but as a mortal like us; and we see not that any follow thee save those who are the abject among us, at first appearance;[2] and we see not in you[3] over us any merit.[4] The truth is,[5] we think you are liars."
28 He said: "O my people: have you considered:[1] if I be upon clear evidence from my Lord, and there has come to me mercy from Him, but made obscure to you: should we compel you to it when you are averse to it?"
29 And: "O my people: I ask of you for it no wealth; my reward is only upon[1] God. And I am not one to drive away those who heed warning;[2] they are going to meet their Lord. But I see you are a people in ignorance."
30 And: "O my people: who will save me from God if I drive them away? Will you then not[1] take heed!"
31 And: "I say not to you: 'I have the treasuries of God,' or: 'I have knowledge of the Unseen,' nor do I say: 'I am an angel,' nor say I to[1] those whom your eyes disdain: 'God will not give them good.'" — God best knows what is in their souls — "Indeed, I would then be of the wrongdoers."[2]
32 They said: "O Noah: thou hast disputed with us — and hast greatly disputed with us — so bring thou upon us what thou promisest us, if thou be of the truthful."
33 He said: "God will but bring it upon you, if He wills; and you cannot escape.
34 "And my sincere counsel will not profit you, if I desire to give you sincere counsel, if God has desired to cause you to err; He is your Lord, and to Him will you be returned."
35 (If[1] they say: "He has invented it,"[2] say thou: "If I have invented it, then upon me is my crime — but I am quit of what you commit."[3])
36 And Noah was instructed:[1] "None of thy people will believe but he who has believed already; so despair thou not at what they did.
37 "And make thou the ship under Our eyes and Our instruction;[1] and address thou Me not concerning those who have done wrong; they will be drowned."
38 And he made the ship. And every time eminent ones among his people passed by him they derided him. He said: "If you deride us, yet will we deride you just as you deride,
39 "And you will come to know to whom comes a punishment that disgraces him, and upon whom there descends a lasting punishment."
40 When[1] Our command had come to pass, and the oven[2] boiled over, We said: "Load thou therein of every pair, two; and thy household — save him against whom the word has gone forth — and him who believes." And there believed with him only a few.
41 And he said: "Embark therein! In the name of God be her passage and her anchorage.[1] My Lord is forgiving and merciful."
42 And it sailed with them amid waves like mountains; and Noah called to his son: — and he was set apart — "O my son: embark thou with us, and be thou not with the false claimers of guidance."[1]
43 Said he: "I will take shelter in a mountain that will protect me from the water." He said: "There is no protector this day from the command of God save for him upon whom He has mercy." And the waves came between them;[1] and he was among the drowned.
44 And it was said: "O earth: swallow thou thy water," and: "O sky: desist thou," and the water subsided and the matter was concluded. And it came to rest[1] upon Al-Jūdī.[2] And it was said: "Away with the wrongdoing[3] people!"
45 And Noah called to his Lord, and said: "My Lord: my son was of my household — and Thy promise is the truth;[1] and Thou art the most just of judges."
46 He said: "O Noah: he was not of thy household. He was a deed not righteous;[1] so ask thou Me not of that whereof thou hast no knowledge; I admonish thee lest thou be of the ignorant."
47 Said he: "My Lord, in Thee do I seek refuge lest I ask of Thee that whereof I have no knowledge; and save Thou forgive me, and have mercy on me, I will be among the losers."
48 It was said: "O Noah: get thee down in peace from Us, and blessings upon thee and upon nations[1] out of those with thee. And nations will We give enjoyment — then a painful punishment from Us will touch them."
49 That is from the reports of the Unseen that We reveal[1] to thee; thou knewest it not, neither thou, nor thy people before this. So be thou patient; the final outcome is for those of prudent fear.[2]
(11:25-49)

Verse 11:35 is an aside addressed primarily to the Prophet.

At 11:36 God tells Noah that no more will believe than have believed already, and we know from the broader text that in the event very few believed with Noah. According to the Qur'anic presentation overall the warners' missions which ended in destruction under the protocol do not seem ever to have generated wide support.

Verses 11:45-47 indicate that Noah's son was not of his loins, but may suggest also that he was in some way genetically compromised.[3]

The close of the segment at 11:48-49 both anticipates a time at which a future punishment or punishments will again descend upon mankind, and establishes that those who fear God are the ultimate winners.

Segment 5

76 And Noah: when[1] he called before, then We responded to him and delivered him and his household from the great distress.

3 See also 71:27 above. There exists a mass of material in the literature — religious, philosophical, and secular — from Ancient Greek and Hebrew texts through to modern writers which develops the theme of genetic corruption at this time, the details of which we elide here in the interests of concentrating upon the text of the Qur'an.

77 And We helped him against the people who denied Our proofs;[1] they were a people of evil, so We drowned them all together.
(21:76-77)

This segment rehearses in compact form salient points of the broader narrative.

Segment 6

23 And We sent Noah to his people, and he said: "O my people: serve God; you have no god but He. Will you then not[1] be in prudent fear!"
24 Then said the eminent ones who disbelieved[1] among his people: "This is only a mortal like you, desiring to take precedence over you. And had God willed, He would have sent down angels. We heard not of this among our fathers of old.
25 "He is only a man possessed;[1] so wait for him for a time."[2]
26 He said: "My Lord: help Thou me because they have denied me."
27 And We instructed[1] him: "Make thou the ship under Our eyes and Our instruction;[2] then when Our command comes and the oven[3] boils over, load thou therein of each kind two, and thy household save him against whom the word has gone forth among them. And address thou Me not on behalf of those who do wrong; they will be drowned.
28 "And when thou art seated — thou and whoso is with thee — upon the ship, say thou: 'Praise belongs to God who has delivered us from the wrongdoing[1] people.'"
29 "And say thou: 'My Lord: set Thou me down at a blessed landing-place; and Thou art the best of those who set down.'"
30 In that are proofs;[1] and We are testing.
(23:23-30)

Of additional interest here is the fact that the ruling elites to which Noah is addressing himself accuse him of lacking sanity ("possessed" in the text).

Segment 7

105 The people of Noah denied the emissaries
106 When their brother Noah said to them: "Will you not be in prudent fear?[1]
107 "I am to you a trustworthy messenger,
108 "So be in prudent fear[1] of God, and obey me.[2]
109 "And I ask of you for it no reward; my reward is only upon[1] the Lord of All Creation;
110 "So be in prudent fear[1] of God, and obey me."[2]
111 They said: "Are we to believe thee when the abject follow thee?"
112 He said: "And what knowledge have I of what they did?
113 "Their reckoning is only upon[1] my Lord, were you to perceive.
114 "And I am not one to drive away the believers.[1]

115 "I am only a clear warner."
116 They said: "If thou cease not, O Noah, thou wilt be of those stoned."
117 He said: "My Lord: my people have denied me,
118 "So decide Thou between me and them,[1] and deliver Thou me and those with me among the believers."[2]
119 So We delivered him and those with him in the laden ship.
120 Then We drowned thereafter those remaining.
121 In that is a proof,[1] but most of them are not believers.[2]
122 And thy Lord: He is the Exalted in Might, the Merciful.
(26:105-122)

The segment above rehearses in compact form salient aspects of the broader narrative, adding two points to what we have already seen: firstly, the people of Noah threaten to kill him if he does not relent in his mission and, secondly, most people to whom the proofs of this narrative come deny it.[4]

Segment 8

14 And We sent Noah to his people, and he tarried among them a thousand years save fifty years; and the Flood took them when they were wrongdoers.[1]
15 But We delivered him and those with him in the ship; and We made it a proof[1] for all mankind.
(29:14-15)

This segment rehearses points already made, and adds confirmation of the lifespan ascribed to Noah in the Hebrew scriptures of 950 years.[5]

Segment 9

9 The people of Noah denied before them; they denied Our servant, and said: "One possessed"; and he was repelled.
10 So he called to his Lord: "I am defeated, so help Thou."
11 Then opened We the gates of heaven with water pouring,
12 And caused the earth to gush forth with springs; and the waters met for a predetermined purpose.[1]
13 And We bore[1] him upon that of planks and nails,
14 Sailing[1] before Our eyes as reward for one denied.

---

4 That is, they deny such proofs as are contained within the Qur'anic text, in the physical record which attests to a widespread flood, and in the remains of the physical Ark — a subject which is beyond the bounds of this work.

5 The fact that in the distant past men lived what today would be considered impossibly long lives is attested to by Hesiod and others. That period is referred to within the Greek philosophical tradition as the Golden Age. Under that system of understanding history, we are living presently in the Iron Age which corresponds in the Vedic tradition with Kali Yuga.

15 And We left it[1] as a proof;[2] so is there any who will remember?
16 Then how were My punishment and My warnings?
17 And We have made the Qur'an[1] easy for remembrance;[2] so is there any who will remember?
(54:9-17)

This segment rehearses in compact form salient aspects of the broader narrative. Of additional interest here is the fact that sūrah 54 as a whole contains a series of summaries of cases where messengers delivered messages of warning of destruction to ruling elites, were rejected, and each community was utterly destroyed in an act of God as a result,[6] of which the story of Noah is but one.

Characteristic sins of the warner's people

- Idolatry (taking a god other than God).
- Polytheism (worship of multiple gods).
- Preference for idolatry when presented with a call to God.
- Genetic manipulations and / or miscegenation.
- Sexual coupling outside legal limits.
- Refusal to heed legitimate warning.

Actions of the warner

- Presents a punishment which is contingent on response by hearers (71:1-4).
- Receives a commission from God (7:59, 11:25, 23:23, 54:14).
- Approaches a people to which he belongs (7:59, 10:71, 11:25, 23:23, 26:106, 29:14, 54:9, 71:1).
- Uses the appeal: "O my people:" (7:59, 10:71, 11:28, 11:29, 23:23, 71:2).
- Says God can delay to a stated term (71:4).
- Calls the hearers to serve God (7:59, 23:23).
- Warns of the Resurrection (71:18).
- Calls the hearers to serve God only (11:26).
- Asserts that there is but one true God (23:23).
- Calls the hearers to fear God (23:23, 26:108, 26:110).
- Exhorts the hearers to obey him (26:108, 26:110).
- States that he is a warner or messenger (11:25, 26:107, 26:115, 71:2).
- Calls the hearers to seek forgiveness of God (71:4).
- Cites the favours of God (71:11-12).

6 The motifs at 54:16 and 54:17 are found in that sūrah four times and nowhere outside it. We shall consider the broader context in some detail in Chapter 11.

- Cites God as creator of all things (71:14-16).
- Warns of punishment (71:4).
- Anticipates (punishment of) a "tremendous day" (7:59, 11:26).
- Told by God that the wrongdoers will be destroyed (11:36-37, 23:27).
- Stresses the message given by God (7:61-62).
- Addresses himself to the elites of his time (7:60, 11:27, 23:24).
- Advances reasoned arguments (11:28-31).
- States that he seeks no reward from those to whom he is conveying warning (10:72, 11:29, 26:109).
- Addresses subject of those who follow him (11:29-30, 11:31, 26:112-114).
- States that he is nothing more than a mortal (11:31).
- States that destruction is the decision of God alone (11:33-34).
- Responds to derision or accusation (11:38-39).
- Appeals to God (21:76, 23:26, 26:117-118, 54:10, 71:5-12, 71:21-22, 71:24, 71:26-28).
- Challenges the unbelievers to do their worst (10:71).
- Places his affair entirely in the hands of God (10:71).

Actions of those the warner addressed

- Deny, oppose, or disregard the warner (10:73, 26:117, 54:9, 71:5-12).
- Follow the wealthy or powerful (71:21).
- Fail to believe (11:36).
- Reject God alone or appeal to their existing cult (71:23).
- Cite the warner's mortality as a reason to reject (11:27, 23:24).
- Cite absence of custom as reason to reject (23:24).
- Claim lack of evidence as reason to reject (23:24).
- Dismiss on basis of abject followers (11:27, 26:111).
- Accuse the warner of insanity or sorcery (23:25, 54:9).
- Claim that time will put paid to the warner (23:25).
- Claim the warner to be a liar (11:27).
- Call for the punishments of God (11:32).
- Deride or mock the warner (7:60, 11:38).
- Plan to kill the warner (26:116).

Other key features

- Only a few believed with the warner (11:40).
- Appeal to the Qur'an as something which should be remembered (54:17).

- Reference to ‘My punishment and My warnings’ (54:16).

The conclusion of the matter

- God annihilates those who reject the warner (7:64, 10:73, 21:77, 26:120, 29:14, 54:11-12, 71:25).
- God delivers the warner and those who believed with him (7:64, 10:73, 21:76-77, 26:119, 29:15, 54:13-14).
- The rejecters will go to Hell (71:25).
- The idolaters’ cult fails them (71:25).
- It was said: “Away with[...]” (11:44).
- The conclusion of the matter entails a proof (23:30, 26:121, 29:15, 54:15).

Contemporary echoes of sins characteristic of that time

Mention of God has all but been removed from education and approved culture in the present cult, and reference to the Creator in the broader society is now socially inappropriate, if not verboten.

Idolatry and polytheism are today standard, with the masses trained to worship the so-called stars of the prescribed culture, or in the form of solipsism and Humanism which comprise worship of self.

Much of what is called science is today but polytheism and pantheism in narrative form.

The ruling elites have their own cults to which the profane are not admitted, but in which the masses unthinkingly participate through symbolism and ritual. The ruling elites themselves are Satanists and idolaters and pantheists and follow practices which claim their genesis in the Mystery School cults.

The naturally productive races are being systematically degraded by programs of mass integration and miscegenation, while the DNA of the broader human stock is debased by means of diet and other mass systems of weapons delivery. We also see a move to merge humans with computers, creating a trans-human or post-human society for those allowed to survive under the new order.

Sexual profligacy, degeneracy, and lack of moral standards have been made the norm.

Solipsism, unhinged delusion, and refusal to acknowledge arguments which do not comport with the existing cult of egoism have been made standard via systems of so-called training, self-improvement, and low-level esoterica, as well as by passive means through mental downloads delivered via approved culture.

Additionally, people are inured to the big questions of life, being sheltered, at least in Western society, from the facts of birth and death, and kept in an infantile state by means of inferior arts, music, and other forms of cultural programming.

Scriptures in which warning of the consequences of contravening the laws of God are contained, derided, ignored, dismissed, or undermined by so-called sciences, ideologies which in fact promote a materialistic religion.

Chapter Five

Hūd

5. Hūd

Hūd: the messenger to ʿĀd

The story of Hūd and the people of ʿĀd follows that of the people of Noah chronologically; and a short current introduction to the subject is supplied below.

> Judaism and Christianity do not venerate Hud as a prophet and, as a figure, he is absent from the Bible. However, there are several pre-Quranic references to individuals named Hud or possessing a name which is connected to Hud as well as references to the people of ʿĀd.[1]

The Qur'anic narrative treating of Hūd bears the common stamps: a man warns the ruling elite of the community to which he belongs; rejection of that man's message by the people to whom he is sent; that community's subsequent destruction at the hand of God.

We list seven principal segments in this chapter and provide any commentary in note form below.

Segment 1

> 65 And to ʿĀd, their brother Hūd. He said: "O my people: serve God; you have no god but He. Will you then not[1] be in prudent fear?"[2]
> 66 Said the eminent ones who disbelieved[1] among his people: "We see thee in foolishness; and we consider thee a liar."[2]
> 67 He said: "O my people: there is no foolishness in me; but I am a messenger from the Lord of All Creation:
> 68 "I convey to you the messages of my Lord; and I am a sincere counsellor to you, one trustworthy.
> 69 "Do you marvel that there has come to you remembrance[1] from your Lord through a man among you, that he should warn you? And remember when He made you successors after the people of Noah, and increased you in creation[2] abundantly; then remember the favours of God, that you might be successful."
> 70 They said: "Hast thou come to us that we should serve God alone and leave what our fathers served? Then bring thou us what thou promisest us,[1] if thou be of the truthful."
> 71 He said: "There have come upon you from your Lord abomination and wrath; dispute you with me concerning names[1] which you have named, you and your fathers? God sent not down for these any authority. Then wait — I am with you waiting."[2]
> 72 So We delivered him and those with him by mercy from Us, and We cut off the root[1] of those who denied Our proofs;[2] and they were not believers.[3]
> (7:65-72)

1 From Wikipedia as of March, 2021.

The words 'And to ʿĀd, their brother Hūd' continue the force of 7:59 where we read 'And We sent Noah to his people[...]'. This means that Hūd also was 'sent' — that is, he received a commission from God.

As we shall understand to be the default requirement, the call of the warner in this case is also to his own people.

As in the case of Noah's people, the warner calls to God alone, indicating that the people of this community had also fallen into idolatry.

Hūd is rejected here by the ruling elite ('the eminent ones' in the text) — which fact indicates that the elite was again the primary target of the message of warning — with them delivering an ad hominem attack against him.

Hūd is then challenged to do what is beyond his power: to initiate the punishments about which he is warning.

The warner's response in this case is to challenge the inventions of the ruling elite and, having delivered his message, to announce that both he and they are waiting for the final outcome.

God then delivers the Messenger and those with him, and destroys the rejecters.

Segment 2

50 And to ʿĀd, their brother Hūd. He said: "O my people: serve God; you have no god but He; you are only inventing."[1]
51 "O my people: I ask of you for it no reward; my reward is only upon[1] Him who created me. Will you then not[2] use reason!"
52 And: "O my people: ask forgiveness of your Lord; then turn to Him. He will send the sky upon you in abundant rains, and increase you in strength to your strength. And turn not away as lawbreakers."
53 They said: "O Hūd: thou hast not brought us clear evidence; and we will not leave our gods at thy word; and we do not believe thee.
54 "We say only that some of our gods have afflicted thee with evil."[1] He said: "I call God to witness — and bear you witness[2] — that I am quit of that to which you ascribe a partnership,[3]
55 "Besides[1] Him; so scheme against me all together; then grant me no respite.
56 "I have placed my trust in God, my Lord and your Lord. There is no creature save He holds it by its forelock.[1] My Lord is on a straight path.[2]
57 "Then if you turn away: I have conveyed to you that wherewith I was sent to you; and my Lord will make succeed you[1] a people other than you; and you will not harm Him at all. My Lord is custodian over all things."
58 And when Our command came, We delivered Hūd and those who heeded warning[1] with him, by mercy from Us; and We saved them from a stern punishment.
59 And those were ʿĀd; they rejected the proofs[1] of their Lord, and opposed His messengers, and followed the command of every obstinate tyrant.
60 And they were followed[1] by a curse in the World; and on the Day of Resurrection[...].[2]
In truth,[3] ʿĀd denied their Lord — so away with ʿĀd, the people of Hūd![4] (11:50-60)

The words 'And to ʿĀd, their brother Hūd' continue the force of 11:25 wherein we read 'And We sent Noah to his people[...]', which again establishes the fact of Hūd's commission.

We find a reference to polytheism at 11:53.

Hūd states that he has no interest in personal gain for his efforts beyond the rewards that God grants.

It is noteworthy that Hūd does not call the people to a particular religion — and certainly not to anything resembling what the Traditionalist calls Islam; rather, supplication and sincere repentance to God are taken to be sufficient, and Hūd asserts that blessings will follow repentance to God.

The people call for physical proof of the destruction about which they have been warned and refuse to credit Hūd's words without that evidence, remaining committed to their gods. However, as we shall see, the Qur'anic principle is not one of warners as miracle-workers; rather, they are men who deliver messages of warning according to a set protocol.

The people of ʿĀd claim also that their gods are the cause of Hūd's actions. One notes here a parallel between what might be regarded as more primitive forms of idolatry and polytheism and modern manifestations of the same in Psychology and Psychiatry within which ideologies a subject is deemed ill if he diverges too far from prescribed viewpoints approved by the dominant cult.

Hūd's policy after a certain point is to make full and uncompromising declaration of his dependence upon God alone, a standard feature of the protocol.

Hūd's role was only to deliver the warning which policy was the great tradition in which Muḥammad himself was following, as we have noted previously.

A characteristic feature of the people of ʿĀd was to oppose God's messengers and follow 'the command of every obstinate tyrant'. The expression 'every obstinate tyrant' indicates those who respect no moral consideration in either peace or war.

Segment 3

123 ʿĀd denied the emissaries

124 When their brother Hūd said to them: "Will you not be in prudent fear?[1]
125 "I am to you a trustworthy messenger,
126 "So be in prudent fear[1] of God, and obey me.[2]
127 "And I ask of you for it no reward; my reward is only upon[1] the Lord of All Creation.
128 "Build you a proof[1] on every prominence, amusing yourselves[2]
129 "And take you constructions, that you might abide eternally,
130 "And when you lay hold, lay you hold as tyrants?[1]
131 "So be in prudent fear[1] of God, and obey me.[2]
132 "And be in prudent fear[1] of Him who has supplied you with what you know:
133 "Supplied you with cattle and sons,
134 "And gardens and springs.
135 "I fear for you the punishment of a tremendous day."
136 They said: "It is the same to us whether thou admonishest, or be not of the admonishers.
137 "This is only the tradition[1] of the former peoples,
138 "And we are not to be punished."
139 And they denied him,[1] then We destroyed them. In that is a proof,[2] but most of them are not believers.[3]
140 And thy Lord: He is the Exalted in Might, the Merciful.
(26:123-140)

Of additional note here are the facts that the people of ʿĀd are reproved for glorying in their construction of high buildings and that they claim Hūd's message to be mere legend.

Segment 4

This segment cites the peoples of ʿĀd and Thamūd as examples of communities known to have been destroyed by God. We look at Thamūd in the next chapter.

13 Then if they turn away, say thou: "I warn you of a thunderbolt like the thunderbolt of ʿĀd and Thamūd,"
14 When the messengers had come to them from before them and from after them:[1] "Serve not save God," they said: "If our Lord had willed, He would have sent down angels, so we are deniers of that wherewith you have been sent."
15 Then as for ʿĀd: they had waxed proud in the land without cause,[1] and they said: "Who is stronger than us in power?" Had they not considered[2] that God who created them, He was stronger than them in power? And they rejected Our proofs.[3]
16 Then We sent upon them a howling wind in days of calamity, that We might let them taste the punishment of disgrace in the life of this world; and the punishment of the Hereafter is more disgracing, and they will not be helped.
(41:13-16)

Additional points here are ʿĀd's (and Thamūd's) denial of the Messenger on the basis of faulty theology,[2] and their overweening hubris.

Segment 5

21 And remember thou the brother of ʿĀd,[1] when he warned his people of[2] the wind-curved sandhills: — and warners have passed away before him and after him — "Serve not save God; I fear for you the punishment of a tremendous day,"
22 They said: "Hast thou come to us to delude us away from our gods? Then bring thou us what thou promisest us, if thou be of the truthful."
23 He said: "The knowledge is but with God, and I convey to you that wherewith I have been sent; but I see you are a people in ignorance."
24 Then when they saw it[1] as a wide cloud suddenly[2] approaching their valleys they said: "This is a cloud bringing us rain!" — "Nay,[3] it is that which you sought to hasten: a wind wherein is a painful punishment,
25 "Destroying everything by the command of its Lord." And morning found them — there was nothing to be seen save their dwellings. Thus reward We the lawbreaking people.
26 And We had established them in that wherein We have not established you, and We gave them hearing and sight and hearts; but their hearing and sight and hearts availed them nothing when they rejected the proofs[1] of God; and there surrounded them that whereat they mocked.
27 And We have destroyed what surrounds you[1] of cities; and We expounded[2] the proofs,[3] that they[4] might return.
28 Oh, that there had but[1] helped them those whom they had taken as gods, besides[2] God, as a means of approach![3] Nay,[4] they strayed from them; and that was their falsehood, and what they invented.
(46:21-28)

The additional information here is that the people of ʿĀd were fully deluded away from any sensitivity to their impending destruction, choosing to see its first manifestations as a source of further benefit to themselves; it is clear also that they had achieved a high intellectual level, though this was of no avail to them as they ultimately remained devoted to false gods and reaped the reward of so doing.

Segment 6

18 ʿĀd denied. Then how were My punishment and My warnings?
19 We sent against them a howling wind in a day of enduring calamity,
20 Removing men as if they were stumps of uprooted date-palms.
21 Then how were My punishment and My warnings?
22 And We have made the Qur'an[1] easy for remembrance;[2] so is there any who will remember?

2 Verse 41:14 conveys information about both peoples. We will be considering statements which pertain to multiple communities in Chapter 8.

(54:18-22)

This segment rehearses key themes met previously.

Segment 7

We are including this segment here for the sake of completion, as well as by way of gentle introduction to a textual feature which will be central to our analysis in due course: generic narrative summaries.[3]

Although Hūd is not mentioned by name, the generic nature of the segment includes all messengers and means that, while the narrative details are elided, the principle must apply in the case of Hūd also:

> 5 There denied before them the people of Noah, and the parties after them; and every community purposed against their messenger to seize him, and disputed with falsehood to refute thereby the truth.[1] Then I seized them — and how was My retribution![2]
> (40:5)

Thus the people of ʿĀd can be known to have planned to kill Hūd though no explicit mention of the fact is made in the text.

Characteristic sins of the warner's people

- Idolatry (taking a god other than God).
- Polytheism (worship of multiple gods).
- Preference for idolatry when presented with a call to God.
- Refusal to heed legitimate warning.
- Excessive cruelty.
- Unbridled hubris.

Actions of the warner

- Receives a commission from God (7:65, 11:50).
- Told by God that the wrongdoers will be destroyed (7:71).
- Approaches a people to which he belongs (7:65, 11:50, 26:124, 46:21).

3 We expand upon this subject in Chapter 8.

- Uses the appeal: "O my people:" (7:65, 7:67, 11:50, 11:51, 11:52).
- Calls the hearers to serve God (7:65, 11:50, 46:21).
- Calls the hearers to serve God only (41:14).
- Exhorts the hearers to obey him (26:126, 26:131).
- Asserts that there is but one true God (7:65, 11:50).
- Calls the hearers to fear God (7:65, 26:124, 26:131, 26:132).
- Cites the favours of God (7:69, 26:132-134).
- Addresses himself to the elites of his time (7:66).
- Responds to derision or accusation (7:67).
- Stresses the message given by God (7:67-68).
- States that he is a warner or messenger (7:67).
- Advances reasoned arguments (26:132-134).
- Warns of punishment (7:71).
- Anticipates (punishment of) a "tremendous day" (26:135, 46:21).
- States that destruction is the decision of God alone (46:23).
- States that he is nothing more than a mortal (7:69).
- Cites previously destroyed peoples (7:69).
- Accuses the hearers of invention of falsity (7:71, 11:50).
- Appeals to his hearers to wait as he is waiting (7:71).
- States that he seeks no reward from those to whom he is conveying warning (11:51, 26:127).
- Calls the hearers to seek forgiveness of God (11:52).
- States that his task is to convey message (7:68, 11:57, 46:23).
- Challenges the unbelievers to do their worst (11:55).
- Places his affair entirely in the hands of God (11:54, 11:56).
- Comes with clear signs, writings, or the Illuminating Writ (9:70).[4]

Actions of those the warner addresses

- Accuse the warner of error (7:66).
- Fail to believe (7:72, 11:53).
- Accuse the warner of insanity or sorcery (11:54).
- Claim the warner to be a liar (7:66, 11:53).
- Reject God alone or appeal to their existing cult (11:53).
- Cite absence of custom as reason to reject (7:70).
- Dismiss arguments as ancient legends (26:137).
- Call for the punishments of God (7:70, 46:22).
- Claim lack of evidence as reason to reject (11:53).
- Cite own gods as cause of warner's actions (11:54).
- Deny, oppose, or disregard the warner (11:59, 26:123, 26:136-139, 41:14, 54:18).

4 Established in Chapter 7.

- Plan to kill the warner (40:5).[5]
- Cite the warner's mortality as a reason to reject (41:14).
- Interpret incipient destruction as blessings (46:24).
- Await angels or the command of God to come to them (41:14).

Other key features

- Appeal to the Qur'an as something which should be remembered (54:22).
- Reference to 'My punishment and My warnings' (54:18, 54:21).

The conclusion of the matter

- God delivers the warner and those who believed with him (7:72, 11:58).
- God annihilates those who reject the warner (7:72, 11:58, 26:139, 41:16, 46:24-25, 54:19-20).
- The rejecters will go to Hell (11:60, 41:16).
- The idolaters' cult fails them (46:28).
- It was said: "Away with[...]" (11:60).
- The deniers are surrounded by that at which they mocked (46:26).
- The conclusion of the matter entails a proof (26:139).
- God does not wrong them, but they wronged their souls (9:70).[6]

Contemporary echoes of sins characteristic of that time

We note the theme of tall buildings and the vanity associated with them. The most impressive buildings in any major city tend to be those of the dominant cult. Historically, those were the buildings of religion; later they were associated with kings. Today, they are dedicated to the materialistic cult and owned by either businesses or banks.

Idolatry and polytheism are standard today, as noted in Chapter 4. We might add that the modern god of Psychology (combined with philosophies such as Behaviourism) are employed to curb the natural impetus in man towards God, ascribing that impetus to names it has invented; these doctrines are, rightly considered, modern equivalents to the gods to which the people of ʿĀd referred when rejecting Hūd.

On the theological front, today's main religious movements are often little more than elite-

5 Derived by means of generic narrative summary. We will examine this feature in detail in Chapter 8.

6 Established in Chapter 7.

owned systems of control. They frequently promote ideologies and eschatological precepts which produce passivity (typically — as in the case of ʿĀd's assertions — with emphasis upon the need to await the intervention of some superior or mystical personality, with normal human responsibility to engage with the substance of what has been received by way of scripture dismissed as insanity or simply elided as a possibility from the presentation).

The present system is nothing if not tyrannical (cf. 'every obstinate tyrant'). It seeks not only functional obedience, but is engaged in occupying, controlling, and surveilling the minds of those it rules. It systematically starves swathes of the world while keeping the remainder in the grip of an economic vise.

The delusional state of the people of ʿĀd whereby they initially perceive their incipient destruction as blessings for themselves is writ large in the current age wherein unhinged entitlement in the form of positivism, solipsism, egoism, and demands for unearned rewards and recognition have been normalised among the herd — so much so that many moderns remain little more than infants all their lives.

The intellectual achievements[7] of the people of ʿĀd find an echo in the industrial and technological advances of our own age. There is nothing wrong with technological advancement when a society gives due credit to God. However, in our time the ideology underpinning such advancement is termed Progress, which itself is an idol whose precepts form part of the culture in which the population is trained. In this regard, we note that the achievements and insights attained by the people of ʿĀd 'availed them nothing when they rejected the proofs of God; and there surrounded them that whereat they mocked'.

Lastly, we note the unbridled hubris of the people of ʿĀd (cf. "Who is stronger than us in power?"). The present cult has it that it represents the pinnacle of all achievement; that no previous civilisation could rival it technologically, militarily, or in any other way. Meanwhile, cognisance of God's supremacy over all things is entirely elided from both its foundational myths and ongoing narrative about itself.

Chapter Six

Ṣāliḥ

6. Ṣāliḥ

Ṣāliḥ: the messenger to Thamūd

The Hebrew Bible does not treat of Ṣāliḥ and the people of Thamūd.

For its part, Islamic history places Ṣāliḥ and the people of Thamūd after Hūd and the people of ʿĀd, and this is borne out in general terms by the Qur'an; Ṣāliḥ says to his people:

> 74 "And remember when He made you successors after ʿĀd, and settled you in the earth; you make castles out of its plains and hew the mountains into houses. Then remember the favours of God and commit not evil in the earth, working corruption."
> (7:74)

A short current introduction to this subject is supplied below.

> The Thamud were a tribal confederation in the northwestern region of the Arabian Peninsula, mentioned in Assyrian sources in the time of Sargon II. The tribe's name continues to appear in documents into the fourth century CE, but by the sixth century they were regarded as a group that had vanished long ago.
> According to the Quran, the city that Saleh was sent to was called al-Hijr, which corresponds to the Nabataean city of Hegra. The city rose to prominence around the first century CE as an important site in the regional caravan trade. Adjacent to the city were large, decorated rock-cut tombs used by members of various religious groups. At an unknown point in ancient times, the site was abandoned and possibly functionally replaced by Al-'Ula.
> Outside of the Islamic and Bahá'í Faiths, Saleh is not mentioned in any other Abrahamic scripture or contemporary historical text, but the account of Thamud's destruction may have been well known in ancient Arabia. The tribe's name is used in ancient Arabian poetry as a metaphor for "the transience of all things".[1]

We list six principal segments in this chapter and provide any commentary in note form below.

Segment 1

> 73 And to Thamūd, their brother Ṣāliḥ.[1] He said: "O my people: serve God; you have no god but He; there has come to you clear evidence from your Lord: this is the she-camel of God, as a proof[2] for you, so leave her to eat in God's earth, and touch her not with evil[3] lest there take you a painful punishment.

1 From Wikipedia as of March, 2021. This quote is included for general context; we do not mean to imply personal support for all details of its substance.

74 "And remember when He made you successors after ʿĀd, and settled you in the earth; you make castles out of its plains and hew the mountains into houses. Then remember the favours of God and commit not evil in the earth, working corruption."
75 Said the eminent ones who had waxed proud among his people to those they counted weak, to those who believed among them: "Know you[1] that Ṣāliḥ is an emissary from his Lord?" They said: "We believe in[2] that wherewith he has been sent."
76 Said those who had waxed proud: "We are deniers of that in which you believe."
77 And they hamstrung[1] the she-camel; and they scorned the command of their Lord, saying: "O Ṣāliḥ: bring thou us what thou promisest us, if thou be among the emissaries."
78 So the earthquake seized them; and morning found them lying prone in their home,
79 So he turned from them, and said: "O my people: I had conveyed to you the message of my Lord, and been a sincere counsellor to you; but you love not sincere counsellors."
(7:73-79)

As is standard, a warner calls to his own people using the formula "O my people".

It is clear at verse 7:75 that Ṣāliḥ has addressed the elites.

A development here upon what we have seen thus far is that the warning of punishment presented to the people of Thamūd is attached to their response to a specific instruction (here: to allow a she-camel to feed and roam freely), and it is their gross contravention of this instruction which triggers the punishments of God.

As with Noah and Hūd, Ṣāliḥ calls his people to God alone, indicating that the people of this community had also fallen into idolatry.

Segment 2

61 And to Thamūd, their brother Ṣāliḥ. He said: "O my people: serve God; you have no god but He. He produced you from the earth and settled you therein, so ask forgiveness of Him; then turn to Him; my Lord is near and responsive."
62 They said: "O Ṣāliḥ: thou hadst been among us one in whom hope was placed before this![1] Dost thou forbid us to serve what our fathers served? We are, about that to which thou invitest us, in sceptical doubt."
63 He said: "O my people: have you considered:[1] if I be upon clear evidence from my Lord, and He has given me mercy from Him, then who would help me against God if I disobeyed Him? Then would you not increase me other than in loss."[2]
64 And: "O my people: this is the she-camel of God: to you a proof.[1] So leave her to feed in God's earth, and touch her not with evil[2] lest a near punishment seize you."
65 Then they hamstrung[1] her;[2] and he said: "Enjoy yourselves in your homes three days — that is a promise not to be belied."
66 And when Our command came, We delivered Ṣāliḥ and those who heeded warning[1] with him, by mercy from Us, and from the disgrace of that day; thy Lord: He is the Strong, the Exalted in Might.

67 And the Blast seized those who did wrong; and morning found them lying prone in their homes
68 As if they had never lived[1] therein. In truth,[2] Thamūd denied their Lord — so away with Thamūd![3]
(11:61-68)

We note that the people of Thamūd are entrenched in established custom (cf. 'Dost thou forbid us to serve what our fathers served?' at 11:62).

Ṣāliḥ correctly reasons that, if he truly be upon a path from God, disobedience to God and following the ways of his people can profit him nothing.

Segment 3

141 Thamūd denied the emissaries
142 When their brother Ṣāliḥ said to them: "Will you not be in prudent fear?[1]
143 "I am to you a trustworthy messenger,
144 "So be in prudent fear[1] of God, and obey me.[2]
145 "And I ask of you for it no reward; my reward is only upon[1] the Lord of All Creation.
146 "Are you to be left secure in what is here,
147 "Among gardens and springs,
148 "And tilled fields, and date-palms with slender spathes,
149 "And to hew out houses from the mountains skilfully?[1]
150 "So be in prudent fear[1] of God, and obey me.[2]
151 "And obey not the command of the committers of excess:
152 "Those who work corruption in the land, and do not right."
153 They said: "Thou art but one taken by sorcery.[1]
154 "Thou art only a mortal like us; then bring thou a proof,[1] if thou be of the truthful."
155 He said: "This is a she-camel; to her a drink and to you a drink on a day appointed.[1]
156 "And touch her not with evil[1] lest there take you the punishment of a tremendous day."
157 But they hamstrung[1] her,[2] then they became remorseful,
158 And the punishment seized them; in that is a proof,[1] but most of them are not believers.[2]
159 And thy Lord: He is the Exalted in Might, the Merciful.
(26:141-159)

As is standard to this point in our analysis, the warner states that he requires no reward from those to whom he bears the message.

The retort of his people that he is "one taken by sorcery" is interesting on two counts: firstly, because it implies an accusation that he is mad, but secondly because the word for sorcery[2] is consistently used within the Qur'an with a nuance indicating, and consistent with, a desire for political power.[3]

Segment 4

45 And We sent to Thamūd their brother Ṣāliḥ: "— That you serve God,"[1] but then were they two factions quarrelling.
46 He said: "O my people: why will you hasten on the evil[1] before[2] the good?[3] Oh, that you did but[4] ask pardon of God, that you might obtain mercy!"
47 They said: "We think thee and those with thee an evil omen." He said: "Your evil omen is with God. The truth is,[1] you are a people subjected to means of denial."[2]
48 And there were in the city nine men[1] who wrought corruption in the land and did not right.
49 They said: "Swear one to another, by God, that we will attack him and his household by night. Then we will say to his ally:[1] 'We witnessed not the destruction of his household, and we are the truthful.'"
50 And they schemed a scheme, and We schemed a scheme; and they perceived not.
51 Then see thou how was the final outcome of their scheme: that We destroyed them and their people all together,
52 So those are their houses, desolate because of the wrong they did; in that is a proof[1] for people who know.
53 And We delivered those who heeded warning[1] and were in prudent fear.[2]
(27:45-53)

The people of Thamūd, as was explicit also in the case of Noah before him, plan to kill the warner but God delivers him.

We note also that 27:50 concludes with the words 'and they perceived not'. The inability of a people to comprehend the powers ranged against them means nothing: their 'final outcome' is that they are utterly destroyed in the event that their ruling caste rejects warning under an implementation of the God protocol.

Segment 5

23 Thamūd denied the warnings.
24 And they said: "Is it a single mortal[1] among us we are to follow? Then should we be in error and insanity.
25 "Has the remembrance[1] been cast upon him from among us? The truth is,[2] he is an insolent liar."

2 Arabic: siḥr.

3 See notes to The Qur'an: A Complete Revelation.

26 "They will come to know on the morrow[1] who is the insolent liar!
27 "We are sending the she-camel as a means of denial[1] for them; so watch thou them and be thou steadfast.
28 "And inform thou them that the water is to be divided between them — each drink attended."[1]
29 Then they called their companion, and he betook himself and did hamstring.[1]
30 Then how were My punishment and My warnings?[1]
31 We sent upon them one Blast, and they were like the dry stalks of the fence-maker.
32 And We have made the Qur'an[1] easy for remembrance;[2] so is there any who will remember?
(54:23-32)

The people of Thamūd reject here both on the basis of the warner's mortality and because he is a lone voice.

We meet also mention of 'My punishment and My warnings', a refrain which frequently attends descriptions of communities destroyed under the protocol as outlined later in this work.[4]

Segment 6

80 And the companions of the rocky tract[1] denied the emissaries.
81 And We brought them Our proofs,[1] but they turned away from them.
82 And they hewed houses from the mountains, feeling secure.
83 But the Blast seized them in the morning,
84 And there availed them not what they had earned.
(15:80-84)

The segment above is considered to treat of the people of Thamūd also, which view finds support in all the specific details in the segment. The new point of interest here is that the people turned away from the proofs of God.[5]

Characteristic sins of the warner's people

- Idolatry (taking a god other than God).
- Preference for idolatry when presented with a call to God.
- Refusal to heed legitimate warning.
- Committing evil in the earth.

4 And found at 54:16, 54:18, 54:21, 54:30, 54:37, 54:39. The broader segment is included in Chapter 11.

5 We should bear in mind that the term proofs (Arabic: āyāt) comprises evidence of a range of types which includes the statements of God.

- Excessive cruelty.[6]
- Unbridled hubris.

Actions of the warner

- Receives a commission from God (7:73, 11:61, 27:45).
- Told by God that the wrongdoers will be destroyed (54:25).
- Approaches a people to which he belongs (7:73, 11:61, 26:142, 27:45).
- Uses the appeal: "O my people:" (7:73, 7:79, 11:61, 11:63, 11:64, 27:46).
- Calls the hearers to serve God (7:73, 11:61, 27:45).
- Calls the hearers to serve God only (41:14).[7]
- Calls the hearers to fear God (26:142, 26:144, 26:150).
- Calls the hearers to seek forgiveness of God (11:61, 27:46).
- Exhorts the hearers to obey him (26:144, 26:150).
- States that he is a warner or messenger (26:143).
- Presents a punishment which is contingent on response by hearers (7:73, 26:155-156, 54:27-28).
- Cites previously destroyed peoples (7:74).
- Cites the favours of God (7:74, 11:61).
- Addresses himself to the elites of his time (7:75).
- States that his task is to convey message (7:79).
- Asserts that there is but one true God (7:73, 11:61).
- Advances reasoned arguments (11:63, 26:146-149).
- Responds to derision or accusation (27:47).
- Presents a proof (11:64).
- Warns of punishment (11:64).
- Anticipates (punishment of) a "tremendous day" (26:156).
- States that he seeks no reward from those to whom he is conveying warning (26:145).

Actions of those the warner addresses

- Dismiss on basis of abject followers (7:75-76).
- Fail to believe (7:76).
- Reject God alone or appeal to their existing cult (11:62).
- Defy God on basis of test case (7:76, 26:157, 54:29).
- Call for the punishments of God (7:77).
- Deride or mock the warner (11:62, 27:47).
- Cite absence of custom as reason to reject (11:62).

6 In this case to animals.

7 See previous chapter; there the segment applies to both ʿĀd and Thamūd.

- Accuse the warner of insanity or sorcery (26:153).
- Deny, oppose, or disregard the warner (11:62, 15:80, 26:141, 54:23).
- Cite the warner's mortality as a reason to reject (26:154, 54:24).
- Claim lack of evidence as reason to reject (26:154).
- Claim the warner to be a liar (54:25).
- Plan to kill the warner (27:49-50).
- Turn away from God's proofs (15:81).

Other key features

- Appeal to the Qur'an as something which should be remembered (54:32).
- Reference to 'My punishment and My warnings' (54:30).

The conclusion of the matter

- God annihilates those who reject the warner (7:78, 11:67-68, 15:83, 26:158, 27:51, 54:31).
- God delivers the warner and those who believed with him (11:66, 27:53).
- It was said: "Away with[...]" (11:61).
- The conclusion of the matter entails a proof (26:158, 27:52).

Contemporary echoes of sins characteristic of that time

There is no direct reference to particular gods or to polytheism in the narrative, and the men who plan to kill the warner even swear by God. However, whatever the claims of the people of Thamūd to adhere to God were, their actions demonstrate that their doctrine was based neither upon God's laws nor upon genuine piety. Such is the general situation among those found among the authorised religions of today. Even where they profess adherence to God, their actions show otherwise — which fact is tantamount to idolatry even though draped in a garb of religion.

The people of Thamūd were presented with the test case of the she-camel: their treatment of her was not only in direct contravention of the warnings delivered to them, it was needlessly cruel.[8] We have as a so-called global culture standardised cruelty to the animals God gave us for food, and created entire industries on that basis. The amount of livestock killed with remembrance given to God is insignificant relative to the total.

8 I refer the interested reader to Muhammad Asad's note to related verses in his translation of the Qur'an.

The people of Thamūd are firmly entrenched in established custom.[9] The present worldwide civilisation similarly permits no discussion in the areas of science or culture which does not comport with its longstanding godless premises.

At 54:24 the people of Thamūd reject Ṣāliḥ because he is a lone voice. Today, the general population is inculcated from birth in the idea that the greater number of adherents to a cause, the greater that cause's veracity or validity. This view is a function of the indoctrination chosen for the masses by the ruling elites, people who comprise a minute proportion of one percent of the total population and whose every waking moment confirms to them the erroneousness of the ideology those they rule have been trained to treat as axiomatic.

At 26:149 we read that the people of Thamūd "hew out houses from the mountains skilfully". The ruling elites of our day have bunkers as well as military and other bases embedded under the earth and within mountains which they believe will protect them from every eventuality. These are an expression both of their hubris and the confidence they place in their own strength, but they are also a symbol of a fundamental disconnect from the masses, since they have made (what they see as) provision for themselves, yet are entirely prepared to abandon those they rule to face alone the consequences of any widespread calamity.

9 Cf. 'Dost thou forbid us to serve what our fathers served?' at 11:62.

Chapter Seven

Abraham

7. Abraham

Abraham and the God Protocol

The three major religions which claim monotheism cite Abraham as their founding patriarch.

In the Islamic understanding, Abraham follows Ṣāliḥ chronologically, and I can find no portion of the Qur'anic text which suggests otherwise.

The Qur'an's presentation of Abraham differs from that of the Hebrew scriptures in their present state both as treats of the 'ideological' reasons for his election,[1] and in a large number of narrative specifics. As elsewhere, we elide the broader literature and extraneous narratives and focus solely on the Qur'an's treatment of that mechanism we are calling the God protocol.

Nowhere does the Qur'an say explicitly that Abraham's original community was destroyed in an act of God as the result of rejecting his mission of warning, and we do not claim otherwise. However, we can logically infer that such was the case from the broader Qur'anic presentation, and the reasons for this inference form the basis of this chapter. The task of presenting evidence to support this assertion necessitates a heavier burden of analysis than has been the case in the preceding chapters treating of Noah, Hūd, and Ṣāliḥ, and we hope the reader will bear with us.

We do not need to establish the fact of the destruction of Abraham's community as a function of the God protocol in order to apply the protocol in our own time. But a demonstration here of the means by which an event elided from the narrative may be established as a fact will help us garner the maximum data possible on historical implementations of the protocol, and that will have a bearing on our understanding of the components required to implement the same protocol today. Such a demonstration will also prepare us to understand a key tool in identifying the core components of the protocol we mentioned earlier and which we examine in full in Chapter 8 — a feature we are calling here generic narrative summaries.

Thus, in what follows we present textual evidence in support of our assertion that Abraham is, within the Qur'anic presentation, a messenger of warning who implemented that mechanism which we call the God protocol with respect to his community of origin, and that as a result that community was destroyed in an act of God.

1 In the Hebrew scriptures, Abraham's election is presented in terms which elide the deeper reasons for it, and appear (at least to me) to have been redacted later to emphasise a racial project. In the Qur'an, Abraham's election is a function of his quest for truth and refusal to compromise with idolatry.

Inclusion among messengers of destruction, and key collocations

We begin by listing a segment which includes the people of Abraham among those of messengers of warning whose missions the Qur'an clearly states ended in destruction. Key points are in bold.

It reads:

> 70 Has not the report of those before them come to them: the people of Noah, and ʿĀd, and Thamūd, and the people of Abraham, and the people[1] of Madyan,[2] and the cities thrown down? Their messengers brought them clear signs; and God wronged them not, but they wronged their souls.
> (9:70)

The people of Abraham excepted, the peoples listed at 9:70 are all among those explicitly destroyed by God in the Qur'anic narrative under the God protocol.[2] For the people of Abraham to be listed among this number suggests that they were, likewise, destroyed.

For further supporting evidence in this case, we turn first to the collocations which close the segment: 'Their messengers[...] clear signs'[3] and 'God wronged them not, but they wronged their souls'.

Their messengers[...] clear signs

The collocation 'their messengers[...] clear signs'[4] occurs a further eight times outside 9:70, review of all instances of which confirms that it applies exclusively and consistently to cases of destruction.

> 100 Is it not guidance[1] to those who inherit the land after its people that, if We willed, We would strike them for their transgressions,[2] and seal their hearts so they hear not?
> 101 Those cities: We relate some of their reports to thee; and their messengers came to them with clear signs, but they were not to believe in[1] what they had denied before; thus God seals the hearts of the false claimers of guidance.[2]
> 102 And We found not for most of them any covenant;[1] but We found most of them perfidious.[2]
> 103 Then We raised up after them Moses with Our proofs[1] to Pharaoh[2] and his eminent ones, but they wronged them; then see thou how was the final outcome of the workers of corruption: —
> (7:100-103)

2 The people of Madyan comprise the community to which Shuʿayb was sent, and which was subsequently destroyed; we look at that narrative later in Chapter 10; 'the cities thrown down' is Qur'anic parlance for the people of Lot whose narrative we look at in Chapter 9.

3 More than one verb precedes this collocation in various contexts, and we render accordingly. However, what we have identified here is a single, contiguous unit in the Arabic despite the fact that in English the verb comes after the subject.

4 Arabic: rusuluhum bi albayyināt. We have updated the Table with the explicit actions stated at 9:70 for the warners mentioned in the category Comes with clear signs, writings, or the Illuminating Writ.

> 13 And We destroyed the generations before you when they did wrong, and their messengers came to them with clear signs, but they were not to believe — thus reward We the lawbreaking people.
> 14 Then We appointed you successors in the earth after them, that We might see how you will do.
> (10:13-14)

> 9 Has not the report reached you of those before you: — the people of Noah, and ʿĀd, and Thamūd, and those after them? None knows them save God. Their messengers came to them with clear signs, but they returned their hands to their mouths,[1] and said: "We deny that wherewith you have been sent, and we are in sceptical doubt about that to which you invite us."
> 10 Their messengers said: "Can there be about God any doubt: the Creator of the Heavens and the Earth? He calls you, that He will forgive you of your transgressions,[1] and delay you to a stated term." They said: "You are only mortals like us, who would turn us away from[2] what our fathers served. So bring us a clear authority."
> 11 Their messengers said to them: "We are only mortals, like you; but God gives grace to whom He wills of His servants. And it is not for us to bring you an authority save by the leave of God; and in God let the believers[1] place their trust.
> 12 "And how could we not place our trust in God, when He has guided us in our ways? And we will be patient in that wherein you hinder[1] us; and in God let those who would place their trust aright[2] place their trust."
> 13 And those who ignored warning[1] said to their messengers: "We will turn you out of our land unless[2] you return to our creed." Then did their Lord reveal[3] to them: "We will destroy the wrongdoers[4]

> 9 Have they not travelled in the earth and seen how was the final outcome of those who were before them? They were stronger than them in power, and they tilled the earth and inhabited[1] it more than they have inhabited[2] it; and their messengers came to them with clear signs; and God wronged[3] them not, but they wronged[4] their souls.[5]
> 10 Then evil was the final outcome of those who did evil because they denied the proofs[1] of God and mocked them.

> 23 Thou art only a warner.
> 24 We have sent thee with the truth[1] as a bearer of glad tidings, and as a warner. And there was no community save a warner passed among it.
> 25 And if they deny thee, then those before them denied; their messengers came to them with clear signs, and with the writings,[1] and the Illuminating Writ;[2]
> 26 Then I seized those who ignored warning[1] — then how was My rejection!

> 21 Have they not travelled in the earth and seen how was the final outcome of those who were before them? They were stronger than them in power and impact[1] in the earth; but God seized them for their transgressions;[2] and they had not from God any defender
> 22 For it is that[1] their messengers brought them clear signs, but they denied, so God seized them. He is strong, and severe in retribution.
> (40:21-22)

82 Have they not travelled in the earth and seen how was the final outcome of those before them? They were more numerous than they, and stronger in power and impact[1] in the earth; but there availed them not what they earned.
83 When their messengers came to them with clear signs, they exulted at what they had of knowledge; but there surrounded them that whereat they mocked.
84 And when they saw Our might, they said: "We believe in[1] God alone, and deny that to which we ascribed a partnership!"[2]
85 But their faith did not benefit them when they saw Our might — the practice[1] of God which has passed among His servants[...][2] — and thereupon the false claimers of guidance[3] were lost.
(40:82-85)

5 Has not the report reached you of those who ignored warning[1] before? Then they tasted the evil consequence of their affair; and they will have a painful punishment
6 For it is that[1] when their messengers brought them clear signs: — and they said: "Shall mortals guide us?" — then they denied and turned away! But God is self-sufficient; and God is free from need and praiseworthy.
(64:5-6)

Thus, each of the segments above which includes this collocation unambiguously treats of warning followed by destruction. This collocation occurs nowhere else in the Qur'an.

We turn now to the second collocation at the end of 9:70.

God wronged them not, but they wronged their souls

This collocation[5] occurs twice outside 9:70 review of both instances of which confirms that it too applies exclusively to cases of destruction.

31 And when Our messengers came to Abraham with the glad tidings,[1] they said: "We will destroy the people of this city; its people are wrongdoers."[2]
32 He said: "Therein is Lot!" They said: "We best know who is therein. We will deliver him and his household save his wife; she is of those who stay behind."
33 And when Our messengers came to Lot, he was distressed for them, and felt unable to protect them.[1] And they said: "Fear thou not, nor grieve. We will deliver thee and thy household save thy wife; she is of those who stay behind.
34 "We will send upon the people of this city a scourge from the sky because they were perfidious."[1]
35 And have We have left thereof a proof[1] as clear evidence for people who reason.
36 And to Madyan[1] their brother Shuʿayb: he said: "O my people: serve God and expect the Last Day, and commit not evil in the earth, working corruption."
37 Then they denied him,[1] and the earthquake seized them, and morning found them lying prone in their home.
38 And ʿĀd and Thamūd: — and it has become clear to you from their dwellings[1] — (and the satan[2] made their deeds fair to them, and turned them away from[3] the path when they were endowed with perception)

5 Arabic: mā kāna allahu liyaẓlimahum wa lākin kānū anfusahum yaẓlimūn.

39 And Qārūn[1] and Pharaoh[2] and Hāmān:[3] — and Moses had come to them with clear signs — and they had waxed proud in the earth, but they did not outrun.
40 And each We took for his transgression;[1] and among them was he upon whom We sent a storm of stones; and among them was he whom the Blast seized; and among them was he whom We caused the earth to swallow; and among them was he whom We drowned. And God wronged them not, but they wronged their souls.
(29:31-40)

9 Have they not travelled in the earth and seen how was the final outcome of those who were before them? They were stronger than them in power, and they tilled the earth and inhabited[1] it more than they have inhabited[2] it; and their messengers came to them with clear signs; and God wronged[3] them not, but they wronged[4] their souls.[5]
10 Then evil was the final outcome of those who did evil because they denied the proofs[1] of God and mocked them.
(30:9-10)

Thus, both the collocations we identified above are associated consistently and unambiguously with that mechanism we are calling the God protocol.

Let us now consider the following segment:

42 And if they deny thee, then there have denied before them the people of Noah, and ʿĀd, and Thamūd,
43 And the people of Abraham,[1] and the people of Lot,
44 And the people[1] of Madyan.[2] And Moses was denied. So I granted the false claimers of guidance[3] respite; then I seized them — then how was My rejection!
45 And how many a city did We destroy when it was doing wrong[1] and is desolate![2] — and[3] a deserted well[...]![4] and[5] a lofty castle[...]![6]
46 (Have they not travelled in the earth and had hearts with which to reason, or ears with which to hear? And it is not the eyes that are blind, but blind are the hearts which are in the breasts.
47 And they ask thee to hasten the punishment! But God does not fail in His promise. And a day with thy Lord is as a thousand years of what you count.)
48 And how many a city did I grant respite when it was doing wrong![1] — then I seized it; and to Me is the journey's end.
(22:42-48)

Here the people of Abraham is again listed among those communities which rejected their messengers and were destroyed, and within a broader context which itself treats of destruction in an act of God.[6]

The collocation 'the people of Abraham'[7] which provides a core platform for the analysis above occurs nowhere in the text beyond the verses at 9:70 and 22:43.

6 We have reviewed already the people of Noah, and ʿĀd, and Thamūd. Both Lot and the warner to the people of Madyan, Shuʿayb, had standard missions within the God protocol, while Moses' execution of the same protocol was that closest in time to the mission of Muḥammad and provides by far the most detail. All missions feature in the present work.

7 Arabic: qawmu ibrāhīm.

While what we have seen associated with 'the people of Abraham' at 9:70 and above at 22:43 is perhaps sufficient to prove our assertion that the people of Abraham were destroyed within the framework of the God protocol, we can provide further pan-textual support based on two key collocations within the surrounding context of 22:43 also: 'then how was my rejection!' at 22:44 and 'I seized' at 22:48.

Then how was my rejection!

This collocation[8] occurs a further three times in the Qur'an beyond the segment above, consideration of the instances of which supports our assertion that its inclusion at 22:42-48 indicates complete destruction.

> 45 And those before them denied; and they attained not a tenth[1] of what We gave them but they denied My messengers — then how was My rejection!
> 46 Say thou: "I but exhort you to one thing: that you stand up for[1] God in twos and alone, then reflect."[2] Your companion is not possessed;[3] he is only a warner to you before[4] a severe punishment.
> (34:45-46)

> 23 Thou art only a warner.
> 24 We have sent thee with the truth[1] as a bearer of glad tidings, and as a warner. And there was no community save a warner passed among it.
> 25 And if they deny thee, then those before them denied; their messengers came to them with clear signs, and with the writings,[1] and the Illuminating Writ;[2]
> 26 Then I seized those who ignored warning[1] — then how was My rejection!
> (35:23-26)

> 16 Do you feel secure that He who is in the heaven will not make the earth swallow you, the while it shakes?
> 17 Or do you feel secure that He who is in the heaven will not send against you a storm of stones? Then you will know how is My warning!
> 18 And those before them denied — then how was My rejection!
> (67:16-18)

I seized

This collocation[9] occurs a further three times in the Qur'an beyond the segment above, consideration of the instances of which supports our assertion that its inclusion in the segment at 22:42-48 indicates complete destruction.

> 32 And mocked were messengers before thee; and I granted those who ignored warning[1] respite; then I seized them — and how was My retribution!
> (13:32)

8 Arabic: fakayfa kāna nakīri.

9 Arabic: akhathtu.

> 23 Thou art only a warner.
> 24 We have sent thee with the truth[1] as a bearer of glad tidings, and as a warner. And there was no community save a warner passed among it.
> 25 And if they deny thee, then those before them denied; their messengers came to them with clear signs, and with the writings,[1] and the Illuminating Writ;[2]
> 26 Then I seized those who ignored warning[1] — then how was My rejection!
> (35:23-26)

> 5 There denied before them the people of Noah, and the parties after them; and every community purposed against their messenger to seize him, and disputed with falsehood to refute thereby the truth.[1] Then I seized them — and how was My retribution![2]
> 6 And thus became binding[1] the word of thy Lord upon those who ignore warning,[2] that they are the companions of the Fire.
> (40:5-6)

Based on the contents of both 9:70 and 22:43 themselves and a derivative process of analysis leveraging core collocations it is clear that, while explicit mention of the event is elided, the people of Abraham was destroyed as a result of his implementation of the God protocol.

Sūrah 26

We present here a further point in support of our assertion that the people of Abraham were destroyed. This centres upon sūrah 26.

In this sūrah there are eight contiguous narratives which treat of messengers. As we shall see, six treat of messengers who are known to have brought messages of warning and whose communities are known to have been destroyed. The remaining two messengers are Muḥammad and Abraham.

The sūrah opens with Muḥammad's own case at the time, in which he was being denied by those to whom he was sent. Denial is, according to the protocol, the response which triggers destruction. His case is then compared with the former cases in which destruction resulted.

> 1 ṭā sīn mīm[1]
> 2 Those[1] are the proofs[2] of the Clear Writ.[3]
> 3 Thou mightest destroy thy soul from grief[1] that they are not believers.[2]
> 4 If We will, We can send down upon them from the sky a proof[1] to which their necks will remain humbled.[2]
> 5 And there comes not to them any new remembrance[1] from the Almighty,[2] save they turn away therefrom.
> 6 Then have they denied; and there will come to them the report of that whereat they mocked.
> 7 Have they not seen[1] the earth: how much We have caused to grow therein of every[2] noble kind?
> 8 In that is a proof,[1] but most of them are not believers.[2]

9 And thy Lord: He is the Exalted in Might, the Merciful.
(26:1-9)

Warning of the incipient destruction of Muḥammad's own people then ends with the words: 'In that is a proof, but most of them are not believers. And thy Lord: He is the Exalted in Might, the Merciful'. The same motif then repeats verbatim at the conclusion of the seven further contiguous narratives.

The story of Moses (26:10-68) concludes:

63 Then We instructed[1] Moses: "Strike thou the sea with thy staff"; and it parted, and each part was like a great towering mountain.
64 And We brought nigh thereto the others,
65 And We delivered Moses and those with him all together.
66 Then drowned We the others.
67 In that is a proof,[1] but most of them are not believers.[2]
68 And thy Lord: He is the Exalted in Might, the Merciful.
(26:63-68)

The story of Abraham follows (26:69-104). This narrative extends beyond the local drama between Abraham and the idolaters among his people and dovetails with a presentation of their lot in Hell. That segment concludes:

96 They will say while they dispute therein:
97 "By God, we were in manifest error
98 "When we made you[1] equal with the Lord of All Creation!
99 "And none but the lawbreakers led us astray,
100 "So now we have no intercessors,
101 "Nor sincere loyal friend.
102 "Would that we might return and be among the believers!"[1]
103 In that is a proof,[1] but most of them are not believers.[2]
104 And thy Lord: He is the Exalted in Might, the Merciful.
(26:96-104)

The next segment treats of Noah (26:105-122). That segment concludes:

119 So We delivered him and those with him in the laden ship.
120 Then We drowned thereafter those remaining.
121 In that is a proof,[1] but most of them are not believers.[2]
122 And thy Lord: He is the Exalted in Might, the Merciful.
(26:119-122)

The story of Hūd and the people of ʿĀd follows (26:123-140). That segment concludes:

139 And they denied him,[1] then We destroyed them. In that is a proof,[2] but most of them are not believers.[3]

140 And thy Lord: He is the Exalted in Might, the Merciful.
(26:139-140)

The story of Ṣāliḥ and the people of Thamūd follows (26:141-159). That segment concludes:

158 And the punishment seized them. In that is a proof,[1] but most of them are not believers.[2]
159 And thy Lord: He is the Exalted in Might, the Merciful.
(26:158-159)

The story of Lot follows (26:160-175). That segment concludes:

173 And We rained upon them a rain; and evil is the rain of those who were warned.
174 In that is a proof,[1] but most of them are not believers.[2]
175 And thy Lord: He is the Exalted in Might, the Merciful.
(26:173-175)

The story of Shuʿayb follows (26:176-191). That segment concludes:

189 Then they denied him;[1] then there seized them the punishment of the Day of Shadow; it was the punishment of a tremendous day.
190 In that is a proof,[1] but most of them are not believers.[2]
191 And thy Lord: He is the Exalted in Might, the Merciful.
(26:189-191)

Thus, we have a total of eight segments, all of which treat of messengers, and all of which end in precisely the same motif.

In the cases of Moses, Noah, Hūd, Ṣāliḥ, Lot, and Shuʿayb, those to whom they bore a message of warning are known to have been destroyed.

As mentioned above, the two remaining narratives treat of Muḥammad[10] (26:1-9) and Abraham (26:69-104). While the fact of destruction is elided in each of these cases we assert that, absent destruction as an objective fact in their cases also, the application of this repeating motif to them would be logically and logistically incorrect.

Neither of the two parts which comprise this motif is found anywhere else in the Qur'an.

The question naturally arises: why would the cataclysmic conclusion of the preaching of the great patriarch to his own people be omitted from the Qur'anic narrative?

10 In the case of Muḥammad's mission of warning to his community of origin, the fact of destruction, though elided from the text, may be demonstrated on the basis of the mechanics of the protocol; see Chapter 12.

I can suggest three reasons.

Firstly, the Qur'an is a preaching which appeals to what is seen and known in order that men should infer what is not yet seen. The destruction of the people of Abraham is neither found in the Hebrew scriptures nor — since Abraham removed far from his place of origin — occurred close enough geographically to the initial recipients of the Qur'anic revelation to be relevant to their experience.

Secondly, Abraham is characterised consistently in the Qur'an in terms which emphasise compassion and clemency, personal characteristics in some tension with a mission outcome of widespread annihilation. With that outcome stated explicitly, that tension would acquire a further significance by dint of the fact that Abraham is presented as the model for the recipient of the Qur'an to follow, as we shall shortly see below.

Thirdly, the principle that key events may be elided from the text but implicit to the narrative is in itself significant — and especially so in the case of a prophet of Abraham's stature. The fact that the recipient of the Qur'an was to follow the example set by Abraham provides a clear precedent and even narrative imperative for the omission of explicit mention of destruction in the case of Muḥammad's implementation of the God protocol.

We discuss Muḥammad's implementation of the God protocol in full in Chapter 12.

Abraham's compassion vis-à-vis Jonah's impatience

We will expand upon the point of Abraham's compassion introduced above and consider its implications for the mission of Muḥammad before looking at the explicit details of Abraham's mission to his own people.

While it is a point easily overlooked, messengers and warners of God are men, and as such they have their temperamental differences. Both Noah and Moses, for example, appeal to God for the community to which they had been sent with a message of warning to be destroyed:

> 26 And Noah said: "My Lord: leave Thou not upon the earth, among the false claimers of guidance,[1] an inhabitant.
> (71:26)

> 88 And Moses said: "Our Lord: Thou hast given Pharaoh[1] and his eminent ones adornment and wealth in the life of this world, our Lord, that they might lead astray from Thy path. Our Lord: destroy Thou their wealth, and harden Thou their hearts, so that they believe not until they see the painful punishment."
> (10:88)

Abraham, on the other hand, was temperamentally compassionate. Consider his response when informed of the destruction decreed for the people of Lot:

> 74 And when the alarm had left Abraham and the glad tidings had reached him [i.e. of a son], he disputed with Us concerning the people of Lot;[1]
> 75 Abraham was clement, compassionate, penitent.
> 76 "O Abraham: forsake thou this; the command of thy Lord has come, and there will come to them a punishment which cannot be repelled."
> (11:74-76)

And it is Abraham — the 'clement, compassionate, penitent' — who is the model Muḥammad was to follow:

> 120 Abraham was a leader,[1] humbly obedient to God, inclining to truth;[2] and he was not of the idolaters:[3]
> 121 One grateful for His favours; He chose him, and guided him to a straight path.
> 122 And We gave him good in the World, and in the Hereafter he will be among the righteous.
> 123 Then We instructed[1] thee: "Follow thou the creed of Abraham, inclining to truth;[2] and he was not of the idolaters."[3]
> (16:120-123)

> 68 The people closest to Abraham are those who have followed him, as have[1] this prophet and those who heed warning;[2] and God is the ally of the believers.[3]
> (3:68)

The Qur'an's exhortation to the Prophet to follow the creed of Abraham then stands in some contrast with that of its presentation of Jonah whose example he is expressly cautioned against following:

> 48 And be thou patient for the judgment of thy Lord; and be thou not like the companion of the fish[1] when he called and was angry.[2]
> (68:48)

The epithet 'the companion of the fish' references Jonah; and the broader context of the verse above makes plain that Jonah was impatient for the judgment of God.

The people of Jonah famously repented and were spared — a unique event within the Qur'anic narrative under the protocol, and one which provides a fulcrum against which much of our analysis in the next chapter will be levered:

> 98 Oh, that a city had but[1] believed and profited by its faith save the people of Jonah![2] When they believed, We removed from them the punishment of disgrace in the life of this world, and gave them enjoyment for a time.
> (10:98)

Thus, there arises a complex inverse or mirrored pattern: Muḥammad is to emulate Abraham (who one should infer from his explicit actions did not wish his community of origin to be destroyed but which was, in the event, annihilated — the fact of which event is elided from the narrative), and not to emulate Jonah (who was positively enthusiastic for his community to be destroyed but which was, in the event, spared — the fact of which is included in the narrative).

While the Qur'an nowhere states explicitly that Abraham's original community was destroyed, we are confident that we have provided sufficient evidence for the conclusion that it was destroyed to be the only reasonable one. At the least, a stronger explanation would need to be provided in the opposite direction to explain the correlations we have listed here.

We have also established the principle of elided narrative events and presented some examples of mechanisms by which they can be established as facts.[11]

We have also suggested reasons for the omission of explicit mention of the destruction of Muḥammad's community of origin arising in factors which pertain to Abraham, and to Abraham's example vis-à-vis that of Jonah.

Abraham's mission of warning to his own people

We are ready now to present those segments which treat of the mission of the young Abraham to his own people, and to correlate them with what we have learned thus far of that mechanism we are calling the God protocol.

We list seven principal segments in this chapter and provide any commentary in note form below.

Segment 1

> 258 Hast thou not considered[1] the one who disputed with Abraham concerning his Lord because God had given him dominion? When Abraham said: "My Lord is He who gives life, and gives death," he said: "I give life, and I give death." Abraham said: "God brings the sun from the East; so bring thou it from the West." Then was the one who ignored warning[2] lost for words; and God guides not the wrongdoing[3] people.
> (2:258)

Here, Abraham is shown explicitly contending with one with temporal power. This fits the model we have seen to this point in which each messenger addresses himself to the ruling elites.

11 We will expand upon this principle substantially when we look at the concept of generic narrative summaries in the next chapter.

Abraham also contends with this ruler using reason, another principal aspect of the protocol.

Segment 2

> 74 And when Abraham said to his father Āzar:[1] "Takest thou idols[2] as gods?[3] I see thee and thy people in manifest error."[4]
> 75 And thus[1] We showed Abraham the kingdom of the heavens and the earth; and that he might be of those who are certain.[2]
> 76 Then when the night covered him, he saw a star. He said: "This is my Lord." Then when it set[1] he said: "I love not those that set."[2]
> 77 Then when he saw the moon rising[1] he said: "This is my Lord." Then when it set[2] he said: "If my Lord guide me not, I will be of the people who stray."[3]
> 78 Then when he saw the sun rising[1] he said: "This is my Lord; this is greater!"[2] Then when it set[3] he said: "O my people: I am quit of that to which you ascribe a partnership.[4]
> 79 "I have turned my face towards Him who created the heavens and the earth, inclining to truth;[1] and I am not of the idolaters."[2]
> 80 And his people disputed with him. He said: "Dispute you with me concerning God, when He has guided me?[1] And I fear not that to which you ascribe a partnership,[2] save that my Lord should will anything. My Lord encompasses all things in knowledge. Will you then not[3] take heed!
> 81 "And how should I fear that to which you ascribe a partnership[1] when you fear not that you ascribe a partnership[2] with God to that for which He has not sent down upon you authority? Then which of the two factions is worthier[3] of security, if you know?
> 82 "Those who heed warning[1] and clothe not their faith in injustice: those have security, and they are guided."
> 83 And that[1] is Our argument[2] We gave to Abraham against his people. We raise in degree[3] whom We will; thy Lord is wise and knowing.
> (6:74-83)

Abraham appeals first to his father and then to his own people. The way the narrative switches between Abraham's rejection of idolatry and mention of the heavenly bodies at 6:76-78 suggests perhaps that his people were star-worshippers. Be that as it may, the features of the God protocol make themselves felt beginning at 6:78, with Abraham addressing his own people by what is a standard feature of the protocol: "O my people."

Segment 3

> 51 And We gave Abraham his sound judgment before; and We knew him
> 52 When he said to his father and his people: "What are these statues[1] to which you are devoted?"[2]
> 53 They said: "We found our fathers serving them."
> 54 He said: "You and your fathers have been in manifest error."
> 55 They said: "Hast thou come to us with the truth,[1] or art thou of those who play?"[2]
> 56 He said: "But[1] your Lord is the Lord of the Heavens and the Earth who created them, and I am of those who bear witness to that.

57 "And, by God, I will plan against your idols,[1] after you have turned and gone!"[2]
58 And he made them into pieces save a great one they had,[1] that they might return to it.
59 They said: "Who has done this to our gods, he is surely of the wrongdoers!"[1]
60 They said: "We heard a youth make mention of[1] them; he is called Abraham."
61 They said: "Then bring him before the eyes of the people, that they might bear witness."[1]
62 They said: "Didst thou this to our gods, O Abraham?"
63 He said: "But[1] this their great one[2] did it; so ask them, if they speak."
64 And they returned to themselves and said: "It is you who are the wrongdoers."[1]
65 Then they went back on themselves:[1] "Thou knewest that these speak not."
66 He said: "Then serve you, besides[1] God, what can neither benefit you at all nor harm you?
67 "Fie upon you and all that you serve besides[1] God! Will you then not[2] use reason!"
68 They said: "Burn him, and support[1] your gods, if you are doers!"[2]
69 We said: "O fire: be thou coolness and safety[1] upon Abraham."
70 And they desired a plan for him, but We made them the greatest losers,
71 And We delivered him and Lot to the land We had blessed for all mankind.[1]
(21:51-71)

At 21:53 Abraham's people cite the tradition of their fathers as the reason for their idolatry — a theme we have met previously.

At 21:57-67 Abraham takes the fight to the cult of his people, attacking and exposing their idols as falsehoods.

Abraham's people then plan to kill him, but he is delivered by the power of God along with those who believe,[12] both standard features of the protocol.

Segment 4

41 And remember thou in the Writ[1] Abraham: — he was a man of truth and a prophet.
42 When he said to his father:[1] "O my father: why servest thou what neither hears nor sees, nor can avail thee anything?"
43 "O my father: there has come to me knowledge that has come not to thee, so follow thou me; I will lead thee to an even path."
44 "O my father: serve thou not the satan;[1] the satan[2] is to the Almighty[3] defiant."
45 "O my father: I fear lest there touch thee a punishment from the Almighty,[1] and thou be an ally to the satan."[2]
46 Said he: "Art thou averse[1] to my gods, O Abraham? If thou cease not, I will stone thee; so depart thou from me a good while."
47 He said: "Peace be upon thee! I will ask forgiveness for thee of my Lord; He is gracious towards me.
48 "And I will withdraw from you[1] and that to which you call besides[2] God, and I will call to my Lord;[3] it may be that I will not in my call to my Lord be wretched."
49 So when he had withdrawn from them, and what they served, besides[1] God, We gave him Isaac and Jacob; and each We made a prophet.
50 And We gave to them[1] of Our mercy, and We made for them[2] a tongue[3] of truthfulness exalted.
(19:41-50)

12 In this case, with his nephew Lot and, one assumes, members of their households.

In this segment, Abraham's treatment of his father is expanded upon. We are able to place his father's threat to stone Abraham in the context of an actual attempt to kill him made by the broader community in the previous segment.

Abraham then withdraws from his father, an action we find also in amplified form when Abraham leaves his entire community, itself a standard event under the protocol.

Segment 5

69 And recite thou to them the report of Abraham[1]
70 When he said to his father and his people: "What do you serve?"
71 They said: "We serve idols,[1] and remain to them devoted."[2]
72 He said: "Do they hear you when you call,
73 "Or benefit you, or do harm?"
74 They said: "Nay[1] — we found our fathers doing thus."
75 He said: "Have you considered what you have been serving,
76 "You, and your fathers the ancients?
77 "And they are an enemy to me save the Lord of All Creation
78 "Who created me; and He guides me,
79 "And it is He who feeds me and gives me drink,
80 "And when I am sick, He heals me,
81 "And who will give me death, then give me life,
82 "And who I hope will forgive me my offences[1] on the Day of Judgment."[2]
83 "My Lord: give Thou me judgment,[1] and join Thou me with the righteous,
84 "And appoint Thou for me a tongue of truth among those who come later.[1]
85 "And make Thou me among the inheritors of the Garden of Bliss.
86 "And forgive Thou my father; he is of those who go astray.[1]
87 "And disgrace Thou me not the day they are raised:
88 "The day wealth and sons benefit not
89 "Save him who comes to God with a pure heart."
(26:69-89)

In this segment, the principal features are an appeal to his people based upon reason, and an appeal to God alone for judgment at 26:83, both of which are standard under the protocol.

Segment 6

75 And Noah called to Us — and how excellent were the responders!
76 And We delivered him and his household from the great distress,
77 And We made his progeny those remaining.
78 And We left for him among those who came later:
79 "Peace be upon Noah among all mankind!"
80 Thus reward We the doers of good;
81 He was among Our believing servants.[1]
82 Then drowned We the others.
83 And of his kind[1] was Abraham,
84 When he came to his Lord with a pure heart,
85 When he said to his father and his people: "What do you serve?
86 "Is it falsehood — gods besides God — you desire?
87 "So what is your thought about the Lord of All Creation?"
88 (And he cast a look[1] at the stars,
89 And said: "I am sick."[1])
90 Then they turned away from him, and left.[1]
91 Then he turned aside to their gods, and said: "Do you not eat?
92 "What ails you, that you speak not?"
93 And he turned upon them, striking with his right hand.[1]
94 Then came they towards him in haste.
95 He said: "Serve you what you hew
96 "When God created you and what you make?"
97 They said: "Build for him a structure, and cast him into the blazing fire!"[1]
98 And they intended for him a plan; but We made them the lowest.
99 And he said: "I am going to my Lord; He will guide me."
(37:75-99)

We note the link between Noah at 37:75-82 whose mission ended in (explicitly stated) destruction and verse 37:83 which introduces Abraham.

We can point also to the words at 37:98 'but We made them the lowest' in support of our general thesis that Abraham operated under the mechanism we are calling the God protocol and that, therefore, his community of origin was destroyed.

Segment 7

26 And when Abraham said to his father and his people: "I am quit of what you serve,
27 "Save Him who originated me; and He will guide me,"[...].[1]
28 And He made it[1] a word enduring among his posterity, that they might return.
(43:26-28)

Here Abraham acquits himself of both his father and his people, and places his trust in God alone. We find his policy expanded upon and confirmed in what follows:

4 There was for you a good model[1] in Abraham and those with him when they said to their people: "We are quit of you and what you serve besides[2] God. We deny you,[3] and become clear between us and you are enmity and hatred forever until you believe in[4] God alone," — save the saying of Abraham to his father: "I will ask forgiveness for thee, but I have no power for thee against[5] God." — "Our Lord: in Thee we place our trust; and to Thee have we turned; and to Thee is the journey's end.
5 "Our Lord: make Thou not us a means of denial[1] for those who ignore warning;[2] and forgive Thou us. Our Lord: thou art the Exalted in Might, the Wise."[3]
6 There was for you in them a good model[1] for one who hopes for God and the Last Day. And whoso turns away: — God, He is the Free from Need, the Praiseworthy.
(60:4-6)

And again:

113 It is not for the Prophet and those who heed warning[1] to ask for forgiveness for the idolaters,[2] though they be relatives, after it has become clear to them that they are the companions of Hell.
114 And the request for forgiveness of Abraham for his father was only because of a promise he had promised him;[1] but when it had become clear to him that he was an enemy to God, he declared himself quit of him;[2] Abraham was compassionate and clement.
(9:113-114)

Disavowal of a disbelieving people and placing one's trust in God alone are standard actions by warners under the protocol.

Characteristic sins of the warner's people

- Idolatry (taking a god other than God).
- Polytheism (worship of multiple gods).
- Preference for idolatry when presented with a call to God.

Actions of the warner

- Addresses himself to the elites of his time (2:258).
- Calls the hearers to abandon idols (6:74, 21:57, 26:70-77).
- Cites God as creator of all things (6:79).
- Cites guidance of God (6:77).
- Warns of punishment (19:45).
- Warns of the Resurrection (26:82).

- Advances reasoned arguments (2:258, 6:80-82, 21:63, 26:72-82).
- Approaches a people to which he belongs (6:74, 6:78, 21:52).
- Uses the appeal: “O my people:” (6:78, 6:80, 26:78, 37:99).
- Places his affair entirely in the hands of God (6:78-79, 43:26, 60:4).
- Asserts that there is but one true God (21:56).
- Calls the hearers to serve God (21:66).
- Accuses the hearers of invention of falsity (6:81, 21:52-54).
- Appeals to God (26:83-89, 60:5).

Actions of those the warner addresses

- Reject God alone or appeal to their existing cult (6:80).
- Fail to believe (60:4).
- Cite absence of custom as reason to reject (21:53).
- Plan to kill the warner (21:68, 21:70, 37:98).
- Deny, oppose, or disregard the warner (19:46, 21:70, 37:98).

Other key features

- Abraham actively attacks the idols of his people.

The conclusion of the matter

- God delivers the warner and those who believed with him (21:69, 21:71).

Contemporary echoes of sins characteristic of that time

Idolatry and polytheism are standard today, as noted in Chapter 4. However, the people of Abraham present an example of resolute, fanatical adherence to idols in the face of a call to God alone.

Not only is Government today effectively an idol, with men now according it the rights and honour which belong to God alone and looking to it for health, wealth, security, and happiness, it is becoming increasingly fanatical and tyrannical. It is presently on target to produce worldwide the type of suffering inflicted within bounded regions by Stalin and Mao.

If we are correct that Abraham’s people worshipped heavenly bodies, then we find this characteristic copiously mirrored today also with both the ruling elites and those they rule substantially embroiled in the notion of as above, so below albeit from differing perspectives.

Chapter Eight

Narrative summaries

8. Narrative summaries

Identifying elided information

In Chapters 4, 5, and 6 we considered explicit cases of the protocol[1] implemented by the messengers of warning, Noah, Hūd, and Ṣāliḥ respectively. In Chapter 7 we saw that, while the fact of destruction is elided from the narrative, Abraham can be shown by other means to have delivered an implementation of the God protocol ending in the destruction of his community of origin, and we have suggested reasons for the omission of this event from the text.

We have also provided a gentle introduction to the concept the present chapter focuses on previously, recognising in Chapter 5 that, while the people of ʿĀd are nowhere explicitly stated to have planned to kill Hūd, we can know that they did based upon a generic narrative summary at 40:5.

In this chapter we flesh out the topic of narrative summaries, considering their features and mechanics more fully, assessing their implications for the God protocol, and listing all significant instances.

Generic narrative summaries and the God protocol

The explicit instances of the protocol we have seen so far — those of Noah, Hūd, and Ṣāliḥ — have certain characteristics in common, but they differ in a number of particulars.

Under the view which informs this work — that denial in the face of particular actions undertaken by men at times in the past made, to use the Qur'anic expression, the punishments of God become 'binding'[2] — the logical implication is that those actions undertaken by all warners comprise the core requirements of the protocol, while actions not undertaken by all are of a secondary or non-essential character and pertain to local circumstances.

Generic narrative summaries is the term we are using for statements which signify that such-and-such took place in all cases. These are important to our study because they both establish that certain key events are elided from the explicit narrative and provide a basis upon which those omissions may be restored. But, taken together, they provide what must comprise those actions required of any warner to effect an implementation of the God protocol. This is of vital importance since, once its component actions are identified, we will have a clear framework in which to assess any further implementation of the same.

---

1 That is, in those cases which resulted in a recorded event of destruction for the deniers.

2 Cf. 17:16, 22:18, 36:70, 37:31, 38:14, 39:19, 39:71, 40:6, 41:25, 46:18, 50:14.

One would naturally expect generic narrative summaries, by virtue of their characteristic of establishing principles across all cases, to elide or minimise any accent upon sins or other features pertaining to individual communities; and this is what one finds.

In the next section, our engagement with generic narrative summaries will build upon application of the type of pan-textual analysis[3] we used to understand the elision of the fact of destruction in the case of Abraham's mission to his community of origin. The case we consider here has a certain limitation placed upon it, as we shall see, and in the section following we will look at generic narrative summaries proper.

Using pan-textual analysis

The Arabic word buʿdan means away with! and occurs a total of six times in the Qur'an. This collocation forms the kernel of the topic in this section.

Four instances of buʿdan treat of communities which are explicitly warned and then destroyed in the Qur'anic narrative: the people of Noah, the people of ʿĀd, the people of Thamūd, and the people of Madyan,[4] and the related verses are provided below in that order.

> 44 And it was said: "O earth: swallow thou thy water," and: "O sky: desist thou," and the water subsided and the matter was concluded. And it came to rest[1] upon Al-Jūdī.[2] And it was said: "Away with the wrongdoing[3] people!"
> (11:44)

> 60 And they were followed[1] by a curse in the World; and on the Day of Resurrection[...].[2] In truth,[3] ʿĀd denied their Lord — so away with ʿĀd, the people of Hūd![4]
> (11:60)

> 67 And the Blast seized those who did wrong; and morning found them lying prone in their homes
> 68 As if they had never lived[1] therein. In truth,[2] Thamūd denied their Lord — so away with Thamūd![3]
> (11:67-68)

> 94 And when Our command came, We saved Shuʿayb and those who heeded warning[1] with him, by mercy from Us. And the Blast seized those who were doing wrong; and morning found them lying prone in their homes
> 95 As though they had never lived[1] therein — so away with Madyan,[2] even as Thamūd was taken away![3]
> (11:94-95)

3 This system of hermeneutics is characteristic of my work as a whole; see The Qur'an: A Complete Revelation at quranite.com.

4 We consider Shuʿayb and the people of Madyan in Chapter 10.

The remaining two instances of this convention are found in a longer segment presented in full below. Its position in the text is significant: it bridges a segment treating of Noah's mission of warning to his people found at 23:23-30 (chronologically, the first explicit case of the destruction of a people under what we call the God protocol recorded in the Qur'an) and one summarising Moses' mission of warning to Pharaoh and the destruction of Pharaoh and his people found at 23:45-49 (chronologically, the last explicit destruction of a people under the God protocol recorded in the Qur'an).

Key features of the segment below are in bold.

> 31 Then We produced, after them, another generation.
> 32 And We sent among them a messenger from among them: "Serve God; you have no god but He. Will you then not[1] be in prudent fear!"
> 33 And said the eminent ones of his people, those who ignored warning[1] and denied the meeting of the Hereafter and to whom We had given opulence in the life of this world: "This is only a mortal like you: he eats of that whereof you eat, and drinks of that you drink.
> 34 "And if you obey a mortal like yourselves, you will then be the losers.
> 35 "Does he promise you that when you are dead, and are dust and bones, you will be brought forth?
> 36 "Far-fetched![1] Far-fetched is what you are promised!
> 37 "There is only our life of this world: we die, and we live; and we will not be raised up.
> 38 "He is only a man who invented a lie about God, and we will not believe him."
> 39 He said: "My Lord: help Thou me because they have denied me."
> 40 Said He: "In a little while will they become remorseful."
> 41 Then the Blast seized them with justice,[1] and We made them as decaying herbage:[2] — "Then away with the wrongdoing[3] people!"
> 42 Then We produced, after them, other generations.
> 43 No community outstrips its term, nor will they defer.
> 44 Then We sent Our messengers in succession. Every time its messenger came to a community, they denied him; and We caused some of them to follow[1] others, and made them legends:[2] — "Then away with a people who do not believe!"[3]
> (23:31-44)

The segment above first presents an outline of a single, generic case (introduced by the phrase 'Then We produced, after them, another generation' through to the first 'away with[...]!' at the end of 23:41); verse 23:42 then repeats the introductory phrase but in the plural ('Then We produced, after them, other generations').[5] The result is that 23:31-41 present a single stock (or generic) case, the fact of which is picked up by the repetition of the introductory phrase in the plural and applied to multiple cases at 23:42-44 (i.e. by 'Every time its messenger came to a community' at 23:44), with additional information supplied.

The logistical significance of the 'after them' at 23:31 and 23:42 clearly attaches to the case preceding: that of Noah's mission to his people. Accordingly, the principles arising in the segment above as a whole attach to all cases of the God protocol barring one: Noah's mission of warning to his people. This does not mean that none of the features listed here occurred in the case of Noah's mission, it means only that the features listed certainly happened in all subsequent cases.

5 The word 'Then' (opening 23:31, 23:42 and 23:44) is thumma in the Arabic which, while correctly translated here, has also a sense of moreover, in addition, or and once more (used emphatically in repetition).

Thus, we now know that the convention 'away with[...]!' applies to every implementation of the protocol since we are told explicitly that it occurred in the case of Noah at 11:44, with all other cases being covered generically by the segment at 23:31-44.[6] The fact that there exist also explicit statements of the same event in the remaining named cases we saw above — the people of ʿĀd, the people of Thamūd, and the people of Madyan[7] — does nothing to mitigate or dilute our broader point.

We have included those actions pertinent to the God protocol from this section of our study with their references in their appropriate categories at the end of the next section and provided footnotes there stating that they are generic to all cases other than that of Noah.

Main generic narrative summaries

Now that we understand better the nature of generic narrative summaries, we will list the principal ones found in the text — those which apply to all cases — marking those elements which make them so in bold. The features of all the segments in this chapter which pertain to the protocol are then included following this section in their respective categories with their references, as per our standard convention.

Narrative summaries implicitly leverage a single known fact: that all people to which a message of warning was delivered denied and were destroyed with the sole exception of the people of Jonah. This point was considered in Chapter 7, and we repeat the pivotal verse which informs this understanding again below for ease of reference.

> 98 Oh, that a city had but[1] believed and profited by its faith save the people of Jonah![2] When they believed, We removed from them the punishment of disgrace in the life of this world, and gave them enjoyment for a time.
> (10:98)

We have grouped comparable cases together as much as possible, supplying introductory notes above and commentary in note form below each group.

6 We note that the stock portion of the introductory phrase found twice here — 'Then We produced, after them' (Arabic: thumma anshaʾnā baʿdihim) — occurs nowhere else in the text.

7 We consider Shuʿayb and the people of Madyan in Chapter 10.

Since the mission of Moses to Pharaoh is the last instance of a known implementation of the God protocol which ended in destruction prior to the revelation of the Qur'an, the formula here 'Pharaoh and those before him' therefore embraces all cases to the point of the revelation, and thus signals a generic narrative summary.

> 10 Those who ignore warning:[1] their wealth and their children[2] will avail them nothing against God; and it is they who are the fuel of the Fire,[3]
> 11 Like the case[1] of the house of Pharaoh[2] and those before them: they denied Our proofs,[3] so God seized them for their transgressions;[4] and God is severe in retribution.
> 12 Say thou to those who ignore warning:[1] "You will be defeated, and gathered into Gehenna; and evil is the resting-place."
> (3:10-12)

> 52 Like the case[1] of the house of Pharaoh[2] and those before them: they denied the proofs[3] of God, so God seized them for their transgressions;[4] God is strong, severe in retribution.
> 53 Is it not that[1] God changes not the favour He bestows upon a people until they change what is in their souls and that God is hearing and knowing!
> 54 Like the case[1] of the house of Pharaoh[2] and those before them: they denied the proofs[3] of their Lord, so We destroyed them for their transgressions[4] and drowned the house of Pharaoh;[5] and all were wrongdoers.[6]
> (8:52-54)

> 9 And there came Pharaoh[1] — and those before him and the cities thrown down — with offence,[2]
> 10 And they opposed the messenger of their Lord, but He seized them with a surpassing[1] grip.
> (69:9-10)

The verses at 3:11, 8:52 and 8:54 establish the principle that those destroyed were destroyed 'for their transgressions', while 3:11 and 8:54 identify the principle that denial of God's proofs by those warned triggers destruction.

While at 69:9 there is mention also of 'the cities thrown down through offence'[8] that merely supplies extra information; it does nothing to dilute or mitigate the generic application of the segment. We note in this segment the principle that opposition to the message results in any means of escape being closed off under the protocol.

The segments below each are indicated as generic narrative summaries by means of a negative construction in 'save' or a positive construction in 'only'. Both constructions signal a standard outcome for all cases, the mission of Jonah being everywhere understood as the sole exception to a result of denial and subsequent destruction.

8 Qur'anic parlance for the people of Lot whose case we review in the next chapter.

94 And We sent not to a city a prophet save that We took its people with affliction and adversity, that they might humble themselves.
95 Then We changed the place of evil[1] for good until they increased in number[2] and said: "Adversity and prosperity did touch our fathers,"[3] — then We took them unawares, when they perceived not.
96 And had the people of the cities believed and been in prudent fear,[1] We would have opened upon them blessings from the heaven and the earth; but they denied, so We seized them for what they earned.
(7:94-96)

4 And We sent a messenger only in the tongue of his people, that he might make plain[1] to them; and God sends astray whom He wills, and guides whom He wills; and He is the Exalted in Might, the Wise.[2]
(14:4)

56 And We send the emissaries only as bearers of glad tidings and warners. And those who ignore warning[1] contend in vanity to refute the truth[2] thereby, and have taken My proofs[3] and that whereof they are warned in mockery.
(18:56)

34 And We sent not to a city any warner save its opulent ones said: "We are deniers of that wherewith you have been sent."
35 And they said: "We are greater in wealth and children," and: "We are not to be punished."
(34:34-35)

23 Thou art only a warner.
24 We have sent thee with the truth[1] as a bearer of glad tidings, and as a warner. And there was no community save a warner passed among it.
25 And if they deny thee, then those before them denied; their messengers came to them with clear signs, and with the writings,[1] and the Illuminating Writ;[2]
26 Then I seized those who ignored warning[1] — then how was My rejection!
(35:23-26)

The principles identified at 7:94-96 are, firstly, that after affliction God increased people in good things; secondly, increase in goods made the people complacent to the point that they saw no connection between deeds and their results.[9] Thereafter the destruction of God came. Finally, each community's destruction came upon it suddenly; they were neither prepared for it, nor cognisant of it.

The import of the segment at 14:4 will be significant later in our presentation: today, the principal lingua franca of the world is English, and that is the language in which the majority of the members of the ruling elites can communicate with each other.

The protocol entails both stick and carrot (cf. 'as bearers of glad tidings and warners' at 18:56). In the explicit narratives to this point warners have employed both modes in their attempts to convince their respective peoples to repent. The stock response in all times, however, is both to 'contend in vanity to refute the truth thereby' and to mock in the face of warning.

9 The words "Adversity and prosperity did touch our fathers" indicate that the speakers have entirely lost the point that the good and bad their forebears received were a function of their adherence or otherwise to the laws of God.

The Qur'an makes repeated reference to the response of what it terms the 'opulent ones'[10] in the face of warning. Today, almost all wealth is held by a small number of men, having been thus concentrated by means of usury supported by iniquitous laws, controlled markets, and speculation. Control of major capital flows universally serves the ruling elites' agendas, being directed by the managers of what one might term the new feudalism: banks, technocrats, government departments, corporations, multi-billionaires, and foundations (supposedly philanthropic and otherwise). While obscene wealth inclines those who have it to hubris and a sense of invulnerability, within the framework of the protocol wealth is of no benefit when those possessed of it deny warnings sent to them, which response itself triggers the punishments of God.

The word in the segment above translated community at 35:24 is in the Arabic ummah which word contains also nuances of nation or people in the sense of ethnically related group. Thus, each such grouping[11] has, according to the Qur'an, received at least one warner at some time in the past; and it is this tradition in which Muḥammad himself was following.[12]

36 And We raised up in every community a messenger: "Serve God and avoid idols."[1] And among them was he whom God guided; and among them was he upon whom misguidance was binding.[2] So travel in the earth and see how was the final outcome of the deniers.
(16:36)

We have included the segment above for ease of reference.[13] Our comments to the Arabic word ummah above apply also at 16:36. While the statement at 16:36 'And among them was he whom God guided' could conceivably reference the mission of Jonah to his people, it is more likely given the context to imply an emphasis upon those who believed and repented with the remaining messengers of warning whose missions resulted in destruction.

The constant factor which indicates generic narrative summaries in the segments below is the phrase 'before them'. The context of all segments in this group is the time of the Prophet, thus 'before them' indicates all previous cases of warning and derives universal application by 10 We see it feature in this section both at 34:34-35 here and at 43:23 in a later group.

11 Despite the fact that the topic has been imbued with confusion and subjectivity resulting from recent Agenda policies, there exist three principal races (Caucasian, African, Asian), while the extent of human history is today largely a question of currents of thought and political agendas affecting the agency offering the estimate. One can only speculate what level of granularity might be meant here in terms of social or racial affiliation or of time scale. Irrespective of what the specifics might be, the principle stated here puts a dent in the Traditionalist's claim that all previous messengers brought teachings which are substantially identical to those he ascribes to his religion.

12 See for example 35:23-24.

13 While its generic narrative character derives from a slightly different basis than that of the remainder in this section, it is better dealt with here due to its subject matter.

implicit reference to the known case of Jonah.

> 45 And those before them denied; and they attained not a tenth[1] of what We gave them but they denied My messengers — then how was My rejection!
> 46 Say thou: "I but exhort you to one thing: that you stand up for[1] God in twos and alone, then reflect."[2] Your companion is not possessed;[3] he is only a warner to you before[4] a severe punishment.

> 16 Do you feel secure that He who is in the heaven will not make the earth swallow you, the while it shakes?

> 35 And those who ascribe a partnership[1] say: "Had God willed, we would not have served, besides[2] Him, anything — neither we nor our fathers — nor would we have forbidden anything contrary to[3] Him";[4] thus did those before them. Then is there upon[5] the messengers save the clear notification?

> (21:6-9)

> 52 Thus came there no messenger to those before them save they said: "A sorcerer,[1] or one possessed."
> 53 Have they passed it down?[1] The truth is,[2] they are a people transgressing all bounds.[3]
> (51:52-53)

Verse 34:45 contains an important principle: those warned deny the message without having grasped even the tenth part of its import. Consider also in this regard the following:

> 39 The truth is,[1] they have denied what they compassed not in knowledge, and whose interpretation has not yet come to them. Thus denied those before them. Then see thou how was the final outcome of the wrongdoers.[2]
> (10:39)

Thus, if one is to apply the same protocol today, while there exists an imperative to make the entire foundation upon which that process is based as widely accessible as possible, one is under no obligation to ensure that those addressed understand it; moreover, the expectation must be that they will refuse to do so.[14]

We touched on aspects of the segment at 67:16-18 in Chapter 7; the segment confirms the principle that denial triggers destruction.

The specifics contained at 16:33 are readily seen today, with myriad sects both nominally secular and religious fixated upon calculating the advent of their respective saviours and / or particular brands of Armageddon. Meanwhile, mockery prior to destruction and stock arguments from those who deny are identified within the broader segment along with the principle that messengers are responsible only to deliver notification.

The segment at 21:6-9 aligns with the point we reference frequently with regard to Jonah: that in all previous implementations of the God protocol barring that single case those who did not believe (i.e. denied and rejected) were destroyed. It also confirms the standard point that all messengers are no more than mortal and subject to the common lot of men.

Lastly, the segment at 51:52-53 establishes two standard accusations made against messengers: that they are either 'a sorcerer' or 'one possessed'. The first term, as we have indicated previously, conveys in the Qur'anic usage a nuance of desire for temporal power; the second, in modern times, would be used to describe one considered insane.

The constant factor which indicates generic narrative summaries in the segments below is the phrase 'before thee'.[15] The context of all segments in this group is again the time of the Prophet, thus 'before thee' indicates all previous cases of warning and derives, as usual, universal application by implicit reference to the case of Jonah.

> 20 And We sent not before thee any emissaries, but that they ate food and walked in the markets. And We made some of you a means of denial[1] for others. Will you be patient? And thy Lord is seeing.
> (25:20)

> 52 And We sent not before thee any messenger or prophet save that when he desired[1] the satan[2] cast into his desire.[3] But God abolishes[4] what the satan[5] casts; then God makes firm His proofs,[6] — and God is knowing and wise —
> 53 That He might make what the satan[1] casts a means of denial[2] for those in whose hearts is disease and those whose hearts are hard, — and the wrongdoers[3] are in extreme schism —
> 54 And that those given knowledge might know that it[1] is the truth[2] from thy Lord,

14 I refer the reader to our discussion of culpability in the early part of this book: refusal to pay heed to or acquaint oneself with the details of a notification of warning in no way mitigates the consequences of so doing.

15 The first two segments could have been placed in the group above also, but more naturally form part of this one.

and believe in[3] it, and their hearts might humble themselves to Him;[4] and God guides those who heed warning[5] to a straight path.[6]
(22:52-54)

23 And thus We sent not before thee into a city any warner save its opulent ones said: "We found our fathers upon[1] a community, and we are following[2] in their footsteps."
24 He[1] said:[2] "What — though I bring you better guidance than what you found your fathers upon?" They said: "We are deniers of that wherewith you have been sent,"
25 So We took vengeance on them; then see thou how was the final outcome of the deniers.
(43:23-25)

32 And mocked were messengers before thee; and I granted those who ignored warning[1] respite; then I seized them — and how was My retribution!
(13:32)

78 And We have sent messengers before thee; among them are those We have related to thee, and among them are those We have not related to thee. And it was not for a messenger to bring a proof[1] save by the leave of God. And when the command of God comes the matter will be decided in justice,[2] and thereupon will the creators of vanity be lost.
(40:78)

This segment at 25:20 again makes plain that all messengers of warning were mortal; the fact of eating food presupposes the commonest of human functions, while walking in the markets presupposes the most prosaic of human economic activity.

The segment at 22:52-54 establishes the principle that the message brought by each messenger or prophet was attacked by Satan; that is, he attempted to corrupt people's understanding of it by means of extraneous materials or other distortions.[16]

The segment at 43:23-25 expands upon what we know of 'opulent ones' from 34:34-35 above. Here, the context treats of heredity with respect to great wealth (cf. reference to following the example of one's forebears). Certainly the creation of new fortunes may be witnessed in most times, but a sine qua non of joining the inner circles of the ruling elite is not the ability to make money but to make it and then to hold on to it over successive generations. This outcome presupposes an effective means of inculcating into each generation of sons the principles by which wealth is successfully managed. Again, within the framework of the protocol great wealth is of no consequence other than its tendency to incline those who have it to deny warnings sent to them which response itself triggers the punishments of God.

The phrase 'were messengers before thee' at 13:32 signals that mockery of a messenger of warning is standard under the protocol.

16 Since this is a generic narrative summary one should expect the principle to apply in the case of Muḥammad also. And it is copiously reflected in the practice of later Muslims of writing and disseminating an entirely extraneous literature, one which in the practice of those who claim the religion based upon it effectively usurps the revelation given to Muḥammad. Nevertheless, God has taken upon Himself preservation of the Qur'an (15:9), and guides whom He wills to a straight path.

The fact mentioned at 40:78 that there existed communities destroyed under the protocol whose names are unknown to us, while of interest, does nothing to dilute or modify the principles we derive here from generic narrative statements; rather, it gives us to understand that those histories the Qur'an provides in some detail are representative of a larger set to which the same principles applied.[17]

The two segments below again bear the stamp of generic narrative summary. As ever, this derives from the known fact that all peoples which received a messenger were destroyed except that to which Jonah was sent.

21 Have they not travelled in the earth and seen how was the final outcome of those who were before them? They were stronger than them in power and impact[1] in the earth; but God seized them for their transgressions;[2] and they had not from God any defender
22 For it is that[1] their messengers brought them clear signs, but they denied, so God seized them. He is strong, and severe in retribution.
(40:21-22)

82 Have they not travelled in the earth and seen how was the final outcome of those before them? They were more numerous than they, and stronger in power and impact[1] in the earth; but there availed them not what they earned.
83 When their messengers came to them with clear signs, they exulted at what they had of knowledge; but there surrounded them that whereat they mocked.
84 And when they saw Our might, they said: "We believe in[1] God alone, and deny that to which we ascribed a partnership!"[2]
85 But their faith did not benefit them when they saw Our might — the practice[1] of God which has passed among His servants[...][2] — and thereupon the false claimers of guidance[3] were lost.
(40:82-85)

The statement 'Have they not travelled in the earth and seen how was the final outcome of those who were before them?' found at 40:21 and 40:82 above is a common motif in the Qur'an. Those stories which comprise accepted history today fall into two basic camps. One is essentially linear (i.e. we began as primitive beings and have been upon a trajectory, though with some slips along the way, towards the acme of all civilisation which august abode we occupy at the present time, but which itself is merely a staging post for greater glories to come — the god of which mythos is termed Progress). The chief alternative to this view is one that is cyclic: civilisations rise during a spring period, and advance through a summer wherein they reach their peak before fading through the autumn and winter phases, finally being supplanted by a further civilisation in its dynamic phase on the same cycle.[18] The Qur'an, however, presents a narrative which emphasises intermittent cataclysms, and it calls the reader to verify the fact 17 Moreover, this feature accommodates also our analysis at Chapter 7 wherein Abraham is shown to have been a messenger of warning whose people were destroyed though the fact of destruction is elided from the narrative.

18 For example, according to Spengler.

of their occurrence in the geological and architectural record. While the Qur'an was originally received by people who were unimpressive in their technical achievements by the standards of today, it is possible that civilisations superior to the present one have existed. In any event, both segments above make clear that technological, military, or any other form of prowess provides no defence for evildoers against the punishments of God when they fall due.

The worldwide civilisation today is, under the management of technocrats and other servants of the 'global' ruling elite, on the pathway to a system of perfected slavery. This objective is being achieved by leveraging recent advances in technological, pharmaceutical, psychological, and other types of knowledge. As in the case of huge wealth, high levels of knowledge have the tendency to delude those possessed of them into the conceit that they are immune to any and all consequences. And as in the case of wealth, great knowledge profits nothing when the punishments of God fall due.

Both segments make mention of the bringing of 'clear signs',[19] which we should thus regard as a standard feature among the actions of a warner in any implementation of the protocol.[20]

We have placed in the group below those segments which comprise generic narrative summaries which do not readily fall into groups of similar type. While the features which signal the reason for their inclusion here vary, those reasons will be clear to the reader who has followed what precedes this point.

> 9 Has not the report reached you of those before you: — the people of Noah, and 'Ād, and Thamūd, and those after them? None knows them save God. Their messengers came to them with clear signs, but they returned their hands to their mouths,[1] and said: "We deny that wherewith you have been sent, and we are in sceptical doubt about that to which you invite us."
> 10 Their messengers said: "Can there be about God any doubt: the Creator of the Heavens and the Earth? He calls you, that He will forgive you of your transgressions,[1] and delay you to a stated term." They said: "You are only mortals like us, who would turn us away from[2] what our fathers served. So bring us a clear authority."
> 11 Their messengers said to them: "We are only mortals, like you; but God gives grace to whom He wills of His servants. And it is not for us to bring you an authority save by the leave of God; and in God let the believers[1] place their trust.
> 12 "And how could we not place our trust in God, when He has guided us in our ways? And we will be patient in that wherein you hinder[1] us; and in God let those who would place their trust aright[2] place their trust."
> 13 And those who ignored warning[1] said to their messengers: "We will turn you out of our land unless[2] you return to our creed." Then did their Lord reveal[3] to them: "We will destroy the wrongdoers[4]
> 14 "And We will cause you to dwell in the land after them — that is for him who fears My station[1] and fears My warning."[2]
> 15 And they[1] sought decision;[2] and every obstinate tyrant failed:
> 16 Beyond him[1] is Gehenna; and he is given to drink of purulent water.[2]
> 17 He will gulp it, but will scarcely swallow it; and death will come at him from every place, but he is not to die. And beyond him[1] is a stern punishment.
> 18 The likeness of those who deny their Lord: their works are as ashes the wind scatters on a day of tempest; they possess nothing of what they earned — that[1] is the extreme error.
> (14:9-18)

19 Arabic: bayyināt.

20 A detailed pan-textual analysis to demonstrate the precise nature of 'clear signs' is beyond the purview of this work, but we shall meet the term again when we look at the mission of Muḥammad and understand there that he met this requirement also.

> 15 Whoso is guided, he is but guided for his soul; and whoso strays, he but strays against it; and no bearer bears the burden of another. And We do not punish until We have raised up a messenger.
> 16 And when We intend to destroy a city, We command[1] its opulent ones, but they are perfidious[2] therein; so the word becomes binding[3] upon it, and We annihilate it utterly.[4]
> 17 And how many generations have We destroyed after Noah? And thy Lord suffices as one aware, seeing the transgressions[1] of His servants.
> (17:15-17)

> 94 And there prevented men from believing when the guidance came to them only that they said: "Has God raised up a mortal as messenger?"
> (17:94)

> 59 And never would thy Lord destroy the cities until He has raised up in their principal city[1] a messenger reciting to them Our proofs.[2] And never would We destroy the cities save when the people thereof were wrongdoers.[3]
> (28:59)

> 40 And each We took for his transgression;[1] and among them was he upon whom We sent a storm of stones; and among them was he whom the Blast seized; and among them was he whom We caused the earth to swallow; and among them was he whom We drowned. And God wronged them not, but they wronged their souls.
> (29:40)

> 5 There denied before them the people of Noah, and the parties after them; and every community purposed against their messenger to seize him, and disputed with falsehood to refute thereby the truth.[1] Then I seized them — and how was My retribution![2]
> 6 And thus became binding[1] the word of thy Lord upon those who ignore warning,[2] that they are the companions of the Fire.
> (40:5-6)

> 5 Has not the report reached you of those who ignored warning[1] before? Then they tasted the evil consequence of their affair; and they will have a painful punishment
> 6 For it is that[1] when their messengers brought them clear signs: — and they said: "Shall mortals guide us?" — then they denied and turned away! But God is self-sufficient; and God is free from need and praiseworthy.
> (64:5-6)

The words 'None knows them save God' at 14:9 confirm a point which attaches above to verse 40:78 — that there existed communities destroyed under the protocol whose names are unknown. Again, while of interest, this fact does nothing to dilute or mitigate the principles we derive here from generic narrative statements; rather, it again gives us to understand that those histories the Qur'an provides are representative of a larger set to which the same principles applied. Again, the point is made that messengers never claimed to be more than mortals (14:11), and the principle is expanded to encompass the facts that God alone guided them, and that they were obliged to be patient. The wrongdoers in all cases threaten to expel their messengers (14:13). Following this, messengers are given knowledge by God of destruction to fall upon the wrongdoers (14:13). The warners then seek decision (i.e. appeal to God for judgment in their case), a feature we have seen repeatedly in explicit narratives, and the respective tyrants against whom they were executing the protocol are then defeated.

In the segment at 17:15-17 we note that perfidy on the part of the 'opulent ones' in the face of a command from God occurs prior to destruction becoming 'binding'.

At 17:94 it is refusal to accept that God had sent a mere man with guidance which hinders belief (and thus repentance).

At 28:59 two conditions are identified in all cases of destruction: firstly, that the 'principal city' be warned by a messenger by means of 'Our proofs' and, secondly, that the people thereof be 'wrongdoers'.

The second point above finds confirmation at 29:40: each community under the protocol was destroyed (the exception of the people of Jonah having been repeatedly emphasised); while the means varied, the outcome was the same.

The segment at 40:5-6 is one we have seen before; importantly, it establishes the circumstances in which the word of God is made 'binding' upon the rejecters whereby they become destined for Hell.

The segment at 64:5-6 rehearses points we have addressed previously.

Finally, we list below three segments which are generic narrative summaries, but perhaps not as obviously so as those in the groups seen above. Notes are found below.

> 13 Then if they turn away, say thou: "I warn you of a thunderbolt like the thunderbolt of ʿĀd and Thamūd,"
> 14 When the messengers had come to them from before them and from after them:[1] "Serve not save God," they said: "If our Lord had willed, He would have sent down angels, so we are deniers of that wherewith you have been sent."
> (41:13-14)

> 21 And remember thou the brother of ʿĀd,[1] when he warned his people of[2] the wind-curved sandhills: — and warners have passed away before him and after him — "Serve not save God; I fear for you the punishment of a tremendous day," > (46:21)

> 81 The truth is,[1] they say the like of what the former peoples said;
> 82 They say: "When we are dead and are dust and bones, will we be raised?
> 83 "We have been promised this, we and our fathers, before; these are only legends of the former peoples."
> (23:81-83)

We have seen already that the destruction of the people of ʿĀd under the protocol was followed by that of Thamūd. The phrase 'When the messengers had come to them from before them and from after them' thus embraces all messengers of warning either side of the two communities mentioned — which necessarily includes all such messengers. On this basis, the two items the segment features (i.e. the discrete items of speech at 41:14) must apply to all cases. We note that the response of the speakers does not preclude acceptance of the existence of God per se, but that it dismisses the imperative stated by the warner on the basis of (faulty) doctrine.

The segment at 46:21 qualifies as a generic narrative summary on the same basis as the one above, only here there is reference to a single former community. In both cases above, the broader context is that of the time of the Prophet, so there can be no doubt that both segments comprise within their purview the entire range of warners to that time and thus contribute to our stock of generic events associated with that mechanism we are calling here the God protocol.

The clause in bold at 23:81 indicates that what follows in the segment was said also by those who came before. Since there is no limitation placed upon that and since the narrative context is the time of the revelation, what follows must extend to all those who had denied before this point and thus qualifies as a generic narrative summary.

While there exist across the corpus of the Qur'an further fragmented statements which also meet the criteria of generic narrative summaries, we have included all substantial examples and thereby covered the principal actions required of a warner under the protocol as well as a number of generically occurring responses and conclusions.

Multiple narrative summaries

There exists a further type of summary, distinct in nature from the generic narrative summaries we have seen above. The features these summaries list pertain to multiple but not all cases, so they cannot be considered generic. We term such summaries multiple narrative summaries.

The verses in this category comprise markedly fewer segments than do generic narrative summaries, and we list the principal ones below. We will see that their features in almost all cases are covered by generic narrative summaries also.

> 70 Has not the report of those before them come to them: the people of Noah, and ʿĀd, and Thamūd, and the people of Abraham, and the people[1] of Madyan,[2] and the cities thrown down? Their messengers brought them clear signs; and God wronged them not, but they wronged their souls.
> (9:70)

While we have adjusted the Tables at the end of this book to signal the explicit events mentioned in the cases above where required,[21] they are covered in any case by generic narrative summaries.

> 38 And ʿĀd, and Thamūd, and the companions of Al-Rass,[1] and many generations in-between,[2]
> 39 And for each We struck similitudes; and each We destroyed utterly.[1]
> (25:38-39)

We will comment upon the first half of 25:39 only since the conclusion is known to us as the generic outcome: since 'And for each We struck similitudes' does not pertain to an action by a human warner it can be elided from our broader analysis the principal object of which is to establish the actions the God protocol requires of a human agent. That point notwithstanding, it does find explicit correspondence in the mission of Muḥammad:

> 44 And warn thou mankind of a day the punishment will come upon them, and those who did wrong will say: "Our Lord: delay Thou us for a short term: we will respond to Thy call and follow the messengers." — "Did you not swear before that there would be no end for you?
> 45 "And you dwelt in the dwellings of those who wronged their souls; and it was made clear to you how We did with them; and We struck similitudes for you."
> (14:44-45)

While we have no way of knowing precisely which communities comprised the 'many generations in-between', since destruction in the case of denial is known to be the unchanging outcome, the segment simply makes explicit in an uncertain number of cases what is known as a fact to have occurred in all cases, and therefore has no bearing upon our broader thesis. So while we have adjusted the Tables at the end of this book to signal this explicit event in the cases above where required,[22] they are covered in any case by generic narrative summaries.

> 12 The people of Noah denied before them, and ʿĀd, and Pharaoh,[1] the Lord of Stakes,
> 13 And Thamūd, and the people of Lot, and the companions of the woods[1] — those were the parties —
> 14 Each only denied the messengers, so My retribution became binding.[1]
> (38:12-14)

21 In the categories Comes with clear signs, writings, or the Illuminating Writ and God does not wrong them, but they wronged their souls.

22 In the category God annihilates those who reject the warner.

The term 'companions of the woods' at 38:12 is an epithet for the people of Madyan to whom Shuʿayb delivered a message of warning.[23] The fact of denial and subsequent destruction in each specific case in the segment is covered already both by explicit narratives as well as by generic narrative summaries.

> 12 There denied before them the people of Noah, and the companions of Al-Rass,[1] and Thamūd,
> 13 And ʿĀd, and Pharaoh,[1] and the brethren of Lot,
> 14 And the companions of the woods,[1] and the people of Tubbaʿ.[2] Every one denied the messengers, so My warning[3] became binding.[4]
> (50:12-14)

The components least familiar to us in the segment above are 'the companions of Al-Rass' and 'the people of Tubbaʿ'. While we have adjusted the Tables accordingly,[24] the fact of denial and destruction in all cases is covered by generic narrative summaries.

> 6 Hast thou not considered[1] how thy Lord did with ʿĀd,
> 7 Iram of the pillars,
> 8 The like of which had never been created in the land,
> 9 And Thamūd who hollowed the rocks in the valley,
> 10 And Pharaoh,[1] the Lord of Stakes
> 11 Who transgressed all bounds in the lands,
> 12 And increased corruption therein?
> 13 So thy Lord poured upon them a scourge of punishment.
> (89:6-13)

The new feature above is mention of 'Iram of the pillars'. The location of the site is contested and that question shall not detain us here. Again, while we have adjusted the Tables accordingly,[25] the fact of destruction as the consequence of a community's own actions is established for all cases by means of generic narrative summaries.

Summary

Generic narrative summaries establish certain events as consistent across all implementations of the protocol.

They also accommodate the fact that certain key events are elided from the explicit narratives treating of the warners, and provide further context in which the elision of destruction in the case of Abraham's mission to his community of origin can be understood. Additionally, they supply ample precedent for the omission from the explicit narrative of the destruction of Muḥammad's community of origin, and provide means by which we can establish that such, in 23 We consider that narrative in Chapter 10.

24 In the categories Deny, oppose, or disregard the warner and God annihilates those who reject the warner.

25 In the category Those destroyed are destroyed for what they did.

fact, was the outcome of that mission of warning.

But also, and importantly for our purposes, they provide a set of core actions required of a warner for an implementation of the God protocol to result.

The multiple narrative summaries we looked at above yielded no component beyond that identified at 25:39 — and which was addressed above — which is not itself established also for all cases by generic narrative summaries.

We will now present the conclusions from this chapter. We have elected to elide references from the section treating of multiple narrative summaries since the points arising in the section are covered anyway by generic narrative summaries.

Characteristic sins of the warner's people

While we are not able here to speak in a detailed manner of characteristic sins in the case of generic narrative summaries for reasons given earlier in the chapter, we can identify the following points in what we have seen:

- Community to be warned given affliction followed by blessings (7:94).
- Community to be warned became indifferent to the blessings of God (7:95).
- Perfidy of the wealthy after warning followed by punishment being made binding (17:16).

We indicate these items as generic events under the heading Characteristic sins of the warner's people in our tabulated data,[26] and provide some commentary under the heading Contemporary echoes of sins characteristic of these times shortly below.

Actions of the warner

- Cites God as creator of all things (14:10).
- Says God can delay to a stated term (14:10).
- Cites guidance of God (14:12).
- Cites need for patience (14:12).
- Cites need to place trust in God (14:11, 14:12).
- Claims better guidance than that of hearers (43:24).
- Warns of the Resurrection (23:35,[27] 23:81).
- Calls the hearers to seek forgiveness of God (14:10).

26 I.e. in the Table section at the end of this book.

27 This reference pertains to the segment which excludes the people of Noah, but that deficiency is covered by the generic narrative statement at 23:81.

- Receives a commission from God (21:7).
- Told by God that the wrongdoers will be destroyed (14:13, 23:40[28]).
- Eats food and walks in the markets (25:20).
- Approaches a people to which he belongs (14:4, 23:32[29]).
- Speaks in the language of those he warns (14:4).
- Warns the principal city (28:59).
- Comes with clear signs, writings, or the Illuminating Writ (14:9, 35:25, 40:22, 40:83, 64:6).
- Calls the hearers to serve God (16:36, 23:32[30]).
- Calls the hearers to serve God only (41:14, 46:21).
- Asserts that there is but one true God (23:32[31]).
- Calls the hearers to fear God (23:32[32]).
- Calls the hearers to abandon idols (16:36).
- Addresses himself to the elites of his time (23:32-33[33]).
- Appeals to God (23:39[34]).
- Warns of punishment (35:24).
- Anticipates (punishment of) a "tremendous day" (46:21).
- Advances reasoned arguments (14:10, 14:12).
- States that he is nothing more than a mortal (14:11).
- States that God only can provide the authority requested (14:11).
- Presents a clear notification (16:35).
- Bears glad tidings and warning (18:56).
- Places his affair entirely in the hands of God[35] (14:15).

The items in the list above, then, comprise the core obligations which pertain to a warner under the God protocol.

This is a protocol of warning. The duty binding upon the one delivering that warning is identified at 16:35 — 'Then is there upon the messengers save the clear notification?' The answer is 35 This is indicated by the words 'And they sought decision'. This means that the messenger in each case appealed to God alone to judge between him and those to whom he was sent. We have seen this feature previously in explicit narratives.

naturally to be understood — and is stated elsewhere explicitly to be[36] — that a messenger is under obligation only to deliver the message. We note also the principle identified at 17:17 that 'thy Lord suffices as one aware, seeing the transgressions of His servants'. Thus, no subterfuge or deceit on the part of those warned will shield them from righteous judgment.

We consider this list in the context of Muḥammad's missions of warning in Chapter 12.

Actions of those the warner addresses

- Deny God's proofs (3:11, 8:52, 8:54, 40:22).
- Deny without having understood message (10:39, 34:45).
- Accuse the warner of insanity or sorcery (51:52).
- Cite the warner's mortality as a reason to reject (14:10, 17:94, 23:33,[37] 23:34,[38] 23:38,[39] 41:14, 64:6).
- Deny, oppose, or disregard the warner (14:9, 23:39,[40] 23:44,[41] 35:25, 64:6, 67:18, 69:10).
- Exult at what they have of knowledge (40:83).
- Believe in God alone when it is too late (40:84).
- Dismiss arguments as ancient legends (23:83).
- Plan to expel the warner (14:13).
- Demand a clear authority (14:10).
- Fail to believe (21:6).
- Await angels or the command of God to come to them (16:33).
- Claim that any fault belongs to God (16:35).
- The rich act perfidiously (17:16).
- The people of the cities are wrongdoers (28:59).
- Mock God's proofs and His warning (18:56).
- Deny God's law of requital for actions (7:95).
- Claim the warner to be a liar (14:9, 23:38[42]).
- Deride or mock the warner (13:32).
- The rich deny the warner's message (34:34, 43:24).
- The rich cite their own wealth advantage (34:35).

36 As we shall see in later chapters.

- Dispute on basis of falsehood (18:56, 40:5).
- The rich claim they will not be punished (34:35).
- The rich cite established custom as reason to reject (43:23).
- Plan to kill the warner (40:5).
- Deny the Resurrection (23:35-36,[43] 23:82-83).
- Satan seeks to corrupt the message of prophet or messenger (22:52-54).

The items listed above, then, comprise the consistent actions of those warned under the God protocol, and together form a summary of what to expect in any future implementation of the same.

We do not provide detailed analysis of the actions of those warned when we come to consider Muḥammad in Chapter 12 since this would burden the reader unduly without advancing our principal object. Our focus here is the protocol itself. The implementation of the protocol consists in execution by a warner of a particular set of actions, as established above, and that allows for only two possible outcomes on the part of those warned: genuine repentance followed by forgiveness from God,[44] or denial followed by complete annihilation.

The conclusion of the matter

- God does not wrong them, but they wronged their souls (29:40).
- Every obstinate tyrant both fails and is damned (14:15).
- The community warned can neither defer nor hasten destruction (23:43[45]).
- God fulfils His promise to the warners (21:9).
- God destroys the committers of excess (21:9).
- God delivers the warner and those who believed with him[46] (21:9).
- God annihilates those who reject the warner (14:13, 29:40, 35:26, 40:5, 40:22, 43:25, 64:5, 67:18).
- The deniers are surrounded by that at which they mocked (16:34, 40:83).
- The rejecters will go to Hell (40:6).
- Temporal power of no consequence in the face of God's decision (40:82).
- The late repentance of the deniers does not save them (40:85).
- Those destroyed are destroyed for what they did (3:11, 7:96, 8:52, 8:54, 28:59, 40:21, 40:78).
- Those destroyed are caught suddenly and unawares (7:95).
- God seizes the rejecters with a surpassing grip[47] (69:10).

43 This reference pertains to the segment which excludes the people of Noah, but that deficiency is covered by the generic narrative summary statements at 23:82-83.

44 As we have noted repeatedly to have resulted in the sole case of Jonah's mission to his people. Verse 8:53 bears this out entirely.

45 While this verse is located within that segment which excludes the people of Noah, this verse establishes a universal statement, one not subject to any form of limitation: 'No community outstrips its term, nor will they defer'.

46 Referred to in this case as 'and whom We wished'.

47 Meaning a tightening grip; one from which there is no escape.

- It was said: “Away with[...]” (23:41, 23:44[48]).

The characteristics listed above comprise the consistent outcome of all communities warned under the God protocol which rejected.

We note that the summaries we have looked at above include within their purview those communities about which little or nothing is stated in the Qur’an, or whose identity is uncertain or contested; given the principles of generic narrative summaries we know that the actions, responses, and outcomes listed above must have applied in all cases to these peoples also.

Contemporary echoes of sins characteristic of these times

As mentioned above, the segments we have looked at in this chapter add the following information to our existing stock of characteristics of communities previously destroyed by God:

- Community to be warned given affliction followed by blessings.
- Community to be warned became indifferent to the blessings of God.
- Perfidy of the wealthy after warning followed by punishment being made binding.

The hardships of past ages have been replaced by relative material sufficiency across the world culture. Yet, while material wealth is now widespread, the dominant society is almost entirely both atheistic and solipsistic.

While the super-wealthy of the present time are yet to receive a legitimate message of warning under the protocol, if their record over centuries is an indication of what to expect from them in the future, one must anticipate that they are too firmly entrenched in their plans for a generalised perversion of morals and for mass depopulation and what they consider to be a perfected form of tyranny under an elite of ‘Olympians’ to hope that they might respond otherwise than with perfidy of the type identified above.

48 The references here pertain to the segment which excludes the people of Noah, but that deficiency is covered by the explicit instance in the case of Noah at 11:44, for which see earlier in the present chapter.

Chapter Nine

Lot

9. Lot

Lot and 'the cities thrown down'

There are some differences between the Qur'an's presentation of Lot's mission to the people of his city and what we find in Genesis 19, but they do not substantially impact the familiar storyline. For example, the Qur'anic narrative nowhere names the cities (although knowledge of their previous existence is assumed for the initial hearers of the Qur'anic preaching); of more dramatic consequence is the fact that the Biblical narrative wherein Lot's wife is turned to a pillar of salt upon looking back is both absent from the Qur'an and, perhaps, incompatible with it.

The basic Qur'anic narrative is that Lot stands up and warns his people against their practice of perversion,[1] and he is rejected and threatened with eviction from the city. Subsequently, messengers from God come to Abraham both to give him the news of a son, and to tell him of the punishment to come upon the people of Lot. Abraham pleads with God for the people of Lot, and is chided and his entreaty rebuffed. The messengers then visit Lot who attempts to protect them, one assumes from the unnatural attentions of men of the city. The men of the city then turn their attentions upon Lot who is protected from them by the messengers. The messengers tell him to flee the city, which he does, while his wife stays behind. The city is then destroyed by a hail of 'stones of baked clay'.

We are thoroughly acquainted by now with the concept of elided events, having been able both to identify them and supply their details in the cases of Hūd and Abraham as well as from our study of various kinds of narrative summary. While Lot does not expressly address himself to the ruling elite ('the eminent ones' in the text) in the segments below, we know that such was the case on the basis of what we saw in Chapter 8.[2]

In summary, then, local specifics and emphasis notwithstanding, the narrative is standard: a man warns the community to which he belongs; rejection of that man's message by the people to which he was sent, and that community's subsequent destruction at the hand of God.

In this chapter we are primarily interested in explicit features; all features not explicitly mentioned which are covered by generic narrative summaries must be assumed to have

1 Since an integral and expedited item in the approved agenda of demoralisation and degeneration rolled out by the ruling elites in recent decades has been the promotion and normalisation of homosexuality and its imposition upon the human herd, we need to be clear from the outset on the fact that sodomy is a sin. Compliant academics and writers have attempted to revise the common understanding of the narrative treating of the people of Lot at Genesis 19 to suit the agenda just cited. Within this revisionist framework, the sin of the men of Sodom is re-imagined as something other than the one which bears the name of their city. Such assertions require mental acrobatics and much intellectual dishonesty to survive any comparison with the Biblical account, of course. But no amount of deceit practiced upon oneself or others can bludgeon the Qur'anic narratives treating of the same events into anything other than their intended shape: namely, that the people of Lot were destroyed for the practice of male sodomy; no other interpretation is possible — even for a liberal academic.

2 Specifically, the segment at 23:32-33.

occurred though elided from the narrative.[3]

Since a significant number of portions of text treat of this narrative, they are grouped together below in sections with related narrative characteristics under four headings.

1. General statements and summaries

80 And Lot:[1] when he said to his people: "Do you commit sexual immorality,[2] that none among all mankind has preceded you?
81 "You approach men with lust rather than[1] women; the truth is,[2] you are a people committing excess."
82 And the response of his people was only that they said: "Turn them out of your city; they are a people who keep themselves pure!"
83 And We delivered him and his household save his wife; she was of those who stayed behind;
84 And We rained upon them a rain.[1] Then see thou how was the final outcome of the lawbreakers.
(7:80-84)

Lot goes to 'his people', which is standard. The crime for which he upbraids them is precisely that of male sexual relations, and no other interpretation is possible. The people then seek to expel the warner, also a generic event.[4]

As mentioned above, Lot's wife 'stayed behind', there being no mention of her looking back or being turned into a pillar of salt in the Qur'anic narrative. The people of Lot were then destroyed in an act of God for the crime for which Lot upbraided them.

We shall see the same components repeat with sundry shades of emphasis in the segments below.

74 And Lot: We gave him judgment and knowledge; and We delivered him from the city that was doing bad deeds;[1] they were an evil people, perfidious;[2]
75 And We made him enter into Our mercy; he was among the righteous.
(21:74-75)

160 The people of Lot denied the emissaries
161 When their brother Lot said to them: "Will you not be in prudent fear?[1]
162 "I am to you a trustworthy messenger,
163 "So be in prudent fear[1] of God, and obey me.[2]
164 "And I ask of you for it no reward; my reward is only upon[1] the Lord of All Creation.
165 "Do you approach the males among all mankind,
166 "And leave what your Lord created for you among your wives? The truth is,[1] you are a transgressing people."[2]
167 They said: "If thou cease not, O Lot, thou wilt be of those turned out."
168 He said: "I am of those who abhor your deed."[1]
169 "My Lord: deliver Thou me and my household from what they do."[1]
170 And We delivered him and his household all together,
171 Save an old woman[1] among those who stayed behind;
172 Then We annihilated the others,
173 And We rained upon them a rain; and evil is the rain of those who were warned.
174 In that is a proof,[1] but most of them are not believers.[2]
175 And thy Lord: He is the Exalted in Might, the Merciful.
(26:160-175)

54 And Lot: when he said to his people: "Do you commit sexual immorality[1] with open eyes?[2]
55 "Do you approach men with lust instead of[1] women? The truth is,[2] you are a people in ignorance."
56 But the response of his people was only that they said: "Turn the family of Lot out of your city; they are men who keep themselves pure!"
57 And We delivered him and his household save his wife; We decreed her to be of those who stayed behind.
58 And We rained upon them a rain;[1] and evil is the rain of those who were warned.
(27:54-58)

133 And Lot was among the emissaries,
134 When We delivered him and his household all together,
135 Save an old woman[1] among those who stayed behind;
136 Then destroyed We the others.
137 And you pass by them[1] in the morning
138 And at night. Will you then not[1] use reason!
(37:133-138)

1 Hast thou not considered[1] how thy Lord did with the companions[2] of one weak in judgment?
2 Did He not make their plan go astray?[1]
3 And He sent against them flights[1] in droves[2]
4 Striking them with stones of baked clay.[1]
5 Then He made them like eaten straw.
(105:1-5)[5]

2. Before the messengers come to Lot

74 And when the alarm had left Abraham and the glad tidings had reached him [of a son], he disputed with Us concerning the people of Lot;[1]
75 Abraham was clement, compassionate, penitent.
76 "O Abraham: forsake thou this; the command of thy Lord has come, and there will

3 See Chapter 8.

4 See Chapter 8.

5 The reader should be aware that the Traditionalist ascribes 105:1-5 to an entirely different scenario. However, on the basis of the Qur'anic text, the references directly relate to the destruction of the people of Lot. Since our analysis does not turn upon this segment, we can leave consideration of it here.

come to them a punishment which cannot be repelled."
(11:74-76)

57 He [Abraham] said: "Then what is your business, O emissaries?"
58 They said: "We have been sent to a lawbreaking people,
59 "Save the house of Lot — them will we deliver all together,
60 "Save his wife"; We[1] decreed that she be of those who stay behind.
(15:57-60)

31 And when Our messengers came to Abraham with the glad tidings [of a son],[1] they said: "We will destroy the people of this city; its people are wrongdoers."[2]
32 He said: "Therein is Lot!" They said: "We best know who is therein. We will deliver him and his household save his wife; she is of those who stay behind."
(29:31-32)

The three segments above treat of Abraham's exchange with messengers[6] sent to deliver God's verdict upon the people of Lot.[7]

28 (And Lot: when he said to his people: "You commit sexual immorality,[1] that none among all mankind has preceded you:
29 "Do you approach men, and cut off the way,[1] and commit perversity[2] in your assemblies?" Then the response of his people was only that they said: "Bring thou us the punishment of God, if thou be of the truthful."
30 He said: "My Lord: help Thou me against the people who work corruption.")
(29:28-30)

The segment above is a parenthetical aside within a broader section treating of Abraham. The narrative then returns to Abraham (see 29:31-32 above), following which it rejoins the story of Lot (see 29:33-35 in the next section). We will recognise the response of his people as standard under the protocol.

3. When the messengers have come to Lot

77 And when Our messengers came to Lot, he was distressed for them and straitened with unease for them;[1] and he said: "This is a trying[2] day."
78 And his people came to him, hastening towards him; and before had they been doing evil deeds.[1] He said: "O my people: these are my daughters; they are purer for you. So be in prudent fear[2] of God, and disgrace me not concerning my guests. Is then there not[3] among you a right-minded man?"[4]
79 They said: "Thou knewest we have no right[1] to[2] thy daughters; and thou knowest what we desire."
80 He said: "Would that I had power against you, or could take shelter in a strong support!"

6 Held to be angels, which is acceptable both contextually and linguistically but not stated explicitly in such terms in the text.

7 We noted and commented upon the relevance of Abraham's compassionate nature in Chapter 7.

81 Said they: "O Lot: we are messengers of thy Lord; they will not reach thee. And travel thou with thy household during a portion of the night; and let not any one of you turn around save thy wife — there will befall her what befalls them. Their appointment is the morning; is then the morning not[1] near?
82 And when Our command came, We utterly overthrew it,[1] and rained upon it stones of baked clay,[2] piled up in layers,
83 Marked[1] in the sight of thy Lord. And it[2] is not far from the wrongdoers.[3]
(11:77-83)

61 And when the emissaries came to the house of Lot,
62 He said: "You are people unknown."[1]
63 They said: "The truth is,[1] we bring thee that concerning which they doubted.[2]
64 "And we come to thee with the truth;[1] and we are the truthful.
65 "So travel thou with thy household in a portion of the night, and follow thou their backs;[1] and let not any one of you turn round, but go on to where you are commanded."
66 And We[1] decreed for him that command: "The root of those will be cut off[2] in the morning."
67 And the people of the city came rejoicing.[1]
68 He said: "They are my guests, so put me not to shame;
69 "And be in prudent fear[1] of God, and disgrace me not."
70 They said: "Did we not forbid thee all mankind?"[1]
71 He said: "These are my daughters, if you must act."[1]
72 By thy life, they were in their intoxication wandering blindly!
73 And the Blast seized them at sunrise.
74 And We utterly overthrew it[1] and rained upon it stones of baked clay.[2]
75 In that are proofs[1] for those who can discern.[2]
76 And it is upon an enduring road;[1]
77 In that is a proof[1] for the believers.[2]
(15:61-77)

33 And when Our messengers came to Lot, he was distressed for them, and felt unable to protect them.[1] And they said: "Fear thou not, nor grieve. We will deliver thee and thy household save thy wife; she is of those who stay behind.
34 "We will send upon the people of this city a scourge from the sky because they were perfidious."[1]
35 And have We have left thereof a proof[1] as clear evidence for people who reason.
(29:33-35)

33 The people of Lot denied the warnings.
34 We sent upon them a storm of stones save the family of Lot — We delivered them at dawn
35 As favour from Us; thus do We reward him who is grateful.
36 And he had warned them of Our seizing, but they disputed the warnings.
37 And they demanded of him his guests, so We put out their eyes: "Then taste My punishment and My warnings!"
38 And in the early morning there came upon them an abiding punishment:
39 "Then taste My punishment and My warnings!"
40 And We have made the Qur'an[1] easy for remembrance;[2] so is there any who will remember?
(54:33-40)

4. Inclusion in narrative summaries

> 70 Has not the report of those before them come to them: the people of Noah, and ʿĀd, and Thamūd, and the people of Abraham, and the people[1] of Madyan,[2] and the cities thrown down? Their messengers brought them clear signs; and God wronged them not, but they wronged their souls.
> (9:70)

> 9 And there came Pharaoh[1] — and those before him and the cities thrown down — with offence,[2]
> 10 And they opposed the messenger of their Lord, but He seized them with a surpassing[1] grip.
> (69:9-10)

As mentioned above, the cities of Lot are not named in the Qur'an; they are, rather, referred to by the term marked in bold above.

Characteristic sins of the warner's people

- Sodomy (sexual relations between men).
- Idolatry (taking a god other than God).
- Preference for idolatry when presented with a call to God.

Actions of the warner

- Receives a commission from God (7:80).[8]
- Told by God that the wrongdoers will be destroyed (11:81, 15:63, 29:34).
- Advances reasoned arguments (7:80-81, 11:78, 15:71, 26:165-166, 27:54-55, 29:28-29).
- Approaches a people to which he belongs (7:80, 26:161, 27:54, 29:28).
- Comes with clear signs, writings, or the Illuminating Writ (9:70).
- Uses the appeal: "O my people:" (11:78).
- Warns of punishment (54:36).
- Calls the hearers to fear God (26:161, 26:163).
- States that he is a warner or messenger (26:162).
- Exhorts the hearers to obey him (26:163).
- States that he seeks no reward from those to whom he is conveying warning (26:164).
- Places his affair entirely in the hands of God (26:169).
- Appeals to God (29:30).

8 This verse continues the force of 'being sent' from a previous point in the sūrah.

Actions of those the warner addresses

- Deny, oppose, or disregard the warner (26:160, 54:33, 54:36, 69:10).
- Plan to expel the warner (7:82, 26:167, 27:56).
- Call for the punishments of God (29:29).
- Deride or mock the warner (27:56).

The conclusion of the matter

- God delivers the warner and those who believed with him (7:83, 21:74-75, 26:170, 27:57, 37:134, 54:34-35).
- God annihilates those who reject the warner (7:84, 11:82-83, 15:73-74, 26:172-173, 27:58, 37:136, 54:34, 54:38-39, 69:10, 105:3-5).
- The conclusion of the matter entails a proof (15:75-77, 26:174, 29:35).
- God does not wrong them, but they wronged their souls (9:70).
- God seizes the rejecters with a surpassing grip (69:9-10).

Contemporary echoes of sins characteristic of that time

Idolatry and polytheism are standard today, as noted in Chapter 4. While not emphasised in the narrative, we know such was in evidence since Lot calls the hearers to fear God.

The emphasis in the narrative is on the sin of homosexuality. This is what Lot cautioned, reasoned, inveighed, and warned against. There is no suggestion that the people of his city were "born that way" to echo contemporary propaganda. Rather, they are 'a lawbreaking people', and 'a transgressing people', and 'a people committing excess.' Thus, their unnatural act is the result of conscious rebellion against God-given limits.

The efficacy of the agenda to indoctrinate the world into a sodomite culture hardly needs rehearsing here. The sin of the people of Lot is not only tolerated by the ruling elites of today, it has been forcibly insinuated into every part of life and made a central plank of the ideology the rulers require those under them to submit to.

Chapter Ten

Shuʿayb

10. Shuʿayb

Messenger to the people of Madyan

In the previous chapter, we looked at the mission of Lot. Chronologically, the key Qur'anic figures who followed him were Ishmael, Isaac, Jacob and Joseph. Some chronologies have Job following Joseph, but his presentation in the Hebrew scriptures indicates a time which pre-dates the Law of Moses. However, this consideration is incidental to our main point since none of these men's missions, at least as found in the Qur'an, expressly feature that protocol of warning and destruction which is the focus here.[1]

The next man in the prophetic line, then, whose mission conforms to the type which is the focus of our study is Shuʿayb.

Shuʿayb is nowhere mentioned by name in the Hebrew or Christian scriptures, although he is held within the boundaries of what is called Islam to be synonymous with Jethro of the Hebrew scriptures,[2] though this connection is tenuous and does not find obvious support in the Hebrew scriptures. It also finds none in the Qur'an.

The Qur'an records that Shuʿayb was sent to Madyan. Biblical Midian is held to be in the northwest Arabian Peninsula, on the east shore of the Gulf of Aqaba on the Red Sea.[3]

Shuʿayb is mentioned by name in the Qur'an eleven times; additionally, the narrative of what the Qur'an calls the 'companions of the woods' is connected explicitly to Shuʿayb at 26:176, and it is on that basis that this term is taken as an epithet for Madyan.

In summary then, for our purposes, the key facts are that Shuʿayb was a messenger acting in accordance with the mode of messengers of warning before him under that mechanism we are calling the God protocol to a people in a place known at that time as Madyan to exhort them to turn to God and away from their immoral practices.

Shuʿayb's mission was, as might be expected, coloured by the nature of the characteristic sins of the people to whom he was sent. And here, as is a common feature in the Qur'an's presentation, a single story is told several times with differing emphasis.

The narrative treating of Shuʿayb in the Qur'an falls principally into four segments spread across sūrahs 7, 11, 26, and 29. Now that we are fully familiar with the features of the protocol, we will find no difficulty recognising its standard components. Therefore, there is no need here to do more than present the segments below in textual order and list the components they

1 We include some discussion of Joseph in a later chapter.

2 That is, Moses' father-in-law.

3 This geographical placement is contested, but that is not the focus here.

contain, as per our standard format, at the end of this section.

Segment 1

85 And to Madyan,[1] their brother Shuʿayb.[2] He said: "O my people: serve God; you have no god but He; there has come to you clear evidence from your Lord, so fulfil the measure and the balance, and deprive not people of their possessions;[3] and work not corruption in the land after its right ordering; that is better for you, if you be believers.[4]
86 "And lie not in wait[1] on every road, threatening and turning away from[2] the path of God him who believes in[3] Him, and seeking deviation therein.[4] And remember when you were few, and He multiplied you; and see how was the final outcome of the workers of corruption.
87 "And if a number among you believes in[1] that wherewith I have been sent, and a number believes not: be patient until God judges between us; and He is the best of judges."
88 Said the eminent ones who had waxed proud among his people: "We will turn thee, O Shuʿayb, and those who heed warning[1] with thee, out of our city if you return not to our creed." He said: "Even though we be unwilling?
89 "We should have invented a lie about God if we returned to your creed after God has delivered us from it. It is not for us to return to it save if God our Lord should will. Our Lord encompasses all things in knowledge. In God have we placed our trust." — "Our Lord, decide Thou between us and our people with justice,[1] for Thou art the best of those who give decision."
90 And said the eminent ones who disbelieved[1] among his people: "If you follow Shuʿayb, you will then be the losers."
91 So the earthquake seized them; and morning found them lying prone in their home,
92 Those who denied Shuʿayb, as though they had never lived[1] therein; those who denied Shuʿayb, it was they who were the losers.
93 Then he turned from them and said: "O my people: I had conveyed to you the messages of my Lord, and been a sincere counsellor to you; so how should I grieve for a people of false claimers of guidance?[1]"
(7:85-93)

Segment 2

84 And to Madyan,[1] their brother Shuʿayb: he said: "O my people: serve God; you have no god but He; so decrease not the measure and the balance. I see you in affluence,[2] but I fear for you the punishment of an encompassing day."
85 And: "O my people: fulfil the measure and the balance with equity,[1] and deprive not men of their possessions,[2] and commit not evil in the earth, working corruption.
86 "The remainder of God[1] is better[2] for you, if you be believers.[3] And I am not a custodian over you."
87 They said: "O Shuʿayb: does thy duty[1] command thee that we leave what our fathers served, or that we do not with our wealth what we will? Thou art the clement, the right-minded!"[2]

88 He said: "O my people: have you considered:[1] if I be upon clear evidence from my Lord, and He has provided me with a goodly provision from Him[...]?[2] But I desire not to oppose you in that which I forbid you;[3] I desire only right ordering, so far as I am able. And my success is only through God; in Him have I placed my trust, and to Him do I turn."
89 And: "O my people: let not my[1] dissension cause you to commit evil, that there befall you the like of what befell the people of Noah, or the people of Hūd, or the people of Ṣāliḥ; and the people of Lot are not far from you."
90 And: "Ask forgiveness of your Lord; then turn to Him; my Lord is merciful and loving."
91 They said: "O Shuʿayb: we understand not much of what thou sayest; and we consider thee among us as weak. And were it not for thy family, we would have stoned thee; and thou art not to us one respected."[1]
92 He said: "O my people: is my family more respected for power by you than God? And Him have you put[1] behind your backs.[2] My Lord encompasses what you do."
93 And: "O my people: work according to your power[1] — I am working; you will come to know to whom comes a punishment that disgraces him, and who is a liar. And watch — I am with you watching."
94 And when Our command came, We saved Shuʿayb and those who heeded warning[1] with him, by mercy from Us. And the Blast seized those who were doing wrong; and morning found them lying prone in their homes
95 As though they had never lived[1] therein — so away with Madyan,[2] even as Thamūd was taken away![3]
(11:84-95)

Segment 3

176 And the companions of the woods[1] denied the emissaries
177 When Shuʿayb said to them: "Will you not be in prudent fear?[1]
178 "I am to you a trustworthy messenger,
179 "So be in prudent fear[1] of God, and obey me.[2]
180 "And I ask of you for it no reward; my reward is only upon[1] the Lord of All Creation.
181 "Fulfil the measure, and be not of those who cause loss.
182 "And weigh with the straight balance.
183 "And deprive not men of their possessions,[1] and commit not evil in the earth, working corruption.
184 "And be in prudent fear[1] of Him who created you and the generations[2] of the former peoples."
185 They said: "Thou art but one taken by sorcery;
186 "And thou art only a mortal like us; and we consider thee a liar.[1]
187 "Then cause thou pieces of the sky to fall upon us, if thou be of the truthful."
188 He said: "My Lord best knows what you do."
189 Then they denied him;[1] then there seized them the punishment of the Day of Shadow; it was the punishment of a tremendous day.
190 In that is a proof,[1] but most of them are not believers.[2]

191 And thy Lord: He is the Exalted in Might, the Merciful.
(26:176-191)

Segment 4

36 And to Madyan[1] their brother Shuʿayb: he said: "O my people: serve God and expect the Last Day, and commit not evil in the earth, working corruption."
37 Then they denied him,[1] and the earthquake seized them, and morning found them lying prone in their home.
(29:36-37)

Characteristic sins of the warner's people

- Idolatry (taking a god other than God) (7:85).
- Economic corruption and oppression (7:85, 11:84).
- Aggression against believers in God (7:86).

Actions of the warner

- Receives a commission from God (7:85, 11:84, 29:36).[4]
- Approaches a people to which he belongs (7:85, 11:84, 29:36).
- Uses the appeal: "O my people:" (7:85, 7:93, 11:84, 11:85, 11:88, 11:89, 11:92, 11:93, 29:36).
- Calls the hearers to serve God (7:85, 11:84).
- Asserts that there is but one true God (7:85, 11:84).
- States that destruction is the decision of God alone (7:87, 26:188).
- Advances reasoned arguments (7:86, 7:88-89, 11:88, 11:92).
- Appeals to his hearers to wait as he is waiting (7:87, 11:93).
- Addresses himself to the elites of his time (7:88).
- Places his affair entirely in the hands of God (7:89, 11:88).
- States that his task is to convey message (7:93).
- Warns of punishment (11:84, 11:89, 11:93).
- Exhorts the hearers to obey him (26:179, 26:181-184).
- Appeals to God (11:88).
- Calls the hearers to seek forgiveness of God (11:90).
- Calls the hearers to fear God (26:177, 26:179, 26:184).
- States that he is a warner or messenger (26:178).
- States that he seeks no reward from those to whom he is conveying warning (26:180).
- Warns of the Resurrection (29:36).
- Cites previously destroyed peoples (11:89).

4 These verses continue the force of 'being sent' from a previous point in each sūrah.

- Challenges the unbelievers to do their worst (11:93).
- Comes with clear signs, writings, or the Illuminating Writ (9:70).[5]

Actions of those the warner addresses

- Plan to expel the warner (7:88).
- Threaten those who follow the warner (7:90).
- Deny, oppose, or disregard the warner (26:176, 26:189, 29:37).
- Deride or mock the warner (11:87, 11:91).
- Deny without having understood message (11:91).
- Accuse the warner of insanity or sorcery (26:185).
- Cite the warner's mortality as a reason to reject (26:186).
- Claim the warner to be a liar (26:186).
- Call for the punishments of God (26:187).

The conclusion of the matter

- God does not wrong them, but they wronged their souls (9:70).[6]
- God annihilates those who reject the warner (7:91-92, 11:94, 26:189, 29:37).
- God delivers the warner and those who believed with him (11:94).
- It was said: "Away with[...]" (11:95).
- The conclusion of the matter entails a proof (26:190).

Contemporary echoes of sins characteristic of that time

Idolatry and polytheism are standard today, as noted in Chapter 4. While not emphasised in the narrative, we know such was in evidence since Shuʿayb calls the hearers to fear God.

The principal characteristic sins of the people of Madyan are economic corruption and oppression. The world economic system of today is entirely corrupt and tyrannical and operates what is little more than an obfuscated form of slavery. It is based upon a network of central banks which are tributaries of the Bank of International Settlements in Switzerland with the currencies which make up its flow being a function of usury, and of debt created in association with usury. Currency is created by means of ledger entries, turned into government bonds, and lent into the market as debt — debt upon which interest has to be paid as well as the principal by the slaves which make up the tax base of each sector of the world plantation.

5 Established in Chapter 7.

6 Established in Chapter 7.

If in addition to this one considers the marketing techniques used by this world system, which are so invasive and subtle that they induce people to spend large sums on things they do not really need, and add to that the planned obsolescence built into those things — so much so that the transaction is better described as one of rent than of purchase — and add to that orchestrated economic crashes, inflation, and multiple layers of taxation, then further dimensions of economic oppression and theft are also discerned.

Chapter Eleven

Moses

11. Moses

Moses' mission of warning to Pharaoh

The story of Moses' mission to Pharaoh is found in the Hebrew Bible in the Book of Exodus, chapters 1-14. The principal events there are similar to those found in the Qur'an, but there are differences both in terms of specifics and of overall context.[1]

In terms of textual real estate the Qur'an's presentation of Moses' implementation of the God protocol dwarfs all comparable histories prior to the time of the revelation of the Qur'an, and provides by far the most amount of detail. As such, it must be considered the essential, even archetypal, example of the protocol, and expected to provide insights elided or diminished elsewhere. As a function of this feature, despite my intention of keeping this book as short as possible, this chapter will require a certain amount of analysis. And in that regard, before considering the segments pertaining to his mission of warning to Pharaoh directly, we need to cover ground which may not initially seem directly related to the protocol, but the importance of which will be apparent downstream.

But before turning to this preliminary subject, it will be helpful to be cognisant of a number of things:

Firstly, Moses' mission of warning to Pharaoh as it is presented in the Qur'an (though not in the Hebrew scriptures) is emphatically a further iteration of that mechanism we are calling the God protocol which we have seen implemented by Noah, Hūd, Ṣāliḥ, Abraham, Lot, and Shuʿayb; failure to see it in that light is to miss both its broader context and its significance for Muḥammad's original mission to his people, and to be deprived of the key it supplies necessary for the completion of Muḥammad's second, universal mission under the protocol in our time.

Secondly, we must state once again that, seen from the time of the Qur'anic revelation, Moses' mission to Pharaoh was the most recent implementation of the God protocol to result in destruction.[2] While Abraham is the ideological and, if one can put it thus, the temperamental model Muḥammad was to follow, given his missions first as warner, then as military leader, law-giver and judge, it is Moses who provides the model for Muḥammad in his broader career.

---

1 The Hebrew Bible's presentation of Moses in his mission to Pharaoh differs from the Qur'an's presentation of Moses' mission to Pharaoh in many small ways, and a few big ones. Typically, Islamic appreciations of this prophet — one who is central to both the Hebrew Bible and the Qur'an — tend to minimise those differences, or to assume the conclusions presented by the Hebrew Bible and attempt to ease any tensions out of the picture by means of reference to long-dead authorities, by generalising summaries, or by lack of attention to detail. By whatever route, the approach seems to be that the two narratives are close enough, and that a detail here and a detail there should not matter between brother religions, as it were. The approach here is to regard the Qur'anic text as precisely what it claims to be — both a confirmation of and a control over previous scriptures — and to consider it with care (cf. 4:82 and 5:48).

2 Typical chronologies place Jonah between Shuʿayb and Moses; Jonah's mission as we know is the sole instance the Qur'an presents of a case in which people repented and were spared (10:98).

We should note that not only is the narrative treating of Moses' mission to Pharaoh substantively greater than that of any previous instance of the protocol in the Qur'an, it is the only story in which the warner's principal opponent is individually named;[3] in all other cases opponents speak only collectively and generically, whereas Pharaoh is both named and speaks in the first person singular, presenting complex and subtle arguments. All this provides us, as the Qur'an itself indicates, with a template from which we are expected to learn:

> 54 So he [Pharaoh] swayed[1] his people, and they obeyed him; they were a perfidious[2] people.
> 55 And when they had angered Us, We took vengeance on them and drowned them all together,
> 56 And made them a precedent and an example for those who came later.
> (43:54-56)

Thus, we look to the story of Moses' mission to Pharaoh for factors vital both to Muḥammad's initial mission, and to the project of completing his unique, universal mission of warning.

With this feature now firmly placed in view we need also to understand that Moses[4] had two missions with regard to Pharaoh, and we should keep them distinct in our minds.

The first was to perform his duties within that mechanism we are calling the God protocol with respect to Pharaoh and his people; the second was to deliver the children of Israel out of Pharaoh's hand. Certainly, these missions were closely related, but they were two mission objectives and entailed their own requirements:

> 12 "And enter thou thy hand into thy bosom; it will come forth white, without evil[1] — among nine proofs[2] to Pharaoh[3] and his people; they are a perfidious[4] people."
> (27:12)

> 16 "And go[1] to Pharaoh,[2] and say:[3] 'We are a messenger[4] of the Lord of All Creation.
> 17 "'Send thou[1] with us the children of Israel.'"
> (26:16-17)

Lastly, we need to be cognisant of the concept of allegiance or affiliation; that is, of one's racial or cultural attachment to a particular people.[5] In the Qur'anic presentation, men are connected

3 The question of whether Pharaoh (Arabic: fir'awn) is a title or a proper name is open to debate. However, while commonly regarded as a title, the fact is that fir'awn occurs without a definite article, which would normally indicate a proper name. Meanwhile, while it is true that one of his ruling elite, Qārūn, is both named in the text and speaks in the first person — and that his personal end is recorded — he is not the principal antagonist to the Messenger, and these events are recorded in a context somewhat distinct from that which is the principal subject of this book.

4 Of course, Aaron had a significant supporting role.

5 By means of the diluted morals and loss of any sense of belonging which is a function of the indoctrination into the notion of 'globalism' by the ruling elites which has been accelerated since WWII, the white race has been taught to disregard its heritage and to consider it evil; other races are likewise being debased culturally as well as ethnically, although not at the same pace. And in terms of Realpolitik — conceits of 'identity' useful to the rulers notwithstanding — in effect, all previous racial and cultural affiliations and distinctions are now merged into a mishmash the product of which is the standardised 'global' citizen: a disconnected individual human unit with one currency (fiat); one religion (materialism); one priesthood ('scientists' and 'experts'); one system of values (derived from what are called education and entertainment), and so on. Thus, properly speaking, we live now in a single, unified world community ruled by a single ruling elite. This fact has direct implications for the implementation of Muḥammad's second, universal mission of warning under the God protocol as we shall come later fully to appreciate.

by ties of blood, religion, or community, or some combination of the three, to a particular people. It is this essential attachment which has allowed the men we have looked at thus far to say in each case "O my people".

With these points made, we can turn now to the preliminary subject we indicated above as necessary for a fuller appreciation of what follows.

Moses' defining affiliation

Since Moses is such a monumental historical figure, it is tempting to overlook the human element and regard him as a stock character. But as we have so much information about him in the Qur'an we can, should we so wish, apply ourselves to consider the psychology of the man as an individual. And in such a case the picture of Moses as a young adult which emerges is of a man confronting the complex problem of where his loyalties lay.

Let us consider the following segments; key points are in bold.

> 7 And We instructed[1] the mother of Moses: "Suckle thou him; then when thou fearest for him, cast thou him into the water.[2] And fear thou not, nor grieve: We will return him to thee, and appoint him among the emissaries."
> 8 And there gathered him up the house of Pharaoh,[1] that he might become for them an enemy and a grief; Pharaoh[2] and Hāmān and their forces were offenders.[3]
> 9 And the wife of Pharaoh[1] said: "A comfort of the eye for me and for thee! Kill thou him not. It may be that he will benefit us, or we will take him as a son."[2] And they perceived not.
> (28:7-9)

> 18 Said he [Pharaoh to Moses]: "Did we not bring thee up among us as a child? And thou tarriedst among us years of thy life;
> 19 "And thou didst thy deed which thou didst, and wast of the false claimers of guidance."[1]
> 20 He said: "I did it when I was of those who stray.[1]
> 21 "And I fled from you[1] when I feared you. Then my Lord gave me judgment and made me among the emissaries.
> 22 "And that favour wherewith thou reproachest me is that thou hast enslaved the children of Israel."
> (26:18-22)

> 11 And she said to his sister: "Follow thou him," and she watched him from a distance, while they perceived not.
> 12 And We had forbidden him wet-nurses before, so she said: "Shall I direct you to the people of a household who will take care of him for you, and will look after[1] him?"
> 13 So We restored him to his mother, that her eye be comforted and she grieve not, and that she might know that the promise of God is true;[1] but most of them know not.

(28:11-13)

We are able to appreciate on the basis of the three segments above that, on the one hand, the young Moses was greatly advantaged: being an adopted son of Pharaoh gave him position and prestige (without that, it is doubtful that he would have gained access to Pharaoh so easily upon his return); on the other, he was raised on a day-to-day basis by his natural mother, and would therefore have been deeply aware of the cruelty meted out by Pharaoh upon his racial kin.

Thus he was deeply torn: did his loyalties lie with the ruling family from which his worldly advantage derived, or with his tribe to which he was bound by ties of blood?

Which man did Moses kill?

We will now focus on the segment which comprises 28:14-21. We present the segment in stages below and supply comments as we go. We will weave in also shorter segments from elsewhere in support of particular points. Features we want to emphasise are in bold.

14 And when he [Moses] reached his maturity and was established, We gave him judgment and knowledge; and thus reward We the doers of good.
(28:14)

Verse 28:14 indicates that Moses has reached the age of reason; and in the light of this information the very next line takes on a particular nuance:

15 And he entered the city at a time of heedlessness among its people,[1] and found therein two men fighting, one of his sect[2] and the other of his enemy.[3] And he who was of his sect[4] sought aid of him against him who was of his enemy — then Moses struck him and put an end to him. He said: "This is of the work of the satan;[5] he is a manifest, misleading enemy."[6]
(28:15)

Moses, then, having reached the age of discretion, has become aware of the plight of his own people and is torn by the internal conflict we noted above. His first act thereafter is to attempt to resolve that internal conflict by external action. He manages to slip past the guard and enter a town where he immediately finds one of his own people in open conflict with one of their common oppressors — at which point he steps in.

Even given the most charitable reading, the impression formed is that Moses has found precisely what he was looking for: an occasion to do harm to 'his enemy'.

The reading of this passage to which we are all accustomed is that Moses struck and killed one of Pharaoh's men. But this interpretation simply does not fit the Qur'anic context. As we saw above, Moses' response to his deed is to ascribe it to "the work of the satan[...]".

He continues in a similar vein:

16 He said: "My Lord: I have wronged my soul; so forgive Thou me," and He forgave him; He is the Forgiving, the Merciful.
17 He said: "My Lord: for that which Thou hast favoured me, nevermore will I be helper to the lawbreakers."[1]
(28:16-17)

Perhaps under undue influence of the pre-existing narrative in the Hebrew Bible of the same event the words above have historically been interpreted to indicate repentance on the part of Moses for the murder of a man belonging to the people of Pharaoh. But is that reading logical? The words "nevermore will I be helper to the lawbreakers" above cannot be made to support that view beyond the most careless engagement with the text.

I suggest the following scenario: Moses leads a life imbued with privilege and status derived from his legal adoption by Pharaoh and his wife, but at the point at which the story here begins in earnest is newly cognisant of the conditions under which his own people are forced to labour. Driven by the need to resolve his inner conflict externally he has entered the town set on aiding any movement he can find among his people against the oppressor; there he is presented with precisely the occasion he is looking for: an appeal from one of his own people to assist against one of their mutual enemies, but at the crucial moment of moral decision Moses sides with the oppressor against his own people.

I fully own that we are accustomed to read the text in a certain way; we expect that when it says 'Moses struck him and put an end to him' it means he struck his enemy. Read in isolation, it could mean that. But it doesn't exactly say that.

The verses are repeated together below. I invite the reader to review the segment again to see if it does not make more sense in the light I am suggesting given a broader context in which Moses is identified by God when still a baby to be 'an enemy and a grief' to the house of Pharaoh.[6]

15 And he entered the city at a time of heedlessness among its people,[1] and found therein two men fighting, one of his sect[2] and the other of his enemy.[3] And he who was of his sect[4] sought aid of him against him who was of his enemy — then Moses struck him and put an end to him. He said: "This is of the work of the satan;[5] he is a manifest, misleading enemy."[6]
16 He said: "My Lord: I have wronged my soul; so forgive Thou me," and He forgave him; He is the Forgiving, the Merciful.
17 He said: "My Lord: for that which Thou hast favoured me, nevermore will I be helper to the lawbreakers."[1]
(28:15-17)

6 See 28:8 above.

I submit that, absent an expected outcome originating in the Hebrew Bible in its current condition, one would naturally read this segment in the way I am suggesting: at the crucial moment and in the heat of intense moral testing Moses failed, sided with Pharaoh's people against his own, and killed one of his own racial kin.

Why else would he seek forgiveness of God? Killing one's enemy is a meritorious act.

Reading between the lines one sees what happens next: Moses flees from the scene and spends a sleepless night in anguish over his moral failure; this explains his foray back into the town the following morning: he must acquit himself.

> 18 And in the morning he was in the city, in dread, expectant: — and when[1] he who had sought his help the day before had cried out to him for help, Moses said to him: "Thou art one clearly erring!" —
> (28:18)[7]

With Moses back in the same context for a second bite at the cherry as it were the narrative replays in summary what had happened the previous day: that the man cried out to Moses who told him that he (the man who called out to him) was in error. That is the backstory, and it is this and the fatal blow directed at the wrong man which followed it which Moses wants to correct.

The story continues:

> 19 Then when he desired to lay hold upon him who was an enemy[1] to them both,[2] he[3] said: "O Moses: wouldst thou kill me as thou didst kill a soul yesterday? Thou desirest only to be a tyrant in the land, and desirest not to be of those who do right."
> (28:19)

The word 'enemy' clearly echoes the same at 28:15, while 'to them both'[8] refers within the broader reading I am suggesting to Moses and the man of his own people he had killed the day before. Now Moses has his true enemy in his sights, and this time he wants to do things right regardless of his target's protestations. But news of his previous misadventure has travelled fast:

> 20 And a man came running from the furthest part of the city: — he said: "O Moses: the eminent ones are taking counsel against thee, to kill thee. So leave thou. I am to thee a sincere counsellor."[1]
> (28:20)

Thus, the ruling elites have convened a council against Moses. To understand why the killing of a man whom Pharaoh himself oppressed should provoke this response consider again the words of the man Moses intended to kill in his second foray into the city at 28:19. The man says, "Thou desirest only to be a tyrant in the land, and desirest not to be of those who do right." In other words: Moses, you killed a man and had no right to do it; this makes you a tyrant. Illegal deeds have consequences.

It may not immediately be clear to a modern reader why a society the ruling elite of which oppressed a particular group within that society should care that an individual connected to the ruling family had killed one of those the State itself oppressed and killed. But divergence from modern expectations does not necessarily equate with the absence of either sense or legal framework. Consider Joseph under the king who was a predecessor to Pharaoh: although Joseph was the second most powerful man in the land even he could not detain his own brother on a whim; he had to manufacture a means of achieving his object within the law:

> 76 So he began with their bags before the bag of his brother; then he brought it forth from the bag of his brother. (Thus did We plan for Joseph; he could not have taken his brother within the doctrine[1] of the King save that God had so willed. We raise in degree[2] whom We will; and over every possessor of knowledge is One knowing.)
> (12:76)

Let us consider again Pharaoh's later reproach to Moses:

> 18 Said he: "Did we not bring thee up among us as a child? And thou tarriedst among us years of thy life;
> 19 "And thou didst thy deed which thou didst, and wast of the false claimers of guidance."[1]
> (26:18-19)

Here Pharaoh is reproaching Moses on two counts. Firstly, he refers to Moses' "deed which thou didst" — which, while left unnamed, is clearly a reference to Moses' previous act of murder — but, significantly, proceeds (in the Arabic) to accuse Moses of being of the kāfīrūn.[9]

7 Translators render according to their understanding. We have already touched here on what that understanding has been historically in this case and given reasons for that bias. However, since this is a key point, I wish to provide some context for the reader to consider the argument here by drawing on other translators. Non-sectarian Arabist A. J. Arberry renders here: And he became inside the city fearful and anticipating [exposure], when suddenly the one who sought his help the previous day cried out to him [once again]. Moses said to him[...] I assure the reader that neither suddenly nor the full stop Arberry supplies are found in the unadorned Arabic text. Meanwhile, staunch Traditionalists Hilali & Khan have here: So he became afraid, looking about in the city (waiting as to what will be the result of his crime of killing), when behold, the man who had sought his help the day before, called for his help (again). Musa (Moses) said[...]. The reader will note here both the copious interpolations by the translators as well as the absence of the suddenly used by Arberry. Hilali & Khan render here faidhā by means of when behold. As someone with extensive experience examining translations of the Qur'an, I can assure the reader that behold is a stock tool translators use when they don't really know how to negotiate a particular point. By way of local comparison, a few verses earlier at 28:7, Arberry renders the same collocation (Arabic: faidhā) by means of then, when while Hilali & Khan have there but when. Had the translations cited employed those values in the present context (minus all the interpolations and assumed full stop) both would have resulted in a reading which comports with mine. The main difference between my treatment of the text here and that of the translators cited is that, having understood the clause marked in bold above to be an aside referencing the past, I have treated it as one. These translators did not make that connection due to their expectation of a given outcome. I am not here impugning their skills (I happen to hold Arberry in particularly high regard as a translator), or their integrity as men. I am saying that what is common to men is common to them also: their treatment of a text is shaped by their understanding, and their understanding is influenced by their expectations.

8 By means of the dual in Arabic.

9 Typically, kāfīrūn is translated by the Traditionalist across the totality of the text as infidels or unbelievers or deniers, and is taken by him to indicate those who do not adhere to the religion which he calls Islam. Naturally, the Traditionalist has no choice but to switch values in this context because his default value would be too ludicrous, even for him.

In our work we render al kāfirūn with no following particle on the basis of internal Qur'anic definitions consistently as the false claimers of guidance. Certainly, it contains within its purview much which agrees with the concepts of unbelief or denial as per the Traditionalist's emphasis,[10] but it retains a nuance lost to the Traditionalist: that of hypocrisy, of rejecting right doctrine (as per the Traditionalist's value) while at the same time claiming to be righteous.[11]

As the term is understood here, one sees the effectiveness of Pharaoh's words: he is needling Moses expertly on his most vulnerable point, saying in effect: you were a hypocrite, you were really of your own people as we see now (by your coming here and demanding I let your people go with you), yet you killed one of your own kin; ergo your claimed doctrine and your actions are at odds.

In this light, Moses' reply to Pharaoh's barbed remark makes sense:

> 20 He said: "I did it when I was of those who stray.[1]
> (26:20)

Moses could not have been "of those who stray" as a result of killing one of Pharaoh's men since Moses was expressly commissioned by God to be an enemy to Pharaoh and his people. Moreover, all were shortly to be annihilated in an act of God in consequence of Moses' implementation of the God protocol.

Moses had been "of those who stray" because he killed one of his own people.

Moses not of the people of Pharaoh

We have unpicked the details of Moses' backstory and understood something of his internal conflict as a man torn between his own people and that of Pharaoh. In this part of the present chapter we will look at what we have elided thus far in the interests of not pulling the reader in too many directions at once: the fact that Moses was legally of the people of Pharaoh at the time he killed a man. And we shall do that by identifying the moment at which that legal connection was severed.

Again, while this avenue of analysis may seem divergent from our core topic, the threads will be brought together in due course.

We saw above that Moses was adopted into the family of Pharaoh on the initiative of Pharaoh's wife, a fact to which Pharaoh himself alludes. We noted also that it was conflicting loyalties within Moses as a young man newly conscious of his world that drove him to undertake his first steps to free the people to which he had tribal connection and in which he failed so

10 See note above.

11 It is the loss of this nuance which is why the Traditionalist has to employ an entirely different value at this juncture in his translations.

emphatically. We will consider now the end of the segment at 28:14-21 which has formed the core of our analysis since we first considered which man Moses killed:

> 21 And he went out therefrom in dread, expectant. He said: "My Lord: deliver Thou me from the wrongdoing[i] people."
> (28:21)

Pan-textual analysis is a core engine of my process of hermeneutics.[12] When confronted with what looks like a key phrase my default response is always to review the entire text for other instances of the same wording or usage. In the present case, we find only one further instance of this exact convention: at the point at which the wife of Pharaoh — the very person upon whose initiative Moses was grafted into the people of Pharaoh — disowns both her husband and the people to which she belonged:

> 11 And God has struck a similitude for those who heed warning:[1] — the wife of Pharaoh,[2] when she said: "My Lord: build Thou for me a house with Thee in the Garden, and deliver Thou me from Pharaoh[3] and his deeds, and deliver Thou me from the wrongdoing[4] people."
> (66:11)[13]

Again, this precise phrase[14] exists nowhere in the Qur'an beyond the two instances above. By correlating these two usages and considering their contexts, it is clear that this phrase does not express personal prayer or rhetorical flourish; rather, it carries a precise legal weight: it represents the point at which the speaker formally renounces all existing loyalties to Pharaoh and his people.

We are now fully prepared to understand the significance of God's opening words to Moses.

> 10 And when thy Lord called Moses: "Go thou to the wrongdoing[i] people,
> 11 "The people of Pharaoh:[1] — will they not be in prudent fear?"[2]
> 12 He said: "My Lord: I fear that they will deny me,
> 13 "And my breast will be straitened, and my tongue not proceed; so send Thou for Aaron.
> 14 "And they have a transgression[1] against me, so I fear that they will kill me."
> 15 He said: "By no means![1] Go[2] with Our proofs;[3] We are with you,[4] listening."
> 16 "And go[1] to Pharaoh,[2] and say:[3] 'We are a messenger[4] of the Lord of All Creation.
> 17 "'Send thou[1] with us the children of Israel.'"
> (26:10-17)

Thus, when God addresses Moses and tells him as the first order of business to go "to the wrongdoing people" these words do more than convey condemnation of the moral fibre of 12 My principal work The Qur'an: A Complete Revelation is founded in large part upon this methodology.

13 Moreover, in the context surrounding verse 66:11, the broader salient point is that Pharaoh's wife was a woman who attained good standing before God despite the evil of her husband.

14 Arabic: najjinī min al qawmi al ẓālimīn.

Pharaoh's community, they provide both absolution and resolution to the conflict which has been central to Moses' life to this point. By them, Almighty God confirms Moses as a man with no tribal connection, affiliation, or duty of responsibility to Pharaoh or his people.

Summary

We have considered Moses' inner crisis due to conflicting affiliations, seen the point clarified and made unambiguous, and noted the formal clearance he received from God of all connection to the house of Pharaoh.

We are cognisant of the fact that Moses was sent back to Pharaoh by God on two missions: to deliver the God protocol to Pharaoh and his people, and to deliver his own people — the children of Israel, out of the hand of the oppressor, and we have understood that they are discrete, albeit related, missions.

The key point here for the purposes of grasping a feature of the God protocol which will be vital to us as we proceed is that Moses was sent back to the land of Pharaoh on a mission of warning to a people with which he had neither tribal nor legal obligation or connection.

The point above having been firmly established, the ground is laid for us to consider what this information implies for what follows.

Our study to this point in our analysis has shown that in every case the God protocol is delivered to a people by one of its own. Moreover, in the explicit narratives we have reviewed we have found that those warned are addressed in every case by the now familiar standard formula: "O my people".

But here, while Moses was unquestionably a messenger of warning to Pharaoh and his community, the fact is that he simply could not deliver the protocol to them as one of them, since he was not one of them.

We are ready now to consider the Qur'an's presentation of Moses' mission to Pharaoh.

Moses' mission to Pharaoh

Since this is the last in the sequence of what, at the time of the Qur'anic revelation, were all previous historical instances of the God protocol, we present those segments of text which treat of Moses' implementation of the God protocol within broader summaries which comprise multiple implementations together with their broader related contexts where such occur. While this approach will burden the reader with material he has seen before, it has the following advantages:

- It provides him with the opportunity to gain a visceral sense from the Qur'anic presentation of Moses' mission to Pharaoh as the last (at the time of the revelation) in a sequence of implementations of the protocol;
- It allows him to experience the text afresh for himself in the light of what we learned in previous chapters;
- It provides him a means by which to appreciate the contextual connection between a sequence of implementations of the God protocol resulting in a sequence of related incidents of annihilation, and the coming Hour.[15]

The key segments are listed in the order they occur in the text; only those parts which treat of Moses' implementation of the God protocol to Pharaoh are included in the summary section at the end of the chapter.

Any comments treating of an individual segment follow that segment; a number of features are marked in bold.

Segment 1

> 47 O children of Israel: remember My favour wherewith I favoured you, and that I preferred you above all mankind.[1]
> 48 And be in prudent fear[1] of a day no soul will avail a soul anything, nor will intercession be accepted from it, nor will compensation be taken from it; nor will they be helped.[2]
> 49 And when[1] We delivered you from the house of Pharaoh:[2] they were afflicting you with an evil punishment, slaughtering your sons and sparing your women; and in that was a great trial from your Lord.
> 50 And when[1] We divided for you the sea, and delivered you, and drowned the house of Pharaoh[2] — and you were looking on.
> (2:47-50)

We note 2:48 as a reference to the Day of Judgment inserted within this summary of the children of Israel's deliverance out of the hand of Pharaoh, and the destruction of the tyrant and his people which itself forms the conclusion of this implementation of the God protocol.

15 This event is to be initiated by 'a single Blast' and marks the end of the Age and the advent of the Judgment and the assignment of all men of all times to either the Fire or the Garden. We return to this event later in our presentation, but it will be helpful by way of preparation to begin now to appreciate that the Hour is a universal event of a cataclysmic nature similar in result — but on a universal scale — to those recorded in the local implementations of that mechanism we are calling the God protocol. The question will increasingly arise whether a universal implementation of the God protocol might be expected also to initiate the Hour.

Segment 2

10 Those who ignore warning:[1] their wealth and their children[2] will avail them nothing against God; and it is they who are the fuel of the Fire,[3]
11 Like the case[1] of the house of Pharaoh[2] and those before them: they denied Our proofs,[3] so God seized them for their transgressions;[4] and God is severe in retribution.
12 Say thou to those who ignore warning:[1] "You will be defeated, and gathered into Gehenna; and evil is the resting-place."
(3:10-12)

Verse 3:11 identifies the initiating incident for destruction ('they denied Our proofs'). This is followed directly in the next verse by mention of defeat for the deniers and Hell as their place in eternity.

Segment 3

100 Is it not guidance[1] to those who inherit the land after its people that, if We willed, We would strike them for their transgressions,[2] and seal their hearts so they hear not?
101 Those cities: We relate some of their reports to thee; and their messengers came to them with clear signs, but they were not to believe in[1] what they had denied before; thus God seals the hearts of the false claimers of guidance.[2]
102 And We found not for most of them any covenant;[1] but We found most of them perfidious.[2]
103 Then We raised up after them Moses with Our proofs[1] to Pharaoh[2] and his eminent ones, but they wronged them; then see thou how was the final outcome of the workers of corruption: —
104 And Moses said: "O Pharaoh:[1] I am a messenger from the Lord of All Creation,
105 "Obliged to ascribe not to God save the truth.[1] I have come to you with clear evidence from your Lord; so send thou with me the children of Israel."
106 Said he: "If thou hast come with a proof,[1] bring thou it, if thou be of the truthful."
107 So he cast his staff — and then was it a clear serpent!
108 And he drew forth his hand — and then was it white for the beholders!
109 Said the eminent ones of the people of Pharaoh:[1] "This is a learned sorcerer[2]
110 "Who would turn you out of your land; so what do you command?"
111 They said: "Delay thou him and his brother, and send thou into the cities gatherers
112 "To bring to thee every learned sorcerer."[1]
113 And the sorcerers[1] came to Pharaoh.[2] They said: "There is a reward for us if we be the victors."[3]
114 Said he: "Yea; and you will be of those brought near."[1]
115 They said: "O Moses: wilt thou cast, or will we be the ones who cast?"
116 He said: "Cast." And when they cast, they bewitched the eyes of the people, and struck fear into them, and produced a mighty sorcery.[1]
117 And We instructed[1] Moses: "Cast thou thy staff," — and then it swallowed up what they falsified!

118 And the truth[1] was established, and what they did made vain.
119 Thereupon were they defeated; and they turned about, brought low.
120 And the sorcerers[1] fell in submission.[2]
121 They said: "We believe in[1] the Lord of All Creation,
122 "The Lord of Moses and Aaron."
123 Said Pharaoh:[1] "You believe in[2] him[3] before I gave you leave. This is a scheme you schemed in the city that you might turn out its people. But you will come to know!
124 "I will cut off your hands and your feet on opposite sides; then will I crucify[1] you all together."
125 They said: "We are returning to our Lord.
126 "And thou resentest us only that we believed in[1] the proofs[2] of our Lord when they came to us." — "Our Lord: pour Thou out patience upon us, and take Thou us as ones submitting."[3]
127 And the eminent ones among the people of Pharaoh[1] said: "Wilt thou leave Moses and his people to work corruption in the land, and leave thee and thy gods?" Said he: "We will kill their sons and spare their women; for[2] indeed we have them in subjugation."[3]
128 And Moses said to his people: "Seek help in God, and be patient; the earth belongs to God; He causes to inherit it whom He wills among his servants. And the final outcome is for those of prudent fear."[1]
129 They said: "We have been hindered[1] before thou camest to us and since thou camest to us."[2] Said he: "It may be that your Lord will destroy your enemy, and make you successors in the earth, so He might see how you will do."[3]
130 And We seized the house of Pharaoh[1] with drought and loss of crops,[2] that they might take heed.
131 And when good came to them, they said: "This is ours." And if evil[1] befell them, they thought Moses and those with him an evil omen; in truth,[2] their evil omen was but with God, but most of them knew not.
132 And they said: "Whatever proof[1] thou bring us wherewith to bewitch us, we will not believe thee."
133 And We sent upon them the flood, and the locusts, and the lice, and the frogs, and the blood — proofs[1] set out and detailed[2] — but they had waxed proud and were a people of lawbreakers.
134 And when the scourge came upon them, they said: "O Moses: call thou to thy Lord for us by what He covenanted with thee: if thou remove the scourge from us, we will believe thee, and send the children of Israel with thee."
135 But when We removed the scourge from them to a term they were to reach, then they reneged.
136 And We took vengeance on them, and drowned them[1] in the sea[2] because they denied Our proofs[3] and were heedless of them.
137 And We caused the people who were despised to inherit the east of the land and its west which We had blessed.[1] And the most fair word of thy Lord was fulfilled to the children of Israel because they were patient; and We annihilated what Pharaoh[2] and his people wrought and what they built.[3]
(7:100-137)

At 7:104, Moses addresses the tyrant by name. As we proceed, we will nowhere see Moses use the stock phrase "O my people" when addressing Pharaoh or Pharaoh's people.

At 7:105, Moses introduces his second mission: to free the children of Israel. We have already stated that Moses has two missions — to free the children of Israel and to carry out an implementation of the God protocol — and that these missions, while related, are discrete.

We observe that while Pharaoh has power, that power derives from his position as the head of a ruling elite with a large measure of influence over him. They advise him to kill the sons and spare the women among the children of Israel.

Moses then appeals to his own people[16] to hold firm to God. The remainder summarises the well-known story.

The conclusion at 7:137, however, ill fits with the Biblical version, for it is clear here that Pharaoh and his people's buildings were destroyed, a form of destruction entirely in keeping with the customary features of the God protocol, and more extensive and wide-ranging than the drowning of Pharaoh and his army with which one is familiar and which is found in both the Biblical and Qur'anic accounts.

Segment 4

> 52 Like the case[1] of the house of Pharaoh[2] and those before them: they denied the proofs[3] of God, so God seized them for their transgressions;[4] God is strong, severe in retribution.
> 53 Is it not that[1] God changes not the favour He bestows upon a people until they change what is in their souls and that God is hearing and knowing!
> 54 Like the case[1] of the house of Pharaoh[2] and those before them: they denied the proofs[3] of their Lord, so We destroyed them for their transgressions[4] and drowned the house of Pharaoh;[5] and all were wrongdoers.[6]
> (8:52-54)

As we saw in Chapter 8, the verses at 8:52 and 8:54 contain a generic narrative statement.[17] From this, it is clear that denial of the proofs of God in all implementations of the God protocol prior to the time of Muḥammad triggered annihilation in an act of God.

Segment 5

> 71 And recite thou to them the report of Noah, when he said to his people: "O my people: if my presence[1] and my reminding you of the proofs[2] of God be grievous to you, then in God have I placed my trust; so resolve upon your plan[3] and your partners;[4] then let not your plan[5] be unclear[6] to you;[7] then move decisively[8] against me, and grant me no respite.

16 We note that the text is specific: 'Moses said to his people'.

17 The phrase 'the house of Pharaoh and those before them' indicates all pre-Qur'anic instances of the God protocol.

> 72 "And if you turn away, then have I asked of you no reward; my reward is only upon[1] God; and I have been commanded to be among those submitting."[2]
> 73 Then they denied him;[1] so We delivered him, and those with him in the ship, and made them successors, and We drowned those who denied Our proofs.[2] Then see thou how was the final outcome of those who had been warned!
> 74 Then raised We up, after him, messengers to their people, and they came to them with clear signs; but they were not to believe in[1] what they had denied before; thus do We seal the hearts of the transgressors.
> 75 Then raised We up, after them, Moses and Aaron before Pharaoh[1] and his eminent ones with Our proofs,[2] but they had waxed proud; and they were a people of lawbreakers.
> 76 And when the truth[1] came to them from Us, they said: "This is obvious sorcery."[2]
> 77 Moses said: "Do you say of the truth[1] when it has come to you: 'Is this sorcery?'[2] But the sorcerers[3] will not be successful."
> 78 They said: "Hast thou come to us to turn us away from that upon which we found our fathers, and that there be for you[1] majesty in the land? And we do not believe you."[2]
> 79 And Pharaoh[1] said: "Bring to me every learned sorcerer."[2]
> 80 And when the sorcerers[1] came, Moses said to them: "Cast what you will cast!"
> 81 And when they had cast, Moses said: "What you have brought is sorcery;[1] God will make it vain;[2] God makes not right the work of the workers of corruption.
> 82 "And God establishes the truth[1] by His words, though the lawbreakers be averse."
> 83 And there believed not Moses save a progeny of his people, for fear of Pharaoh[1] and their eminent ones, that they would subject them to means of denial;[2] and Pharaoh[3] was exalted in the land, and he was of the committers of excess.
> 84 And Moses said: "O my people: if you believe in[1] God, then place your trust in Him, if you are submitting."[2]
> 85 And they said: "In God have we placed our trust." — "Our Lord: make Thou not us a means of denial[1] for the wrongdoing[2] people,
> 86 "And deliver Thou us by Thy mercy from the people of the false claimers of guidance."[1]
> 87 And We instructed[1] Moses and his brother: "Settle your[2] people in Egypt[3] in houses,[4] and make your houses a destination;[5] and uphold the duty;[6] and bear thou glad tidings to the believers."[7]
> 88 And Moses said: "Our Lord: Thou hast given Pharaoh[1] and his eminent ones adornment and wealth in the life of this world, our Lord, that they might lead astray from Thy path. Our Lord: destroy Thou their wealth, and harden Thou their hearts, so that they believe not until they see the painful punishment."
> 89 He said: "Your[1] supplication has been answered; so take[2] a straight path, and follow[3] not the path of those who know not."
> 90 And We brought the children of Israel across the sea; and Pharaoh[1] followed[2] them with his forces in sectarian zealotry[3] and enmity. When[4] the drowning had overtaken him,[5] he said: "I believe there is no god save He in whom the children of Israel believe; and I am of those submitting."[6]
> 91 "Now?[1] And thou opposedst before, and wast of the workers of corruption?
> 92 "So this day will We save thee in thy body, that thou be a proof[1] to those after thee."[2] But most among men are heedless of Our proofs.[3]
> (10:71-92)

We should note that the accusation of sorcery at 10:76 (of which Pharaoh and his people were themselves practitioners) has a political edge to it in Qur'anic usage; it contains a flavour of the use of certain means to obtain temporal power. At 10:78 this value is confirmed as Moses' interlocutors accuse him of attempting to usurp political power.

At 10:84 Moses turns to the children of Israel and appeals to them. Here he can legitimately use the expression "O my people". However, this appeal treats only of the children of Israel and of his mission to free them from the people of Pharaoh as confirmed at 10:86, the context is plainly separate from that of his mission of warning under the God protocol to Pharaoh and his people.

At 10:88 Moses prays that Pharaoh and his people might not repent before God's wrath is visited upon them, a prayer reminiscent of Noah's appeal to God in comparable circumstances.[18]

Segment 6

77 And when Our messengers came to Lot, he was distressed for them and straitened with unease for them;[1] and he said: "This is a trying[2] day."
78 And his people came to him, hastening towards him; and before had they been doing evil deeds.[1] He said: "O my people: these are my daughters; they are purer for you. So be in prudent fear[2] of God, and disgrace me not concerning my guests. Is then there not[3] among you a right-minded man?"[4]
79 They said: "Thou knewest we have no right[1] to[2] thy daughters; and thou knowest what we desire."
80 He said: "Would that I had power against you, or could take shelter in a strong support!"
81 Said they: "O Lot: we are messengers of thy Lord; they will not reach thee. And travel thou with thy household during a portion of the night; and let not any one of you turn around save thy wife — there will befall her what befalls them. Their appointment is the morning; is then the morning not[1] near?
82 And when Our command came, We utterly overthrew it,[1] and rained upon it stones of baked clay,[2] piled up in layers,
83 Marked[1] in the sight of thy Lord. And it[2] is not far from the wrongdoers.[3]
84 And to Madyan,[1] their brother Shuʿayb: he said: "O my people: serve God; you have no god but He; so decrease not the measure and the balance. I see you in affluence,[2] but I fear for you the punishment of an encompassing day."
85 And: "O my people: fulfil the measure and the balance with equity,[1] and deprive not men of their possessions,[2] and commit not evil in the earth, working corruption.
86 "The remainder of God[1] is better[2] for you, if you be believers.[3] And I am not a custodian over you."
87 They said: "O Shuʿayb: does thy duty[1] command thee that we leave what our fathers served, or that we do not with our wealth what we will? Thou art the clement, the right-minded!"[2]
88 He said: "O my people: have you considered:[1] if I be upon clear evidence from my Lord, and He has provided me with a goodly provision from Him[...]?[2] But I desire not to oppose you in that which I forbid you;[3] I desire only right ordering, so far as I am able. And my success is only through God; in Him have I placed my trust, and to Him do I turn."
89 And: "O my people: let not my[1] dissension cause you to commit evil, that there befall you the like of what befell the people of Noah, or the people of Hūd, or the people of Ṣāliḥ; and the people of Lot are not far from you."
90 And: "Ask forgiveness of your Lord; then turn to Him; my Lord is merciful and loving."
91 They said: "O Shuʿayb: we understand not much of what thou sayest; and we consider thee among us as weak. And were it not for thy family, we would have stoned thee; and thou art not to us one respected."[1]
92 He said: "O my people: is my family more respected for power by you than God? And Him have you put[1] behind your backs.[2] My Lord encompasses what you do."
93 And: "O my people: work according to your power[1] — I am working; you will come to know to whom comes a punishment that disgraces him, and who is a liar. And watch — I am with you watching."
94 And when Our command came, We saved Shuʿayb and those who heeded warning[1] with him, by mercy from Us. And the Blast seized those who were doing wrong; and morning found them lying prone in their homes
95 As though they had never lived[1] therein — so away with Madyan,[2] even as Thamūd was taken away![3]
96 And We sent Moses with Our proofs[1] and a clear authority
97 To Pharaoh[1] and his eminent ones, but they followed the command of Pharaoh;[2] and the command of Pharaoh[3] was not right-minded.
98 He will precede his people on the Day of Resurrection, and lead them to the Fire, and evil is the place[1] led to.
99 And they[1] were followed[2] here[3] by a curse; and on the Day of Resurrection evil is the gift given.
100 That is from the reports of the cities We relate to thee; among them[1] are standing and reaped.[2]
101 And We wronged them not, but they wronged their souls; and their gods to whom they called, besides[1] God, availed them nothing when the command of thy Lord came; and they increased them not save in ruin.
102 And thus is the seizing of thy Lord, when He takes the cities when they are doing wrong;[1] His seizing is painful and strong.
103 In that is a proof[1] for those who fear the punishment of the Hereafter; that is a day to which mankind will be gathered; and that is a day witnessed;
104 And We delay it not save to a set term.
105 On the day it comes no soul will speak save by His leave. And among them will be wretched and glad:
106 And as for those wretched — then in the Fire! — they will have therein roaring[1] and wailing,
107 They abiding eternally therein so long as the heavens and the earth endure save that thy Lord should will; thy Lord is doer of what He wills.
(11:77-107)

We have provided the segment which treats of Moses within its broader context of the histories of previous warners at 11:77-95.

Verses 11:96-99 emphasise the waywardness of Pharaoh and his ruling elite, and the ultimate 18 One naturally contrasts this with Abraham who prayed that God might spare the people of Lot.

responsibility those who followed his command bear for so doing. The stress then shifts to the temporal and eternal consequences of that folly.
That the wording at 11:100 implies that all remaining cities are destined to be destroyed[19] is confirmed by the segment below:

> 58 And there is no city save We will destroy it before the Day of Resurrection, or punish it with severe punishment; that is in the Writ[1] inscribed.
> (17:58)

Thus, there exist connections between the destruction of cities (11:100-102), the fact of the Final Day as an event whose advent is certain and set (11:103-104), and the Judgment at which mankind will be assigned a place in the Fire or in the Garden (11:105-107).

Pharaoh, as we see above, is to lead his people into the Fire. As the archetypal tyrant, we extrapolate from his individual case to all evil systems of control, including that of our day, whose elites will lead those who follow them into the Fire.

Segment 7

> 101 And We gave Moses nine clear proofs,[1] so ask thou the children of Israel.[2] When he came to them, and Pharaoh[3] said to him: "I consider thee, O Moses, one taken by sorcery,"[4]
> 102 He said: "Thou hast known that there sends these down only the Lord of the Heavens and the Earth as a means of insight;[1] and I consider thee, O Pharaoh, destroyed."[2]
> 103 And he wished to turn them out[1] of the land; and We drowned him and those with him all together.[2]
> 104 And We said, after him, to the children of Israel: "Dwell in the land; and when there comes the promise of the Hereafter, We will bring you in a mixed multitude."[1]
> 105 And with the truth[1] have We sent it[2] down, and with the truth[3] has it come down — and We sent thee only as a bearer of glad tidings and a warner —
> 106 And as a recitation[1] We divided, that thou recite it to men in stages;[2] and We have sent it down as a successive revelation.[3]
> (17:101-105)

The commonly accepted number of plagues sent by God upon the Egyptians in the Book of Exodus is ten.[20] But the text never says so in so many words, and Psalms 78 and 105 seem to suggest seven or eight.

However, the following list of ten plagues from the narrative at Exodus is often cited, namely:

19 I.e. 'among them [i.e. among cities] are standing [i.e. not destroyed] and reaped [i.e. already destroyed]'

20 https://en.wikipedia.org/wiki/Plagues_of_Egypt

1. blood: Ex. 7:14–24;
2. frogs: Ex. 7:25–8:15;
3. lice: Ex. 8:16-19;
4. flies: Ex. 8:20-32;
5. pestilence of livestock: Ex. 9:1–7;
6. boils: Ex. 9:8–12;
7. thunderstorm of hail and fire: Ex. 9:13–35;
8. locusts: Ex. 10:1–20;
9. darkness for three days: Ex. 10:21–29;
10. death of firstborn: Ex. 11:1–12:36.

Meanwhile, the Qur'an states plainly that Moses was given 'nine clear proofs' (17:101).[21]

The word rendered proofs above at 17:101 (Arabic: āyāt) does not mean plagues; rather it means signs or proofs. A plague may constitute a sign or proof, but by no means does every sign or proof need be a plague.

The nine[22] proofs (Arabic: āyāt) listed by the Qur'an are:

1. Moses' staff transformed to a serpent (7:107 and elsewhere);
2. Moses' hand made white (7:108 and elsewhere);
3. drought (7:130);
4. famine (7:130);
5. flood (7:133);
6. locusts (7:133);
7. lice (7:133);
8. frogs (7:133);
9. blood (7:133).

We note the immediate segue at 17:105 into a reference to the Qur'an and to the recipient thereof as a 'bearer of glad tidings and a warner', again suggesting that the narrative treating of Moses' mission to Pharaoh has implications for Muḥammad's own mission.

Segment 8

> 43 "Go[1] to Pharaoh.[2] He has transgressed.[3]
> 44 "And speak[1] to him a gentle word,[2] that he might take heed, or fear."
> 45 They[1] said: "Our Lord: we fear lest he hasten against us, or that he will transgress."

21 Muslims have been frustrated in presenting them, but most of any difficulty arises because they assume the conclusions presented to them by those who claim the Hebrew Bible and then try, without success, to present nine plagues of the type the adherent of the Hebrew Bible expects.

22 The Passover is nowhere mentioned in the Qur'anic text, and its absence rather bellows from the page given its seminal significance both for the later Jewish racial and religious conception, and for contingent — though usurping — Christian conceits.

46 He said: "Fear[1] not; I am with you,[2] hearing and seeing.[3]
47 "So go[1] to him, and say:[2] 'We are the messengers[3] of thy Lord, so send thou the children of Israel with us, and punish thou them not. We have come to thee with a proof[4] from thy Lord; and peace be upon him who follows the guidance!
48 "'It has been revealed[1] to us that the punishment is upon him who denies and turns away.'"[2]
49 Said he:[1] "And who is your[2] Lord, O Moses?"
50 He said: "Our Lord is He who gave everything its creation, then guided."
51 Said he: "And what is the case of the former generations?"
52 He said: "The knowledge thereof is with my Lord in a writ;[1] my Lord neither errs, nor forgets."
53 (Who made the earth for you as a bed,[1] and inserted roads for you therein; and sent down from the sky water, and thereby have We brought forth diverse kinds[2] of plants:
54 "Eat, and pasture[1] your cattle." In that are proofs[2] for possessors of intelligence.[3]
55 Therefrom[1] did We create you, and thereto will We return you, and therefrom will We bring you forth another time.)
56 And We showed him[1] all Our proofs,[2] but he denied and refused.
57 Said he: "Hast thou come to turn us out of our land by thy sorcery,[1] O Moses?
58 "Then will we bring thee sorcery the like thereof; so make thou an appointment between us and thee, which neither we nor thou shall fail to keep — an equal[1] place."
59 He said: "Your appointment is the day of the festival;[1] and let the people be gathered at midday."
60 And Pharaoh[1] turned away, and gathered his plan; then he came.
61 Moses said to them: "Woe to you! Invent not a lie against God lest He utterly destroy[1] you with a punishment; and he has failed who invents."
62 And they disputed about their affair among themselves, and kept secret their[1] private conversation.
63 (They said: "These are two sorcerers[1] who want to turn you out of your land by their sorcery,[2] and take away your exemplary tradition.[3]
64 "So resolve upon your plan, then come with one accord;[1] and he has succeeded who prevails this day.")
65 They said: "O Moses: either thou wilt cast, or we will be the first who cast."
66 He said: "Nay,[1] you cast." And then their ropes and their staffs seemed to him, by their sorcery, to be moving,
67 And Moses conceived a fear within him.
68 We said: "Fear thou not; thou art the uppermost.
69 "And cast thou what is in thy right hand; it will swallow up what they have wrought. They have wrought but the plan of a sorcerer,[1] and the sorcerer[2] will not be successful, no matter where he goes."[3]
70 And the sorcerers[1] cast themselves down[2] in submission.[3] They said: "We have believed in[4] the Lord of Aaron and Moses."
71 Said he: "You have believed him[1] before I gave you leave. He is your chief who taught you sorcery;[2] then will I will cut off your hands and your feet on opposite sides, and crucify[3] you on the trunks of date-palms; and you will know which of us is severer in punishment and more enduring."
72 They said: "We will not prefer thee over what has come to us of clear signs, or Him who created us. So decide thou what thou wilt decide; thou canst but decide this worldly life.
73 "We have believed in[1] our Lord, that He might forgive us our offences,[2] and what thou didst compel us to of sorcery;[3] and God is better and more enduring."

74 (Whoso comes to his Lord as a lawbreaker, for him is Gehenna; he will neither die therein nor live.
75 And whoso comes to Him as a believer,[1] having done righteous deeds, those have the high degrees:
76 Gardens of perpetual abode, beneath which rivers flow, they abiding eternally therein. And that is the reward of him who purifies himself.)
77 And We instructed[1] Moses: "Travel thou by night with My servants; and strike thou for them a dry path in the sea, neither fearing overtaking nor being afraid."
78 And Pharaoh[1] followed[2] them with his forces, and there covered them of the sea[3] what covered them.[4]
79 And Pharaoh[1] led his people astray, and did not guide.
(20:43-79)

We note particularly the clearly parenthetical segment treating of Gehenna at 20:74-76 as indicating that the destruction of temporal systems by means of the God protocol is both a preliminary to and foreshadowing of the eternal condition to which those who work evil will go.

The segment ends with the familiar note that Pharaoh led his people astray. Populations follow leaders; if they follow evil leaders, they follow them to the Fire.

Segment 9

23 And We sent Noah to his people, and he said: "O my people: serve God; you have no god but He. Will you then not[1] be in prudent fear!"
24 Then said the eminent ones who disbelieved[1] among his people: "This is only a mortal like you, desiring to take precedence over you. And had God willed, He would have sent down angels. We heard not of this among our fathers of old.
25 "He is only a man possessed;[1] so wait for him for a time."[2]
26 He said: "My Lord: help Thou me because they have denied me."
27 And We instructed[1] him: "Make thou the ship under Our eyes and Our instruction;[2] then when Our command comes and the oven[3] boils over, load thou therein of each kind two, and thy household save him against whom the word has gone forth among them. And address thou Me not on behalf of those who do wrong; they will be drowned.
28 "And when thou art seated — thou and whoso is with thee — upon the ship, say thou: 'Praise belongs to God who has delivered us from the wrongdoing[1] people.'"
29 "And say thou: 'My Lord: set Thou me down at a blessed landing-place; and Thou art the best of those who set down.'"
30 In that are proofs;[1] and We are testing.
31 Then We produced, after them, another generation.
32 And We sent among them a messenger from among them: "Serve God; you have no god but He. Will you then not[1] be in prudent fear!"
33 And said the eminent ones of his people, those who ignored warning[1] and denied the meeting of the Hereafter and to whom We had given opulence in the life of this world: "This is only a mortal like you: he eats of that whereof you eat, and drinks of that you drink.

34 "And if you obey a mortal like yourselves, you will then be the losers.
35 "Does he promise you that when you are dead, and are dust and bones, you will be brought forth?
36 "Far-fetched![1] Far-fetched is what you are promised!
37 "There is only our life of this world: we die, and we live; and we will not be raised up.
38 "He is only a man who invented a lie about God, and we will not believe him."
39 He said: "My Lord: help Thou me because they have denied me."
40 Said He: "In a little while will they become remorseful."
41 Then the Blast seized them with justice,[1] and We made them as decaying herbage:[2] — "Then away with the wrongdoing[3] people!"
42 Then We produced, after them, other generations.
43 No community outstrips its term, nor will they defer.
44 Then We sent Our messengers in succession. Every time its messenger came to a community, they denied him; and We caused some of them to follow[1] others, and made them legends:[2] — "Then away with a people who do not believe!"[3]
45 Then sent We Moses and his brother Aaron with Our proofs[1] and a clear authority
46 To Pharaoh[1] and his eminent ones; but they had waxed proud, and they were a self-exalting people.
47 And they said: "Shall we believe two mortals like ourselves, and whose people serve us?"
48 Then they denied them,[1] and were among those destroyed.
(23:23-48)

The segment above opens with the story of Noah, the first story in the protocol sequence, which then feeds into a generic narrative summary[23] concluding with the story of Pharaoh, the last at the time of the Qur'anic revelation in the sequence of implementations of the protocol.

Segment 10

1 ṭā sīn mīm[1]
2 Those[1] are the proofs[2] of the Clear Writ.[3]
3 Thou mightest destroy thy soul from grief[4] that they are not believers.[2]
4 If We will, We can send down upon them from the sky a proof[1] to which their necks will remain humbled.[2]
5 And there comes not to them any new remembrance[1] from the Almighty,[2] save they turn away therefrom.
6 Then have they denied; and there will come to them the report of that whereat they mocked.
7 Have they not seen[1] the earth: how much We have caused to grow therein of every[2] noble kind?
8 In that is a proof,[1] but most of them are not believers.[2]
9 And thy Lord: He is the Exalted in Might, the Merciful.
10 And when thy Lord called Moses: "Go thou to the wrongdoing[1] people,
11 "The people of Pharaoh:[1] — will they not be in prudent fear?"[2]

23 Examined in detail in Chapter 8.

12 He said: "My Lord: I fear that they will deny me,
13 "And my breast will be straitened, and my tongue not proceed; so send Thou for Aaron.
14 "And they have a transgression[1] against me, so I fear that they will kill me."
15 He said: "By no means![1] Go[2] with Our proofs;[3] We are with you,[4] listening."
16 "And go[1] to Pharaoh,[2] and say:[3] 'We are a messenger[4] of the Lord of All Creation.
17 "'Send thou[1] with us the children of Israel.'"
18 Said he: "Did we not bring thee up among us as a child? And thou tarriedst among us years of thy life;
19 "And thou didst thy deed which thou didst, and wast of the false claimers of guidance."[1]
20 He said: "I did it when I was of those who stray.[1]
21 "And I fled from you[1] when I feared you. Then my Lord gave me judgment and made me among the emissaries.
22 "And that favour wherewith thou reproachest me is that thou hast enslaved the children of Israel."
23 Said Pharaoh:[1] "And what is the Lord of All Creation?"
24 He said: "The Lord of the Heavens and the Earth and what is between them;[1] if you[2] are certain––"[3]
25 Said he[1] to those round about him: "Do you not hear!"[2]
26 He said: "Your Lord, and the Lord of your fathers of old––"[1]
27 Said he: "Your messenger who has been sent to you is possessed!"
28 He said: "The Lord of the East and the West, and what is between them;[1] if you use reason––"[2]
29 Said he: "If thou takest a god other than me, I will place thee among those imprisoned."
30 He said: "Even though I brought thee something clear?"
31 Said he: "Then bring thou it, if thou be of the truthful."
32 And he cast his staff, and then it was a clear serpent;
33 And he drew forth his hand, and then it was white for all to see.[1]
34 Said he to the eminent ones round about him: "This is a learned sorcerer.[1]
35 "He wants to turn you out of your land by his sorcery;[1] then what do you command?"
36 They said: "Delay thou him and his brother, and raise thou up in the cities gatherers
37 "Who will bring thee every learned sorcerer."[1]
38 And the sorcerers[1] were assembled at the appointed time of a known day.
39 And it was said to the people: "Will you assemble
40 So we might follow the sorcerers,[1] if they are the victors?"
41 And when the sorcerers[1] came they said to Pharaoh:[2] "Will there be a reward for us, if we are the victors?"
42 He said: "Yea; and you will then be of those brought near."[1]
43 Moses said to them: "Cast what you will cast."
44 And they cast their ropes and their staffs, and said: "By the power and glory[1] of Pharaoh[2] are we the victors!"
45 Then Moses cast his staff; and then it swallowed up what they falsified;
46 Then were the sorcerers[1] cast down[2] in submission,[3]
47 They said: "We believe in[1] the Lord of All Creation,
48 "The Lord of Moses and Aaron."
49 Said he: "You have believed him[1] before I gave you leave. He is your chief who taught you sorcery.[2] And you will come to know! I will cut off your hands and your feet on opposite sides, and crucify[3] you all together."

50 They said: "No harm! To our Lord are we returning.
51 "We hope that our Lord will forgive us our offences[1] because we were the first of the believers."[2]
52 And We instructed[1] Moses: "Travel thou by night with My servants; you will be followed."
53 And Pharaoh[1] sent into the cities gatherers:
54 "These are but a little band[1]
55 "But they do enrage us
56 "And we are a cautious assembly."[1]
57 And We turned them out of gardens and springs,
58 And treasures and a noble station.[1]
59 Thus![1] And We caused the children of Israel to inherit them.
60 And they followed[1] them at sunrise;
61 And when the two hosts saw each other, the companions of Moses said: "We are overtaken!"
62 He said: "By no means![1] My Lord is with me; He will guide me."
63 Then We instructed[1] Moses: "Strike thou the sea with thy staff"; and it parted, and each part was like a great towering mountain.
64 And We brought nigh thereto the others,
65 And We delivered Moses and those with him all together.
66 Then drowned We the others.
67 In that is a proof,[1] but most of them are not believers.[2]
68 And thy Lord: He is the Exalted in Might, the Merciful.
69 And recite thou to them the report of Abraham[1]
70 When he said to his father and his people: "What do you serve?"
71 They said: "We serve idols,[1] and remain to them devoted."[2]
72 He said: "Do they hear you when you call,
73 "Or benefit you, or do harm?"
74 They said: "Nay[1] — we found our fathers doing thus."
75 He said: "Have you considered what you have been serving,
76 "You, and your fathers the ancients?
77 "And they are an enemy to me save the Lord of All Creation
78 "Who created me; and He guides me,
79 "And it is He who feeds me and gives me drink,
80 "And when I am sick, He heals me,
81 "And who will give me death, then give me life,
82 "And who I hope will forgive me my offences[1] on the Day of Judgment."[2]
83 "My Lord: give Thou me judgment,[1] and join Thou me with the righteous,
84 "And appoint Thou for me a tongue of truth among those who come later.[1]
85 "And make Thou me among the inheritors of the Garden of Bliss.
86 "And forgive Thou my father; he is of those who go astray.[1]
87 "And disgrace Thou me not the day they are raised:
88 "The day wealth and sons benefit not
89 "Save him who comes to God with a pure heart."
90 And the Garden will be brought nigh to those of prudent fear[1]
91 And Hell will be made manifest[1] to those who err,
92 And it will be said to them: "Where is what you served,
93 "Besides[1] God? Do they help you, or help themselves?"
94 And they will be hurled therein, they and those who err,
95 And the forces of Iblīs all together.

96 They will say while they dispute therein:
97 "By God, we were in manifest error
98 "When we made you[1] equal with the Lord of All Creation!
99 "And none but the lawbreakers led us astray,
100 "So now we have no intercessors,
101 "Nor sincere loyal friend.
102 "Would that we might return and be among the believers!"[1]
103 In that is a proof,[1] but most of them are not believers.[2]
104 And thy Lord: He is the Exalted in Might, the Merciful.
105 The people of Noah denied the emissaries
106 When their brother Noah said to them: "Will you not be in prudent fear?[1]
107 "I am to you a trustworthy messenger,
108 "So be in prudent fear[1] of God, and obey me.[2]
109 "And I ask of you for it no reward; my reward is only upon[1] the Lord of All Creation;
110 "So be in prudent fear[1] of God, and obey me."[2]
111 They said: "Are we to believe thee when the abject follow thee?"
112 He said: "And what knowledge have I of what they did?
113 "Their reckoning is only upon[1] my Lord, were you to perceive.
114 "And I am not one to drive away the believers.[1]
115 "I am only a clear warner."
116 They said: "If thou cease not, O Noah, thou wilt be of those stoned."
117 He said: "My Lord: my people have denied me,
118 "So decide Thou between me and them,[1] and deliver Thou me and those with me among the believers."[2]
119 So We delivered him and those with him in the laden ship.
120 Then We drowned thereafter those remaining.
121 In that is a proof,[1] but most of them are not believers.[2]
122 And thy Lord: He is the Exalted in Might, the Merciful.
123 ʿĀd denied the emissaries
124 When their brother Hūd said to them: "Will you not be in prudent fear?[1]
125 "I am to you a trustworthy messenger,
126 "So be in prudent fear[1] of God, and obey me.[2]
127 "And I ask of you for it no reward; my reward is only upon[1] the Lord of All Creation.
128 "Build you a proof[1] on every prominence, amusing yourselves[2]
129 "And take you constructions, that you might abide eternally,
130 "And when you lay hold, lay you hold as tyrants?[1]
131 "So be in prudent fear[1] of God, and obey me.[2]
132 "And be in prudent fear[1] of Him who has supplied you with what you know:
133 "Supplied you with cattle and sons,
134 "And gardens and springs.
135 "I fear for you the punishment of a tremendous day."
136 They said: "It is the same to us whether thou admonishest, or be not of the admonishers.
137 "This is only the tradition[1] of the former peoples,
138 "And we are not to be punished."
139 And they denied him,[1] then We destroyed them. In that is a proof,[2] but most of them are not believers.[3]
140 And thy Lord: He is the Exalted in Might, the Merciful.
141 Thamūd denied the emissaries

142 When their brother Ṣāliḥ said to them: "Will you not be in prudent fear?[1]
143 "I am to you a trustworthy messenger,
144 "So be in prudent fear[1] of God, and obey me.[2]
145 "And I ask of you for it no reward; my reward is only upon[1] the Lord of All Creation.
146 "Are you to be left secure in what is here,
147 "Among gardens and springs,
148 "And tilled fields, and date-palms with slender spathes,
149 "And to hew out houses from the mountains skilfully?[1]
150 "So be in prudent fear[1] of God, and obey me.[2]
151 "And obey not the command of the committers of excess:
152 "Those who work corruption in the land, and do not right."
153 They said: "Thou art but one taken by sorcery.[1]
154 "Thou art only a mortal like us; then bring thou a proof,[1] if thou be of the truthful."
155 He said: "This is a she-camel; to her a drink and to you a drink on a day appointed.[1]
156 "And touch her not with evil,[1] lest there take you the punishment of a tremendous day."
157 But they hamstrung[1] her,[2] then they became remorseful,
158 And the punishment seized them. In that is a proof,[1] but most of them are not believers.[2]
159 And thy Lord: He is the Exalted in Might, the Merciful.
160 The people of Lot denied the emissaries
161 When their brother Lot said to them: "Will you not be in prudent fear?[1]
162 "I am to you a trustworthy messenger,
163 "So be in prudent fear[1] of God, and obey me.[2]
164 "And I ask of you for it no reward; my reward is only upon[1] the Lord of All Creation.
165 "Do you approach the males among all mankind,
166 "And leave what your Lord created for you among your wives? The truth is,[1] you are a transgressing people."[2]
167 They said: "If thou cease not, O Lot, thou wilt be of those turned out."
168 He said: "I am of those who abhor your deed."[1]
169 "My Lord: deliver Thou me and my household from what they do."[1]
170 And We delivered him and his household all together,
171 Save an old woman[1] among those who stayed behind;
172 Then We annihilated the others,
173 And We rained upon them a rain; and evil is the rain of those who were warned.
174 In that is a proof,[1] but most of them are not believers.[2]
175 And thy Lord: He is the Exalted in Might, the Merciful.
176 And the companions of the woods[1] denied the emissaries
177 When Shuʿayb said to them: "Will you not be in prudent fear?[1]
178 "I am to you a trustworthy messenger,
179 "So be in prudent fear[1] of God, and obey me.[2]
180 "And I ask of you for it no reward; my reward is only upon[1] the Lord of All Creation.
181 "Fulfil the measure, and be not of those who cause loss.
182 "And weigh with the straight balance.
183 "And deprive not men of their possessions,[1] and commit not evil in the earth, working corruption.
184 "And be in prudent fear[1] of Him who created you and the generations[2] of the former peoples."
185 They said: "Thou art but one taken by sorcery;
186 "And thou art only a mortal like us; and we consider thee a liar.[1]
187 "Then cause thou pieces of the sky to fall upon us, if thou be of the truthful."
188 He said: "My Lord best knows what you do."
189 Then they denied him;[1] then there seized them the punishment of the Day of Shadow; it was the punishment of a tremendous day.
190 In that is a proof,[1] but most of them are not believers.[2]
191 And thy Lord: He is the Exalted in Might, the Merciful.
(26:1-191)

We have highlighted the refrain which punctuates this segment throughout. The mechanics and import of this segment were covered in detail in Chapter 7.

Segment 11

7 When Moses said to his people: "I perceive a fire. I will bring you news from it, or bring you a flaming brand, that you might warm yourselves."
8 Then when he came to it, he was called: — blessed is He who is in the fire and who is round about it, and glory[1] be to God, the Lord of All Creation! —
9 "O Moses: it is I, God, the Exalted in Might, the Wise.[1]
10 "And cast thou thy staff." And when he saw it stirring as if it were a dominus,[1] he turned away, and did not return. "O Moses: fear thou not; the emissaries fear not in My presence,
11 "Save whoso did wrong; then he changed to good after evil,[1] so am I forgiving and merciful.[2]
12 "And enter thou thy hand into thy bosom; it will come forth white, without evil[1] — among nine proofs[2] to Pharaoh[3] and his people; they are a perfidious[4] people."
13 And when Our visible proofs[1] came to them, they said: "This is obvious sorcery";[2]
14 And they rejected them, though their souls were convinced thereof, in injustice and arrogance. So see thou how was the final outcome of the workers of corruption.
(27:7-14)

The segment above repeats features we have noted previously.[24]

Segment 12

3 We recite to thee from the report of Moses and Pharaoh[1] with the truth[2] for people who believe.
4 Pharaoh[1] exalted himself in the earth and made its people sects;[2] a number among them he oppressed, slaughtering their sons and sparing their women; he was of the workers of corruption.
5 And We desired to give grace to those who were oppressed in the land, and to 24 The term rendered at 27:10 dominus is detailed at length in Article SJC.

make them leaders, and to make them the inheritors,
6 And to establish them in the land, and to show Pharaoh[1] and Hāmān[2] and their forces through them[3] what they feared.
7 And We instructed[1] the mother of Moses: "Suckle thou him; then when thou fearest for him, cast thou him into the water.[2] And fear thou not, nor grieve: We will return him to thee, and appoint him among the emissaries."
8 And there gathered him up the house of Pharaoh,[1] that he might become for them an enemy and a grief; Pharaoh[2] and Hāmān and their forces were offenders.[3]
9 And the wife of Pharaoh[1] said: "A comfort of the eye for me and for thee! Kill thou him not. It may be that he will benefit us, or we will take him as a son."[2] And they perceived not.
10 In the morning the heart of the mother of Moses became void;[1] she had almost disclosed him had We not fortified her heart, that she be of the believers.[2]
11 And she said to his sister: "Follow thou him," and she watched him from a distance, while they perceived not.
12 And We had forbidden him wet-nurses before, so she said: "Shall I direct you to the people of a household who will take care of him for you, and will look after[1] him?"
13 So We restored him to his mother, that her eye be comforted and she grieve not, and that she might know that the promise of God is true;[1] but most of them know not.
14 And when he reached his maturity and was established, We gave him judgment and knowledge; and thus reward We the doers of good.
15 And he entered the city at a time of heedlessness among its people,[1] and found therein two men fighting, one of his sect[2] and the other of his enemy.[3] And he who was of his sect[4] sought aid of him against him who was of his enemy — then Moses struck him and put an end to him. He said: "This is of the work of the satan;[5] he is a manifest, misleading enemy."[6]
16 He said: "My Lord: I have wronged my soul; so forgive Thou me," and He forgave him; He is the Forgiving, the Merciful.
17 He said: "My Lord: for that which Thou hast favoured me, nevermore will I be helper to the lawbreakers."[1]
18 And in the morning he was in the city, in dread, expectant: — and when[1] he who had sought his help the day before had cried out to him for help, Moses said to him: "Thou art one clearly erring!" —
19 Then when he desired to lay hold upon him who was an enemy[1] to them both,[2] he[3] said: "O Moses: wouldst thou kill me as thou didst kill a soul yesterday? Thou desirest only to be a tyrant in the land, and desirest not to be of those who do right."
20 And a man came running from the furthest part of the city: — he said: "O Moses: the eminent ones are taking counsel against thee, to kill thee. So leave thou. I am to thee a sincere counsellor."[1]
21 And he went out therefrom in dread, expectant. He said: "My Lord: deliver Thou me from the wrongdoing[1] people."
22 And when he turned his face towards Madyan,[1] he said: "It may be that my Lord will guide me to the right path."
23 And when he arrived at the water of Madyan,[1] he found there a community of people watering, and he found besides[2] them two women holding back; he said: "What is your[3] case?" They[4] said: "We do not water until the shepherds drive hence; and our father is a very old man."
24 So he watered for them;[1] then he turned away to the shade and said: "My Lord: I am in need of what Thou hast sent down to me of good."

25 And there came to him one of the two, walking shyly. She said: "My father calls thee, that he might reward thee with a reward for that thou didst water for us." And when he came to him, and had related to him the story, said he: "Fear thou not; thou hast escaped the wrongdoing[1] people."
26 One of the two said: "O my father: hire thou him; the best thou canst hire is the strong and the trustworthy."
27 Said he: "I desire to marry thee to one of these two daughters of mine, provided that thou hire thyself to me eight years.[1] And if thou shouldst complete ten, be that up to thee. And I desire not to create hardship for thee. Thou wilt find me, if God wills, among the righteous."
28 He said: "That is between me and thee:[1] whichever of the two terms I complete, let there be no enmity against me; and God is guardian over what we say."
29 Then when Moses had completed the term and was travelling with his family, he perceived from the side of the mount[1] a fire. He said to his family: "Wait here; I have perceived a fire. I might bring you news from it, or a firebrand from the fire, that you might warm yourselves."
30 Then when he came to it, he was called from the right side of the valley — at the blessed site — from the tree: "O Moses: I am God, the Lord of All Creation.
31 "And cast thou thy staff." And when he saw it stirring as if it were a dominus,[1] he turned away and did not return. "O Moses: draw thou nigh, and fear thou not. Thou art of the secure.
32 "Insert thou thy hand into thy bosom; it will come forth white, without evil.[1] And draw thou thine arm to thee against fear. And these are two evidences from thy Lord to Pharaoh[2] and his eminent ones; they are a perfidious[3] people."
33 He said: "My Lord: I killed a soul among them,[1] and I fear that they will kill me.
34 "And my brother Aaron is more eloquent than I in speech, so send Thou him with me as support to confirm me; I fear that they will deny me."[1]
35 Said He: "We will strengthen thine arm[1] by thy brother, and We will appoint for you[2] authority so they reach you[3] not. By Our proofs[4] you[5] and those who follow you[6] will be the victors."
36 And when Moses came to them with Our clear proofs,[1] they said: "This is only invented sorcery.[2] And we heard not of this among our fathers of old."
37 And Moses said: "My Lord best knows who brings guidance from Him, and whose will be the final outcome of the Abode; the wrongdoers[1] are not successful."
38 And Pharaoh[1] said: "O eminent ones: I know not that you have a god other than me. So kindle thou for me, O Hāmān, upon the clay,[2] and make thou for me a tower, that I might look upon the god of Moses; and I think him of the liars."
39 And he had waxed proud — he and his forces — in the land, without cause;[1] and they thought that they would not be returned to Us.
40 Then We seized him and his forces and cast them into the sea;[1] so see thou how was the final outcome of the wrongdoers![2]
41 And We appointed them leaders,[1] inviting to the Fire; and on the Day of Resurrection they will not be helped.
42 And We caused a curse to follow them[1] in the World; and on the Day of Resurrection will they be among those spurned.[2]
(28:3-42)

We see here motifs established elsewhere, but should note the connection between the overweening pride of Pharaoh and 'his forces' at 28:39, the destruction of Pharaoh and 'his forces' at 28:40, and their role as 'leaders, inviting to the Fire' and their lot on the 'Day of Resurrection' at 28:41.

Segment 13

14 And We sent Noah to his people, and he tarried among them a thousand years save fifty years; and the Flood took them when they were wrongdoers.[1]
15 But We delivered him and those with him in the ship; and We made it a proof[1] for all mankind.
16 And Abraham: when he said to his people: "Serve God, and be in prudent fear[1] of Him; that is best for you, if you would know.
17 "You but serve, other than[1] God, idols,[2] and create falsehood; those whom you serve, besides[3] God, possess for you no provision. So seek provision with God, and serve Him. And be grateful to Him; to Him will you be returned.
18 "But if you deny, then communities have denied before you; and upon the Messenger[1] is only the clear notification."
19 (Have they not seen[1] how God originates creation, then repeats it? That is easy for God.[2] 20 Say thou: "Travel in the earth and see how He originated creation; then will God produce the latter creation; God is over all things powerful.
21 "He punishes whom He wills, and shows mercy to whom He wills;[1] and to Him will you be returned.
22 "And you cannot escape[1] in the earth or in the heaven; and you have, besides[2] God, neither ally nor helper."
23 And those who deny the proofs[1] of God and the meeting with Him: those despair of My mercy; and those will have a painful punishment.)
24 Then[1] the response of his people was only that they said: "Kill him, or burn him!" But God delivered him from the fire; in that are proofs[2] for people who believe.
25 And he said: "You have but taken, besides[1] God, idols as love between you in the life of this world.[2] Then on the Day of Resurrection will you deny each other, and curse each other; and your shelter will be the Fire, and you will have no helpers."
26 Then Lot believed him.[1] And he[2] said: "I will emigrate to my Lord; He is the Exalted in Might, the Wise."[3]
27 And We gave him Isaac and Jacob, and We placed among his progeny prophethood and the Writ.[1] And We gave him his reward in the World, and in the Hereafter he is among the righteous.
28 (And Lot: when he said to his people: "You commit sexual immorality,[1] that none among all mankind has preceded you:
29 "Do you approach men, and cut off the way,[1] and commit perversity[2] in your assemblies?" Then the response of his people was only that they said: "Bring thou us the punishment of God, if thou be of the truthful."
30 He said: "My Lord: help Thou me against the people who work corruption.")
31 And when Our messengers came to Abraham with the glad tidings,[1] they said: "We will destroy the people of this city; its people are wrongdoers."[2]
32 He said: "Therein is Lot!" They said: "We best know who is therein. We will deliver him and his household save his wife; she is of those who stay behind."
33 And when Our messengers came to Lot, he was distressed for them, and felt unable to protect them.[1] And they said: "Fear thou not, nor grieve. We will deliver thee and thy household save thy wife; she is of those who stay behind.

34 "We will send upon the people of this city a scourge from the sky because they were perfidious."[1]
35 And have We have left thereof a proof[1] as clear evidence for people who reason.
36 And to Madyan[1] their brother Shuʿayb: he said: "O my people: serve God and expect the Last Day, and commit not evil in the earth, working corruption."
37 Then they denied him,[1] and the earthquake seized them, and morning found them lying prone in their home.
38 And ʿĀd and Thamūd: — and it has become clear to you from their dwellings[1] — (and the satan[2] made their deeds fair to them, and turned them away from[3] the path when they were endowed with perception)
39 And Qārūn[1] and Pharaoh[2] and Hāmān:[3] — and Moses had come to them with clear signs — and they had waxed proud in the earth, but they did not outrun.
40 And each We took for his transgression;[1] and among them was he upon whom We sent a storm of stones; and among them was he whom the Blast seized; and among them was he whom We caused the earth to swallow; and among them was he whom We drowned. And God wronged them not, but they wronged their souls. (29:14-40)

The extended segment above provides further support for our analysis of Abraham's mission to his people as an iteration of the God protocol that ended in destruction both given its inclusion among those of the sequence of messengers marked in bold and by dint of the concluding verse at 29:40.

In addition, the segment illustrates the connection between destruction within the protocol and the damnable state of the deniers on the Day of Judgment.[25]

Segment 14

21 Have they not travelled in the earth and seen how was the final outcome of those who were before them? They were stronger than them in power and impact[1] in the earth; but God seized them for their transgressions;[2] and they had not from God any defender
22 For it is that[1] their messengers brought them clear signs, but they denied, so God seized them. He is strong, and severe in retribution.
23 And We sent Moses with Our proofs[1] and a clear authority
24 To Pharaoh[1] and Hāmān and Qārūn;[2] they said: "A sorcerer[3] and a liar."
25 And when he brought them the truth[1] from Us, they said: "Kill the sons of those who heed warning[2] with him, and spare their women." But the plan of the false claimers of guidance[3] is only in error.
26 And Pharaoh[1] said: "Let me[2] kill Moses; — and let him call to his Lord — I fear that he will change your doctrine,[3] or will cause corruption in the land."
27 And Moses said: "I seek refuge in my Lord and your Lord from every proud one who believes not in[1] the Day of Reckoning."
28 And there said a believing man[1] of the house of Pharaoh[2] who concealed his

25 Cf. Abraham's words at 29:25 — "You have but taken, besides God, idols as love between you in the life of this world. Then on the Day of Resurrection will you deny each other, and curse each other; and your shelter will be the Fire, and you will have no helpers."

faith: "Would you kill a man because he says: 'My Lord is God,' and has brought you clear signs from your Lord? If he is lying, then upon him is his lie; and if he is truthful, some of what he promises you will befall you. God guides not him who is a committer of excess and a liar.
29 "O my people: yours is the dominion this day, you being dominant[1] in the land, but who will help us against the wrath of God if it comes to us?" Pharaoh[2] said: "I only show you what I see, and I only guide you to the path of rectitude."
30 And he who heeded warning[1] said: "O my people: I fear for you the like of the day of the parties,
31 "The like of the case[1] of the people of Noah, and ʿĀd, and Thamūd, and those after them; and God desires not injustice for the servants.[2]
32 "And O my people: I fear for you the Day of Calling,
33 "The day you will turn and go[1] having not against God any defender; and whom God sends astray, for him there is no guide.
34 "And Joseph brought you the clear signs before, but you ceased not to be in doubt about what he brought. When[1] he had perished, you said: 'Never will God raise up after him a messenger.'" Thus does God lead astray him who is a committer of excess and a baseless sceptic:[2]
35 Those who dispute concerning the proofs[1] of God without an authority having come to them; great is the hatred in the sight of God and in the sight of those who heed warning;[2] thus does God seal every proud and tyrannical heart.
36 And Pharaoh[1] said: "O Hāmān: build thou for me a tower, that I might reach the causes,[2]
37 — The causes[1] of the heavens — that I might look upon the God of Moses; but I think him a liar." And thus was made fair to Pharaoh[2] the evil of his deed, and he was turned away from[3] the path; and the plan of Pharaoh[4] was only in ruin.
38 And he who heeded warning[1] said: "O my people: follow me; I will guide you to the path of rectitude.
39 "O my people: the life of this world is but an enjoyment; and the Hereafter — that is the house of the fixed lodging.
40 "Whoso does evil[1] will not be rewarded save with the like thereof; and whoso works righteousness — whether male or female — and is a believer:[2] those enter the Garden, wherein they are given provision without reckoning.[3]
41 "And O my people: how is it that I invite you to deliverance, and you invite me to the Fire?
42 "You call me to deny God, and to ascribe a partnership[1] to Him with that whereof I have no knowledge; and I invite you to the Exalted in Might, the Forgiver.
43 "Without doubt, you but invite me to that[1] to which there is no calling in the World or in the Hereafter; and our return is to God. And the committers of excess will be the companions of the Fire.
44 "And you will remember what I say to you. And I commit my affair to God; God sees the servants."[1]
45 And God protected him from the evil deeds[1] they schemed, and there encompassed the house of Pharaoh[2] an evil punishment.
46 The Fire: they are exposed to it morning and evening; and the day the Hour strikes: "Cause the house of Pharaoh[1] to enter the most severe punishment!"
47 And when they will dispute together in the Fire, the weak will say to those who had waxed proud: "We were your followers; will you avail us something against a portion of the Fire?"
48 Those who had waxed proud will say: "We are all in it; God has judged between the servants."[1]

49 And those in the Fire will say to the keepers of Gehenna: "Call to your Lord, to lighten for us a day of the punishment."
50 They will say: "Came not your messengers to you with the clear signs?" They will say: "Verily."[1] They will say: "Then call!"[2] But the call of the false claimers of guidance[3] is only in error.
51 We will help Our messengers and those who heed warning[1] in the life of this world and the day the witnesses stand,
52 The day their excuses avail not the wrongdoers;[1] and they will have the curse, and they will have the evil abode.
53 And We gave Moses the guidance, and We caused the children of Israel to inherit the Writ[1]
54 As a guidance and a reminder for men of understanding.
55 So be thou patient; the promise of God is true.[1] And ask thou forgiveness for thy transgression;[2] and give thou glory[3] with the praise of thy Lord evening and morning.
56 Those who dispute concerning the proofs[1] of God without an authority having come to them — in their breasts is only greatness they will never reach.[2] So seek thou refuge in God; He is the Hearer, the Seeing.
(40:21-56)

We note here at 40:25 the words 'But the plan of the false claimers of guidance[3] is only in error'. Since all those who rejected messengers of warning are of the type cited here, this phrase constitutes a single generic principle also.[26]

The section treating of Moses opens at 40:23 and covers much ground we have seen before.

The crucial feature in this segment begins at 40:28. As we established earlier in the present chapter, Moses had no basis of affiliation with the people of Pharaoh. Yet the God protocol, as we have seen in every explicit case, requires an appeal to those warned by one of their own people on such a basis.

Moses himself, of course, could not deliver this component of the protocol for the reasons detailed earlier in this chapter. It is supplied instead by a 'believing man of the house of Pharaoh'.

And this point is vital.

It means that the God protocol was delivered in full to the house of Pharaoh despite the lack of formal affiliation with the people of Pharaoh on Moses' part.

But it also establishes a crucial principle: that what one might call the affiliation component of the God protocol may be delivered by a man other than the anointed messenger or prophet who delivers the remaining components.

Moreover, it signals another important principle: such a man need not be one of exalted rank such as a messenger or prophet, the man's relative lack of significance indicated in the text by the fact that he is left unnamed; his personal qualifications were but two: he was a believing man, and he possessed a status of formal affiliation with that society which Pharaoh ruled.

26 We have noted this latter point in the Tables at the end of this book as an explicit action on the part of those warned in the case of Moses' mission to Pharaoh and as a generic event in all remaining cases.

These facts fundamentally impact our conception of the God protocol, and perhaps all the more so given the suggestion we considered earlier in this chapter that Moses' mission of warning to Pharaoh has implications for later times:

> 54 So he [Pharaoh] swayed[1] his people, and they obeyed him; they were a perfidious[2] people.
> 55 And when they had angered Us, We took vengeance on them and drowned them all together,
> 56 And made them a precedent and an example for those who came later.
> (43:54-56)

We will now consider briefly how the 'believing man' conducts himself.

His actions are summarised below using the nomenclature we have established to record key actions of warners but with one addition: that he speaks in the presence of the messenger of God tasked with all other parts of the protocol. We have then divided the results into two categories: those which depend principally on words (i.e. those in which the emphasis is on what was said), and those which depend principally on actions (i.e. those in which the emphasis is on what took place or where it took place). We consider this summary to comprise the protocol required of the 'believing man' in order to supply the affiliation component of the God protocol which Moses himself could not.

Words

- Advances reasoned arguments (40:28-34, 40:38-44).
- Uses the appeal: "O my people:" (40:29, 40:30, 40:32, 40:38, 40:39, 40:41).[27]
- Exhorts the hearers to obey him (40:38).
- Bears glad tidings and warning (40:39-40).
- Calls the hearers to fear God (40:42).
- Warns of punishment (40:32-33).
- Cites previously destroyed peoples (40:30-31).
- Places his affair entirely in the hands of God (40:44).

Actions

- Approaches a people to which he belongs (40:28).
- Warns the principal city (40:28-44).
- Addresses himself to the elites of his time (40:28-44).

27 The 'believing man' uses the key phrase "O my people" no less than six times here; his employment of this core phrase is equal in number to that by Shuʿayb in his mission to the people of Madyan at 11:84-93. No single speaker uses the phrase more times in any contiguous narrative portion in the Qur'an.

- Speaks in the presence of the messenger of God tasked with all other parts of the protocol (40:28-44).

Thereafter, Pharaoh and his people scheme against the 'believing man', which response is standard under the protocol, but God protects him from their plan, which is also standard. The house of Pharaoh is then destroyed.

We discuss the implications of the man's words and actions in the context of completion of Muḥammad's second, universal mission of warning under the God protocol later in our presentation.

The segment continues at 40:46-50 with an emphasis on the lot of the house of Pharaoh in the Fire as a function of the Hour (i.e. the end of this temporal reality) itself mentioned at 40:46, and the consequences in the Fire for the rejecters.

Segment 15

> 46 And We sent Moses with Our proofs[1] to Pharaoh[2] and his eminent ones, and he said: "I am the messenger of the Lord of All Creation."
> 47 And when he came to them with Our proofs,[1] then they laughed at them.
> 48 And We showed them no proof[1] save it was greater than its sister; and We seized them with the punishment, that they might return.
> 49 And they said: "O thou sorcerer:[1] call thou to thy Lord for us by what He has made in covenant with thee — we will be guided!"
> 50 But when We removed from them the punishment, then they reneged.
> 51 And Pharaoh[1] called to his people, saying: "O my people: is not[2] the dominion of Egypt[3] mine, and these rivers flowing beneath me[4] — do you then not[5] see! —
> 52 "Or am I better than this, who is despised and barely makes himself clear?
> 53 "Oh, that armlets of gold had but[1] been cast upon him! Or angels had but come with him in conjunction!"
> 54 So he swayed[1] his people, and they obeyed him; they were a perfidious[2] people.
> 55 And when they had angered Us, We took vengeance on them and drowned them all together,
> 56 And made them a precedent and an example for those who came later.
> (43:46-56)

New features here include the fact that God relented after each plague to give Pharaoh and his people time to repent. Pharaoh then cites his own temporal power and compares it witheringly with Moses; and, as we have seen elsewhere, his people then follow Pharaoh and are destroyed.

We discuss Pharaoh's argument in more detail at the end of this chapter.

Segment 16

13 How should they have the reminder when a clear messenger has come to them,[1]
14 Then they turned away from him and said: "One taught and possessed"?[1]
15 We, indeed, remove the punishment a little; you, indeed, revert.[1]
16 The day We seize with the greatest seizing We will take retribution!
17 And We had subjected the people of Pharaoh[1] before them to means of denial,[2] and there came to them a noble messenger:
18 "Deliver up to me the servants of God; I am to you a trustworthy messenger."
19 And: "Exalt not yourselves against God; I bring you a clear authority."
20 And: "I have sought refuge in my Lord and your Lord lest you stone me."
21 And: "If you believe me not, then stay away from me."
22 And he called to his Lord that these were a people of lawbreakers.
23 "Then travel thou with My servants by night: — you will be followed.
24 "And leave thou the sea tranquil: — they are a force to be drowned."
25 How many were the gardens and springs they left
26 And cornlands and noble station[1]
27 And prosperity wherein they found gladness!
28 Thus![1] And We gave it as an inheritance to another people.
29 And the heaven and the earth wept not for them, nor were they granted respite,
30 And We delivered the children of Israel from the humiliating punishment,
31 From Pharaoh:[1] — he was a high one among the committers of excess.
32 And We chose them,[1] according to knowledge, above all mankind,
33 And We gave them among proofs[1] that wherein was a clear trial.
(44:13-33)

Verses 44:13-16 relate to Muḥammad's own preaching. We have included them here to give the reader a sense of how Muḥammad's original mission was based upon that of the former warners and the imminence of destruction in that case. Meanwhile, the following narrative treating of Moses' mission of warning to Pharaoh comprises features we have seen before.

Segment 17

24 Has there come to thee the story[1] of the honoured guests of Abraham?
25 When they entered upon him and said: "Peace!" he said: "Peace, people unknown!"[1]
26 And he turned aside to his family and brought a fatted calf,
27 And he placed it near them; he said: "Will you not eat?"
28 And he sensed fear from them.[1] They said: "Fear thou not!" And they gave him glad tidings of a learned lad.
29 And his wife came forward, crying out, and struck her face, and said: "A barren old woman!"
30 They said: "Thus said thy Lord; He is the Wise, the Knowing."
31 He said: "Then what is your business, O emissaries?"
32 They said: "We have been sent to a people of lawbreakers,
33 "That we might send upon them stones of clay,
34 "Marked in the sight of thy Lord[1] for the committers of excess."

35 And We brought out whoso therein was of the believers,[1]
36 And We found not therein but one house of those submitting.[1]
37 And We left therein a proof[1] for those who fear the painful punishment.
38 And in Moses:[1] when We sent him to Pharaoh[2] with a clear authority: —
39 He turned away with his supporters,[1] saying: "A sorcerer,[2] or one possessed."
40 So We took him and his forces, and cast them into the sea;[1] and he was blameworthy.
41 And in ʿĀd:[1] when We sent upon them the barren wind: —
42 It left nothing it came upon save it made it as decayed ruins.
43 And in Thamūd:[1] when it was said to them: "Enjoy yourselves for a time!"
44 But they scorned the command of their Lord, and the thunderbolt seized them while they were looking on,
45 And they were unable to rise up, nor could they help themselves.
46 And the people of Noah before: they were a perfidious[1] people.
47 (And the sky — We built it with might; and We are wealthy![1]
48 And the earth — We spread it out; how excellent are those who level![1]
49 And of all things We created two kinds,[1] that you might take heed.
50 "So flee to God! I am to you from Him a clear warner!
51 "And make not with God another god! I am to you from Him a clear warner!")
52 Thus came there no messenger to those before them save they said: "A sorcerer,[1] or one possessed."
53 Have they passed it down?[1] The truth is,[2] they are a people transgressing all bounds.[3]
54 So turn thou from them, then art thou not blameworthy.
55 But remind thou, for the reminder benefits the believers.[1]
56 And I created the domini[1] and the servi[2] only that they should serve Me.
57 I desire no provision from them, nor do I desire that they should feed Me.
58 God, He is the Provider, the Possessor of Power, the Strong.
59 And for those who do wrong is a portion like the portion of their companions;[1] so let them not seek to hasten Me!
60 And woe to those who ignore warning[1] from their day which they are promised!
(51:24-60)

The segment above places the story of Moses between that of the destruction of the people of Lot and that of three other warners; then at 51:50-51 we find words given to Muḥammad as a warner in the same vein. We look at Muḥammad's mission in the following chapter, but it is as well to appreciate before we reach that point how his mission of warning integrates thematically and textually with those of the former warners.

Segment 18

9 The people of Noah denied before them; they denied Our servant, and said: "One possessed"; and he was repelled.
10 So he called to his Lord: "I am defeated, so help Thou."
11 Then opened We the gates of heaven with water pouring,
12 And caused the earth to gush forth with springs; and the waters met for a predetermined purpose.[1]

13 And We bore[1] him upon that of planks and nails,
14 Sailing[1] before Our eyes as reward for one denied.
15 And We left it[1] as a proof;[2] so is there any who will remember?
16 Then how were My punishment and My warnings?
17 And We have made the Qur'an[1] easy for remembrance;[2] so is there any who will remember?
18 ʿĀd denied. Then how were My punishment and My warnings?
19 We sent against them a howling wind in a day of enduring calamity,
20 Removing men as if they were stumps of uprooted date-palms.
21 Then how were My punishment and My warnings?
22 And We have made the Qur'an[1] easy for remembrance;[2] so is there any who will remember?
23 Thamūd denied the warnings.
24 And they said: "Is it a single mortal[1] among us we are to follow? Then should we be in error and insanity.
25 "Has the remembrance[1] been cast upon him from among us? The truth is,[2] he is an insolent liar."
26 "They will come to know on the morrow[1] who is the insolent liar!
27 "We are sending the she-camel as a means of denial[1] for them; so watch thou them and be thou steadfast.
28 "And inform thou them that the water is to be divided between them — each drink attended."[1]
29 Then they called their companion, and he betook himself and did hamstring.[1]
30 Then how were My punishment and My warnings?[1]
31 We sent upon them one Blast, and they were like the dry stalks of the fence-maker.
32 And We have made the Qur'an[1] easy for remembrance;[2] so is there any who will remember?
33 The people of Lot denied the warnings.
34 We sent upon them a storm of stones save the family of Lot — We delivered them at dawn
35 As favour from Us; thus do We reward him who is grateful.
36 And he had warned them of Our seizing, but they disputed the warnings.
37 And they demanded of him his guests, so We put out their eyes: "Then taste My punishment and My warnings!"
38 And in the early morning there came upon them an abiding punishment:
39 "Then taste My punishment and My warnings!"
40 And We have made the Qur'an[1] easy for remembrance;[2] so is there any who will remember?
41 And the warnings came to the house of Pharaoh.[1]
42 They denied Our proofs,[1] all of them, then We seized them with the seizing of One exalted in might and omnipotent.
43 Are your atheists[1] better than those?[2] If[3] you have immunity in the writings:[4]
44 Or if[1] they say: "We are an assembly to be victorious:[2]
45 "The host[1] will be defeated, and turn the backs," —
46 The truth is,[1] the Hour is their appointment; and the Hour is more calamitous and more bitter.[2]
47 The lawbreakers are in error and insanity!
48 The day they are dragged into the Fire on their faces: "Taste the touch of Saqar!"[1]
49 We created everything in measure
50 And Our command is but one — as the twinkling of an eye[...].[1]

51 And We have destroyed your sects[1] before,[2] so is there any who will remember?
(54:9-51)

Of interest above given our present focus is the sequence of warners within which the narrative of Pharaoh is placed.

In a pivot at 54:43 the question is posed: 'Are your atheists better than those?' This question clearly presupposes an answer in the negative, the implication being that what applied to previous peoples applies also to their ilk in any other time; thus, the protocol which reduced previous peoples to dust can do so again. This thought is picked up and confirmed at the close of the segment at 54:51, which itself concludes with the second portion of the same refrain which marks the segment as a whole: 'so is there any who will remember?'

The segment references also the Hour and the punishments of Hell; those who reject the protocol are not punished only in this life but in Eternity also.

We suggest that the segment has a further implication. Beginning as it does with the destruction of the people of Noah, then turning to ʿĀd, Thamūd, Lot, and Pharaoh, before including the mission of Muḥammad at 54:43 just prior to inclusion of the Hour at 54:46 indicates a connection between the last mission which features in this segment (that of Muḥammad) and the advent of the Hour (i.e. the end of the Age).

While it is not possible to produce an explicit statement correlating the mission of Muḥammad with the Hour, we can point to the following as further support in this regard:

38 There is no blame upon the Prophet concerning what God ordained for him. The practice[1] of God among those who passed away before — and the command of God is a destiny decreed —
39 Those who conveyed the messages of God and feared Him, and feared not anyone save God[...];[1] and sufficient is God as reckoner.
40 Muḥammad is not the father of any of your men,[1] but the messenger of God, and the seal[2] of the prophets; and God is knowing of all things.
(33:38-40)

Thus, Muḥammad is the last of the prophets. He was, as we know, like Moses, tasked with multiple missions, one of which was as the messenger of God to mankind "all together". We know that his original mission to his own people was one of warning and that the Qur'an contains warnings directed to that localised scenario. We know too that the Qur'an contains clear warnings of a universal nature. And since we know Muḥammad to have a mission to all mankind — and this mission is, as yet, unfulfilled — one concludes that this mission presupposes delivery of the protocol to all mankind; that is, it is a universal mission which must begin with an application of that protocol which forms the topic of this book.

In a context in which: a) Muḥammad's universal mission is yet to be fulfilled, and in which b) fulfilment of that universal mission equates with a universal application of that mechanism we are calling the God protocol, two things follow: firstly, given that no further prophets are to be expected, the key to the implementation of that mechanism must be contained within the revelation Muḥammad was given and, secondly, in the event of rejection and denial on the part of those warned under a universal application of that mechanism, destruction will be total.

Within that framework, implementation of Muḥammad's universal mission of warning under the God protocol may either correspond with or precipitate the end of the Age, which event is known popularly as the eschaton, since a cataclysm of universal extent leaves no room for further human development under those circumstances which have prevailed since Creation.

This question is considered further in a later chapter.

Segment 19

1 The Inevitable Reality.[1]
2 What is the Inevitable Reality?
3 And what will convey to thee what the Inevitable Reality is?
4 Thamūd and ʿĀd denied the Calamity.[1]
5 Then as for Thamūd: they were destroyed by the overpowering blast.[1]
6 And as for ʿĀd: they were destroyed by a howling, raging wind
7 Which He compelled against them seven nights and eight days without let; and thou mightest see the people therein lying prostrate like stumps of hollow[1] date-palms.
8 Then seest thou of them[1] any remnant?
9 And there came Pharaoh[1] — and those before him and the cities thrown down — with offence,[2]
10 And they opposed the messenger of their Lord, but He seized them with a surpassing[1] grip.
11 When the water had burst all bounds, We bore[1] you[2] in the ship
12 That We might make it[1] a reminder for you, and that a conscious ear might be conscious of it.[2]
13 Then when the Trumpet is blown with a single blast,
14 And the earth and the mountains are lifted up and levelled with a single blow,[1]
15 Then, that day, the Event will befall,[1]
16 And the sky be split asunder for it, that day, is frail,
17 And the angels on its sides; and there will bear the Throne of thy Lord above them, that day, eight.
18 That day, you will be presented; no secret among you will be concealed.
(69:1-18)

The segment above has a similar emphasis to the one previous and we refer the reader to our comments to that.

Segment 20

15 (We have sent to you a messenger as a witness against you, as We sent to Pharaoh[1] a messenger,
16 But Pharaoh[1] opposed the Messenger, so We seized him with a calamitous grip.
17 So how will you be in prudent fear,[1] if you deny,[2] of a day that will make the children white-haired?
18 The sky will break apart therein; His promise will be fulfilled.
19 This is a reminder, so whoso wills might take a path to his Lord.)
(73:15-19)

The segment above expressly correlates the recipient of the Qur'an in his mission of warning with Moses in his mission of warning to Pharaoh, and again integrates with the Day of Judgment. See also our comments to Segment 18.

Segment 21

15 Has there come to thee the account[1] of Moses?
16 When his Lord called him in the sacred valley of Ṭuwa:[1]
17 "Go thou to Pharaoh;[1] he has transgressed.
18 "And say thou: 'Wouldst thou purify thyself,
19 "'And that I guide thee to thy Lord, so thou shalt fear?'"
20 And he showed him the greatest proof,[1]
21 But he denied and opposed.
22 Then turned he away in haste,
23 And gathered and called,
24 And said: "I am your most high Lord."[1]
25 So God seized him in exemplary punishment of the latter and the former.[1]
26 In that is a lesson for him who fears.
(79:15-26)

A key new feature in the segment above is Pharaoh's claim equating himself with God at 79:24. We return to this point below. Additionally, we note again reference to the destruction of Pharaoh as an exemplary, even archetypal, event; that is, it is one from which one who fears God is expected to draw certain conclusions.

Segment 22

17 Has there come to thee the account[1] of the forces
18 Of Pharaoh,[1] and of Thamūd?
19 The truth is,[1] those who ignore warning[2] are in denial,
20 But God is behind them,[1] encompassing.
21 The truth is,[1] it is a glorious recitation[2]

22 In a protected tablet.
(85:17-22)

The word translated recitation at 85:21 is in Arabic qur'ān (i.e. Qur'an); thus, the closing verse vouchsafes the Qur'an as a reliable repository of — and authority for — the narratives of which it treats.

Segment 23

1 By the dawn,[1]
2 And ten nights,[1]
3 And the even and the odd,
4 And the night when he[1] departs![2]
5 Is there not in that an oath for one of intelligence?[1]
6 Hast thou not considered[1] how thy Lord did with ʿĀd,
7 Iram of the pillars,
8 The like of which had never been created in the land,
9 And Thamūd who hollowed the rocks in the valley,
10 And Pharaoh,[1] the Lord of Stakes
11 Who transgressed all bounds in the lands,
12 And increased corruption therein?
13 So thy Lord poured upon them a scourge of punishment.
14 Thy Lord is ever watchful.[1]
(89:1-14)

Verses 89:1-5 reference messengers of warning at the point at which they leave their respective communities prior to destruction. The reason why this is so is explained in the Notes & Commentary section of The Qur'an: A Complete Revelation.[28]

Verses 89:13-14 establish both that all the peoples named were destroyed and that God is 'ever watchful'. Thus, the possibility for a future implementation of that mechanism we are calling the God protocol is ever-present.

The summaries below treat of Moses' mission of warning to Pharaoh. We look at the actions pertaining to the 'believing man' we saw at segment 14 in a later chapter.

Characteristic sins of the warner's people[29]

- Idolatry and polytheism
- Sorcery (use of manipulations to control the minds of men for political purposes)
- Killing men and sparing women
- Excessive hubris
- Excessive cruelty
- Disregard for the laws of God
- The State as god

Actions of the warner

- Receives a commission from God (7:103, 10:75, 11:96, 20:43, 20:47, 23:45, 26:10, 26:16, 27:12, 28:32, 40:23, 43:46, 51:38, 79:17).
- Told by God that the wrongdoers will be destroyed (20:48, 44:24).
- Cites God as creator of all things (7:104, 20:50).
- Addresses himself to the elites of his time (7:103, 10:75, 40:24, 43:46).
- States that he is a warner or messenger (7:104, 20:47, 26:16, 43:46, 44:18).
- Accuses the hearers of invention of falsity (10:81, 20:61).
- Cites need to place trust in God (10:84).
- Cites need for patience (7:128).
- Cites guidance of God (20:47, 20:50, 26:62, 28:22, 28:37).
- Comes with clear signs, writings, or the Illuminating Writ (29:39, 40:28).
- Advances reasoned arguments (26:24, 26:26, 26:28).
- Presents a proof (20:47, 26:31-33, 26:45, 27:12, 40:23, 43:47, 51:38, 79:20).
- Warns of punishment (20:48, 20:61).
- Presents a clear authority (11:96, 23:45, 40:23, 44:19, 51:38).
- Asserts that there is but one true God (20:50, 26:16, 26:28, 43:46).
- States that his task is to convey message (26:16).
- Appeals to God (10:88, 40:27, 44:22).
- Calls the hearers to fear God (44:19).
- Places his affair entirely in the hands of God (44:20).
- Warns of the Resurrection (28:37).

Actions of those the warner addresses[30]

- Deny God's proofs (3:11, 7:103, 8:52, 8:54, 27:14).
- Fail to believe (7:132, 10:78, 10:88).

29 The fact that Pharaoh and his people were not Moses' people has been covered above.

30 The fact that Pharaoh and his people were not Moses' people is covered above.

- Believe in God alone when it is too late (10:88, 10:90).
- Accuse the warner of insanity or sorcery (7:109, 10:76, 17:101, 20:57, 20:63, 20:71, 26:34-35, 26:49, 27:13, 28:36, 40:24, 43:49, 51:39).
- Plan to expel the warner (17:103).
- Plan to kill the warner (40:26).
- Deny, oppose, or disregard the warner (20:56, 23:48, 69:10, 73:16, 79:21).
- Reject God alone or appeal to their existing cult (20:63, 26:29, 28:38).
- Threaten those who follow the warner (20:71, 26:49).
- Cite the warner's mortality as a reason to reject (23:47).
- Dismiss on basis of abject followers (23:47).
- Claim the warner to be a liar (28:38, 40:24, 40:37).
- Mock God's proofs and His warning (43:47).
- Deride or mock the warner (43:52-53).
- Deny the Resurrection (28:39).
- The rich act perfidiously (43:50).
- Their plan was only in error (40:25).[31]

The conclusion of the matter

- God annihilates those who reject the warner (2:50, 7:137, 8:52, 8:54, 11:99, 17:103, 20:78, 23:48, 26:66, 27:14, 28:40, 43:55, 44:24, 51:40, 73:16, 79:25, 89:13).
- God seizes the rejecters with a surpassing grip (69:10).
- God delivers the warner and those who believed with him (2:50, 17:104, 20:77, 26:63-65, 28:40).
- Those destroyed are destroyed for what they did (3:11).
- God's retribution becomes binding as a function of people's denial of God's proofs (3:11, 8:52, 8:54, 54:42).
- Those destroyed are caught suddenly and unawares (10:90).
- The conclusion of the matter entails a proof (10:92, 26:67).
- The rejecters will go to Hell (11:97-98, 20:74, 28:41-42).

Contemporary echoes of sins characteristic of that time

Idolatry and polytheism are standard today, as noted in Chapter 4.

Pharaoh divided those he ruled into sects. This is mirrored in the policy of the present rulers who set human groups against each other, backing all sides in order to generate chaos and the 31 Established in this chapter as a generic event.

breakdown of decency and order.[32]

Pharaoh destroyed the males and spared the women. This is mirrored precisely today in the promotion of "women's rights" and the creation of laws which hold back and economically destroy men, particularly in the areas of employment and marriage. We expand upon this subject in some detail in the next chapter.

At 79:24 Pharaoh says "I am your most high Lord." This is the claim of the State in all countries of the world today de facto, though lightly obfuscated by fuzzy fables based on emotional, non-empirical (though fast-fading) concepts such as freedom and democracy.

Summary and key points

Segment 14 provides the crucial feature. There we learn that while the message component of the protocol is delivered by a messenger sent by God (in this case Moses), the component of affiliation (cf. "O my people") may be delivered by another — one who does not bear any status beyond that of a 'believing man'. This is crucial for our understanding of the protocol and will have a direct bearing on the potential for completing Muḥammad's second, universal mission of warning in this time against the ruling elite of today's single worldwide system.

We noted that the story of Moses is by far the most detailed narrative of any prophet in the Qur'an, and that in all comparable stories of warning prior to Moses no antagonist is named or speaks in the first person singular. Pharaoh is the only principal leader named; the only one to speak in the first person singular; the only one for whom we have a backstory (his wife appeals to him to spare Moses as a baby and adopt him); the only one whose story includes his individual fate (his realisation of his folly — though too late — coupled with his destruction in this life and humiliation and torments in the next).[33]

The name Pharaoh[34] occurs in the text a total of seventy-four times. That makes him the human personality most frequently identified by name in the Qur'an after Moses.[35]

Among the human adversaries in positions of leadership against God, Pharaoh alone is personalised, fully represented, and dramatically complete in that all the components required for a story — i.e. a beginning, middle, and end — are present in his case. This fact makes him not only the Qur'an's chief human antagonist but also the archetype for all human antagonists, past and future, whose tyrannies necessitate implementation of the God protocol.

32 We see this in the manipulation by Media of blacks and other groups; the infliction of the sodomite agenda upon the non-deviant majority; the insinuation of less qualified groups into all aspects of life and business. This is then held in place by a combination of slogans, vilification, name-calling, and persecution via the legal system.

33 We noted Qārūn in this regard above.

34 Arabic: firʿawn.

35 To place this fact in some perspective, the name Pharaoh is found in the text a number of times equal to those of Noah, Hūd, Ṣāliḥ, Shuʿayb, and Muḥammad combined.

Pharaoh, then, is the archetypal advocate of denial in the face of warning found within the Qur'an, the pattern for all who have led — or who ever will lead — their people to destruction in this life and in the next by rejecting the warnings of God.[36]

Thus, the story of Pharaoh's denial and subsequent fate forms a fully-rounded drama, one which not only provides lessons within its own terms but which is sufficiently detailed to furnish principles and lessons which extend to all comparable scenarios. For this reason, supported by verses we have noted before and which are repeated below, we take the narrative treating of Moses' mission of warning to Pharaoh and his elites as the principal model upon which to base our understanding of any implementation of the same protocol in our time — a point which will be of vital relevance when we come to consider the contribution of the 'believing man' in more detail in Chapter 13.

> 54 So he [Pharaoh] swayed[1] his people, and they obeyed him; they were a perfidious[2] people.
> 55 And when they had angered Us, We took vengeance on them and drowned them all together,
> 56 And made them a precedent and an example for those who came later.
> (43:54-56)

> 15 Has there come to thee the account[1] of Moses?
> 16 When his Lord called him in the sacred valley of Ṭuwa:[1]
> 17 "Go thou to Pharaoh;[1] he has transgressed.
> 18 "And say thou: 'Wouldst thou purify thyself,
> 19 "'And that I guide thee to thy Lord, so thou shalt fear?'"
> 20 And he showed him the greatest proof,[1]
> 21 But he denied and opposed.
> 22 Then turned he away in haste,
> 23 And gathered and called,
> 24 And said: "I am your most high Lord."[1]
> 25 So God seized him in exemplary punishment of the latter and the former.[1]
> 26 In that is a lesson for him who fears.
> (79:15-26)

Given what we have seen and understood of the God protocol to this point, it is fitting that it is on the lips of Pharaoh that we find the sole instance in the Qur'an urging denial by means of the key formula "O my people".

Pharaoh's argument

The broader segment where Pharaoh pronounces this formula is repeated below, following which we will list the features of his argument. The context, should one need reminding, is the debate between Moses and Pharaoh:

36 Consider 11:97-98 and 40:46-50.

> 51 And Pharaoh[1] called to his people, saying: "O my people: is not[2] the dominion of Egypt[3] mine, and these rivers flowing beneath me[4] — do you then not[5] see! —
> 52 "Or am I better than this, who is despised and barely makes himself clear?
> 53 "Oh, that armlets of gold had but[1] been cast upon him! Or angels had but come with him in conjunction!"
> 54 So he swayed[1] his people, and they obeyed him; they were a perfidious[2] people.
> 55 And when they had angered Us, We took vengeance on them and drowned them all together,
> 56 And made them a precedent and an example for those who came later.
> (43:51-56)

Pharaoh's words here succinctly encapsulate the argument of any powerful and cynical agent in the world. His line of reasoning may be summarised thus:

- I am one of you, my people!
- I have power over the land.
- I have power over the resources.
- I am superior to one who has neither power nor is able to impress by means of speech.
- One who has no wealth should be disregarded.
- A single man can not be right and the force of the dominant system of power wrong.

His argument is rooted in hubris, temporal power, perception management, wealth, and ridicule. And while there is no denying that such things can exert a powerful influence upon the mind, it is a matter for each man to choose where he stands: whether with God or with an idol. It is a function of any implementation of the God protocol to force precisely that decision no matter when executed, be it in the distant past or today.

Such was the case also in the time of Muḥammad, a man called by God to follow in the tradition of the warners we have considered to this point. And it is to his mission of warning as detailed within the revelation he was given by God that we now turn.

Chapter Twelve

Muḥammad

12. Muḥammad

Introduction to Muḥammad's missions

The opening section to this chapter notwithstanding, in the interests of brevity, clarity and focus, I have shunned as far as possible any discussion of the Islamic Traditionalist's incursions into the believer's engagement with the Qur'anic text on the basis of a much later literature called the aḥādīth,[1] which material he claims as the sole prism through which the Qur'an may be understood.[2] While it has been our practice to this point where possible to include in our introductions a short background to each of the messengers who implemented that mechanism we are calling the God protocol, since popular presentations of the life of Muḥammad are based upon this other literature there is little point rehearsing that later imagining of his life here.

Rather than to be drawn in the direction of attempting to compile an argument for the features of Muḥammad's life from the Qur'an itself, we will concentrate on what is of principal importance to our core interest: understanding the application and outcome in Muḥammad's case of the God protocol. As we shall see shortly, while explicit mention is elided from the text, the evidence attaching to the principles which comprise the protocol compels one to the conclusion that the location at which Muḥammad originally preached must have been destroyed. One will recall in that regard that destruction of the people of Muḥammad's primary model, Abraham, while also omitted from the page, is clearly established on the basis of pan-textual analysis and confirmed by generic narrative summaries.

Any reader with a background in the religion expounded by the Traditionalist will appreciate that the Traditionalist also discerns a highly significant event, one which separates the first part of Muḥammad's mission from the second, and that he both rends the Qur'an in two on that basis[3] and begins his calendar from that time. He calls this event the hijrah.[4]

1 Much of what is known as the religion of Islam today focuses on Muḥammad's role — at least according to that religion's principal literature, the aḥādīth — as a teacher of personal and social habits, emulation of which is held to be the measure of righteous action. Any link between that literature and the Qur'an is tenuous at best, and it forms no part of our analysis. The question of Muḥammad's role as a temporal leader and judge (which certainly is a feature of the Qur'an) is elided here since one regards it as a historical record, and of the same textual stuff for us today as any of the other histories about prophets or messengers the Qur'an contains. Our focus is on Muḥammad's role as a messenger of warning as presented by the Qur'an.

2 To expand a little on the note above: reliance upon this extraneous literature has not only created much suffering, intellectual indolence, abdication of individual responsibility, and depleted the productive energies of Muslim society, it fails also in its principal claim: to facilitate understanding of the Qur'an. As an example of this failure, we may cite Traditional Islam's inability to formulate a sensible explanation of the phenomenon contained within the Qur'an called in Arabic al ḥurūf al muqaṭṭaʿāt, and which tends in English to be called the mysterious letters. These are sets of between one and five disjointed letters which precede a number of sūrahs and which have no lexical meaning. The Traditionalist has failed for 1,400 years to present a solution to this problem which would be acceptable to an eight-year-old schoolboy. The reader will find a fully consistent presentation of al ḥurūf al muqaṭṭaʿāt in my book The Mysterious Letters of the Qur'an: A Complete Solution. That solution is based upon reason and the text of the Qur'an, materials which are thereby implied to be sufficient for the business of understanding what God intended to convey in the rest of His revelation to Muḥammad.

3 By this I mean that, on the basis of his extra-scriptural literature he claims to know the time and place where parts of the Qur'an were revealed and assigns them to either side of a single line. Thus, certain sūrahs (chapters) of the Qur'an are said by him to be Meccan and others Medinan.

4 Meaning migration or emigration.

It is beyond question that the Qur'an contains a wealth of segments which objectively fall on either side of a highly significant event in Muḥammad's career, and it is clear from the Qur'an's own testimony that believers removed to join the community of which the Messenger was head. However, the Traditionalist's presentation on the basis of his external literature is that this event entailed Muḥammad and those who believed with him merely vacating one city and removing to another — from Mecca to what is now called Medina. But the entire premise of this presentation runs counter to the example of all those messengers of warning in whose footsteps Muḥammad was following and whose histories provide the ideological framework for the book the Traditionalist himself claims as his foundational scripture.[5] The only Qur'anically sustainable reason for a hijrah of any kind within the lifetime of a messenger of God is as a function of the protocol — a protocol under which destruction in the event of denial is certain. And it is clear that the original community to which Muḥammad preached denied, as we shall see.

Moreover, the Traditionalist has Muḥammad returning to the city[6] which denied and ejected him. Again, this is a narrative cut from an entirely different cloth from that which makes up the Qur'an. Within the framework of the Qur'an, on the basis of which the city to which Muḥammad originally preached and which denied and rejected him may be shown to have been destroyed, the notion that Muḥammad could have returned to that city is simply untenable:[7]

> 95 And a prohibition is upon a city that We have destroyed, that they shall not return.[1]
> (21:95)

Certainly, the Qur'an contains much narrative expression of Muḥammad in multiple roles of leadership, including in the spheres of religion, military campaign, and civil government, and those roles are predicated upon people both joining him and submitting with him to God as per the Traditionalist's narrative. Consider the following segment as an example:

> 1 When the help of God and the victory come,
> 2 And thou seest mankind enter the doctrine[1] of God in crowds,
> 3 Give thou glory[1] with the praise of thy Lord, and ask thou forgiveness of Him; He is accepting of repentance.
> (110:1-3)

5 We trust that the reader will appreciate that the principal purpose of the present work is to provide the Qur'anic basis for an implementation of the God protocol to the elites of our time, not to explain why the Traditionalist is wrong in his impositions upon the Qur'an. So while we could expand significantly upon the subject of the tensions between the Qur'anic text on the one hand and the narrative the Traditionalist has developed elsewhere on the other, we must stay focused primarily on the task in hand.

6 In his conception, this is Mecca.

7 Dan Gibson in his Quranic Geography (2011) states that Mecca, far from being the major centre claimed by the religion of Islam, is found on no map prior to 900 CE. Certainly, an objective reading of the Qur'an would place the pre-Medinan action far further north. It would seem that the Muslims created a cultic centre at Mecca at some point after the death of Muḥammad and then shored up that claim by the usual means. The word makkah occurs once in the Qur'an (48:24) as part of the collocation bibaṭni makkati. This is claimed by the Traditionalist to mean in the valley of Mecca. The word baṭn means belly, and is used in that sense in the Qur'an in the context of digestive and female pre-natal functions (i.e. stomach and womb respectively); that is, it means a highly constricted place. It is true that there are hills around Mecca which form between them a valley. But this valley is around eight kilometres long at its widest point, a feature which hardly comports with the notion of a highly restricted place. Petra on the other hand, which is where Gibson places Muḥammad's city of origin, is entirely hedged about by mountains and access to it is gained only by way of the Siq, a dim, narrow gorge 1.2 kilometres long which is no more than 3 metres (10 ft) wide at some points and which thus comprises features with much in common with a stomach or womb.

But such roles could, as in the case of Moses, pertain only to those who had either left with the Messenger prior to the destruction which resulted from his initial mission under the protocol or who had, subsequent to that event, left other places of origin to join him.

In summary, while it is beyond question that Muḥammad's mission comprised also social, civil, and military leadership, we point to Moses as the precedent in which implementation of the protocol precedes all such duties, and recognise that in Muḥammad's case also execution of such duties could have begun in earnest only following a cataclysmic event resulting from his implementation of the protocol. And while the fact of destruction is elided from the text, we point to the case of Abraham,[8] considered at length in Chapter 7, as precedent.

Naturally, Muhammad's career ended with his death.

The death of any major leader and dynamic engine of social and doctrinal change creates at least two difficult problems for those who survive him. The first is the matter of succession; the second is how to develop legal conventions in the face of new and changing requirements.

In Muḥammad's case the exigencies to fill the voids he left and the challenges in so doing were uncommonly profound since with his death revelation ceased, and with Muḥammad gone the community lost also governor, judge, and military chief. The ways in which various groups have striven with each other to resolve the problems actuated by Muḥammad's death essentially drive the story of what is meant today by the term Islam.

The groups which emerged to dominate in that process attempted to leverage Muḥammad's missions as judge, and military and religious leader to his own time and place (which process of leverage later included much narrative re-imagining via the putative science of aḥādīth) in order to generate a system of jurisprudence upon which basis societies under their influence were to some degree ruled.[9] This system was then presided over by kings called Khalifahs instituted by various means, both foul and fair.

In this way, the void left by Muḥammad was, if not filled, at least to some degree patched over, and life could proceed in his absence under an aegis which was called Islamic.

I am not alone in having deep reservations about this 'solution', but those reservations and the reasons for them are not the focus of this work; the fact is, various kingdoms rose and were highly successful under systems which were based to lesser and greater degrees on what we have summarised above before their original impetus became eviscerated and they were supplanted by new powers and doctrines.

8 Abraham himself went on also to a role of eminent leadership; see for example 22:127.

9 While in itself this is not an illogical step, I would argue that the admixture of non-Qur'anic content to the process essentially debased it and thereby sealed its fate.

We turn again to verse 7:158:

> 158 (Say thou: "O mankind: I am the messenger of God to you all together — to whom belongs the dominion of the heavens and the earth. There is no god save He.[1] He gives life and He gives death." So believe in[2] God and His messenger, the unschooled[3] prophet, who believes in[4] God and His words; and follow him,[5] that you might be guided.)
> (7:158)

What we are calling the Traditionalist Muslim[10] has elected to see in the unique formulation of the verse above and others which he correlates with it[11] both a confirmation of the religion he has constructed and a signpost to a day when the entire world will rejoice under the totality of what he expounds.[12]

The problems with the Traditionalist's conception of both himself and his religion are many and obvious from a Qur'anic standpoint. But leaving such considerations to one side, while his preoccupations and assumptions could, in the distant past, claim circumstantial support by virtue of the existence of thriving world powers founded to some degree on his doctrines, today they can point to none.

But not only is there no credible 'Islamic' power today, the DNA as it were of the world is now entirely different from that in which the principles of the religion which bears the name Islam have their origins. Leaving aside the question of their desirability, we are today beyond the point at which revival of the Traditionalist's conceptions are either possible or applicable; that is, we are past the point at which historical presentations of Muḥammad's example of governance and military leadership, even where founded in reality, are of relevance.

The world of today comprises a single, unified system of political, psychological, military, financial, and cultural governance which exercises power employing both methods and mindsets which transcend all previous conceptions of Realpolitik.

This is not a context the Traditionalist's paradigm can do anything about. The world today is not one in which 'Islam' exists albeit in a state of abject decline and in need of revivification and renaissance; we are entirely beyond the point at which efforts in that direction have meaning, relevance, or hope of success.[13]

For his part, the Traditionalist has been too caught up in his accustomed paradigm to internalise the extent of that change and to correlate it with the book he claims to follow.

10 That is, one for whom some part of the cultural development subsequent to the death of Muḥammad forms the foundation of what he takes to be his religion and which he calls Islam.

11 One thinks here particularly of 9:33.

12 But from which he himself today flees in favour of pleasanter climes created by people unencumbered by his brand of enlightenment whenever the opportunity arises.

13 Moreover, the trajectory which 'Islam' has followed and upon which it intersects with the broader societal decline not only represents no part of any solution, it is a considerable tributary to the broader problem.

While we share the Traditionalist's abhorrence of a world in which, under the present ruling elite, moral decay and depravity are actively promoted, his efforts to counter that reality by instituting his imagining of a system that both failed in the past and nobody likes in the present are not only misguided, they are entirely detached from the reality of the broader context.

The Traditionalist and I agree that the Qur'an's pronouncement at verse 7:158 indicates a universal mission unique to Muḥammad. Clearly, he and I agree that Muḥammad is long dead and that whatever is meant by the words "O mankind: I am the messenger of God to you all together" presupposes actions by those still living and by the grace of God.

Our point of divergence is this: the Traditionalist is still attempting to revive the upswing of the previous cycle of warning, destruction, repentance and attendant piety. He is trying to hold the line at which he imagines Muḥammad left off, attempting thereby to reconstitute what is already shown to be a failed paradigm.

For my part, I recognise that we are in an entirely new cycle. It is clear to me that what 7:158 indicates is not a requirement to attempt to continue at an unknown number of steps removed from where much later hearsay claims Muḥammad implemented that part of his mission which followed the event of destruction under the protocol; rather, it indicates that we should leverage what we absolutely know that Muḥammad did bring, the Qur'an, in order to begin where he himself began — with warning — and that we should do so within that framework which presupposes complete annihilation of those warned in the event of denial and rejection; other mission requirements such as military and civil leadership can only conceivably become operative after that process is complete.

Given the present reality, to seek to impose a derivative imagining of Muḥammad's civil and military roles upon the world in toto without having understood either the principles of the protocol itself or those of the broader format in which it operates, is not only to put the cart before the horse, it is to be entirely without a horse.

My intention in my treatment of the Traditionalist here is not to dismiss the efforts and achievements of all pious Muslims of previous times,[14] but neither will I disregard the obvious reality of the time in which I myself live for no reason other than that pious men who succeeded Muḥammad did not themselves live in it.

We will close this section by briefly considering the following verses:

> 144 And Muḥammad is only a messenger; messengers have passed away before him. If then he dies or is killed, will you turn back on your heels? And he who turns back on his heels does no harm to God at all; and God will reward the grateful.
> (3:144)

> 143 And thus[1] We made you an intermediary community that you might be witnesses to mankind, and that the Messenger might be a witness to you.[2] And 14 In point of fact, by no means were all pious Muslims of the past of one mind with those I call Traditionalists.

> We made not the course[3] which thou wast on[4] save that We might know him who follows the Messenger from him who turns on his heels.[5] And it is hard save for those whom God has guided. And God would not cause your faith to be lost; God is towards men kind and merciful.
> (2:143)

A messenger bears a message. The message given to Muḥammad is the Qur'an. Those who follow that message are required to bear witness to mankind just as he bore witness to us. These points are both simple and obvious.

Now that we have given as much concentrated consideration to the topic of that cultural narrative called Islam as we wish to in this presentation, we will move now to identify certain features of Muḥammad's mission of warning as presented in those words all Muslims accept beyond question he received from God: the Qur'an.

Muḥammad's mission of warning

> 1 O thou, one covering himself:
> 2 Arise thou and warn thou!
> 3 And magnify thou thy Lord,
> 4 And purify thou thy garments,
> 5 And forsake thou[1] defilement,
> 6 And show thou not favour seeking gain,
> 7 And to thy Lord be thou patient.
> (74:1-7)

Warning, then, was the starting point of Muḥammad's original mission; we will now list additional features of that mission and provide commentary where required.

No new thing

Muḥammad claimed neither originality nor supernatural powers:

> 9 Say thou: "I am no new thing[1] among the messengers, and I know not what will be done with me or with you. I follow only what is revealed[2] to me; and I am only a clear warner."
> (46:9)

> 56 This is a warner[1] like[2] the former warners.[3]
> (53:56)

> 77 The practice[1] of those We sent before thee of Our messengers[...];[2] and thou wilt not find in Our practice[3] any alteration.
> (17:77)

Thus, Muḥammad's own message of warning both cites the annihilation of previous communities and cites that mechanism we are calling the God protocol — which protocol the Qur'an itself references by the term the practice[15] of God.

We note that this practice never changes; the principles of warning and destruction which applied to the peoples before Muḥammad applied also to those of his time.

Accordingly, they apply to our time also, being implicit within the framework of any further application of the same principles.

In understandable language

The previous messengers addressed their audiences in languages they understood:

> 4 And We sent a messenger only in the tongue of his people, that he might make plain[1] to them; and God sends astray whom He wills, and guides whom He wills; and He is the Exalted in Might, the Wise.[2]
> (14:4)

The message Muḥammad was entrusted to deliver was not to be veiled from the masses by language understood by a priesthood only; it was to be accessible to all:

> 192 And it[1] is a revelation[2] of the Lord of All Creation,
> 193 Brought down by the Faithful Spirit[1]
> 194 Upon thy heart — that thou be of the warners —
> 195 In a clear Arabic tongue.
> 196 And it is in the writings[1] of the former peoples.
> 197 Is it not a proof[1] to them that the learned of the children of Israel know it?
> 198 And had We sent it down upon any of the non-Arabs,
> 199 And he had recited it to them, they would not have been believers in[1] it.
> (26:192-199)

It follows that for a further implementation of the same protocol on a worldwide basis to a single ruling elite to be legitimate it must be conducted in a language commonly spoken among the elites.

15 Arabic: sunnah. The word sunnah acts as a trigger upon the Traditionalist and he uses it to indicate the totality of the principles of action he ascribes to Muḥammad on the basis of his non-Qur'anic literature. The reader may be interested to note that the word sunnah occurs nowhere in the Qur'an either in connection with Muḥammad or with any other prophet. Typically, it denotes delivery of God's message followed by rejection and destruction or (once only, in the event) by acceptance and submission. See also 3:137, 17:77, 33:62, 35:43, 48:23.

Emphasis on the Hour

Beyond delivering warning treating of this temporal life, Muḥammad was to warn also of the Hour, as touched on in earlier chapters.

The Hour is that cataclysmic event in which the laws of the physical creation as we are accustomed to experience them will change both suddenly and drastically resulting in the Judgment: the time of divine truth at which each man is allocated his place for Eternity, be it in the Garden or in the Fire.[16]

> 59 The Hour is coming — about which there is no doubt — but most men do not believe.[1]
> (40:59)

> 66 Look they save for the Hour to come upon them unexpectedly when they perceive not![1]
> 67 Friends, that day, will be enemies to one another save those of prudent fear.[1]
> (43:66-67)

> 6 O man: what deluded thee concerning thy Lord, the Noble,[1]
> 7 Who created thee and fashioned thee and proportioned thee in balance,[1]
> 8 In what form He willed assembling thee?
> 9 No, indeed![1] The truth is,[2] you deny the Judgment.[3]
> 10 And there are over you custodians,
> 11 Noble and writing.
> 12 They know what you do.
> 13 The virtuous will be in bliss,
> 14 And the licentious will be in Hell.
> 15 They will burn therein on the Day of Judgment,[1]
> 16 And they will not therefrom be absent.
> 17 And what will convey to thee what the Day of Judgment[1] is?
> 18 Then what will convey to thee what the Day of Judgment[1] is![2] —
> 19 The day no soul will possess power for another[1] soul in anything and the command, that day, belongs to God.
> (82:6-19)

Muḥammad's mission of warning to his own people

We will now present segments treating of Muḥammad's mission of warning to his own people in his limited social context of 7th century Arabia. We open with a verse we have seen previously:

> 9 Say thou: "I am no new thing[1] among the messengers, and I know not what will be done with me or with you. I follow only what is revealed[2] to me; and I am only a clear warner."
> (46:9)

16 We consider in the next chapter the Hour and Judgment within the context of the further, universal implementation of the God protocol directed towards a single, unified worldwide elite implicit within the revelation Muḥammad received.

While the message itself was not new, it was to be delivered to a people for the first time and, in the event that they denied that message, punishment of the type visited upon the former communities could be the only outcome:

> 46 And thou wast not on the side of the mount[1] when We called; but as mercy from thy Lord[...],[2] that thou warn a people to whom no warner came before thee, that they might take heed.
> (28:46)

> 42 And they swore by God their strongest oaths that if a warner came to them, they would be more guided than any of the communities; but when a warner came to them, it increased them only in aversion,
> 43 Waxing proud in the land, and scheming evil; but the evil scheme surrounds none save its authors.[1] Then look they save for the practice[2] of the former peoples? And thou wilt not find in the practice of God any change; and thou wilt not find in the practice of God any alteration.
> 44 Have they not travelled in the earth and seen how was the final outcome of those who were before them? And they were stronger than them in power; but God is not such that anything in the heavens or in the earth should frustrate[1] Him; He is knowing and powerful.
> (35:42-45)

> 13 Then if they turn away, say thou: "I warn you of a thunderbolt like the thunderbolt of ʿĀd and Thamūd,"
> (41:13)

If we can show from the text of the Qur'an that the people to which Muḥammad delivered his message of warning responded in such a way that makes destruction binding under the protocol, then that community must have been destroyed as a result — even if elided from the narrative. We will now present a short sequence of statements and consider their significance in this regard.

> 30 And when[1] those who ignore warning[2] schemed against thee, to restrain thee, or to kill thee, or to drive thee out; and they scheme, and God schemes, and God is the best of schemers.
> (8:30)

At 8:30 the plan of those who reject the Messenger is clear: they wish either to imprison, kill, or eject him from their city. We will recognise these actions as standard responses by those warned under the protocol. Let us look at how the narrative develops:

> 76 And they had almost driven thee out of the land, to turn thee out therefrom; and then would they not have tarried after thee save a little.[1]
> 77 The practice[1] of those We sent before thee of Our messengers[...];[2] and thou wilt not find in Our practice[3] any alteration.
> (17:76-77)

Here we find Muḥammad's people at the point at which they had almost expelled him coupled both with a warning that in such an eventuality they would soon be extirpated and mention of a motif upon which we have commented previously: God's process of warning, denial, and destruction is fixed. It had not changed between the times of the messengers preceding Muḥammad and that of Muḥammad and his people; it has not changed either at any point between that time and ours. We shall now consider how the narrative develops.

> 31 And when Our proofs[1] are recited to them, they say: "We have heard; if we wished we could speak the like of this; this is only legends of the former peoples."
> 32 And when[1] they say: "O God: if this be the truth[2] from Thee, then rain Thou down upon us stones from the sky, or bring Thou us a painful punishment!"
> 33 But God would not punish them when thou art among them; and God would not punish them as they sought forgiveness.[1]
> (8:31-33)

At 8:33 one finds two factors only preventing annihilation under the protocol: the physical presence of Muḥammad himself among those to whom he was delivering the standard message of warning, and the possibility that the people to whom that message was being delivered might repent.

But the two segments below leave us in no doubt as to the outcome: the people of Muḥammad's original community both turned him out and denied.

> 13 And how many a city stronger than thy city which has turned thee out[1] have We destroyed! And there was no helper for them.
> (47:13)

> 4 And there comes to them no proof[1] among the proofs[2] of their Lord but they turn away therefrom:[3]
> 5 So have they denied the truth[1] when it came to them; and there will come to them a report of that whereat they mocked.
> (6:4-5)

In summary then, since Muḥammad was 'no new thing among the messengers' and 'a warner like the former warners', and one will not find in the practice of God 'any alteration', the conclusions that we drew from the list of generic narrative statements at Chapter 8 must apply to Muḥammad's mission also: denial results in destruction — even where the fact of destruction is elided from the narrative.

In consequence, given that Muḥammad fulfilled all requirements of the God protocol,[17] the place of his original preaching must have been destroyed. No other outcome is possible according to the mechanics of the protocol under which Muḥammad and all those who preceded him were operating.

17 On which question we shall shortly expand.

Characteristic sins of the warner's people

We have addressed above in general terms Muḥammad's mission to his own people consequent upon his initial mission of warning and indicated that we are not going to be drawn significantly in that direction and the reasons for that.

But we would be remiss not to identify, as we have in the case of all former warners under the protocol, the characteristic sins of the people to which Muḥammad was sent.

We are able to gain access to the principal sins in this case by leveraging certain conventions within the text.

We will begin with the convention translated by me on the basis of pan-textual analysis[18] 'O you who heed warning' and translated generally along the lines of 'O you who have believed' which indicates, by common consent, those who heeded the Warner's call to faith.

Those addressed in the segments which follow then are not deniers but those who had believed in the message given to Muḥammad. This feature provides a measure of leverage equal to our purposes since where this convention is followed by admonition one is able to discern that the sins for which they are upbraided in such verses were so deeply a feature of the communities they had left that their practice had bled over into the society of believers.[19]

There is a large amount of material, and we will attempt to keep our commentary short. Our format will be first to summarise the sin and then to detail in situ in as compact a form as possible the correlation between that sin and what we find in our day — for there are correspondences in every case. Clearly, one could expand significantly on each point, and we leave the reader to consider each case further for himself.

Rather than stating a single fact multiple times below, we will make the point once here: culture is designed; and it is designed by a ruling elite. Thus, the echoes we find today of the sins listed below are a function of decisions made by those who rule. Men are both malleable and amenable to influence; were that not the case the programmes of indoctrination which inform the present system would not receive funding. But they do receive funding, and that funding is directed by the elites.

In summarising the points below, we will not attempt to justify each point to the satisfaction of those whose instincts have been heavily impacted by techniques of cultural and emotional engineering, but rather to state the facts simply.

Not all characteristics which we list below have been implemented to identical effect across 18 The reasons for my use of this convention in English are detailed in my principal work The Qur'an: A Complete Revelation.

19 There exists a small number of 'O you who heed warning' appeals which clearly have a local and limited application and so do not feature in what follows.

the world at this time, but there is no doubt that the agenda which informs the underlying processes is doggedly heading in one direction across the board, and the fact that certain regions lag behind the dominant tendency does nothing to negate the broader point.

> 153 O you who heed warning:[1] seek help in patience and duty;[2] God is with the patient.[3]
> (2:153)

Sin: lack of patience and abdication of duty.[20]
Today: men are trained now to be weak, low-agency, effeminate, and reactive; they are typically unable to sustain effort, their essential powers having become eviscerated by pornography, the preponderance of neurotic mothers infected with Feminism, lack of male influence, loss of almost all areas of exclusively male provenance, and much besides. Meanwhile, women are trained to be selfish and delusional and to abandon those areas which pertain naturally to them and wherein lie their own call to patience and duty: family and children.

> 172 O you who heed warning:[1] eat of the good things that We have provided you; and be grateful to God if it be Him you serve.
> 173 He has only made unlawful to you carrion, and blood, and the flesh of swine, and that dedicated to other than God. But whoso is forced, neither desiring nor transgressing, no sin[1] is upon him; God is forgiving and merciful.
> (2:172-173)

Sin: making foods taboo.
Today: the elites are pushing a policy upon the population of vegetarianism, one which associates the healthy consumption of meat with moral wrongdoing. The advancement of this Agenda item now leverages a new religious narrative about 'carbon footprints' and associated fictions.

> 178 O you who heed warning:[1] just requital is ordained for you concerning those killed:[2] the freeman for the freeman, and the slave for the slave, and the female for the female. But whoso is pardoned anything by his brother,[3] let the pursuance be according to what is fitting[4] and the payment to him with good conduct; that is an alleviation and mercy from your Lord. And whoso transgresses after that, he has a painful punishment.
> (2:178)

Sin: killing with impunity or without a requirement for just requital.
Today: at the time of writing, the elites are rolling out a policy which forces the population of the entire world to submit to injections. No one who is harmed as a result of this programme has any recourse in the courts, either against Government or against the manufactures of the substances the injections contain.

20 The reason for the use of duty here is detailed in Article SZC.

> 183 O you who heed warning:[1] fasting is prescribed for you: — as it was prescribed for those before you, that you might be in prudent fear[2] —
> (2:183)

Sin: unbridled consumption of food; lack of self-control.
Today: the culture is designed to manipulate people into buying and consuming far more than they need or is good for them.

> 208 O you who heed warning:[1] enter into surrender[2] completely, and follow not the footsteps of the satan;[3] he is to you an open enemy.
> (2:208)

Sin: half-baked religion which does not impact actions.
Today: religion is today all but eviscerated; what remains is little more than an emotional dummy.[21] The principal leaders of religions have compromised entirely with the dominant system and in many cases are members of societies and fraternities which further its aims.

> 254 O you who heed warning:[1] spend of what We have provided you before there comes a day wherein is neither commerce, nor friendship, nor intercession; and the false claimers of guidance:[2] they are the wrongdoers.[3]
> (2:254)

Sin: failure to emphasise personal charity.
Today: if one reads the accounts of previous generations, charity was a duty inculcated into children and intended to form lifetime's habit. This duty has been entirely elided from the cultural narrative.

> 264 O you who heed warning:[1] make not your charity vain through condescension and hindrance,[2] like one who spends his wealth to be seen of men and believes not in[3] God and the Last Day. And his likeness is as the likeness of a rock whereon is dust: a downpour fell upon it leaving it bare; they possess nothing from what they have earned; and God guides not the people of the false claimers of guidance.[4]
> (2:264)

Sin: ostentation in charity.
Today: the instances where putative charity remains are now largely driven by large organisations. They fall into three categories. The first is the so-called charities themselves. The large ones are effectively wings of soft power and serve to advance the broader agenda. They allow those who contribute to them to feel good about themselves, but the charities themselves have nothing to gain from solving the problems with which they claim to be concerned. The second is what is called Corporate or Social Responsibility. These are euphemisms employed by large corporations under the aegis of which funds are directed by them in various directions. In truth, this is a form of public relations aimed at improving the image of the company and increasing profits. The third is what are called philanthropic organisations. While philanthropy sounds a high ideal, the organisations which fly its banner are principally means of protecting the wealth of the rich and channelling vast resources into the service of the Agenda. The notion of giving simply to please God in recognition of one's duty and in mitigation of one's sins is entirely lost from the cultural narrative.

21 This word is British English for what is meant by pacifier in American English.

> 267 O you who heed warning:[1] spend of the good things you have earned, and of what We have brought forth for you from the earth. And resort not to the bad thereof, to spend thereof, when you would not take it save you closed an eye to it; and know that God is free from need and praiseworthy.
> (2:267)

Sin: giving what is inferior in order to satisfy a requirement to give.
Today: we have summarised above those categories of putative charity which predominate. It is unlikely that those who manage funds for any of the three categories listed would wish personally to be subject to the policies their own organisations pursue.

Sin: usury.[22]
There are two segments which pertain to this section, and we list them together:

> 130 O you who heed warning:[1] consume not usury, doubled and redoubled; and be in prudent fear[2] of God, that you might be successful.
> 131 And be in prudent fear[1] of the Fire prepared for the false claimers of guidance.[2]
> 132 And obey God and the Messenger,[1] that you might obtain mercy.
> (3:130-132)

> 278 O you who heed warning:[1] be in prudent fear[2] of God; and give up what remains of usury, if you be believers.[2]
> 279 And if you do not, then be informed of war from God and His messenger. But if you repent, then to you are your principal sums;[1] doing no wrong, you will not be wronged.
> 280 And if he[1] be one in hardship, then deferment until ease; but that you forgive by way of charity is better for you, if you would know.
> 281 And be in prudent fear[1] of a day wherein you will be returned to God; then every soul will be paid in full what it earned; and they will not be wronged.
> (2:278-281)

Usury is a sin and a form of theft. The practice of usury inevitably concentrates all wealth in a few hands and makes slaves of those who live in a society which allows it. Moreover, usury is so repugnant to God that its practice provoked the sole instance in the Qur'an in which the Messenger is directed unilaterally to declare war.

Today: the acceptance and practice of usury are intrinsic to that unified system of worldwide governance under which we live. Various formerly Muslim countries resisted this process but have become absorbed by the dominant regime; vestigial expressions of Muslim sentiments in the world of banking today are, in truth, merely obfuscated forms of usury. While (banker-financed) pressure groups demonstrate in favour of myriad causes (causes which, in truth, promote the bankers' own agendas) few are those that comprise such groups who understand that the root cause of the ills that they feel so strongly about is usury.

> 29 O you who heed warning:[1] consume not your wealth among yourselves in vanity, or save[2] by way of trade by mutual consent among you; and kill not yourselves;[3] God is merciful to you;
> (4:25)

Sin: wrong use of wealth; suicide or murder.
It is clear above that the only legitimate use of wealth is by trade and mutual consent; both murder[23] and suicide are sins.
Today: taxation is a form of theft practiced by the elites upon those they rule. It operates as an obfuscated form of feudalism. Mafia structures extort on a more honest basis, and the drug and other Mafia cartels comprise a wing of the broader power structure of the elites and are useful to their purposes.

Governments murdered around 128 million of their own citizens in the 20th century[24] and these numbers do not include either abortion or soft-kill strategies such as pharmaceuticals, weaponised diet, or technological means. At the time of writing, all governments are compelling all citizens to submit to injections.

Suicide is promoted today under the term 'voluntary euthanasia' which itself is either legal or semi-legal already in certain countries.

> 87 O you who heed warning:[1] forbid not the good things that God has made lawful for you;[2] and transgress not; God loves not the transgressors.
> 88 And eat of what God has provided you, lawful and good; and be in prudent fear[1] of God in whom you are believers.[2]
> (5:87-88)

Sin: making unlawful what God has provided.
Today: the present system has created a new god called the Environment and is rolling out a system of theft and control under that aegis whereby what God gave men to use for their benefit is denied them.

> 90 O you who heed warning:[1] wine,[2] and games of chance, and altars,[3] and divining arrows[4] are an abomination of the work of the satan;[5] so avoid it, that you might be successful.
> (5:90)

23 A ruler has the right — even a duty — to execute those who commit certain crimes, but that question is beyond the remit of the present work.

24 According to Death By Government by R. J. Rummel (1994).

Sin: alcohol, gambling, idolatry, and divination.
Today: all these sins are heavily promoted today. The forms of idolatry most prevalent are self-worship (solipsism), earth worship (environmentalism), and worship of the State.

> 20 O you who heed warning:[1] obey God and His messenger,[2] and turn not away from Him[3] when you hear.
> (8:20)

Sin: denigration and rejection of both God and revealed scripture.
Today: mention of God and respect for scripture have been all but erased from the dominant cultural narrative.

> 119 O you who heed warning:[1] be in prudent fear[2] of God, and be with the truthful.
> (9:119)

Sin: lack of fear of God and preference for those who lie.
Today: piety is all but erased from the cultural narrative, while the practice of lying proliferates and is accepted behaviour supported and glorified by entertainment.

> 77 O you who heed warning:[1] be lowly[2] and submit,[3] and serve your Lord, and do good that you might be successful;
> (22:77)

Sin: lack of fear of God and of preference for Him; working evil.
Today: the first point is covered by others above. By the removal of any remembrance of God from the dominant cultural narrative societies have been detached from those principles which are laid down in those scriptures He gave men to live by. This policy inexorably leads to evil societies by definition.

> 21 O you who heed warning:[1] follow not the footsteps of the satan.[2] And whoso follows the footsteps of the satan:[3] he enjoins sexual immorality[4] and perversity.[5] And were it not for the bounty of God upon you and His mercy, not one of you would have been pure ever. But God increases in purity[6] whom He wills; and God is hearing and knowing.
> (24:21)

Sin: sexual sin.
Today: sexual sin and its acceptance have been entirely normalised and are promoted heavily by the dominant cultural narrative.

> 27 O you who heed warning:[1] enter not houses other than your houses until you have asked leave and greeted the people thereof;[2] that is best for you, that you might take heed.
> (24:27)

Sin: violation of people's right to privacy within their homes.
Today: the State now intrudes upon every house without leave by means of surveillance and other techniques.

> 41 O you who heed warning:[1] remember God with much remembrance,[2]
> 42 And give glory[1] to Him morning and evening.
> (33:41-42)

Sin: removal of remembrance of God from cultural norms.
Today: mention of God in any serious or influential forum today is all but verboten.

> 70 O you who heed warning:[1] be in prudent fear[2] of God, and speak an apposite word.[3]
> (33:70)

Sin: lack of fear of God; foul speech.
Today: the first point is covered by others above; in the second case, the debasement of speech and promotion of profanity are everywhere in evidence being actively promoted by the dominant culture-creation delivery systems such as movies and what passes today for music and literature.

> 33 O you who heed warning:[1] obey God and obey the Messenger,[2] and make not vain your deeds.
> (47:33)

Sin: failure to follow God's laws as found in revealed scripture.
Today: this point is covered by others above.

> 6 O you who heed warning:[1] if one perfidious[2] comes to you with a report: verify, lest you strike a people in ignorance, and become remorseful for what you did.
> (49:6)

Sin: propensity to believe falsehood.
Today: the dominant cultural narrative is one in which false accusation, rumour and surmise both prevail and are accepted; men in particular are vulnerable to accusations brought by women supported by no evidence.

> 11 O you who heed warning:[1] let not a people deride another people[2] — it may be that they are better than they; neither women other[3] women — it may be that they are better than they; neither speak ill of yourselves,[4] nor insult one another with nicknames. Bad is the name of perfidy[5] after faith. And whoso turns not in repentance, it is they who are the wrongdoers.[6]
> (49:11)

Sin: back-biting and name-calling.
Today: social media have made these sins into a regular pastime for countless millions.

> 12 O you who heed warning:[1] avoid much assumption; some assumption is sin.[2] And spy not;[3] neither backbite one another. Would any of you like to eat the flesh of his dead brother? You would detest it. And be in prudent fear[4] of God; God is accepting of repentance and merciful.
> (49:12)

Sin: assumption without evidence, and intrigue.
Today: this point is covered by ones above.

> 9 O you who heed warning:[1] when you converse confidentially, converse not confidentially in sin[2] and enmity, and disobedience to the Messenger, but converse confidentially in virtue and prudent fear.[3] And be in prudent fear[4] of God to whom you will be gathered.
> (58:9)

Sin: secret scheming.
Today: this sin informs the entire system driving the present tyranny: the ruling elites gather in secret to formulate their plans.

> 18 O you who heed warning:[1] be in prudent fear[2] of God. And let a soul look to what it has sent ahead for the morrow.[3] And be in prudent fear[4] of God; God is aware of what you do.
> 19 And be not like those who forgot God, so He caused them to forget their souls; those: it is they who are the perfidious.[1]
> (59:18-19)

Sin: failure to remember God.
Today: this point is covered by others above.

> 2 O you who heed warning:[1] why do you say what you do not?
> 3 Great is the hatred in the sight of God,[1] that you say what you do not.
> (61:2-3)

Sin: duplicity.
Today: certainly, the masses are trained into conceptions of themselves which are highly delusional, thus their words and deeds bear diminishing degrees of correlation. But this point finds a strong echo also in the elites of today which everywhere trumpet their own virtue while secretly planning evil.

> 14 O you who heed warning:[1] be helpers of God, as Jesus,[2] son of Mary,[3] said to the disciples:[4] "Who are my helpers for God?" The disciples[5] said: "We are the helpers of God." And a number of the children of Israel believed, and a number denied,[6] and We strengthened those who heeded warning[7] against their enemy so they became dominant.[8]
> (61:14)

Sin: failure to follow God's commandments.
Today: this point is covered by others above.

> 9 O you who heed warning:[1] when the call is heard for the duty[2] of the day of assembly,[3] then hasten to the remembrance[4] of God, and leave commerce; that is better for you, if you but knew.
>
> 10 And when the duty[1] is concluded,[2] disperse in the land, and seek of the bounty of God; and remember God much that you might be successful.
> (62:9-10)

Sin: mercenary motives in war.
Today: the term rendered here 'the call[...] for the duty' is shown in my work to signify military muster.[25] This is a large subject, as are all those listed here, but suffice it to say here that the Military-Industrial Complex of which Eisenhower famously spoke is vast, rapacious and relentless.

> 9 O you who heed warning:[1] let not your wealth or your children divert you from the remembrance[2] of God;[3] and whoso does that, it is they who are the losers.
> (63:9)

Sin: failure to remember God.
Today: this point is covered by others above.

> 6 O you who heed warning:[1] protect yourselves and your families from a Fire whose fuel is men and stones, over which are angels stern and severe; they do not oppose God in what He has commanded them but do what they are commanded.
> (66:6)

Sin: failure of male heads of families to provide leadership towards God.
Today: men have been fully usurped in their natural role of family leadership by the State; we will expand upon this point in some detail below.

> 8 O you who heed warning:[1] turn to God in sincere repentance. It may be that your Lord will remove from you your evil deeds,[2] and make you enter gardens beneath which rivers flow. The day God will not disgrace the Prophet and those who heed warning[3] with him, their light running[4] before them[5] and on their right hand,[6] they will say: "Our Lord: perfect Thou for us our light, and forgive Thou us; Thou art over all things powerful."
> (66:8)

Sin: half-baked religion.
Today: the key word above is sincere. The system today allows, for now, lip service to religion so long as it does not impact a man's actions in the world or his actual standards: the things he will or will not stand for.

One finds also a number of segments which treat specifically of sins which pertain to women, and which we will now consider.

Logic dictates that the verse below in which we find listed the components of the fealty oath believing women who joined the community of believers in the lifetime of the Prophet were required to take must reflect those sins prevalent among women in the communities they had left.

> 12 O Prophet: when the believing women[1] come to thee, swearing fealty to thee: — that they will not ascribe a partnership[2] with God to anything; and they will not steal; and they will not commit unlawful sexual intercourse;[3] and they will not kill their children; and they will not produce a calumny they have invented between their hands and their feet;[4] and they will not disobey thee in what is fitting;[5] — then accept thou their fealty, and ask thou God to forgive them; God is forgiving and merciful.
> (60:12)

The sins identified above are:

- Dilution of the oneness of God
- Theft
- Sexual immorality
- Infanticide
- Invention of calumny and gossip

We will now comment upon each sin and consider its prevalence today. We have included within what follows aspects of the current system driving the destruction of the family and society as a whole which, while applicable to multiple parts of our analysis, are best treated in some detail and in one place.

We will repeat that, in considering the points below, we neither make allowance for a worldview created by the Agenda nor attempt to panda to those made emotionally incontinent as a function of that agenda; our purpose is to attempt to summarise the facts as they stand.

Dilution of the oneness of God

While men also are not immune to influence, and though it is not a rule determining each and every case, in their generality women tend to conform to societal norms. They do so as a necessary function of their sex. It is in a woman's nature to adapt to the status quo; to seek safety and security. Since she is weaker than a man and dependent upon him for resources, the qualities of conformity and adaptability are necessary for her survival.

In considering the fact that the segment above treats specifically of women, given the points which follow one comes to the view that a society which promotes the tendencies we have summarised under the remaining four headings derived from verse 60:12 is necessarily antithetical to a woman's principal interests; such a society strikes at the root of a woman's God-created nature and all but compels her into a condition wherein realisation of her potential as a believer is first stunted, then perverted, then destroyed.

Thus, the topics derived from verse 60:12 which follow form the pillars of a doctrine which deprives a woman of the conditions in which she is most likely to eschew idols and submit to God alone and thereby attain her true value in this life and a place of honour and bliss in the next. We will see that each of these pillars is enshrined as doctrine within the present system.

Theft

Men tend to steal within business, the practice of usury having been addressed above. Women primarily steal by different routes: by reneging on the duties implicit in their sex; by disregarding their obligations within marriage; by denying their husbands the rights they naturally have over them; and by eviscerating their husbands' substance.

Creative expansions upon this type of theft are promoted and instituted as the norm within the worldwide system which prevails today having been installed by processes of cultural engineering. Women are trained to deny where their principal source of value lies (for which see next point); they are increasingly held to no moral standard, either within or without marriage; they are taught to leverage marriage to steal unjust sums from men (for the use of which they are held to no account); and not only are women themselves encouraged to renege on their principal obligations, they are supported in their lack of responsibility, accountability, and morality by a State machinery which forces all men to maintain such women by means of taxation — itself a form of theft — all of which is fortified and underpinned by emotional narratives founded in fictions.

A woman is designed to have children young and to form the deepest and most lasting attachment with her first man. Within the present system, women are both trained to be sexually immoral[26] and encouraged to defer having children to an age where they are both less able to have healthy children and so jaded and psychologically damaged by their careers of sanctioned immorality that they could not form a lasting bond with the fathers of their children should they even wish to.

Women blossom and reach their highest sexual marketplace value in their mid-to-late teens. Men, meanwhile, generally hit their stride economically only in their thirties. The obvious correlation between economically viable men and high sexual marketplace value women has been made anathema by means of social engineering, and is excluded from sensible social discourse by means of name-calling and shaming-language.[27] Thus, women are all but 26 For which see next point.

27 Standard means by which illogical, unnatural, and undesirable parts of the current agenda are enforced.

precluded from marrying the men best equipped in terms of life experience and economic means to maintain them.

As stated, men develop their value later than do women. Economically viable men are today browbeaten into submitting to a discourse which permits them access only to women near their own age. But a used-up woman of thirty-five or forty is not comparable with a man of the same age on the upswing of his career by any objective standard.
To conclude this point: the sexual marketplace itself has been corrupted by price-fixing, false methods of accounting, and automatic penalties against those who favour objective evaluations. This is in itself yet another form of theft. And while it is clear that this system has been instituted in order to harm men, disenfranchise children, and destroy women themselves, it is women who — having correctly intuited the moral turpitude required of them by those who govern society — are the most vociferous enforcers of this strand of the elites' agenda.

Sexual immorality
Men provide for women; that is their principal source of value both to society and within marriage. The value a woman represents to a man derives from her sex; from her chastity,[28] her beauty, and her youth (i.e. ability to bear healthy children).

If a man deceives his wife, it is a sin before God; but he is still expected to provide for his wife.

If a woman deceives her husband, she not only places the paternity of the children for which her husband must continue to provide in doubt, she thereby destroys one of her principal sources of value. If she is unchaste before marriage, she enters the marriage fundamentally devalued, having given away that to which her husband is entitled and for which he is expected to pay. In such a case she is comparable to a man who, though previously wealthy, has squandered his substance and wishes to enter marriage bankrupt. But whereas a man may turn his fortunes around, a woman cannot retrieve her virtue.

In this system, a woman is trained to disregard her youth and chastity, which represent her principal sources of value, and to squander them. Once she realises that her youth is fading, she then expects to make another man pay for what she has already given away, and looks to Government to enforce those expectations.

Infanticide
The killing of a living child is infanticide no matter whether the murder occurs within or without the womb. And the killing of children is a great sin before God.

Women today practice the killing of their unborn children on an industrial scale, having been schooled by authorised indoctrination into unsustainable and unfounded delusions about their best means of achieving happiness. As a function of this, they are encouraged by the system both to kill their unborn children and to regard it as a matter of no great consequence. Again, they are held to no standard of responsibility; here, as in all things, nothing is their fault, and the idea that it should be is a form of 'oppression' to be dealt with by yet more cultural engineering.

28 I.e. the practice of maintaining all sexual activity within the bounds of marriage.

Under many regional jurisdictions a woman may kill a man's unborn child without the permission of the father, while unwed mothers under the age of majority may do so without the knowledge even of their parents.

The institution of so-called abortion is an Agenda item decided upon by the ruling elite and rolled out in every country once the sensibilities of that society have been broken down by sufficient programming and economic restructuring.

Women kill around 70,000,000 babies each year on the altar to the god of materialism.

Invention of calumny and gossip
Women are given to gossip and lies. It is a feature of their sex. Without the capacity to dissimulate and gather information they would not survive. However, this tendency must be held in check if a society is to be healthy.

As we have stated, culture is created; it is a function of decisions made at the top. Our society is structured to facilitate gossip in myriad forms with no social taboos on a woman giving full rein to her momentary passions, need for intrigue, and eternally shifting conceptions of herself and others, with all examples of modest and virtuous female behaviour having been fully erased from the culture.

In summary then, it is clear that each of the sins listed above is actively promoted within the system which prevails today.

We will now add some general comments which expand upon the points above, following which we will consider the last topic pertaining to the sins characteristic of the time of Muḥammad: the worship of females.

That men should pay for and protect women is the natural order. But it is also the natural order that men should receive in exchange a submissive, faithful wife dedicated to serving her husband and his children exclusively as per the traditional marriage vow women once took to love, honour, and obey their husbands. This natural order has been intentionally changed by means of social and emotional engineering.

A woman's principal currency is attention. She requires it, trades in it, and will do almost anything to get it. This ingrained and natural feature of her sex has been perverted and weaponised by the Agenda against both her and those who form — or attempt to form — a bond with her. Eternally shopping for attention via social media, she is now an addict to the dopamine fix she derives from that attention. Moreover, she has been trained to expect to enter any marriage with her pre-existing intravenous drip unchallenged and kept beyond the control of her husband as it continues to mainline a potentially limitless supply of this drug into her mind. This is something no man can hope to compete with, and all but guarantees both his financial ruin and her future dependency upon the State.

A normal, natural woman is designed to submit to and serve a man. In the vast preponderance of cases that nature has not changed: a woman continues to submit and to serve a man. But her man today is the State.

In this new and perverted system, men are required to support women who are deviant and destructive from the natural point of view, either within marriage (wherein, should a man insist upon his natural rights, he is branded an "abuser"), or outside marriage, either independently via punitive settlements in the family courts, or collectively via taxes — or both. That is, men continue to pay for women, while the systems which drive society leverage women against men.

In effect then, the generality of women are today whores for the State. They practice an obfuscated form of prostitution in collaboration with the State, both at the expense of countless individual men, and of men in general. The State performs the function of pimp, providing physical muscle and administering punishments in the event that any man should wish to claim as his own that for which he is paying; meanwhile, the man's role is to be compared with that of a client that the pimp and the prostitute work together to fleece. This state of affairs both destroys the family and prevents men from maintaining resources that could provide some measure of insulation against the State.

Women are invariably assumed to have a moral right to the custody of children in cases of divorce,[29] whereas they are invariably less able to support children than are men. This allows the State to continue in its role of enforcer, and results in generations of males raised without fathers, meaning that those males grow up feminised, unable to master emotions, undisciplined, low-agency, and reactive — all of which must be regarded as intended outcomes.

As we have said, the woman is rarely held to account or required to honour her contract; always able to claim victimhood. And all she needs in order to destroy the life of her husband and children is a change in "feelings" — an almost inevitable outcome given sufficient consumption of Media.

Meanwhile, the "feelings" trump card does not work in the case of a man; he is held to account.

At the same time, male children are held back generally through mixed-sex education, the ubiquity of female teachers, and the insistence that boys simply being boys is a defect to be 29 Which in the U.S. for example they initiate over 70% of the time. That rate is higher if she has been to university.

corrected by socialisation and drugs.[30] Moreover, women have been both insinuated into almost every area of male provenance — be it sports, recreation, social congress, or work — and imposed in all areas of male competence both upon and over men (as bosses, referees, arbiters, judges and like), frequently taking roles in which they themselves have neither any natural place, nor are able to perform the tasks they have been placed over as proficiently and with the same level of dedication as the best men. This condition of unnaturalness is maintained by name-calling, shaming language, slogans, legal persecution, brainwashing, false science, and propaganda. The net effect has been to destroy the family and increase the power of Government — the latter institution being entirely a function of the ruling cabal. Put in its right perspective, the policy of the elites for well over a hundred years has been to use women to destroy the family and to disenfranchise its natural head: the man. This has created a vicious cycle of increasingly neurotic women destroying sons which in turn further diminishes potential for genuine leadership and thus reduces the chance of resistance to the dominant power.

Meanwhile, the status of single-motherhood has lost all nuance of the shame which traditionally attached to it and has been transfigured by the engine of cultural indoctrination into a holy order, one deserving of every sacrifice by the broader society.

In short, the woman has been made an agent of the State. She is a footsoldier in a war she does not understand, the effects of which destroy both her and those who are affected by the neurosis which inevitably results from her being deprived of her natural role as a dedicated wife and mother and pressed into service by Agenda-driven indoctrination as part of a generalised prostitution franchise operation.

We do not here blame women. It is in their nature to submit to the dominant power in any social order. The dominant power today is that of the worldwide ruling elite; and while individual women may not understand the mechanisms underpinning that power, collectively they fully understand what that dominant power requires of them and, as must be expected, they are complying with those expectations.

The worship of females

As we have summarised above, women are today irretrievably brainwashed into delusions about themselves and their source of value. As we hope has been made clear, we cherish no illusions of affecting that reality, and do not blame women for it. We are interested here in describing the situation as it has been instituted under the Agenda insofar as it compares with those sins which can be shown to be characteristic of the time of Muḥammad.

Men today continue to be expected to serve women as per their traditional role; women, meanwhile, have been encouraged to abandon entirely the reservation of their natural responsibilities. As a function of this process, men have essentially been made slaves to a system of gynocentric control. This is not how a man is meant to correspond with a woman; but it is how he must correspond with a State-mandated idol. Thus, in this system, the woman has been made an idol — one to which a man must sacrifice his substance and before which he must abase himself.

30 Clearly, one intended consequence of this policy is to minimise any potential for future leadership among the slave caste.

A woman is not meant to be idolised; a woman is intended to serve God, her husband, and his children. The Qur'an is entirely clear that men are to be the masters of their own houses and of society in general. The corruption of the notion of womanhood and the institution of the model of a deluded, entitled, irresponsible, selfish, dangerous child in its place has been a central tool in the evisceration of society and helped make that outcome inevitable.

We will now summarise the overt indications that a comparable system of idolatry was in force at the time of Muḥammad before listing the legal imperatives given to the Messenger which confirm this.

While within the narrative backdrop to the time of Muḥammad males were highly prized, there is everywhere an emphasis on the connection between femininity and the transcendent realm:

> 57 And they appoint for God daughters — glory[1] be to Him! — but they have what they desire;[2]
> 58 And when one of them receives tidings of a female, his face darkens and he suppresses grief.
> 59 He hides himself from the people because of the evil[1] of that whereof he had tidings — whether to hold it in contempt, or bury it in the dust. In truth,[2] evil is what they judge.
> (16:57-59)

> 16 If[1] He has taken of what He creates daughters, and chosen for you sons,[2]
> 17 (But when one of them is given glad tidings of that[1] which he strikes for the Almighty[2] as a similitude, his face turns black and he suppresses grief:[3]
> 18 "What — one brought up among ornaments and in conflict not seen!"[1])
> 19 And they have made the angels, who are the servants of the Almighty,[1] females:[2] — did they witness their creation?[3] Their witness will be recorded; and they will be questioned.[4]
> 20 And they say: "Had the Almighty[1] willed, we would not have served them." They have no knowledge of that; they are only guessing.[2]
> (43:16-20)

In the segments which follow we see the same emphasis:

> 40 Has then your Lord chosen for you sons and taken from among the angels females?[1] You speak a monstrous[2] word.[3]
> 41 And We have expounded[1] in this Qur'an,[2] that they take heed; but it increases them only in aversion.
> (17:40-41)

> 19 Have you considered Al-Lāt and Al-ʿUzzā,

> 20 And Manāt the third, the other?[1]
> 21 Have you the males, and He the females?
> 22 That then is an unjust division.
> 23 They are only names you have named, you and your fathers, for which God sent down no authority. They follow only assumption, and what their[1] souls desire; but there has come to them guidance from their Lord.
> (53:19-23)

> 27 Those who believe not in[1] the Hereafter name the angels with the names of females.[2]
> 28 But they have no knowledge thereof, they follow only assumption; and assumption avails nothing against the truth.[1]
> 29 So turn thou away from him who turns away from Our remembrance[1] and desires only the life of this world.
> 30 That is their attainment of knowledge.[1] Thy Lord: He best knows him who strays from His path; and He best knows him who is guided.
> (53:27-30)

It is no great step from what we see in the segments above to the view that females themselves are gods and angels. And once females are associated with gods and angels in the cultural discourse, taboos will be laid upon the default expectation that women perform their proper duties and as a result the society will be skewed in the direction of deferring to women rather than leading them.

With this point in view, we will consider the following segment:

> 1 O Prophet: why makest thou unlawful what God has made lawful for thee, seeking the approval of thy wives? And God is forgiving and merciful.
> (66:1)

Here the Prophet himself is chided for affording women greater influence than is right.

Under the present Agenda, it is the requirement for the approval of women which is everywhere driving the destruction of society.

When one adds to the general scenario summarised above the very clear Qur'anic legal directives for both the entry into and exit out of marriage; the emphasis on male leadership in marriage; the fact that the man is given the right both to admonish and discipline his wife; very clear punishments for both men and women in the case of witnessed sexual immorality, then the picture which forms is of a society in which women had not only become entirely immoral but were supported in that direction by a system of doctrinal taboos and imperatives said to originate with the will of God. The correlations with the present doctrine of the world State are many and obvious.

We will list just two more segments in this regard.

28 O Prophet: say thou to thy wives:[1] "If you desire the life of this world and its adornment, come: I will give you provision, and release you with a comely release.
29 "But if you desire God and His messenger and the abode of the Hereafter, then God has prepared for the doers of good among you a great reward."
30 O wives of the Prophet: whoso among you commits manifest sexual immorality,[1] for her the punishment is doubled;[2] and that is easy for God.[3]
31 And whoso among you is humbly obedient to God and His messenger, and works righteousness, We will give her her reward twice over; and We have prepared for her a noble[1] provision.
(33:28-31)

59 O Prophet: say thou to thy wives, and thy daughters, and the women[1] of the believers,[2] that they draw down[3] over them some of their garments. That will tend to them being recognised and not hindered;[4] and God is forgiving and merciful.
(33:59)

In the first segment, we see female material greed clearly delineated; this topic then feeds immediately into that of sexual immorality. Women achieve material things by leveraging their sexual value, and the connection could not be made more plain than here in the case of the Prophet's own wives.

In the second segment, believing women are directed away from dressing provocatively and without regard for modesty. It hardly needs mentioning that the world State fashion industry is a key component in the subversion of modern females into an ideology which both exalts them as goddesses and deludes them into the view that all male attention is worth having no matter the cost to their modesty.

As in all the cases we have listed in this section treating of the sins characteristic of the time of Muḥammad, the imperatives above are suggestive of a broader problem with roots in the believers' communities of origin.

In conclusion, it is clear that all sins — both those which pertain primarily to men and those which pertain primarily to women — which we have identified in the section above as extant in those communities from which the believers of the time of Muḥammad were drawn are heavily promoted under the present system of world governance.

Core actions of a messenger of warning

Since the protocol is dependent upon actions by a warner only (with denial on the part of those warned as the sole trigger necessary for destruction to result), we will not list the responses of Muḥammad's audience in the same detail as was the case with previous warners; we have established a large enough dataset of expected responses both by means of explicit and generic narratives to understand the core features. Our primary focus is on the protocol itself and those circumstances extant today relative to the matter of the completion of Muḥammad's universal mission to mankind "all together".

Before considering that mission in earnest, we must measure the Qur'an's presentation of Muḥammad's actions in the light of what we know about the God protocol; that is, we need to know whether he met the conditions of a warner as per the criteria of the God protocol we have identified.

We have established the full set of actions required for a legitimate implementation of the God protocol — by either a single warner who is also a prophet and / or a messenger, or by such a man augmented by a believing man to provide a statement of affiliation — to comprise the following:[31]

1. Cites God as creator of all things.
2. Says God can delay to a stated term.
3. Cites guidance of God.
4. Cites need for patience.
5. Cites need to place trust in God.
6. Claims better guidance than that of hearers.
7. Warns of the Resurrection.
8. Calls the hearers to seek forgiveness of God.
9. Receives a commission from God.
10. Told by God that the wrongdoers will be destroyed.
11. Eats food and walks in the markets.
12. Approaches a people to which he belongs.
13. Speaks in the language of those he warns.
14. Warns the principal city.
15. Comes with clear signs, writings, or the Illuminating Writ.
16. Calls the hearers to serve God.
17. Calls the hearers to serve God only.
18. Asserts that there is but one true God.
19. Calls the hearers to fear God.
20. Calls the hearers to abandon idols.
21. Addresses himself to the elites of his time.
22. Appeals to God.
23. Warns of punishment.
24. Anticipates (punishment of) a "tremendous day".
25. Advances reasoned arguments.
26. States that he is nothing more than a mortal.
27. States that God only can provide the authority requested.
28. Presents a clear notification.
29. Bears glad tidings and warning.
30. Places his affair entirely in the hands of God.

31 The dataset is represented visually in the Table entitled Actions of Warner at the end of this book.

31. Uses the appeal: "O my people:".[32]

We will consider below the Qur'anic data which treats of each core-action category with respect to Muḥammad. There is little need for commentary since the verses speak for themselves. Moreover, in many cases there is so much textual evidence it would burden the reader unduly to provide it all, and we supply a representative sample only.

Since the Qur'an comprises the revelation given to Muḥammad, its entirety comprises the words he was given to say by God; given that context, we are able to consider both segments in which the Prophet is directed in the imperative to speak[33] as well as others which form part of his broader revelation and relate to his mission of warning.

Following the summary below we will compare what we are calling the non-core actions of previous messengers of warning with the case of Muḥammad;[34] thereafter, we will turn to the subject of Muḥammad's mission to all mankind.

1. Cites God as creator of all things.

12 Say thou: "To whom belongs what is in the heavens and the earth?" Say thou: "To God." He has prescribed upon Himself mercy;[1] (He will bring you all together to the Day of Resurrection whereof there is no doubt; those who have lost their souls: they do not believe.[2]
13 And to Him belongs what rests in the night and the day; and He is the Hearing, the Knowing.
14 Say thou: "Is it other than God I am to take as ally — the Creator of the Heavens and the Earth, and who feeds but is not fed?" Say thou: "I have been commanded to be first among those who submit"; and: "Be thou not among the idolaters."[1]
15 Say thou: "I fear, if I should oppose my Lord, the punishment of a tremendous day.")
(6:12-15)

2. Says God can delay to a stated term.

1 Praise belongs to God who created the heavens and the earth and made darkness[1] and the light! Then those who ignore warning[2] ascribe equals to their Lord.

32 We have included the category Uses the appeal: "O my people:" above since, while it is not covered by generic narrative summaries, review of the Actions of Warners Table at the end of this book reveals that this category is the only one not also covered by generic narrative summaries to be included in all explicit narratives (i.e. was the case of all those messengers for whom we have data pertinent to the God protocol). We observed how the requirement of a statement of affiliation could not be met in the case of Moses and how it was delivered by means of the 'believing man'. This demonstrates both that it is a vital component to the protocol and that it can be met by someone other than a messenger of God — a point to which we shall return later in our presentation. Since Muḥammad meets this requirement with regard to his own people also, it is rightly included among the set of requisite actions which comprise the protocol.

33 I.e. 'Say thou:' statements.

34 By non-core actions we mean those actions characteristic of particular warners we have observed previously in our presentation but which are not generic (i.e. are neither explicitly recorded in the text as actions executed by all warners nor feature in generic narrative statements).

2 He it is that created you from clay; then He decreed a term[1] — and a stated term is with Him; then do you doubt.
(6:1-2)

53 And they ask thee to hasten the punishment! And were it not for a stated term, the punishment would have come upon them; and it will come upon them unexpectedly, when they perceive not.
54 They ask thee to hasten the punishment! And Gehenna will encompass the false claimers of guidance[1]
55 The day the punishment covers them from above them and from beneath their feet, and He will say: "Taste what you did!"
(29:53-55)

42 And think thou[1] not that God is unmindful of what the wrongdoers[2] do; He only delays them to a day wherein the eyes will stare,[3]
43 Straining forward, their heads uplifted; their gaze not returning to them, and their hearts void.
(14:42-43)

3. Cites guidance of God.

120 And never will the Rabbinic Jews[1] be pleased with thee, nor will the Christians,[2] until thou follow their creed;[3] say thou: "The guidance of God, that is guidance"; and if thou follow their vain desires[4] after the knowledge which has come to thee, thou wilt have against God neither ally nor helper.
(2:120)

71 Say thou: "Shall we call, rather than[1] to God, to what neither profits us nor harms us, and be turned back on our heels after God has guided us? — like one whom the satans[2] seduce in the earth, lost in confusion, he having companions inviting him to guidance:[3] 'Come thou to us!'" Say thou: "The guidance of God, that is guidance; and we have been commanded to submit to the Lord of All Creation";
(6:71)

4. Cites need for patience.

109 And follow thou what is revealed[1] to thee; and be thou patient until God judges; and He is the best of judges.
(10:109)

49 That is from the reports of the Unseen that We reveal[1] to thee; thou knewest it not, neither thou, nor thy people before this. So be thou patient; the final outcome is for those of prudent fear.[2]
(11:49)

127 And be thou patient; and thy patience is only through God. And grieve thou not over them, nor be thou in distress over what they scheme.
(16:127)

60 And be thou patient; the promise of God is true.[1] And let not those who are not certain[2] sway[3] thee.
(30:60)

5. Cites need to place trust in God.

38 And if thou askest them who created the heavens and the earth, they will say: "God." Say thou: "Have you considered to what you call other than[1] God? If God wills affliction for me, are they removers of His affliction? Or if He wills mercy for me, are they withholders of His mercy?" Say thou: "God is sufficient for me." In Him place their trust those who would place their trust aright.[2]
(39:38)

9 If[1] they have taken allies besides[2] Him:[3] then God, He is the Ally, and He gives life to the dead, and He is over all things powerful.
10 And that wherein you differ in anything, the judgment thereof is to God: "That is God, my Lord; in whom I place my trust, and to whom I turn."
(42:9)

13 God, there is no god save He.[1] And in God then let the believers[2] place their trust.
(64:13)

29 Say thou: "He is the Almighty.[1] We believe in[2] Him, and in Him we place our trust. And you will come to know who is in manifest error."
(67:29)

6. Claims better guidance than that of hearers.

14 Made fair for men is the love of lusts — for women, and sons, and amassed fortunes[1] of gold and silver, and branded horses, and cattle, and tilth: that is the provision of the life of this world — but God, with Him is the best journey's end.[2]
15 Say thou: "Shall I inform you of better than that? For those who are in prudent fear,[1] with their Lord are gardens beneath which rivers flow, they abiding eternally therein, and purified spouses, and approval from God"; and God sees the servants,[2]
16 Those who say: "Our Lord: we believe, so forgive Thou us our transgressions,[1] and protect Thou us from the punishment of the Fire,"
17 The patient,[1] the truthful, the humbly obedient, those who spend, and the seekers of forgiveness at dawn.
(3:14-17)

31 They have lost who deny the meeting with God; when[1] the Hour has come upon them unexpectedly, they will say: "O our regret over what we neglected concerning it!" And they will bear their burdens upon their backs; in truth,[2] evil is what they will bear.
32 And the life of this world is only play and diversion; and the abode of the Hereafter is better for those of prudent fear.[1] Will you then not[2] use reason!
(6:31-32)

58 Say thou: "At the bounty of God, and at His mercy: —" At that let them exult; it is better than what they amass.
(10:58)

95 And sell not the covenant of God[1] at a cheap price; what is with God is better for you, if you would know.
96 What is with you has an end, and what is with God remains; and We will pay those who are patient their reward according to the best of what they did.
(16:95-96)

75 Say thou: "Whoso is in error — no matter the extent the Almighty[1] extends for him[2] — when[3] they have seen what they are promised, whether it be the punishment[4] or the Hour, then will they know who is worse in position and weaker in force."
76 And God increases those who were guided in guidance; and the enduring things — the righteous deeds — are better with thy Lord as reward, and better as recourse.[1]
(19:75-76)

59 Say thou: "Praise belongs to God, and peace be upon His servants whom He has chosen!" Is God better, or that to which they ascribe a partnership?[1]
60 If:[1] He who created the heavens and the earth: — and sent down for you water from the sky wherewith We cause to grow gardens full of delight whereof it was not for you to cause the trees to grow[2] — is there any god with God?[3] The truth is,[4] they are a people who ascribe equals.
61 If:[1] He who made the earth a fixed lodging,[2] and made rivers in its midst, and made firm mountains therein, and made a barrier[3] between the two seas:[4] is there any god with God?[5] The truth is,[6] most of them know not.
62 If:[1] He who responds to one distressed when he calls to Him, and removes the evil, and makes you successors of the earth:[2] is there any god with God?[3] Little do you take heed.
63 If:[1] He who guides you in the darknesses of the land and the sea, and who sends the winds as glad tidings at the time[2] of His mercy:[3] is there any god with God?[4] Exalted be God above that to which they ascribe a partnership![5]
64 If:[1] He who begins creation, then repeats it, and provides for you from the heaven and the earth:[2] is there any god with God?[3] Say thou: "Bring your evidence, if you be truthful."[4]
65 Say thou: "None in the heavens and the earth knows the Unseen save God." And they perceive not when they will be raised.
66 The truth is,[1] their knowledge fails[2] concerning the Hereafter. The truth is,[3] they are in doubt about it. The truth is,[4] they are blind to it.
(27:59-66)

49 Say thou: "Then bring a writ[1] from God that gives better guidance than these:[2] I will follow it, if you be truthful."[3]
50 And if they respond not to thee, know thou that they but follow their vain desires.[1] And who is further astray than he who follows his vain desire, without guidance from God? God guides not the wrongdoing[2] people.
(28:49-50)

7. Warns of the Resurrection.

5 O mankind: if you are in doubt about the Resurrection, then: We created you from dust; then from a sperm-drop; then from a clinging thing;[1] then from a fleshy lump[2] formed and unformed — that We might make plain[3] to you. And We settle in the wombs what We will to a stated term; then We bring you forth as a child; then that you should reach your maturity. And among you is he who is taken.[4] And among you is he who is sent back to the most abject age, so that he knows not, after knowledge, anything. And thou seest the earth lifeless;[5] then when We send down upon it water it quivers and swells and grows every[6] delightful kind
6 For it is that[1] God, He is the Truth;[2] and that He gives life to the dead; and that He is over all things powerful;
7 And that the Hour about which there is no doubt is coming; and that God will raise those in the graves!
(22:5-7)

8 And among men is he who disputes concerning God, without knowledge, or guidance, or an illuminating Writ,[1]
9 Turning aside proudly[1] to lead away[2] from the path of God. For him in the World is disgrace; and on the Day of Resurrection We will let him taste the punishment of the consuming fire:
10 "For it is that[1] thy hands sent ahead, and that God is not unjust to the servants!"[2]
(22:8-10)

68 And if they dispute with thee, say thou: "God best knows what you do.
69 "God will judge between you on the Day of Resurrection concerning that wherein you differ."
(22:68-69)

12 And those who ignore warning[1] say to those who heed warning:[2] "Follow our path and we will bear your offences."[3] But they will not bear anything of their offences;[4] they are liars.
13 And they will bear their loads — and loads besides[1] their loads — and they will be questioned on the Day of Resurrection about what they invented.
(29:12-13)

14 Say thou: "God do I serve, sincere to Him in my doctrine,[1]
15 "So serve what you will besides[1] Him." Say thou: "The losers will be those who lose themselves and their families on the Day of Resurrection." Is that[2] not the clear loss?
16 They will have above them canopies of the Fire, and beneath them canopies. By that does God put His servants in dread:[1] "O My servants: be in prudent fear[2] of Me!"
(39:14-16)

26 Say thou: "God gives you life; then He gives you death; then will He gather you to the Day of Resurrection whereof there is no doubt; but most men know not."
(45:26)

8. Calls the hearers to seek forgiveness of God.

53 Say thou: "O My servants who have committed excess against their souls: despair not of the mercy of God! God forgives transgressions[1] altogether,[2] — He is the Forgiving, the Merciful —
54 "And turn in repentance to your Lord, and submit to Him before there comes to you the punishment; then will you not be helped."
(39:53-54)

6 Say thou: "I am only a mortal like you. It is revealed[1] to me that your God is One God. So take a straight path to Him, and ask forgiveness of Him!" And woe to the idolaters:[2]
7 Those who render not the purity,[1] and of the Hereafter they are deniers!
(41:6-7)

9. Receives a commission from God.

1 O thou, one covering himself:
2 Arise thou and warn thou!
3 And magnify thou thy Lord,
4 And purify thou thy garments,
5 And forsake thou[1] defilement,
6 And show thou not favour seeking gain,
7 And to thy Lord be thou patient.
(74:1-7)

158 (Say thou: "O mankind: I am the messenger of God to you all together — to whom belongs the dominion of the heavens and the earth. There is no god save He.[1] He gives life and He gives death." So believe in[2] God and His messenger, the unschooled[3] prophet, who believes in[4] God and His words; and follow him,[5] that you might be guided.)
(7:158)

As we have emphasised throughout, Muḥammad received two major commissions, and both are indicated above.

10. Told by God that the wrongdoers will be destroyed.

76 And they had almost driven thee out of the land, to turn thee out therefrom; and then would they not have tarried after thee save a little.[1]
77 The practice[1] of those We sent before thee of Our messengers[...];[2] and thou wilt not find in Our practice[3] any alteration.
(17:76-77)

13 And how many a city stronger than thy city which has turned thee out[1] have We destroyed! And there was no helper for them.
(47:13)

4 And there comes to them no proof[1] among the proofs[2] of their Lord but they turn away therefrom:[3]
5 So have they denied the truth[1] when it came to them; and there will come to them a report of that whereat they mocked.
(6:4-5)

We know that the fact of destruction in the case of Muḥammad's original mission of warning is elided from the text in conformity with the case of Abraham. Nevertheless, in the three segments above we find evidence that Muḥammad received forewarning of the destruction impending upon the community to which he preached his message of warning.

11. Eats food and walks in the markets.

7 And they say: "What is this messenger that eats food and walks in the markets? Oh, that an angel were but[1] sent down to him to be a warner with him!
8 "Or a treasure were but sent to him! Or there were for him but a garden from which he ate!"[1] And the wrongdoers[2] say: "You follow only a man taken by sorcery."[3]
9 See thou how they strike similitudes for thee, and go astray, and cannot find a path.
(25:7-9)

12. Approaches a people to which he belongs.

1 ṣād[1] By the Qur'an[2] full of remembrance![3]
2 The truth is,[1] those who ignore warning[2] are in pride[3] and dissension.
3 (How many a generation We destroyed before them! And they cried out when there was no time to escape.)
4 And they marvel that a warner has come to them from among them; and the false claimers of guidance[1] say: "This is a sorcerer[2] and a liar.
5 "Has he made the gods One God?[1] This is an amazing thing."
(38:1-5)

66 But thy people have denied it when it is the truth.[1] Say thou: "I am not a guardian over you."
67 Every report has a dwelling-place;[1] and you will come to know.
(6:66-67)

The verses in Section 31 below apply in this regard also.

13. Speaks in the language of those he warns.

43 Nothing is said to thee but what has been said to the messengers before thee: — "Thy Lord is possessor of forgiveness, and possessor of painful retribution,"[1] — 44 And had We made it a recitation[1] in a foreign tongue, they would have said: "Oh, that its proofs[2] were but[3] set out and detailed[4] — a foreign tongue and an Arab!"[5] Say thou: "It is for those who heed warning[6] a guidance and a healing"; but those who do not believe:[7] in their ears is deafness, and it is for them blindness; those: they are called from a far place.
(41:43-44)

12 But before it was the Writ[1] of Moses a model[2] and a mercy; and this is a confirming Writ,[3] in an Arabic tongue, that it might warn those who do wrong,[4] and bring glad tidings to the doers of good:
(46:12)

14. Warns the principal city.

92 And this[1] is a Writ[2] We have sent down,[3] one blessed, confirming what was before it,[4] and that thou warn the mother of cities[5] and those around her; and those who believe in[6] the Hereafter believe in[7] it, and they preserve their duty.[8]
(6:92)

7 And thus We have revealed[1] to thee an Arabic recitation,[2] that thou warn the mother of cities[3] and whoso is around her and thou warn of the Day of Gathering whereof there is no doubt: a faction will be in the Garden, and a faction in the Inferno.
(42:7)

15. Comes with clear signs, writings, or the Illuminating Writ.

66 Say thou: "I am forbidden to serve that to which you call besides[1] God, since there have come to me clear signs from my Lord; and I am commanded to submit to the Lord of All Creation."
(40:66)

The "clear signs" which Muḥammad brought comprise the Qur'an itself:[35]

19 Say thou: "What thing is greatest in witness?" Say thou: "God is witness between me and you; and this Qur'an[1] has been revealed[2] to me that I might warn you thereby, and whom it reaches. Do you bear witness that there are other gods with God?" Say thou: "I bear not witness." Say thou: "He is but One God, and I am quit of that to which you ascribe a partnership."[3]
(6:19)

37 And this Qur'an[1] is not such as could be invented by other than[2] God; but it is a confirmation of what is before it,[3] and an exposition of the Writ about which there is no doubt,[4] from the Lord of All Creation.
38 If[1] they say: "He invented it,"[2] say thou: "Bring a sūrah[3] the like thereof; and call whom you can[4] besides[5] God, if you be truthful."[6]
39 The truth is,[1] they have denied what they compassed not in knowledge, and whose interpretation has not yet come to them. Thus denied those before them.

35 In support of this statement, the reader will be able to review a fully consistent presentation of al ḥurūf al muqaṭṭaʿāt in my work The Mysterious Letters of the Qur'an: A Complete Solution.

Then see thou how was the final outcome of the wrongdoers.[2]
(10:37-39)

88 Say thou: "If the servi[1] and the domini[2] gathered to produce the like of this Qur'an,[3] they would not produce the like thereof, though they were helpers one of another."
89 And We have expounded[1] for men in this Qur'an[2] every[3] similitude,[4] but most men refuse save denial.
(17:88-89)

21 Had We sent down this Qur'an[1] upon a mountain, thou hadst seen it humbled, split asunder from fear of God. And those similitudes — We strike them for mankind, that they might reflect.
(59:21)

The subject of the servi and the domini mentioned above at 17:88 is treated at length in Article SJC.

16. Calls the hearers to serve God.

104 Say thou: "O mankind: if you are in doubt about[1] my doctrine:[2] I serve not those whom you serve besides[3] God; but I serve God, who will take you;[4] and I am commanded to be of the believers;[5]
(10:104)

17. Calls the hearers to serve God only.

36 And those to whom We[1] gave the Writ[2] exult at what is sent down to thee; and among the parties is he who denies some of it. Say thou: "I am only commanded to serve God, and to ascribe not a partnership[3] to Him; to Him do I invite, and to Him is my return."[4]
(13:36)

65 Say thou: "I am only a warner; and there is no god save God, the One, the Vanquishing,
66 "Lord of the Heavens and the Earth and what is between them,[1] the Exalted in Might, the Forgiver."
(38:65-66)

64 (Say thou: "Is it other than God you command me to serve, O you who are ignorant?"
65 And it has been revealed[1] to thee and to those before thee: "If thou ascribe a partnership,[2] thy deeds will be made vain, and thou wilt be among the losers."
66 Nay,[1] but God shalt thou serve; and be thou among the grateful.)
(39:64-66)

66 Say thou: "I am forbidden to serve that to which you call besides[1] God, since there have come to me clear signs from my Lord; and I am commanded to submit to the Lord of All Creation."

(40:66)

18. Asserts that there is but one true God.

19 Say thou: "What thing is greatest in witness?" Say thou: "God is witness between me and you; and this Qur'an[1] has been revealed[2] to me that I might warn you thereby, and whom it reaches. Do you bear witness that there are other gods with God?" Say thou: "I bear not witness." Say thou: "He is but One God, and I am quit of that to which you ascribe a partnership."[3]
(6:19)

1 Say thou: "He is God, One!
2 "God, the Everlasting Refuge![1]
3 "He neither begets, nor is He begotten,
4 "Nor is there to Him any equal."
(112:1-4)

19. Calls the hearers to fear God.

1 They ask thee about the spoils of war. Say thou: "The spoils of war are for God and the Messenger; so be in prudent fear[1] of God, and make right in what is between you; and obey God and His messenger,[2] if you be believers."[3]
(8:1)

31 Say thou: "Who provides for you from the heaven and the earth?" If[1] He who owns the hearing and the sight, and He who brings forth the living from the dead and brings forth the dead from the living, and He who directs the matter[2] — then will they say: "God"[3] — then say thou: "Will you then not[4] be in prudent fear!"
(10:31)

86 Say thou: "Who is Lord of the Seven Heavens and Lord of the Great Throne?"
87 They will say: "God."[1] Say thou: "Will you then not[2] be in prudent fear!"
(23:86-87)

15 Say thou: "Is that better, or the Garden of Eternity which is promised to those of prudent fear?"[1] It will be for them a reward and a journey's end.
(25:15)

10 Say thou: "O My servants who heed warning:[1] be in prudent fear[2] of your Lord." For those who do good in the World is good, and God's earth is spacious.[3] The patient[4] will but be paid their reward without reckoning.[5]
(39:10)

20. Calls the hearers to abandon idols.

135 And they say: "Be such as hold to Judaism,[1] or Christians[2] — you will be guided." Say thou: "Nay,[3] the creed of Abraham, inclining to truth;[4] and he was not of the idolaters."[5]
(2:135)

95 Say thou: "God spoke truly; so follow the creed of Abraham, inclining to truth;[1] and he was not of the idolaters."[2]
(3:95)

256 There is no compulsion in doctrine;[1] sound judgment has become clear from error. So whoso denies idols[2] and believes in[3] God, he has grasped the most firm handhold which has no break; and God is hearing and knowing.
(2:256)

121 And eat not of that over which the name of God has not been remembered;[1] and it is perfidy.[2] And the satans[3] instruct[4] their allies to dispute with you; and if you obey them, you are idolaters.[5]
(6:121)

30 That[...].[1] And whoso honours the sacred things[2] of God, it is better for him in the sight of his Lord. And the cattle are lawful to you save that recited to you. And avoid the abomination of idols.[3] And avoid false speech,[4]
(22:30)

17 And those who avoid idols[1] lest they serve them and turn to God, for them are glad tidings. So give thou glad tidings to My servants:
18 Those who hear the word and follow the best thereof,[1] those are they whom God has guided; and it is they who are those possessed of insight.
(39:17-18)

21. Addresses himself to the elites of his time.

There is no instance in the Qur'an in which Muḥammad addresses himself to the ruling elites (called 'eminent ones' in my translation) directly, and nothing which may be compared to the kind of exchanges we saw exemplified in Moses' exchanges with Pharaoh and his elites. However, we find mention of 'eminent ones' in connection with Muḥammad's mission in a context which establishes beyond question that interaction between the warner and the ruling elite of his time took place. The segment in question is presented within its broader context below:[36]

1 ṣād[1] By the Qur'an[2] full of remembrance![3]
2 The truth is,[1] those who ignore warning[2] are in pride[3] and dissension.
3 (How many a generation We destroyed before them! And they cried out when there was no time to escape.)

36 We have truncated 38:17 in the interests of focusing on the principal point.

4 And they marvel that a warner has come to them from among them; and the false claimers of guidance[1] say: "This is a sorcerer[2] and a liar.
5 "Has he made the gods One God?[1] This is an amazing thing."
6 And the eminent ones among them went forth: "Go and be steadfast to your gods — this is a thing desired.[1]
7 "We heard not of this in the latter creed;[1] this is only a fabrication.
8 "Is it that the remembrance[1] was sent down upon him from among us?" The truth is,[2] they are in doubt about My remembrance;[3] the truth is,[4] they have not tasted My punishment!
9 If[1] they have the treasuries of the mercy of thy Lord, the Exalted in Might, the Bestower:[2] —
10 Or if[1] they have the dominion of the heavens and the earth and what is between them:[2] — then let them ascend into the causes![3]
11 Some force is thereupon[1] defeated among the parties.[2]
12 The people of Noah denied before them, and ʿĀd, and Pharaoh,[1] the Lord of Stakes,
13 And Thamūd, and the people of Lot, and the companions of the woods[1] — those were the parties —
14 Each only denied the messengers, so My retribution became binding.[1]
15 And these[1] look only for one Blast; it has no delay.
16 And they say: "Our Lord: hasten Thou for us our lot before the Day of Reckoning!"[1]
17 Be thou patient over what they say[...]
(38:1-17)

Thus, there can be no doubt but that Muḥammad addressed the ruling elites of his time. The question of why this single core component of the protocol, while evident, should be muted is addressed towards the end of the present chapter.

22. Appeals to God.

109 And if they turn away, say thou: "I have proclaimed to you all alike;[1] and I know not whether near or far is what you are promised.
110 "He knows what is public of speech, and He knows what you conceal.
111 "And I know not; it might be a means of denial[1] for you and enjoyment for a time."
112 Say thou:[1] "My Lord: judge Thou with justice.[2] And our Lord is the Almighty,[3] the one whose aid is sought against what you describe."[4]
(21:109-112)

23. Warns of punishment.

12 Say thou to those who ignore warning:[1] "You will be defeated, and gathered into Gehenna; and evil is the resting-place."
(3:12)

44 And warn thou mankind of a day the punishment will come upon them, and those who did wrong will say: "Our Lord: delay Thou us for a short term: we will respond to Thy call and follow the messengers." — "Did you not swear before that there would be no end for you?

(14:44)

39 And warn thou them of the Day of Regret, when the matter will be concluded; but they are in heedlessness, and they do not believe.[1]
40 We will inherit[1] the earth and whoso is thereon, and to Us will they be returned.
(19:39-40)

18 And warn thou them of the Day of the Drawing Near,[1] when the hearts will choke[2] in the throats:[3] — No loyal friend for the wrongdoers![4] No intercessor who is obeyed!
19 He knows the treachery of the eyes and what the breasts conceal.
20 And God decides in justice.[1] And those to whom they call besides[2] Him decide not anything; God, He is the Hearer, the Seeing.
(40:18-20)

13 Then if they turn away, say thou: "I warn you of a thunderbolt like the thunderbolt of ʿĀd and Thamūd,"
(41:13)

24. Anticipates (punishment of) a "tremendous day".

12 Say thou: "To whom belongs what is in the heavens and the earth?" Say thou: "To God." He has prescribed upon Himself mercy;[1] (He will bring you all together to the Day of Resurrection whereof there is no doubt; those who have lost their souls: they do not believe.[2]
13 And to Him belongs what rests in the night and the day; and He is the Hearing, the Knowing.
14 Say thou: "Is it other than God I am to take as ally — the Creator of the Heavens and the Earth, and who feeds but is not fed?" Say thou: "I have been commanded to be first among those who submit"; and: "Be thou not among the idolaters."[1]
15 Say thou: "I fear, if I should oppose my Lord, the punishment of a tremendous day.")
16 From whom it is averted, that day, He will have had mercy[1] upon him; and that is the clear achievement.[2]
(6:12-16)

15 And when Our proofs[1] are recited to them as clear signs, those who look not for the meeting with Us say: "Bring thou a Qur'an[2] other than this; or change thou it."[3] Say thou: "It is not for me to change it of my own accord.[4] I follow only what is revealed[5] to me. I fear, if I should disobey my Lord, the punishment of a tremendous day."
(10:15)

13 Say thou: "I fear, if I should disobey my Lord, the punishment of a tremendous day."
(39:13)

25. Advances reasoned arguments.

11 Say thou: "Travel in the earth, then see how was the final outcome of the deniers."
(6:11)

12 Say thou: "To whom belongs what is in the heavens and the earth?" Say thou: "To God." He has prescribed upon Himself mercy;[1] (He will bring you all together to the Day of Resurrection whereof there is no doubt; those who have lost their souls: they do not believe.[2]
13 And to Him belongs what rests in the night and the day; and He is the Hearing, the Knowing.
14 Say thou: "Is it other than God I am to take as ally — the Creator of the Heavens and the Earth, and who feeds but is not fed?" Say thou: "I have been commanded to be first among those who submit"; and: "Be thou not among the idolaters."[1]
(6:12-14)

40 Say thou: "Have you considered:[1] if the punishment of God comes upon you, or the Hour comes upon you, will you call to other than God, if you be truthful?"[2]
(6:40)

46 Say thou: "Have you considered:[1] if God takes away your hearing and your sight and seals your hearts, who is the god save God who will restore it to you?" See thou how We expound the proofs;[2] then they turn away.
47 Say thou: "Have you considered:[1] if the punishment of God come to you unexpectedly or with warning,[2] will there be destroyed save the wrongdoing[3] people?"
(6:46-47)

63 Say thou: "Who delivers you from the darknesses of the land and the sea? You call to Him humbly and in secret: 'If He delivers us from this, we will be among the grateful.'"
64 Say thou: "God delivers you from it and from every[1] distress; then you ascribe a partnership."[2]
65 Say thou: "He is the one able to send punishment upon you from above you or from beneath your feet,[1] or to confound you through sects and let some of you taste the might of others." See thou how We expound the proofs,[2] that they might understand,
66 But thy people have denied it when it is the truth.[1] Say thou: "I am not a guardian over you."
(6:63-66)

164 Say thou: "Is it other than God I should desire as Lord when He is Lord of all things?" And every soul earns not save for itself, and no bearer bears the burden of another; then to your Lord is your return, and He will inform you of that wherein you differed.
(6:164)

52 Say thou: "Have you considered:[1] if it[2] is from God, then you denied it — who is further astray than one who is in extreme schism?"
(41:52)

The revelation given to Muḥammad comprises in toto a collection of closely reasoned arguments, of which we have provided here merely a selection.

26. States that he is nothing more than a mortal.

90 And they say: "We will not believe thee until thou cause a spring to gush forth from the earth for us,
91 "Or thou have a garden of date-palms and grapevines, and thou cause rivers to gush forth in the midst thereof abundantly,[1]
92 "Or thou cause the sky to fall — as thou hast claimed — upon us in pieces, or thou bring God and the angels before us face to face,[1]
93 "Or thou have a house of finery,[1] or thou ascend into the sky; and we will not believe thy ascension until thou bring down upon us a writ[2] we may read."[3] Say thou: "Glory[4] be to my Lord![5] Am I anything save a mortal messenger!"
(17:90-93)

110 Say thou: "I am only a mortal like you. It is revealed[1] to me that your God is One God. So whoso looks to the meeting with his Lord, let him do works[2] of righteousness, and ascribe not a partnership[3] in the service of his Lord to anyone."[4]
(18:110)

6 Say thou: "I am only a mortal like you. It is revealed[1] to me that your God is One God. So take a straight path to Him, and ask forgiveness of Him!" And woe to the idolaters:[2]
7 Those who render not the purity,[1] and of the Hereafter they are deniers!
(41:6-7)

27. States that God only can provide the authority requested.

35 If[1] We have sent down upon them an authority:[2] then it speaks of that to which they ascribe a partnership[...].[3]
(30:35)

156 If[1] you have a clear authority,[2]
157 Then bring your writ,[1] if you be truthful.[2]
(37:156-157)

38 Or if[1] they have a stairway on which they can listen in:[2] — then let their listener come with a clear authority.[3]
(52:38)

Each of the statements above features what is described in my broader work[37] as the hanging 'am'. This is a rhetorical device by which certain claims are dealt with across the Qur'anic text. In each of the segments above the import is that those addressed are dealing deceitfully and that it is God only who has the power to provide the authority in each case.

28. Presents a clear notification.

22 Say thou: "None will grant me protection against God, nor will I find, besides[1] Him, a refuge
23 "Save notification from God and His messages." And whoso opposes God and His messenger, for him is the fire of Gehenna; they abiding eternally therein forever.
(72:22-23)

92 And obey God and obey the Messenger,[1] and beware;[2] but if you turn away, then know that upon Our messenger is only the clear notification.
(5:92)

99 Upon the Messenger is only the notification; and God knows what you reveal and what you conceal.
(5:99)

40 And whether We show thee part of what We promise them, or We take thee, but upon thee is the notification; and upon Us is the reckoning.
(13:40)

52 This[1] is a notification[2] to mankind, that[3] they be warned thereby, and that they might know that He is but One God, and that those of insight might take heed.
(14:52)

29. Bears glad tidings and warning.

1 alif lām rā[1] A Writ[2] the proofs[3] whereof are fortified,[4] then set out and detailed,[5] from One wise and aware:
2 "Serve not save God"; I am to you from Him a warner and a bearer of glad tidings.
3 And: "Ask forgiveness of your Lord; then turn to Him, He will cause you to enjoy a fair provision to a stated term; and He will give every bountiful one his bounty;[1] but if you turn away, I fear for you the punishment of a great day;
4 "Unto God is your return; and He is over all things powerful."
(11:1-4)

30. Places his affair entirely in the hands of God.

129 Then if they turn away, say thou: "God is sufficient for me; there is no god save He.[1] In Him have I placed my trust, and He is Lord of the Great Throne."
(9:129)

9 If[1] they have taken allies besides[2] Him:[3] then God, He is the Ally, and He gives life to the dead, and He is over all things powerful.
10 And that wherein you differ in anything, the judgment thereof is to God: "That is God, my Lord; in whom I place my trust, and to whom I turn."
(42:9-10)

30 Thus have We sent thee among a community — communities have passed away before it — that thou recite to them what We have revealed[1] to thee; but they deny the Almighty.[2] Say thou: "He is my Lord: — there is no god save He[3] — in Him have I placed my trust, and to Him is my return."
(13:30)

31. Uses the appeal: "O my people:".

135 Say thou: "O my people: work according to your power[1] — I am working; and you will come to know for whom is the final outcome of the Abode; the wrongdoers[2] are not successful."
(6:135)

39 Say thou: "O my people: work according to your power[1] — I am working; and you will come to know
40 "To whom there comes a punishment that disgraces him, and upon whom there descends a lasting punishment."
(39:39-40)

Muḥammad is instructed to pronounce the key phrase "O my people" twice in the Qur'an, and it comes in the context of a general challenge, and disavowal of his audience in expectation of punishment at the hand of God. In both cases it leads into a formula we recognise from our previous examination of the protocol: "I am working".[38]

We met this formula in Segment 2 of Chapter 10 where it comprises 11:84-95; that description of Shuʿayb's mission to the people of Madyan concludes with the following:

93 And: "O my people: work according to your power[1] — I am working; you will come to know to whom comes a punishment that disgraces him, and who is a liar. And watch — I am with you watching."
94 And when Our command came, We saved Shuʿayb and those who heeded warning[1] with him, by mercy from Us. And the Blast seized those who were doing wrong; and morning found them lying prone in their homes
95 As though they had never lived[1] therein — so away with Madyan,[2] even as Thamūd was taken away![3]
(11:93-95)

Thus, not only did Muḥammad fulfil this component of the God protocol in expectation of punishment, his implementation of the required expression of affiliation also unambiguously references a scenario in which God's destruction followed as a consequence.

The collocation "I am working"[39] occurs at no other place in the Qur'an.

38 Arabic: innī ʿāmilun.

39 Arabic: innī ʿāmilun.

Non-core actions of a messenger of warning

We have established above both that Muḥammad fulfilled all core actions required of a messenger of warning for the punishments of God to become binding under the protocol, and that the people to which he delivered that warning denied and must in consequence have been destroyed.

In previous chapters we identified also actions undertaken by individual warners which were not made general principles either by means of generic narrative summaries or by dint of inclusion in all explicit cases — which is what we see with the expression of affiliation in "O my people".

We list below all actions by warners which fall into the group which we are calling non-core actions,[40] following which we provide samples from the Qur'anic text in which actions attached to Muḥammad or requirements made of him replicate or correspond with each component. Here again on most counts we are providing a sampling of a larger set. Comments are provided only where required.

1. Presents a punishment which is contingent on response by hearers.
2. Exhorts the hearers to obey him.
3. States that he is a warner or messenger.
4. Cites the favours of God.
5. Accuses the hearers of invention of falsity.
6. Presents a proof.
7. States that he seeks no reward from those to whom he is conveying warning.
8. Addresses subject of those who follow him.
9. States that destruction is the decision of God alone.
10. Responds to derision or accusation.
11. Stresses the message given by God.
12. Challenges the unbelievers to do their worst.
13. Appeals to his people to wait as he is waiting.
14. Cites previously destroyed peoples.
15. States that his task is to convey message.

1. Presents a punishment which is contingent on response by hearers.

278 O you who heed warning:[1] be in prudent fear[2] of God; and give up what remains of usury, if you be believers.[2]
279 And if you do not, then be informed of war from God and His messenger. But if you repent, then to you are your principal sums;[1] doing no wrong, you will not be wronged.
(2:278-279)

73 O Prophet: strive thou[1] against the atheists[2] and the waverers,[3] and be thou harsh with them; and their shelter is Gehenna; and evil is the journey's end.

40 The dataset is represented visually in the Table entitled Actions of Warner at the end of this book.

74 They swear by God that they did not say — when they did say — the word of denial, and denied after their submission.[1] And they purposed what they have not reached; and they resented only that God and His messenger enriched them of His[2] bounty. Then if they repent, it will be better for them; and if they turn away, God will punish them with a painful punishment in the World and the Hereafter; and they will not have in the earth any ally or helper.
(9:73-74)

2. Exhorts the hearers to obey him.

31 Say thou: "If you love God, follow me;[1] God will love you, and forgive you your transgressions";[2] and God is forgiving and merciful.
32 Say thou: "Obey God and the Messenger."[1] Then if they turn away: God loves not the false claimers of guidance.[2]
(3:31-32)

The Qur'an contains multiple instances where the believer is told to obey the Messenger;[41] we have provided only a sample here.

3. States that he is a warner or messenger.

89 And say thou: "I am the clear warner:[1]
(15:89)

158 (Say thou: "O mankind: I am the messenger of God to you all together — to whom belongs the dominion of the heavens and the earth. There is no god save He.[1] He gives life and He gives death." So believe in[2] God and His messenger, the unschooled[3] prophet, who believes in[4] God and His words; and follow him,[5] that you might be guided.)
(7:158)

49 Say thou: "O mankind: I am only a clear warner to you."
(22:49)

65 Say thou: "I am only a warner; and there is no god save God, the One, the Vanquishing,
66 "Lord of the Heavens and the Earth and what is between them,[1] the Exalted in Might, the Forgiver."
67 Say thou: "It is a tremendous report
68 "From which you turn away.
69 "I had no knowledge of the exalted assembly[1] when they disputed,
70 "It is only revealed[1] to me, that I am a clear warner."[2]
(38:65-70)

41 This imperative has acquired an imaginative posthumous application based upon an entirely different literature in the hands of the Traditionalist, but the fact is, as we have seen, a number of previous messengers of warning called people to obey their word. No one, including the Traditionalist, applies to those instances the same dynamic he insists upon with regard to Muḥammad despite the Qur'an's statement that believers make no distinction between messengers (see 2:285).

4. Cites the favours of God.

26 Say thou: "O God, Master of Dominion: Thou givest dominion to whom Thou wilt, and Thou removest dominion from whom Thou wilt; Thou exaltest whom Thou wilt, and Thou abasest whom Thou wilt. In Thy hand is good; Thou art over all things powerful.
27 "Thou makest the night enter into the day, and Thou makest the day enter into the night; and Thou bringest forth the living from the dead, and Thou bringest forth the dead from the living. And Thou givest provision to whom Thou wilt without reckoning."[1]
(3:26-27)

1 The Almighty:[1]
2 Taught the Qur'an,[1]
3 Created man,
4 Taught him the clear statement.[1]
5 The sun and the moon are in calculation,[1]
6 And the star and the tree submit.[1]
7 And the heaven — He raised it (and He set up the balance,
8 That you transgress not in the balance;
9 And uphold the weight with equity,[1] and cause not loss to the balance.)
10 And the earth — He set it out for living creatures,
11 Therein is fruit, and date-palms with sheaths,
12 And the grain with husks, and fragrant herbs.
13 Then which of the blessings of your[1] Lord will you[2] deny?
(55:1-13)

5. Accuses the hearers of invention of falsity.

148 Those who ascribe a partnership[1] will say: "Had God willed, we would not have ascribed a partnership,[2] nor would our fathers, nor would we have made anything unlawful." Thus did those who were before them deny until they tasted Our might. Say thou: "Have you any knowledge to bring forth for us? You follow only assumption, and are only guessing."
149 Say thou: "Then to God belongs the conclusive[1] argument:[2] had He willed, He would have guided you all together."
150 Say thou: "Bring your witnesses who bear witness that God has made this unlawful." Then if they bear witness, bear thou not witness with them; and follow thou not the vain desires[1] of those who deny Our proofs[2] and those who believe not in[3] the Hereafter; and they ascribe equals to their Lord.
(6:148-150)

28 And when they[1] commit sexual immorality,[2] they say: "We found our fathers doing it,"[3] and: "God enjoined it upon us."[4] Say thou: "God enjoins not sexual immorality;[5] do you ascribe to God what you know not?"
(7:28)

59 Say thou: "Have you seen[1] what God has sent down for you of provision, and you have made thereof lawful and unlawful?" Say thou: "Did God give you leave, or is it about God that you invent?"

(10:59)

69 Say thou: "Those who invent lies[1] about God will not succeed."
(10:69)

6. Presents a proof.

15 And when Our proofs[1] are recited to them as clear signs, those who look not for the meeting with Us say: "Bring thou a Qur'an[2] other than this; or change thou it."[3] Say thou: "It is not for me to change it of my own accord.[4] I follow only what is revealed[5] to me. I fear, if I should disobey my Lord, the punishment of a tremendous day."
(10:15)

37 And this Qur'an[1] is not such as could be invented by other than[2] God; but it is a confirmation of what is before it,[3] and an exposition of the Writ about which there is no doubt,[4] from the Lord of All Creation.
38 If[1] they say: "He invented it,"[2] say thou: "Bring a sūrah[3] the like thereof; and call whom you can[4] besides[5] God, if you be truthful."[6]
(10:37-38)

The reader may engage with a fully consistent presentation of al ḥurūf al muqaṭṭaʿāt in my work The Mysterious Letters of the Qur'an: A Complete Solution in support of the segment above.

7. States that he seeks no reward from those to whom he is conveying warning.

90 Those are they whom God has guided; so follow thou[1] their guidance. Say thou: "I ask of you for it no reward; it is only a reminder to all mankind."
(6:90)

57 Say thou: "I ask not of you for it any reward save that whoso wills might take to his Lord a path."
(25:57)

47 Say thou: "What I might[1] have asked of you of reward, it is yours. My reward is only upon[2] God; and He is witness over all things."
(34:47)

86 Say thou: "I ask of you for it no reward; and I am not of those who claim things falsely.[1]
87 "It is only a reminder[1] to all mankind,
88 "And you will come to know its report after a time."
(38:86-88)

23 That of which God gives glad tidings to His servants who heed warning[1] and do righteous deeds. Say thou: "I ask of you for it no reward save love among kin." And whoso commits a good deed, We will increase him in good therein; God is forgiving and appreciative.
(42:23)

8. Addresses subject of those who follow him.

20 And if they argue with thee, then say thou: "I have submitted my face[1] to God, as have[2] those who follow me." And say thou to those given[3] the Writ[4] and to the unschooled:[5] "Have you submitted?"[6] And if they have submitted, then are they guided; but if they turn away, then upon thee is only the notification; and God sees the servants.[7]
(3:20)

9. States that destruction is the decision of God alone.

57 Say thou: "I am upon clear evidence from my Lord, and you have denied it. I have not that which you seek to hasten;[1] judgment is but for God. He relates the truth,[2] and He is the best to decide."[3]
58 Say thou: "Had I what you seek to hasten, the matter would have been concluded between me and you; and God best knows the wrongdoers."[1]
(6:57-58)

187 They ask thee concerning the Hour: "When is its arrival?"[1] Say thou: "Knowledge thereof is but with my Lord; none reveals its time save He. It weighs heavily in the heavens and the earth; it comes not upon you save unexpectedly." They ask thee as though thou wert privy[2] thereto; say thou: "Knowledge thereof is but with God";[3] but most men know not.
(7:187)

10. Responds to derision or accusation.

43 And those who ignore warning[1] say: "Thou art not an emissary." Say thou: "Sufficient is God as witness between me and you; and[2] whoso has knowledge of the Writ[...]."[3]
(13:43)

50 Say thou: "If I go astray, I but go astray against my soul; and if I am guided, it is because of what my Lord reveals[1] to me. He is hearer and near."
(34:50)

29 Say thou: "He is the Almighty.[1] We believe in[2] Him, and in Him we place our trust. And you will come to know who is in manifest error."
(67:29)

11. Stresses the message given by God.

108 Say thou: "O mankind: the truth[1] has come to you from your Lord; and whoso is guided, he is but guided for his soul; and whoso strays, he but strays against it; and I am not a guardian over you."

(10:108)

45 Say thou: "I but warn you by revelation."[1] But the deaf hear not the call when they are warned.
(21:45)

12. Challenges the unbelievers to do their worst.

194 Those to whom you[1] call other than[2] God are servants like you;[3] so call them,[4] and let them respond[5] to you if you[6] be truthful.
195 Have they[1] legs wherewith they walk?[2] Or have they hands wherewith they hold?[3] Or have they eyes wherewith they see?[4] Or have they ears wherewith they hear?[5] Say thou: "Call your partners;[6] then scheme against me, and grant me no respite.
196 "My ally is God[1] who sent down the Writ;[2] and He is an ally to the righteous.[3]
197 "And those to whom you[1] call other than[2] Him are unable to help you,[3] nor do they[4] help themselves."
(7:194-197)

135 Say thou: "O my people: work according to your power[1] — I am working; and you will come to know for whom is the final outcome of the Abode; the wrongdoers[2] are not successful."
(6:135)

39 Say thou: "O my people: work according to your power[1] — I am working; and you will come to know
40 "To whom there comes a punishment that disgraces him, and upon whom there descends a lasting punishment."
(39:39-40)

(11:121-122)

14. Cites previously destroyed peoples.

38 Say thou to those who ignore warning:[1] if they cease, what is past will be forgiven them; but if they return, then the practice[2] of the former peoples has gone before.[3]
(8:38)

110 "He knows what is public of speech, and He knows what you conceal.
111 "And I know not; it might be a means of denial[1] for you and enjoyment for a time."
(21:109-111)

54 Say thou: "Obey God and obey the Messenger." Then if you turn away, then upon him is what he has been given to bear, and upon you is what you have been given to bear. And if you obey him,[1] you will be guided. And upon the Messenger is only the clear notification,
(24:54)

Thus, it is clear that in addition to all core actions, we find explicit correspondences in the case of Muḥammad with all non-core actions also. The sole feature among all core and non-core actions which, while evident, is muted is his address to the ruling elite of that time, and in what follows we will consider the reason for that.

Muḥammad's mission to all mankind

We should preface this part of our analysis by reminding the reader of the oft-stated fact that Muḥammad, unlike any of the men who preceded him in the sequence of warners and in whose tradition he was following, had a further mission — one to mankind "all together".

The evidence is clear that he fulfilled his mission of warning to his own people and, though analysis of the details is beyond the purview of this study, we presented at least an indication above that he was successful in those missions which followed that of warning also:

1 When the help of God and the victory come,
2 And thou seest mankind enter the doctrine[1] of God in crowds,
3 Give thou glory[1] with the praise of thy Lord, and ask thou forgiveness of Him; He is accepting of repentance.

(110:1-3)

Whatever the victories and successes achieved in this latter portion of his mission to people of his own era and general location were, the witness of the Qur'an is that they would not remain true to the source of his doctrine. In one of the very limited number of prophecies of such type it contains, the Qur'an has Muḥammad saying the following on the Day of Judgment:[42]

30 And the Messenger will say: "O my Lord: my people took this Qur'an[1] as a thing abandoned."[2]
(25:30)

We noted also in our opening comments to this chapter the later supplanting of the Qur'an by those who present today as the natural spokesmen for the revelation Muḥammad brought.

If completion of Muḥammad's second, universal mission of warning under the protocol as detailed in the Qur'an at this time is to result in a level of destruction which either equates with or is tantamount to the Hour as we considered above, then verse 25:30 strongly implies that one should not look to the Arabic-speaking Islamic world for either an understanding of its features or for its implementation.

We continue now with our principal interest in this section: the nature of Muḥammad's unique mission to all mankind.

158 (Say thou: "O mankind: I am the messenger of God to you all together — to whom belongs the dominion of the heavens and the earth. There is no god save He.[1] He gives life and He gives death." So believe in[2] God and His messenger, the unschooled[3] prophet, who believes in[4] God and His words; and follow him,[5] that you might be guided.)
(7:158)

I will now state in summary form a series of points which follow from what we have covered in this chapter: it is a fact that Muḥammad's mission to all mankind remains to be realised; it is a fact that Muḥammad is dead; it is a fact that the Hour is not yet come upon us; it is a fact that Muḥammad's own people will have abandoned the Qur'an before the Day of Judgment; it is a fact that what God gave Muḥammad by revelation — the Qur'an — remains with us; it is a fact that all messengers of warning prior to Muḥammad for whom we have record in the Qur'an began by warning their respective peoples, and we have good reason to believe Muḥammad began his own mission on the same basis:[43]

42 And it is prodigiously fulfilled: those who most vociferously assert their racial and linguistic proximity to Muḥammad have, in the aggregate, been foremost in supplanting the revelation he brought with other writings.

43 I wish to add here a further point without intruding upon the main line of argument above, that the lack of a logical and comprehensive understanding of the purpose of the disjointed letters which preface a number of sūrahs in the Qur'an and called al ḥurūf al muqaṭṭ'āt in Arabic and generally referred to as the mysterious letters in English, implies also — at least to my mind — an impediment to the Hour, for how could God have given in the final revelation to mankind what would forever frustrate human comprehension? While the Traditionalist's view of these letters, in summary, is that they cannot be understood and any attempt to understand them is at best futile and at worst blasphemous, we are able now to point to detailed and consistent explanation of the same on the basis of the Qur'anic text; see my work The Mysterious Letters of the Qur'an: A Complete Solution.

1 O thou, one covering himself:
2 Arise thou and warn thou!
3 And magnify thou thy Lord,
4 And purify thou thy garments,
5 And forsake thou[1] defilement,
6 And show thou not favour seeking gain,
7 And to thy Lord be thou patient.
(74:1-7)

I suggest the following conclusions follow from the above: that implementation of Muḥammad's universal mission is a prerequisite for the advent of the Hour; that all tools necessary for the implementation of Muḥammad's universal mission are found within the Qur'an; that implementation of this mission presupposes action by those living; and that the point of departure for this mission is execution of that protocol with which he and all messengers of warning before him began.

We list now the milieux required for a universal implementation of the God protocol to be relevant and legitimate:

- A world which operates as a single, unified system or community
- Exercise of power over that unified community by a single ruling elite or one world government
- Rejection of God and the promotion of moral turpitude as consistent and systemic features of that single, unified organ of worldwide governance
- The functional adoption of a single dominant language understood widely across that unified community, particularly among the elites
- Universal access to the means by which notification of warning to that unified world community may be published
- A context in which it is possible correctly to address the single ruling elite of that one world government by means of the standard expression of affiliation "O my people"

We note also that, given the Messenger's lament on the Day of Judgment cited at 25:30 above, if it be the case that implementation of the protocol on a universal basis is to operate either to initiate the Hour or to act by some means as its precursor, there exists also the expectation of a circumstance in which Muḥammad's own people have widely taken the Qur'an "as a thing abandoned".

None of these circumstances existed in the lifetime of the Prophet. But they certainly all exist today.

Additionally, one infers that, whereas Muḥammad's mission to his own people under the protocol resulted an event of destruction with limited geographical impact, his mission to mankind "all together" presupposes an outcome of universal proportions.

Finally, given that Muḥammad was uniquely tasked with a mission to mankind "all together", logic requires that the starting point in this case be the same as in the first: to warn.

And this brings us at last to consider the logical significance of the fact we noted above that, while Muḥammad's address to the ruling elites of his day is clearly established in the text, it is muted; made implicit rather than explicit.

On the basis of the principles we have established to comprise that mechanism we are calling the God protocol as well as on the basis of the extraordinary correspondence between those principles and the Qur'anic record of Muḥammad's own actions and message, the muting of Muḥammad's address to the ruling elite cannot be seen as a minor solecism or break in etiquette. Rather, it can only be a signpost: it signals the requirement for an explicit application of the same core action, one to be supplied at a time when Muḥammad's second, universal mission might be fulfilled.

This point brings us now to consider again the example provided by Moses.[44]

We will recall that Moses was unable within the legal framework of the God protocol to say "O my people" to Pharaoh and his community despite the fact that he met the requirements of the protocol in all other points, this single office being supplied by a 'believing man' of the people of Pharaoh.

The same principle holds here, though with a different emphasis: while all parts of the God protocol are found within the revelation brought by Muḥammad — the Qur'an — there is a single requirement he is unable to fulfil in his mission to mankind "all together". Just as Moses could not address Pharaoh and his ruling elite on the basis of tribal or racial affiliation, Muḥammad could not address the elites of a unified world community on such a basis, not only because one did not exist at that time he lived, but also because he did not belong to it; he belonged to the society of 7th century Arabia.

But as we indicated above, a single, unified world community exists today. And that single, unified community has, de facto, a single ruling elite. And that elite actively promotes every sin characteristic of the former peoples destroyed under the God protocol for which we have a record in the Qur'an. And the language of this single, unified world community is not Arabic. It is English. Moreover, all inhabitants of the earth have been made, de facto, citizens of this one-world system.

Therefore, unlike at any time in history, a single 'believing man' may correctly address the ruling elite of this one-world system directly, and legitimately say to it "O my people," and thereby supply the single component required by the God protocol — that expression of affiliation we are calling here the detonating statement — in order to complete the requirements of Muḥammad's second mission: his mission to deliver the standard message of warning under the protocol to mankind "all together".

44 See Chapter 11.

And it is the format of the detonating statement required to meet this single deficiency which forms the subject of the next chapter.

Chapter Thirteen

The detonating statement

13. The detonating statement

Why complete the protocol for Muḥammad's universal mission?

Before we present the format of that single component required to detonate as it were Muḥammad's mission of warning to all mankind that we find in the Qur'an, it is as well to remind the reader of our principal motivation.

It is this: by leveraging the principle of manufactured culpability that they apply to us, to confront the worldwide, tyrannical, miscreant ruling elites — men bent on imposing upon those they rule every deviancy and mode of degeneracy (moral, physical, spiritual, sexual, social, economic) — on the basis of a legal mechanism which renders them accountable before God.

Moreover, this project is grounded in solemn recognition of the fact that, absent cataclysmic intervention by God, the present unified elite class will be successful in extending the soft tyranny they have so methodically implemented across the board into an openly hard tyranny, one so efficient that effective resistance to it will be not only impossible but unthinkable. Such a goal is among their objectives; and to hope that they will be anything other than entirely successful in achieving it, absent the type of intervention we have identified here, is to choose to disregard the experience of centuries.

At the same time, we are concerned to catch that window of opportunity in which it is possible to publish this work and make it universally available and in which it is possible to target the elites on a basis which makes them culpable under the protocol, since that window is rapidly closing.

This is why one must act, and act now.

I will not be alone in wishing things were different. But neither the number of people who share one's sentiments nor the extent to which people may wish a thing is our concern here.[1] The dominant reason I have committed my life and resources full-time over the last seven years to 1 We may make mention here of the much-vaunted mantra in vogue among those who possess understanding to some degree of what the broader game plan is among the elites to the effect that a solution will present itself "when enough people wake up". People who have managed to comprehend — often to a high degree of sophistication — the nature of the matrix of tyranny in which we live state this obvious falsehood repeatedly and with great conviction. It serves with depressing regularity as both the conclusion and the rallying call of whatever arguments lead up to it and one supposes that, in the absence of any more compelling solution, they keep hitting this note because they can conceive of no other. The lack of any apparent concomitant awareness on the part of such well-meaning and otherwise well-informed people that this stock solution is itself a function of a worldview given to them by the elites themselves is regrettable. The idea that greater numbers necessarily imply either greater veracity or increased proximity to a solution of any kind is manifestly erroneous, and known to be so by those who rule. It is always erroneous; and not only is it so according to the principles of Realpolitik, it is erroneous also from the Qur'anic perspective.

this project,[2] one which — if the Qur'an be what it claims — must, in the event of denial, trigger the end of our civilisation and may even initiate the eschaton,[3] is that the only alternative is so very much worse.

We will now summarise the foundation from which we will proceed.

We have understood that not only was Muḥammad sent to the people of his own time and place after the manner of those messengers of warning who preceded him, but that he was also both the 'seal of the prophets' (that is, that no prophet will come after him) and uniquely tasked as "the messenger of God to mankind all together".

The Qur'an establishes for Muḥammad a record of words and actions which meets in every point — often copiously so — the requirements of that mechanism of warning which, in the event of denial, results in annihilation in an act of God. We recognise that destruction in the case of his original mission must have resulted, and have demonstrated precedence for the elision of that fact from the narrative by means of textual features associated with Abraham.

We gained an appreciation on the platform of our review of the preceding messengers of warning, from generic narrative statements, from our consideration of the life of the young Moses, and from the format by which delivery of the statement of affiliation was supplied in the case of Moses' mission of warning to the house of Pharaoh, both that an address to the ruling elite must be made by one who can rightly appeal publicly on a basis of affiliation and, importantly, that this component may legitimately be provided by another: a man possessed of the right to express himself in such terms.

While we know that the record of Muḥammad's career preserved in the Qur'an satisfies the requirements of the protocol in all points for his first mission, there remains a single deficiency as treats of his second, universal mission: Muḥammad simply could not legitimately address a single, unified world community in terms of affiliation and thus supply this requisite part of the protocol in this case.

We are aware of the features which attach to the single, worldwide ruling elite of our time and have summarised them previously in our study.

We know also that the protocol requires an address to the ruling elite and have noted that, while such an address is implicit in the case of Muḥammad's mission to his own time and place, its presentation is muted; certainly present, but implied rather than explicit. On the basis of the extraordinary correspondence in the record of the Qur'an which treats of Muḥammad in terms of both core and non-core actions by warners under the protocol, we have understood the muting of his own address to the ruling elites of his time to signal an implied requirement to address the ruling elites of a later time as the means of supplying the sole component required to fulfil his second, universal mission of warning.

2 Comprising mainly in terms of time investment The Qur'an: A Complete Revelation, which is the legal (as it were) and intellectual foundation upon which the present work stands.

3 This facet of our presentation is addressed further at the end of the present chapter.

And we have no less a precedent than Moses in his mission to Pharaoh as a case in which this single, vital component is supplied by another. Moreover, as we have noted, it is supplied not by one possessed of exalted rank; rather, it is supplied by one identified merely as a 'believing man'.

In what follows in this chapter we consider what form that sole component — the detonating statement — required to close the circuit of Muḥammad's universal mission of warning to mankind should take, and in the final chapter we will consider the logistics of its delivery to the ruling elites of our day.

The speech of the believing man

We have seen in summary that Muḥammad is excluded from issuing a statement of affiliation to a unified, worldwide ruling elite for reasons similar in part to why Moses was not able to issue a statement of affiliation to the people of Pharaoh. Given this correlation, it is natural that we should look to the 'believing man' who supplied that part of the protocol to Pharaoh and his people which Moses himself could not. And it is especially appropriate given that the story of Pharaoh is signposted twice in the Qur'an for particular attention:

> 51 And Pharaoh[1] called to his people, saying: "O my people: is not[2] the dominion of Egypt[3] mine, and these rivers flowing beneath me[4] — do you then not[5] see! —
> 52 "Or am I better than this, who is despised and barely makes himself clear?
> 53 "Oh, that armlets of gold had but[1] been cast upon him! Or angels had but come with him in conjunction!"
> 54 So he swayed[1] his people, and they obeyed him; they were a perfidious[2] people.
> 55 And when they had angered Us, We took vengeance on them and drowned them all together,
> 56 And made them a precedent and an example for those who came later.
> (43:51-56)

> 15 Has there come to thee the account[1] of Moses?
> 16 When his Lord called him in the sacred valley of Ṭuwa:[1]
> 17 "Go thou to Pharaoh;[1] he has transgressed.
> 18 "And say thou: 'Wouldst thou purify thyself,
> 19 "'And that I guide thee to thy Lord, so thou shalt fear?'"
> 20 And he showed him the greatest proof,[1]
> 21 But he denied and opposed.
> 22 Then turned he away in haste,
> 23 And gathered and called,
> 24 And said: "I am your most high Lord."[1]
> 25 So God seized him in exemplary punishment of the latter and the former.[1]
> 26 In that is a lesson for him who fears.
> (79:15-26)

We present again the crucial segment which treats of the 'believing man' below; his explicit statements of affiliation in "O my people" are in bold.

23 And We sent Moses with Our proofs[1] and a clear authority
24 To Pharaoh[1] and Hāmān and Qārūn;[2] they said: "A sorcerer[3] and a liar."
25 And when he brought them the truth[1] from Us, they said: "Kill the sons of those who heed warning[2] with him, and spare their women." But the plan of the false claimers of guidance[3] is only in error.
26 And Pharaoh[1] said: "Let me[2] kill Moses; — and let him call to his Lord — I fear that he will change your doctrine,[3] or will cause corruption in the land."
27 And Moses said: "I seek refuge in my Lord and your Lord from every proud one who believes not in[1] the Day of Reckoning."
28 And there said a believing man[1] of the house of Pharaoh[2] who concealed his faith: "Would you kill a man because he says: 'My Lord is God,' and has brought you clear signs from your Lord? If he is lying, then upon him is his lie; and if he is truthful, some of what he promises you will befall you. God guides not him who is a committer of excess and a liar.
29 "O my people: yours is the dominion this day, you being dominant[1] in the land, but who will help us against the wrath of God if it comes to us?" Pharaoh[2] said: "I only show you what I see, and I only guide you to the path of rectitude."
30 And he who heeded warning[1] said: "O my people: I fear for you the like of the day of the parties,
31 "The like of the case[1] of the people of Noah, and ʿĀd, and Thamūd, and those after them; and God desires not injustice for the servants.[2]
32 "And O my people: I fear for you the Day of Calling,
33 "The day you will turn and go[1] having not against God any defender; and whom God sends astray, for him there is no guide.
34 "And Joseph brought you the clear signs before, but you ceased not to be in doubt about what he brought. When[1] he had perished, you said: 'Never will God raise up after him a messenger.' Thus does God lead astray him who is a committer of excess and a baseless sceptic:[2]
35 "Those who dispute concerning the proofs[1] of God without an authority having come to them; great is the hatred in the sight of God and in the sight of those who heed warning;[2] thus does God seal every proud and tyrannical heart."
36 And Pharaoh[1] said: "O Hāmān: build thou for me a tower, that I might reach the causes,[2]
37 — The causes[1] of the heavens — that I might look upon the God of Moses; but I think him a liar." And thus was made fair to Pharaoh[2] the evil of his deed, and he was turned away from[3] the path; and the plan of Pharaoh[4] was only in ruin.
38 And he who heeded warning[1] said: "O my people: follow me; I will guide you to the path of rectitude.
39 "O my people: the life of this world is but an enjoyment; and the Hereafter — that is the house of the fixed lodging.
40 "Whoso does evil[1] will not be rewarded save with the like thereof; and whoso works righteousness — whether male or female — and is a believer:[2] those enter the Garden, wherein they are given provision without reckoning.[3]
41 "And O my people: how is it that I invite you to deliverance, and you invite me to the Fire?
42 "You call me to deny God, and to ascribe a partnership[1] to Him with that whereof I have no knowledge; and I invite you to the Exalted in Might, the Forgiver.
43 "Without doubt, you but invite me to that[1] to which there is no calling in the World or in the Hereafter; and our return is to God. And the committers of excess will be the companions of the Fire.
44 "And you will remember what I say to you. And I commit my affair to God; God sees the servants."[1]
45 And God protected him from the evil deeds[1] they schemed, and there encompassed the house of Pharaoh[2] an evil punishment.
46 The Fire: they are exposed to it morning and evening; and the day the Hour strikes: "Cause the house of Pharaoh[1] to enter the most severe punishment!"
47 And when they will dispute together in the Fire, the weak will say to those who had waxed proud: "We were your followers; will you avail us something against a portion of the Fire?"
48 Those who had waxed proud will say: "We are all in it; God has judged between the servants."[1]
49 And those in the Fire will say to the keepers of Gehenna: "Call to your Lord, to lighten for us a day of the punishment."
50 They will say: "Came not your messengers to you with the clear signs?" They will say: "Verily."[1] They will say: "Then call!"[2] But the call of the false claimers of guidance[3] is only in error.
(40:23-50)

Before we consider the statements by the 'believing man' himself, we will comment briefly upon the portions of the segment above which do not pertain to his 'O my people' statements under the following headings:

- Pharaoh, Hāmān,[4] and Qārūn[5]

4 A character of the same name is found in the Book of Esther, but has no other correlation. Muhammad Asad provides a comment which, while firmly rooted in the dominant Egypt-Palestine thesis, is interesting: This Haman, who is mentioned several times in the Qur'an as Pharaoh's chief adviser, is not to be confused with the Persian Haman of the Old Testament (The Book of Esther iii ff.). Most probably, the word "Haman" as used in the Qur'an is not a proper name at all but the Arabicized echo of the compound designation Ha-Amen given to every high priest of the Egyptian god Amon. Since at the time in question the cult of Amon was paramount in Egypt, his high priest held a rank second only to that of the reigning Pharaoh. The assumption that the person spoken of in the Qur'an as Haman was indeed the high priest of the cult of Amon is strengthened by Pharaoh's demand (mentioned in verse 38 of this surah as well as in 40:36-37) that Haman erect for him "a lofty tower" from which he could "have a look at [or "ascend to"] the god of Moses": which may be, among other things, an allusion to the hieratic purpose of the great pyramids of Egypt and to the function of the high priest as their chief architect.

5 Whereas Pharaoh provided the military wing of the oligarchy, and Hāmān provided what I would call the component of psychological control for the power structure, Qārūn provided the economic wing of that system of oppression. We find the same components in the power elite of today in somewhat obfuscated forms but comprising the same essential functions. The military component is today a merging of hard and soft weaponry used increasingly against domestic populations; the component of psychological control represented by Hāmān is today predominantly the preserve of what is called science and entertainment, but extends to the management of such soft revolutions as Feminism, and the promotion of other deviant ideologies designed to break down all natural and moral order. The economic component provided by Qārūn is reflected in our day by the economic matrix upon which the broader tyranny is built; it turns on ideology (cf. Hāmān) and is enforced by the Military-Industrial Complex (cf. Pharaoh). The reader may be interested to know that Qārūn was of the people of Moses and so (at least within the framework of the dominant conceptions of the Hebrew scriptures and of history and later naming conventions) a Jew. Qārūn left the land of Pharaoh with the children of Israel, abandoning the eviscerated economy — however, not without making generous provision for himself — and continued his practice of economic oppression amid the changing circumstances. We learn at 28:76 that: 'Qārūn was of the people of Moses, but he oppressed them. And We had given him of treasures that whereof the keys weighed down a company of men endowed with strength'. But while Qārūn escaped the fate of his former master for a short time his end was equally graphic (28:76-82). These three components then — military tyranny, psychological control, and economic dictatorship — supported and expressed by secondary systems of manipulation comprised the power structure of Pharaoh's system just as they comprise the power structure of his archetypal and ideological descendants today.

- The words of Moses
- The 'believing man' in defence of Moses
- The fate of the believing man
- The conclusion of the matter

Pharaoh, Hāmān, and Qārūn

Pharaoh is of particular interest to us since he is, as we have noted, the archetypal tyrant. His power is shown above to derive from deceit, verbal manipulations, sorcery,[6] and naked threats. Thus, in Pharaoh's move to kill Moses we see both a foreshadowing of the same move by the people to whom Muḥammad originally went with his message of warning and an echo of all those tyrants to whom the protocol was delivered before him as established both in explicit verses and by generic narrative summaries.

We note also that Pharaoh did not hold sole power; rather, he was the head of an oligarchy, a ruling cabal with which, though he exercised much influence over it, he had to cooperate.

At 40:24 the oligarchs first accuse Moses of that of which they themselves are guilty: of being "a sorcerer and a liar" — a formulation which we saw in Chapter 12 applied to Muḥammad by the elites of his day at 38:4.

The plan of the oligarchy at 40:25 to kill the males and spare the females is copiously echoed today in the policies of the unified worldwide elites designed to destroy and undermine males of all races while claiming to "spare their women".[7]

Ruling elites comprise men who are both intelligent and understand deeply how power is gained, held, and exercised. Thus, Pharaoh's assessment at 40:26 is entirely correct: had Pharaoh and his people capitulated before Moses, Moses would, doubtless, have changed the doctrine of the land; and we note in this regard that Muḥammad also was uncompromising about the doctrine with which he was sent.[8]

The claim of Pharaoh, as the archetypal tyrant and worker of iniquity, that Moses would cause "corruption in the land" drips with duplicity. The ability to present falsehoods convincingly and without trace of conscience is a baseline requirement for all who would serve an evil system in any position of note, and Pharaoh is a master of this mode of delivery. God requires that men not 'work corruption in the land',[9] and those who contravene that imperative are promised the Fire — which is the end for both Pharaoh and his ilk as well as for those who follow such men.

6 By sorcery we mean the manipulation of the mind in order to gain temporal power over the subject. See comments in the footnote above treating of Hāmān.

7 We expanded on this topic in Chapter 12.

8 Consider for example, 2:193, 3:85, 10:104-106.

9 Consider for example, 7:55-56, 11:116-117, 13:25.

The subject of "the causes" Pharaoh cites at 40:36-37 is a pivotal point.[10] In essence, Pharaoh is here referencing the causes of the Unseen: that Reality which stands behind and underpins all that is evident. However, it is precisely the attempt to obtain access to this realm which defeats the deniers — both Pharaoh, and his contemporary equivalents. There exists a God-given boundary beyond which materialist conceptions cannot pass.

The words of Moses

As we know, the story of Pharaoh is the most extensive narrative in the Qur'an treating of warning, denial, and destruction under that mechanism we are calling the God protocol. We will note that the segment which here treats of Moses, the messenger of God to the children of Israel, wherein he seeks refuge in God from Pharaoh and his ilk finds echoes also in the revelation given to Muḥammad, the messenger of God to mankind "all together"; the Qur'an itself concludes with the following two sūrahs:

1 Say thou: "I seek refuge in the Lord of the Daybreak
2 "From the evil of what He created;
3 "And from the evil of darkness when it gathers;[1]
4 "And from the evil of the blowers on knots;[1]
5 "And from the evil of an envier when he envies."
(113:1-5)

1 Say thou: "I seek refuge in the Lord of mankind,
2 "The King of mankind,
3 "The God of mankind,
4 "From the evil of the retreating[1] whisperer[2]
5 "Who whispers in the breasts of mankind;
6 "From[1] the jinna[2] and mankind."[3]
(114:1-6)[11]

The 'believing man' in defence of Moses

Muḥammad's mission mirrors the points on which the 'believing man' speaks in defence of Moses: Muḥammad proclaimed his Lord to be God,[12] brought "clear signs" in the form of the Qur'an.[13] And the revelation he was given addresses accusations of falsehood in his regard:

10 It is picked up and taken to its conclusion in the very segment we looked at in Chapter 12 wherein Muḥammad's address to the ruling elite of his day is established though found in muted form (38:1-17).

11 The reader may be interested to learn that the word jinna found in the final sentence of sūrah 114 comprises within its meaning those members of the ruling elite who are entirely committed to demonic forces. The reasons for this are found in Article SJC.

12 Consider for example, 1:5, 72:20. One would do well to remember that Pharaoh is not interested in religion in the sense one is accustomed to think of that term today. He is interested in where a man's primary loyalty lies: with him, or with one other than him. The same dynamic is implicit in the elite-owned system of today: one either bows to the idol of Government or one does not.

13 See for example 10:15.

> 3 If[1] they say: "He has invented it,"[2] the truth is:[3] it is the truth[4] from thy Lord, that thou warn a people to whom no warner came before thee, that they might be guided. (32:3)

The fate of the believing man

Verse 40:45 opens with: 'And God protected him from the evil deeds they schemed'. We note here that in a scenario in which a 'believing man' is required to supply that component of the protocol which the messenger of God himself could not, God's protection from the schemes of the rejecters — which is standard for actual messengers within the protocol — extends here to him.

A comparable scenario is envisaged for Muḥammad himself in his initial mission of warning to his own people:

> 67 O Messenger: convey thou what has been sent down to thee from thy Lord; and if thou do it not, then thou wilt not have conveyed His message. And God will protect thee from men. God guides not the people of the false claimers of guidance.[1] (5:67)

The conclusion of the matter

The final outcome for Pharaoh and those who followed him is outlined at 40:45-50. This passage bears all the hallmarks both of a specific narrative treating of particular persons, and of a generic summary treating of all those who conform to their archetypes as found across the broader narrative.

Summary

We have noted that the Qur'an twice signals that we should pay particular attention to the case of Pharaoh.

We are cognisant of the fact that the sole instance where we find a softening or muting among the copious correlations between Muḥammad's mission and both core and non-core actions under the protocol is found in his address to the elites of his time, and have inferred from this the need for an explicit address to the ruling elites in the case of his second, unique mission to mankind "all together".

We have considered[14] the correlations between the pharaonic system and that under which we live today.

We have identified the fact that Moses could not address Pharaoh and his community on the basis of a statement of affiliation — a critical component for the implementation of the God protocol — and seen this component supplied by a 'believing man' who was legitimately able to address the rulers and the ruled on such a basis, and noted the outcome stated at 40:45. We have also observed that God protected the 'believing man' from harm, and considered that fact in the broader context of the protocol.

14 More particularly in the footnotes.

Finally, given the correspondences between Moses' mission of warning to Pharaoh and not only that of Muḥammad within his lifetime but also the fact that Muḥammad's unique, universal mission to mankind "all together" is lacking in precisely the same point as that of Moses' mission to Pharaoh, we must infer that this single remaining requirement in Muḥammad's second mission may be met by the same means by which it was met in the case of Moses before Pharaoh: by the speech of the 'believing man'.

The detonating statement considered

We turn now to the six "O my people" statements of affiliation made by the 'believing man' which together formed the detonating statement[15] for the God protocol in the case of Moses' mission of warning to Pharaoh, and which are here identified as comprising that sole component required under the protocol for completion of Muḥammad's second, unique mission and therefore provides the wording of that legal notification we are to address to the elites of this time.

Since the components which comprise this statement are to be directed to the elites themselves the notes in italics which expand upon them are written with that application in view.

One

O my people: yours is the dominion this day, you being dominant in the land, but who will help us against the wrath of God if it comes to us?

O my people

Any man living under the unified, pan-national system which prevails worldwide today may legitimately address the members of the ruling elites thereof in the English language regardless of their countries of origin since English is the dominant worldwide lingua franca; and he may address them with the words "O my people" on the basis of the highly standardised legal, scientific, economic, educational, pharmaceutical, cultural, and worldview norms which have been established across that system. What follows is addressed in the first instance to the leading members of those bodies which comprise the system which governs the world de facto, and provided on an informational basis to those they rule also.

As we have considered above, Muḥammad as the messenger sent by God to mankind "all together" could not make this statement to a worldwide elite under the protocol.

15 We have removed non-critical visual accoutrements such as verse numbers and some features of punctuation.

The language of the worldwide ruling elite of today is English. The present work and the major work which underpins it[16] are in English. The formulation of the detonating statement of a universal implementation at this time of the God protocol which rests upon the revelation given to Muḥammad must, likewise, be in English.

yours is the dominion this day, you being dominant in the land
It is clear that the standardised systems to which reference is made above exist as functions of your — the elites' — policies. Those who decide upon and order the implementation of such systems are those who truly govern, and since those systems predominate in all countries, it is correct to speak of a single body of men at the helm of a single system of world governance.

The human herd has been processed through an agenda by a (generally) hidden hand over the course of centuries. While this process has largely been obfuscated by conceits such as freedom and democracy, at the present time[17] the velvet glove is fast being removed from the iron fist.

In truth, there has been no deep or systemic change despite what most feel to be the case with the imposition of "lockdowns" and what the elites' Media outlets are training the herd to call "the new normal". The same elites owned the old normal; all that is happening is that they are moving the herd from one pasture in which a semblance of freedom was useful to them before certain objectives were achieved, to a new, grubbier, and nastier pasture in which the furniture which comprised the backdrop for the former illusion is being cleared off the stage. We were ruled before; we are ruled now.[18] but who will help us against the wrath of God if it comes to us?

You have been given temporal power. And while you may consider that your wealth and position can safeguard you from every eventuality, there is no defence against the wrath of God if it comes. And if it comes, then it will come upon all.

The ruling elites are impotent to prevent the wrath of God should it become binding. No amount of planning, money, technology, deceit, mind control, or other form of influence, overt or covert, can prevent the fact of annihilation at the hand of God once it is decreed. None.

The fact is plain from the broader Qur'anic narrative that denial by the ruling elite triggers destruction not only of the rulers themselves but of the ruled also. Those who rule could not do so without the complicity of the masses. Those trained to manage the levers of power understand this, which is why in part they require the agreement, tacit or otherwise, of those 18 We should remember that it is natural that there be a ruling elite. This is the model throughout all ages, and it is the model today. It is also the template found throughout the Qur'an. The primary difference between former societies and that of today is that the world today is effectively a single unit under the direction of a single ruling entity. This fact should be obvious in the light of the roll-out of the Covid-19 agenda were it not before.

they rule for the policies they pursue.

Two

O my people: I fear for you the like of the day of the parties, the like of the case of the people of Noah, and ʿĀd, and Thamūd, and those after them; and God desires not injustice for the servants.

O my people: I fear for you the like of the day of the parties, the like of the case of the people of Noah, and ʿĀd, and Thamūd, and those after them
You should be aware that numerous communities have been annihilated in acts of God in the past. According to the record of the Qur'an, every community thus destroyed had turned away from God in favour of idolatry and polytheism — a policy much in evidence in your system also. But each community of which we have record exhibited also sins particular to its own society. The system you have engineered and via which you presently rule actively promotes the totality of the sins characteristic of all communities previously destroyed for which the Qur'an provides details. If local societies were destroyed within limited bounds in the past for transgressing God's law on individual counts, are there not grounds to fear that the present ubiquitous system will be destroyed also in view of the fact that it embraces and promotes every sin characteristic of all communities destroyed in the past combined, and that the resulting annihilation will be total?

This statement of the 'believing man' above is in a form which we recognise from elsewhere in our study[19] — that of generic narrative summary.

The words "the parties" is a generic term indicating all former communities which rejected warning and were destroyed.[20] Thus, we know that the words of the 'believing man' pertain to all cases of the God protocol, the conclusion of which in all cases[21] was the total annihilation of the deniers.

and God desires not injustice for the servants
Within the record to which we refer — the Qur'an — there is no case in which God destroyed a community arbitrarily. The peoples destroyed in the past received in the annihilation visited upon them the fruits of their own labours.

God does not destroy communities for anything but their own wrongdoing; they bring the destruction of God upon themselves by their denial and refusal to turn away from their idolatry and associated sins, as we have established in this study.[22]

19 See Chapter 8.

20 And is one which is echoed in Muḥammad's own engagement with the ruling elite of his time as found at verses 38:1-17 and considered in Chapter 12.

21 Barring that of Jonah, as we have noted multiple times in the course of this presentation.

22 We would remind the reader that in the Qur'anic worldview one who complies with the directives of a tyrant such as Pharaoh is said to be following him; thus when the punishments of God fall upon a community, both leaders and followers are destroyed.

Three

And O my people: I fear for you the Day of Calling, the day you will turn and go having not against God any defender; and whom God sends astray, for him there is no guide. And Joseph brought you the clear signs before, but you ceased not to be in doubt about what he brought. When he had perished, you said: 'Never will God raise up after him a messenger.' Thus does God lead astray him who is a committer of excess and a baseless sceptic: those who dispute concerning the proofs of God without an authority having come to them; great is the hatred in the sight of God and in the sight of those who heed warning; thus does God seal every proud and tyrannical heart.

And O my people: I fear for you the Day of Calling, the day you will turn and go having not against God any defender

Fearful though any right-minded man should be of the destruction to come upon a community the rulers of which reject a legitimate warning which comports with the protocol under which communities in previous times were annihilated, one should fear more the Day on which eternal damnation and suffering in Hell will be the lot of those who reject an appeal made under the same protocol to turn back to God.

The formula "the Day of Calling" occurs in this instance only in the Qur'an. The form[23] of the second part of this genitive construction indicates mutual calling (i.e. people calling one to another) and references the time when the inhabitants of the Garden and the inhabitants of Hell will call to one another:

> 44 And the companions of the Garden will call to the companions of the Fire: "We have found what our Lord promised us true;[1] have you found what your Lord promised you true?"[2] They will say: "Yea." Then will there proclaim a proclaimer between them: "The curse of God is upon the wrongdoers:[3]
> 45 "Those who turned away from[1] the path of God and sought to make it crooked, and were deniers of the Hereafter!"
> 46 And between them[1] is a partition; and upon the elevations are men recognising each by their mark;[2] and they will call to the companions of the Garden: "Peace be upon you!" They have not entered it, though they desire to.
> 47 And when their eyes are turned towards the companions of the Fire, they say: "Our Lord: place Thou not us with the wrongdoing[1] people."
> 48 And the companions of the elevations will call to men, recognising them by their mark,[1] saying: "What did it avail you, your accumulating, and that you waxed proud?"
> 49 "Are these[1] they whom you swore God would never reach with mercy?"[2] — "Enter the Garden! You need not fear, nor will you grieve!"
> 50 And the companions of the Fire will call to the companions of the Garden: "Pour forth[1] upon us some water, or some of what God has provided for you." They will say: "God has made both unlawful to the false claimers of guidance:[2]
> 51 "Those who took their doctrine[1] as play and diversion, and whom the life of this world deluded." — "So this day do We forget them, even as they forgot the meeting of this their day, and as they rejected Our proofs."[2]
> 52 And We have brought them a Writ[1] which We set out and detailed[2] according to knowledge — a guidance and mercy for people who believe.
> 53 Look they save for the fulfilment[1] thereof? The day the fulfilment[2] thereof comes, those who had forgotten it before will say: "The messengers of our Lord came with the truth,[3] so have we any intercessors that might intercede for us? Or will we be sent back that we might do other than what we did?" They will have lost their souls; and strayed from them will be what they invented.
> (7:44-53)

23 Form VI verbal noun.

and whom God sends astray, for him there is no guide

While some measure of hope may attach to this address to you, the elites of the present world system of governance, no man can direct to a right path him whom God has left to stray.

This motif occurs a further three times in the Qur'an. All three segments which contain it are presented below.

The first segment[24] is directed to the recipient of the Qur'an in the first instance; the second segment references the revelation he received; the third emphasises God's sufficiency both for his servants and as a guide. However, all three indicate punishment:

> 32 And mocked were messengers before thee; and I granted those who ignored warning[1] respite; then I seized them — and how was My retribution!
> 33 Is then He who[1] stands over every soul for what it earns[...]?[2] But they have made for God partners.[3] Say thou: "Name them: — if[4] you would inform Him of what He knows not in the earth;[5] or if[6] it is a show of speaking."[7] The truth is:[8] their scheme has been made fair to those who ignore warning,[9] and they have been turned away[10] from the path; and whom God sends astray, for him there is no guide;
> 34 They have punishment in the life of this world; and the punishment of the Hereafter is more severe; and they have against God no defender.
> (13:32-34)

> 22 Is then he whose[1] breast God has expanded[2] to submission[3] so that he follows[4] light from His Lord[...]?[5] Then woe to those whose hearts are hardened against the remembrance[6] of God! Those are in manifest error.
> 23 God has sent down the best narration:[1] a Writ[2] of paired comparison[3] whereat shiver the skins of those who fear their Lord; then their skins and their hearts soften to the remembrance[4] of God — that is the guidance of God wherewith He guides whom He wills; and whom God sends astray, for him there is no guide.
> 24 Is then he who[1] has no prudent fear[2] but his face[2] against the evil of the punishment on the Day of Resurrection[...]?[4] And it will be said to the wrongdoers:[5] "Taste what you earned!"
> 25 Those before them denied, and the punishment came upon them whence[1] they perceived not.
> 26 And God let them taste disgrace in the life of this world; but the punishment of the Hereafter is greater, had they but known.
> (39:22-26)

> 36 Is then God not[1] sufficient for His servant? And they would put thee in dread of those other than[2] Him; and whom God sends astray, for him there is no guide.

37 And whom God guides, for him there is none to lead astray; is then God not[1] exalted in might and able to requite?
(39:36-37)

And Joseph brought you the clear signs before, but you ceased not to be in doubt about what he brought. When he had perished, you said: 'Never will God raise up after him a messenger.'
Such is the response of all evil rulers: to deny those God sends to them because God's requirements do not comport with their own ambitions, and only to acknowledge such men grudgingly and after the fact. Pharaoh and his elites denied what Moses brought to them; the elites of Jesus' time denied what he brought to them; and thus far you have denied that with which Muḥammad was sent.

The first point to bear in mind here is that the actual people who knew Joseph were long dead at the time of the action: the speaker is referencing a former generation which had known Joseph; the second is that the case he is presenting is archetypal: evil rulers have always disregarded God's prophets because their message was inconvenient to them, and then dismissed the possibility of further men being sent to them. However, as we have seen in this presentation, the 'practice of God' does not change.[25]

However, we would add that if the speaker was addressing the ruling elite of the land today known as Egypt,[26] then that elite was then the dominant power in the known world. It is a fact that the ruling elites of today derive their symbology, architectural influences, and chief astrological preoccupations from the Mystery Schools — intellectual and esoteric movements which feed through to the present day[27] — and which go back to Babylon[28] and Egypt. Thus, the words of the 'believing man' here bear a nuance which extends beyond the immediate scene and have an application to the rulers of the present system as the ideological, if not literal, descendants of those he is addressing.

An additional point of convergence in this regard pertains to the sūrah which contains the Qur'an's account of the story of Joseph and which by convention goes by his name. While almost the entire sūrah forms a lengthy and detailed dramatic narrative treating of a single story (and uniquely so within the Qur'an), that story ends at 12:102 at which point it abruptly changes tack. The remainder of the sūrah comprises the segment below:

103 And most men[1] — though thou be desirous — are not believers.[2]
104 And thou askest not of them for it any reward; it is only a reminder[1] to all mankind.[2]
105 And how many a proof[1] is there in the heavens and the earth which they pass by, and from which they turn away!
106 And most of them believe not in God save as[1] idolaters.[2]
107 Do they then feel secure against an enveloping of the punishment of God coming upon them, or the Hour coming upon them unexpectedly when they perceive not?
108 Say thou: "This is my path. I invite to God with insight — I and whoso follows me. And glory[1] be to God! And I am not of the idolaters."
109 And We sent before thee only men to whom We revealed[1] from among the people of the cities. (So have they not travelled in the earth and seen how was the final outcome of those who were before them? And the abode of the Hereafter is best for those who are in prudent fear;[2] will you then not[3] use reason!)
110 When[1] the messengers had despaired and thought that they had been denied, there came to them Our help[2] and who We willed was delivered. And repulsed not is Our wrath from the lawbreaking people.
111 There is in their story a lesson for men of understanding; it is not an invented narrative[1] but a confirmation of what is before it,[2] and an exposition of every thing,[3] and guidance, and a mercy for people who believe.
(12:103-111)

25 Mentioned in verses included in the present work at 17:77, 33:38, 35:43, 40:85.

26 The question of the historical location of this and other events in the Qur'an or the Bible is a separate study and beyond the purview of the present work.

27 Although perhaps in a garbled or re-imagined form.

28 I refer the interested reader to 2:101-103.

It is of particular moment here that it is the extended narrative treating of Joseph which "brought" the segment above, one which in no way comports with the features of Joseph's own story in that sūrah but which is entirely consonant with the thematics which are the focus of the present analysis.

Thus does God lead astray him who is a committer of excess and a baseless sceptic: those who dispute concerning the proofs of God without an authority having come to them
This statement references what precedes. Although you, the elites of this time, may claim a doctrine which purports to exonerate you of your transgression of what you consider codes of morality binding only upon the profane, the basis for your doctrine is flawed. No matter what you believe, your doctrine does not comprise an authority originating with God. And to dispute genuine revelation on the basis of subjective, specious claims presupposes a path which is at variance with that by which God guides.

The first clause above expands upon what precedes and identifies the characteristics of those to whom this conclusion applies; the second finds a single echo in the broader text a few verses later which itself provides the substance:

56 Those who dispute concerning the proofs[1] of God without an authority having come to them — in their breasts is only greatness they will never reach.[2] So seek thou refuge in God; He is the Hearer, the Seeing.
57 The creation of the heavens and the earth is greater than the creation of mankind, but most men know not.
58 And not equal are the blind and the seeing,[1] or[2] those who heed warning[3] and do righteous deeds and the wrong-doer; little do you take heed.
59 The Hour is coming — about which there is no doubt — but most men do not believe.[1]
60 And your Lord said: "Call to Me — I will respond to you!"[1] Those who wax too proud for My service: they will enter Gehenna abased.

(40:56-60)

great is the hatred in the sight of God and in the sight of those who heed warning
You should know that your actions are held in contempt both by God and by those who believe in His scriptures and follow the ordinances therein.

The first part of this clause finds a single echo in the text, one to which it clearly operates as a signpost:

3 Great is the hatred in the sight of God,[i] that you say what you do not.
(61:3)

While the phrase above has an import germane to its immediate vicinity within the sūrah, it has an application also in the present context to the elites: they are the creators of gross immorality and corruption while simultaneously claiming every virtue.

thus does God seal every proud and tyrannical heart
You, the elites, may consider yourselves immune to all forms of assault, but that is a delusion borne of that hubris which is a manifestation of hearts sealed by God.

This clause repeats and effectively seals the conclusion to the preceding argument above. It is the "proud and tyrannical heart" which is impervious to the "proofs of God", and it becomes so for the reasons we have seen set out in all parts of this section.

Four

O my people: follow me; I will guide you to the path of rectitude

O my people: follow me
As per the example established by the 'believing man' before the court of Pharaoh in the Qur'an, I am here addressing myself to you, the elites of this time. Like him, my appeal does not originate with myself, but with a prophet sent by God — in this case, Prophet Muḥammad, whose revelation from God is preserved in the Qur'an. You will find that revelation systematically translated into the English language under a method free of sectarian taint or the imposition of later sources. This work is published online in its entirety and accessible to all free of charge at quranite.com.

There is no suggestion that the 'believing man' is here presenting himself in any way as an alternative or additional guide to Moses (who, one will remember, is personally present during the man's speech); likewise, in the present delivery of the same mechanism to the ruling elite of our day, there is no suggestion that in applying the words of the 'believing man' as the detonating statement to complete Muḥammad's universal implementation of the God protocol one imagines oneself as anything more than a believing man living under the rule of the present tyrannical system and qualified to express a statement of affiliation in that context.

Whereas Moses was personally an eye-witness to the delivery of the statement of affiliation by the 'believing man', we are able to point as our witness — employing as we are the same statement in order to fulfil Muḥammad's second, universal implementation of the very same protocol — to the revelation which Muḥammad brought. It is one which God made Himself guardian over, and is available freely in the English language. It is also presented now in that language free of the impositions made upon it by the Traditionalist and his extraneous literature.[29]

I will guide you to the path of rectitude
You claim to guide to the right path, but that path takes both those who guide upon it and those who follow it to Hell — so consider, rather, this notification of warning.

The statement of the 'believing man' above directly alludes to and provides a response to Pharaoh's own words at 40:29 where he says, "I only show you what I see, and I only guide you to the path of rectitude." "The path of rectitude"[30] to which the 'believing man' would guide and that to which Pharaoh and his ilk would guide are both found in what follows. Thus, one has to choose: whether to follow the path of the messenger of God[31] which leads to the Garden, or the path of the leaders of denial which leads to the Fire.

Five

O my people: the life of this world is but an enjoyment; and the Hereafter — that is the house of the fixed lodging. Whoso does evil will not be rewarded save with the like thereof; and whoso works righteousness — whether male or female — and is a believer: those enter the Garden, wherein they are given provision without reckoning.

O my people: the life of this world is but an enjoyment
Be warned: no matter what one has now by way of power, wealth, or children, it is as fleeting as the morning mist.

This life, no matter what one has in it, is transitory and its outcome certain:

185 Every soul will taste death; and you will but be paid in full your rewards on the Day of Resurrection. And whoso is removed from the Fire and made to enter the Garden: he has attained; and the life of this world is only the enjoyment of delusion.
(3:185)

29 The Qur'an: A Complete Revelation. See quranite.com.

30 Arabic: sabīl al raṣ̲hād. This formula occurs nowhere in the Qur'an outside these two places.

31 I.e. in the original instance by following Moses himself (who was physically present before Pharaoh); or in this instance, by following what Muḥammad himself was given and which remains with us: the Qur'an.

112 He will say: "How long tarried you in the earth, by number of years?"
113 They will say: "We tarried a day, or part of a day; ask Thou those who keep count."[1]
114 He will say: "You tarried only a little; had you but known[...].[1]
115 "Thought you that We only created you for amusement, and that to Us you would not be returned?"
(23:112-115)

27 Are you harder in creation, or the sky? He built it;[1]
28 He raised the ceiling[1] thereof, and fashioned[2] it;
29 And He made dark its night, and brought forth its morning.[1]
30 And the earth, after that, He spread it out;[1]
31 He brought forth therefrom its water and its pasture;
32 And the mountains He set firmly
33 As enjoyment for you and for your cattle.
34 Then, when the Greatest Calamity comes:
35 The day man will remember for what he strove,
36 And Hell will be made manifest[1] to him who sees: —
37 Then as for him who transgressed,
38 And preferred the life of this world:
39 Hell will be the shelter.
40 And as for him who feared the station[1] of his Lord[2] and restrained his soul from vain desire:
41 The Garden will be the shelter.
42 They ask thee about the Hour: "When is its arrival?"[1]
43 What is any reminder thereof to thee?[1]
44 To thy Lord is the finality thereof.
45 Thou art but the warner of him who fears it.
46 It will be, the day they see it, as though[1] they had not tarried save a day's end[2] or a morning[3] thereof.
(79:27-46)

and the Hereafter — that is the house of the fixed lodging
This life is but a moment, and death is certain and our place after death is fixed forever. Whereas you have power and wealth now, what are they really worth when they are sure to be taken from you at death, and there will remain of value only what faith and good works you sent ahead for yourselves?

The place one occupies in Eternity is forever; there is no going back, and the Resurrection is sure:

10 And they say: "When we are lost in the earth, will we be in a new creation?" The truth is,[1] they are of the meeting with their Lord deniers.
11 Say thou: "There will take you the angel of death who has been given charge of you; then to your Lord will you be returned."
12 And if thou couldst see when the lawbreakers will hang their heads before their Lord: "Our Lord: we have seen and heard, so send Thou us back. We will work righteousness! We are those who are certain!"[1]
13 And had We willed, We could have given every soul its guidance. But the word from Me is binding:[1] "I will fill Gehenna with the jinna[2] and mankind all together!"

14 "So taste! Because you forgot the meeting of this your day, We have forgotten you. And taste the punishment of eternity because of what you did!"
(32:10-14)

17 And no soul knows what has been hidden for them as a comfort of the eyes as reward for what they did.
18 Is then he who[1] is a believer[2] like him who is perfidious?[3] They are not equal.
19 As for those who heed warning[1] and do righteous deeds: for them are the Gardens of Shelter as a welcome for what they did.
20 And as for those who are perfidious:[1] their shelter is the Fire. As often as they desire to come out therefrom, they are brought back into it; and it is said to them: "Taste the punishment of the Fire which you denied!"
21 And We will let them taste of the lower[1] punishment before the greater, that they might return.[2]
22 And who is more unjust than he who is reminded of the proofs[1] of his Lord, then turns away therefrom? We will take vengeance on the lawbreakers.
(32:17-22)

30 The day We say to Gehenna: "Art thou filled?" And it will say: "Is there any more?"
31 And the Garden will be brought nigh: — to those of prudent fear,[1] not far —
32 "This is what you were promised, for every preserving[1] penitent, 33 "Who feared the Almighty[1] unseen, and came with a repentant heart:
34 "Enter it in peace!" That is the Day of Eternity;
35 They have what they desire therein; and with Us is more.
36 And how many a generation We destroyed before them stronger than them in might! And they penetrated into[1] the land; had they any place of refuge?[2]
(50:30-36)

Whoso does evil will not be rewarded save with the like thereof; and whoso works righteousness — whether male or female — and is a believer: those enter the Garden, wherein they are given provision without reckoning.
No matter what doctrine you follow, if it diverges from the law of just reward it is a falsehood. The true riches are for those who follow the path of God. While you may hold power over the believers in the current context, this life is certain to end and those who have rejected the call to God will be in the Fire whereas those who heeded that call will receive good things forever.

This life is an investment with a limited window of opportunity; what we sow here, we reap in Eternity. Given the ceaseless enjoyment of blessings believers are promised in the Garden, we are wise to send ahead for ourselves whatever good we can while we are able.

49 This is a remembrance.[1] And for those of prudent fear[2] is a good journey's end:[3]
50 Gardens of perpetual abode[1] whose doors will be opened to them;
51 Reclining therein, they will call therein for plenteous fruit and drink;
52 And with them maidens of modest gaze,[1] well-matched.[2]
53 This is what you are promised for the Day of Reckoning.
54 This is Our provision; it has no depletion.
55 This![1] And for those transgressing all bounds[2] is an evil journey's end:[3]

56 Gehenna, wherein they will burn; and evil is the resting-place.
57 This! So let them taste it: scalding water and purulence,[1]
58 And more[1] of like categories.[2]
59 "This is a crowd rushing headlong with you!" — No welcome for them — they will burn in the Fire.
60 They will say: "The truth is,[1] you — no welcome for you — you sent it ahead for us;[2] and evil is the fixed lodging!"
61 They will say: "Our Lord: whoso sent this ahead for us, increase Thou for him a double punishment in the Fire."
62 And they will say: "What ails us that we see not men we counted among the worst,
63 "Whom we took in derision — or does our[1] sight miss them?"
64 That is true:[1] — the mutual recrimination of the people of the Fire.
(38:49-64)

27 And to God belongs the dominion of the heavens and the earth. And the day the Hour strikes, that day the creators of vanity will lose.[1]
28 And thou wilt see every community on its knees, every community called to its writ:[1] "This day will you be rewarded for what you did!
29 "This, Our writ,[1] speaks against you the truth;[2] We have caused to be recorded what you did."
30 Then as for those who heed warning[1] and do righteous deeds: their Lord will make them enter into His mercy; that[2] is the clear achievement.
31 And as for those who ignore warning:[1] "Were not Our proofs[2] recited to you? But you had waxed proud and were a people of lawbreakers.
32 "And when it was said: 'The promise of God is true,[1] as is[2] the Hour about which there is no doubt,' you said: 'We know not what the Hour is; we think only assumption, and We are not convinced.'"
33 And the evil deeds[1] they did will appear to them, and there will surround them that whereat they mocked.
34 And it will be said: "This day do We forget you, as you forgot the meeting of this day of yours, and your shelter is the Fire; and you have no helpers.
35 "That is because you took the proofs[1] of God in mockery and the life of this world deluded you." So, that day, they will not be brought forth therefrom, nor will they be allowed to make amends.
(45:27-35)

Six

And O my people: how is it that I invite you to deliverance, and you invite me to the Fire? You call me to deny God, and to ascribe a partnership to Him with that whereof I have no knowledge; and I invite you to the Exalted in Might, the Forgiver. Without doubt, you but invite me to that to which there is no calling in the World or in the Hereafter; and our return is to God. And the committers of excess will be the companions of the Fire. And you will remember what I say to you. And I commit my affair to God; God sees the servants.

And O my people: how is it that I invite you to deliverance, and you invite me to the Fire?

The one who follows your path will arrive in the Fire. But the one who submits to God will arrive in the Garden. We will consider next how that is.

This clause reads, given what follows, as a literal rather than a rhetorical question; the answers follow.

You call me to deny God, and to ascribe a partnership to Him with that whereof I have no knowledge
Your system both requires that one ascribe to the mechanisms of rule which you impose qualities which belong to God alone and that one accept values which are repugnant to His laws. Your system finds no correspondence in a soul God created which retains its pre-existing love for Him.

One should remember that in the immediate context of Moses' mission of warning to Pharaoh the act of denial was following Pharaoh and acknowledging him as Lord; the modern cult of Government is an updated and obfuscated expression of the same type of idolatry.

15 Has there come to thee the account[1] of Moses?
16 When his Lord called him in the sacred valley of Ṭuwa:[1]
17 "Go thou to Pharaoh;[1] he has transgressed.
18 "And say thou: 'Wouldst thou purify thyself,
19 "'And that I guide thee to thy Lord, so thou shalt fear?'"
20 And he showed him the greatest proof,[1]
21 But he denied and opposed.
22 Then turned he away in haste,
23 And gathered and called,
24 And said: "I am your most high Lord."[1]
25 So God seized him in exemplary punishment of the latter and the former.[1]
(79:15-25)

and I invite you to the Exalted in Might, the Forgiver
God is high above all men in might, but He accepts the repentance of those who turn to Him. Turn to Him now while there is time, and use the good things He gave you to seek a place in the Garden by promoting a society which is based upon faith in God, scriptural morality, and justice.

This, then, is the path to which the 'believing man' is calling.

Without doubt, you but invite me to that to which there is no calling in the World or in the Hereafter
Since your premises are false your conclusions can only be false. The falsehoods you serve will betray all who follow after them — both in this life and in Eternity. That is the sum of what you have to offer.

The 'believing man' is herein categorically stating that Pharaoh's system is based upon falsehood. Its gods cannot help one in this present life, and they cannot help one in the life to come. Not only are they both false and in the end useless, they will betray those who give themselves over to them.

and our return is to God
We all die; and your wealth and position can do nothing to prevent that fact.

This is an objective fact, although one susceptible to being lost from view given enough distractions and other blandishments.

We all die; we take with us only the faith we lived by and the actions we performed. This fact applies equally to Pharaoh and the least of his slaves.

And the committers of excess will be the companions of the Fire
Those who deny the Creator and work evil will have each other's company for eternity in the Fire. That is the destination to which the path you follow yourselves and promote to others leads.

This, then, is the end of those who follow the wrong path. The formula used by the 'believing man' here alludes to his own statements at both 40:28[32] and at 40:34[33] and provides a signpost to a number of places in the broader text, most notably in the following:

> 83 And there believed not Moses save a progeny of his people, for fear of Pharaoh[1] and their eminent ones, that they would subject them to means of denial;[2] and Pharaoh[3] was exalted in the land, and he was of the committers of excess.
> (10:83)

> 30 And We delivered the children of Israel from the humiliating punishment,
> 31 From Pharaoh:[1] — he was a high one among the committers of excess.
> (44:30-31)

And you will remember what I say to you
You may brush off these words today, but you will remember them in due course. Just as you make those you rule culpable under your laws by means of notifications of warning, you are now culpable before God under His law as a function of this notification of warning.

We are cognisant of the fact that the 'believing man' is here delivering what we are calling the detonating statement of the God protocol; thus his words carry legal weight.

Just as we are made culpable under the present system of tyranny for what our rulers convey to us by various means as discussed in the early part of this work, so those who have been served notice under the God protocol are culpable also. If one has had this statement delivered to him, it will be required of him. He is culpable.

And I commit my affair to God
I have no protector besides God, and I commit my affair to Him.

The reader will be aware that appealing to God alone for protection is a standard action by one

32 "God guides not him who is a committer of excess and a liar."

33 "Thus does God lead astray him who is a committer of excess and a baseless sceptic."

delivering a message of warning under the protocol, and such is supplied here in short order by the 'believing man' also.

God sees the servants
God is witness to all things. He knows that you have been served with this notification, and there is nothing you can undertake in consequence to which He will not be witness.

The phrase above serves to seal the detonating statement. Any man who has been served with this notification, God is witness to it. There is no undoing that fact.

The formula of the 'believing man', then, comprises the full notification to be issued to the elites of our time and supplies the sole component required to complete Muḥammad's mission of warning to mankind "all together" as preserved in the Qur'an.

The Hour

We begin the concluding section in this chapter with a segment we have seen previously. While it would present no difficulty to list a lengthy array of segments which treat of the Hour — that moment known in Christian traditions as the eschaton — at which time the present age ends and Judgment takes place, it is simpler to present just one which is both representative of the range from which one could choose and which dovetails with our broader presentation.

We know both that the history of Pharaoh is the most extensive which treats of the protocol and that it is intended as an example for us.[34] We know also that previous instances of the protocol pertained to individual societies and resulted in instances of annihilation of limited geographical extent. Delivery to the single ruling elite of the unified world community of today of the detonating statement for the mission of Muḥammad as the messenger of God to all mankind implies — in the event of denial — annihilation of the entire world. Given this point of divergence from all other implementations,[35] it is as well to consider briefly our present undertaking together with the Hour itself.

> 41 And the warnings came to the house of Pharaoh.[1]
> 42 They denied Our proofs,[1] all of them, then We seized them with the seizing of One exalted in might and omnipotent.
> 43 Are your atheists[1] better than those?[2] If[3] you have immunity in the writings:[4]
> 44 Or if[1] they say: "We are an assembly to be victorious:[2]
> 45 "The host[1] will be defeated, and turn the backs," —

34 See 43:51-56.

35 I am not among those who consider that the Flood was a worldwide event. Certainly, it was devastating and extensive in scope, and there exist reverberations of such an event in the ancient records of peoples located thousands of miles apart. But the facts simply do not comport with a scenario in which all land-based life was destroyed other than that which accompanied Noah in the Ark.

46 The truth is,[1] the Hour is their appointment; and the Hour is more calamitous and more bitter.[2]
47 The lawbreakers are in error and insanity!
48 The day they are dragged into the Fire on their faces: "Taste the touch of Saqar!"[1]
49 We created everything in measure
50 And Our command is but one — as the twinkling of an eye[...].[1]
51 And We have destroyed your sects[1] before,[2] so is there any who will remember?
52 And everything they did is in the writings.[1]
53 And everything, small and great, is inscribed.
54 Those of prudent fear[1] will be among gardens and a river,
55 In a seat of honour,[1] in the presence of an Omnipotent Sovereign.
(54:41-55)

Key points of note in this regard are listed below.

- Verse 54:43 asks: 'Are your atheists better than those?' That is: do the deniers of your time possess some power or protection greater than did those communities which were annihilated in times past? The answer is unquestionably understood to be in the negative.
- There are two scenarios allowed for at 54:43-44. The first ('If you have immunity in the writings') addresses those who appeal to their scriptures for security; the second ('Or if they say: "We are an assembly to be victorious: The host will be defeated, and turn the backs") addresses those who put their faith in military might. Both are answered in what remains of the sūrah.
- Verse 54:46 states that the Hour is 'more calamitous and more bitter' than what preceded, the implication being that it is more so than even that localised instance of annihilation under the protocol which became binding upon Pharaoh and his people and, by extension, those visited upon all those communities destroyed under the protocol in the past; the broader context of the sūrah supports this view treating as it does of multiple communities previously destroyed of which the house of Pharaoh is but the last listed.
- Verse 54:50 shows that the Hour, when it comes, will be sudden. In the bat of an eye, the age in which we live and which comprises what we think of as reality will vanish.[36]
- Finally, we note that verse 54:51 confirms and fortifies what we read at 54:43. God has destroyed 'your sects' before; human archetypes repeat, be it Pharaoh, the pushers of perversion among the people of Lot, or the committers of any of the other sins characteristic of those destroyed in former times. Lest we forget, 'the practice of God' does not change.

While it is not possible to demonstrate conclusively that an implementation of the God protocol in our time necessarily corresponds with the event the Qur'an calls the Hour, let us consider the following points:

- Initiation of the protocol at this time is a function of delivering the detonating statement as found within the revelation given to Muḥammad, the last prophet, to the elites of our day. All we have done is connect the wires as it were. Delivery of that notification sends 36 The Traditionalist trafficks in a complex eschatology woven together from bits of his supplanting literature. This includes signs and personalities to watch for as precursors to the End — all of which narrative is in unambiguous tension with the book he claims as his foundational scripture. The Qur'an is clear: Muḥammad had no knowledge of when the Hour will occur, and the Hour will be both sudden and unexpected.

Muḥammad's mission of warning to all mankind live and makes the punishments of God binding in the event of denial.[37]
- The community to be warned in this case comprises a single worldwide system under a single elite; since in the event of denial by that elite the punishments of God become binding under the protocol, the expectation must be that the resultant annihilation will be total. It is true that under previous implementations of the protocol those who believed with the warner in each case — generally few in number — were spared. However, since destruction in those cases was limited in geographical extent,[38] there existed locations for those spared by God to remove to.
- The fact that the present single, unified system promotes every one of the sins for which a multiplicity of communities was destroyed under the protocol in the past for committing some portion thereof suggests a correlation between the present case on the one hand, and all preceding cases on the other. Implicit within this correlation, at least to my mind, is total destruction in this case.

Given that we are materially correct in our points above, one struggles to envisage a scenario in which the punishments of God became binding under an implementation of the protocol to the elites of a single worldwide system in which life of any kind would remain thereafter.

We should note also that the Qur'an contains the suggestion of a connection between an event of universal destruction and the Hour itself:

58 And there is no city save We will destroy it before the Day of Resurrection, or punish it with severe punishment; that is in the Writ[1] inscribed.
(17:58)

God alone knows whether such an implementation of the protocol and the Hour are objectively synonymous events. But if detonation of Muḥammad's mission of warning to all mankind is to result in the complete destruction of life on earth, it seems likely to be impossible — at least from the perspective of human perception — to discern any distinction between the two events.

Summary

We have provided the basis for our identification of the speech of the 'believing man' as the detonating statement required to complete Muḥammad's unique and universal mission of warning to mankind "all together" under the protocol and expanded on the points he delivered.

We have considered also the Hour and concluded that, while it may not be explicitly associated with a worldwide implementation of the God protocol, reason suggests that the two events are,

37 We discuss what constitutes denial in the final chapter.

38 Opinions that the Flood was universal in extent notwithstanding.

if not synonymous, at least likely to be experienced as such.

We turn in our closing chapter to the subject of how the notification we have identified to complete Muḥammad's second, unique mission of warning under the protocol might be delivered to the ruling elites of our time.

Chapter Fourteen

Delivery of the detonating statement

14. Delivery of the detonating statement

The protocol of the 'believing man'

Where we observed the 'believing man' supply that part of the protocol to Pharaoh which Moses could not,[1] we noted that his description across the broader segment falls into two categories: what he said and what he did. We reproduce our summary of each below.

Words

- Advances reasoned arguments.
- Uses the appeal: "O my people:".
- Exhorts the hearers to obey him.
- Bears glad tidings and warning.
- Calls the hearers to fear God.
- Warns of punishment.
- Cites previously destroyed peoples.
- Places his affair entirely in the hands of God.

Actions

- Approaches a people to which he belongs.
- Warns the principal city.
- Addresses himself to the elites of his time.
- Speaks in the presence of the messenger of God tasked with all other parts of the protocol.

The detonating statement which the 'believing man' pronounces comprises both categories because he spoke in a particular context: to his own people, in the principal city of the dominant system of that time, before the ruling elites, and in the presence of the messenger of God tasked with warning to that system under the protocol.

All parts of the Words category are contained within the detonating statement itself, but we infer here that the Actions components imply certain requirements in the current context also; we will address these points shortly.

1 See Chapter 11.

Holding the ruling elites accountable before God

Now that we have identified the wording of that statement which we understand to be the detonating component of the God protocol in the context of Muḥammad's mission as the messenger of God to mankind "all together", we will look now at executing on that protocol in the current context.

To that end we must briefly revisit our opening discussion on how the elites make us culpable: first, they create a legal framework, they then inform us of either obligations or implications which attach themselves to us on the basis of that legal framework, and we are thereafter culpable under the terms of that legal framework. We know also that their delivery systems comprise a number of methods none of which requires us to be fully apprised of either the intent behind any issuance of notification or warning or to understand its fuller implications.

By virtue of what an unelected, unseen de facto ruling elite is, one is not able to turn to the Yellow Pages for a list of directors. But we have some idea at least of who the elites' chief representatives are, and have compiled a long enough list comprising such people to be sure to have caught a few of the upper echelons in our nets.

Firstly, as concerns the elites' chief representatives: if one addresses a man's servant, one effectively addresses him. So while it may not be assumed that every name on our list is at the very top of the pyramid, they are certainly close enough to it to bear a message to those who are.

Secondly, the elites themselves use a scattergun approach with us. It doesn't matter if every single slave on the plantation has personally seen the latest blockbuster film in which key aspects of the Agenda are embedded, or has read the highly promoted book in which one will find laid out in the sanitised language of corporate public relations what they are planning to do with us. No, they blast out a certain amount of buckshot and proceed on the basis of reasonable averages.

Since what is sauce for the goose is sauce also for the gander, we decided to use the same approach with them, but also to deliver our notification to the elites in a manner by which receipt is proven.[2]

In summary, the method of delivery is as follows: having compiled a list of over 900 of the richest and most influential individuals in the world,[3] we have individually mailed the detonating statement to each name on that list by international recorded delivery.[4]

2 An approach they use with us also, for example, in the case of serving a summons in certain legal proceedings.

3 The full list of those we have notified is found at the end of this book.

4 One can point to the example of Solomon's letter of warning to the ruling elite of a neighbouring kingdom as a Qur'anic precedent. That story begins at 27:28.

Supporting legal infrastructure

Implementation of this component of the protocol is not merely a matter of sending, as some would see it, a bizarre notification out of the blue to nearly a thousand of the system's chief movers and shakers; it is much more than that.

We have provided the elites, as they do us, a comprehensive intellectual and legal platform upon which our notification stands. That platform[5] is available instantly worldwide and at no cost to the reader. And, as has been noted previously, this entire body of work is made available in the shared language of the elites themselves: English.

Thus, we have provided everything necessary for those whom we are addressing to become acquainted with every facet and nuance of the broader legal corpus underpinning our notification of warning should they choose to do so — just as they do with us.

These letters were sent by international recorded mail in mid-July, 2021.

The wording of the notification and status of each letter may be viewed online at warningtotheelite.org.

The actions of the 'believing man'

We have established that the statements of affiliation used by the 'believing man' in the case of Moses' mission of warning to Pharaoh comprise the detonating statement in the case of Muḥammad's mission of warning to all mankind also and the reasons for that; we will now consider whether our approach here meets also the requirements established by the principal actions of the 'believing man':

- Approaches a people to which he belongs;
- Warns the principal city;
- Addresses himself to the elites of his time;
- Speaks in the presence of the messenger of God tasked with all other parts of the protocol.

Approaches a people to which he belongs

Since, as we have established, we live effectively under a single system of government, education, religion, and culture, any man ruled by that system may legitimately approach any other on the basis of shared affiliation.

Warns the principal city

In our time, given that we live in a unified and fully connected world, the principal city — i.e. that centre from which power is exerted — is distributed across the whole system. The feature which connects all parts of that system, however, is the Internet. It is this which provides the nervous system for the entire body politic. It is now by this means that Government, education,

5 That is, the present work and the much larger work which underpins it: The Qur'an: A Complete Revelation.

religion,[6] and culture operate and interface with the population.

In order to meet this requirement, all parts of our notification — both the statement which comprises our message to the elites and the entire body of work which underpins that statement — is made available for free and to all on that platform via which the unified system exercises control today: the Internet.

Addresses himself to the elites of his time
The method we have chosen is entirely directed to the elites of our time. However, we are not simply posting our work online and leaving it there; we are directing ourselves to that portion of the ruling elite which it is possible to address, and we are doing so in a way which is provable as a matter of record.

Speaks in the presence of the messenger of God tasked with all other parts of the protocol
We know that Muḥammad was the seal of the prophets[7] and that we are to expect no prophet after him. But we have what he was given, the Qur'an, and that record — given and preserved by God — supplies all parts of the protocol pursuant to his mission of warning to all mankind, and that is the basis upon which notification in that case is made. We refer the reader also to our comments above about the universal access provided to the totality of the work which underpins this notification.

Thus, our presentation comports in the present context with all actions supplied by the 'believing man' and so imply a certain requirement in the present case also.

What happens next?
The principal possible responses by the elites themselves to the action we have initiated comprise the following:

1. They do nothing. Just as this is of no consequence when the elites warn us, so it is of no consequence in their case also. Qui tacet consentire videtur.[8] In a variation of this response, they could fail to acquaint themselves with the work provided to them. Again, just as it does not affect the legality of those Agenda items the elites implement with regard to those they rule that those notified fail to acquaint themselves with their details,[9] so that principle applies to them also. The full legal basis for this notification exists; it is universally available free of charge worldwide. Ignorantia juris non excusat.[10]
2. They take action against me.[11] Firstly, I have threatened no one. I did not write the Qur'an; I have merely shared the results of my findings from that book with those best qualified to take preventative action on their basis. I make no claims for my own authority beyond that of being a believing man with the status of citizen under the present unified worldwide system. I have done nothing more than cite the book God delivered to Muḥammad as a message to all mankind to an elite which has promoted across the entire human population the totality of those sins for which the former peoples for which we have record in the Qur'an were destroyed, and I have done so on the basis of the system the elites themselves have engineered in which affiliation is universally shared. I have not exceeded my authority, but have acted entirely intra vires.[12]
3. They repent.

6 I mean here principally the actual religion of Materialism. But vestigial forms of traditional religion make use of it also.

7 See 33:40.

8 Latin: Silence gives consent.

9 It is a principle under the protocol that the deniers fail to grasp even ten percent of what comes to them; see 34:45.

10 Latin: Ignorance of the law excuses not.

11 Such a course of action would of course be a standard response under the protocol. Since, the elites are currently invested in killing not only me, but billions of others within the present portion of their agenda, we are essentially discussing here a shift in motivation rather than of primary objective. I seek refuge in God, my witness and my protector.

12 Latin: within the powers.

13 See 38:40 in Chapter 11.

14 The preponderance of evidence would be against that eventuality in my view, but one has to allow it as a possibility.

Both the first and second responses above constitute denial under the protocol. By responding with denial, God's retribution becomes binding[13] from that point onwards.

In any eventuality, delivery of the detonating statement effects a change in legal status for the ruling elites of our single, unified worldwide system of governance and, by definition, for the whole of mankind also.

Naturally, I have no knowledge of when punishment will come. All I know is that now all components of the protocol for Muḥammad's unique, universal mission of warning have been supplied to the elites of this time, absent repentance and a genuine change of direction, the punishments of God are henceforth binding.

But what if the elites should repent?[14] What is required of them?

What is required of the elites
They must repent of their own idolatry and turn to God alone; they must reverse those policies which have promoted all the sins characteristic of those communities previously destroyed under the protocol and listed in this work, and embrace their responsibilities on the basis of prudent fear of God, employing their power and influence to guide those they rule towards the Garden and away from the Fire. That is their proper business.

As a function of the stage of the Agenda the elites are currently rolling out, everyone is being forced to choose sides and, in the case of choosing submission to the present cult, to demonstrate allegiance to it. This requirement applies not only to the multitudes but also to the members of various echelons of the ruling caste themselves.

The ruling elite is neither monolithic nor will all its members be of one mind on every subject. It is therefore to be expected that some among them will have reservations about the current trajectory.

The elite structure comprises highly intelligent people, and anyone who has seriously considered eternal damnation as an existential reality is likely to be eager to avoid it. Thus, it is not beyond the realms of possibility that individual members of the elites themselves may choose to repent and attempt to reach others within their own class. In the following section I present some points for such people to consider.

The plan of the elite

Those at the very top of that single system of governance which is uniquely a feature of our time believe that they are about to place the capstone upon a plan which has been the work of centuries. All this is known to God:

> 108 They conceal from men, but they conceal not from God; and He is with them[1] when they plan by night what is displeasing to Him of speech;[2] and God encompasses what they do.
> (4:108)

The elites have, by devious and terrible means, over centuries constructed — against the will and interests of those they rule — the single, unified system of governance we have referred to many times in this presentation. It is a matter of no little irony that they have thereby brought about the very conditions required for completion of Muḥammad's mission to all mankind under the protocol, for the plan of the evildoers is against themselves, did they but know it:

> 123 And thus[1] have We appointed in every city its greatest lawbreakers, that they should scheme therein; and they scheme only against themselves, and they perceive not.
> (6:123)

An idolatrous system always requires more of those who serve it. But more than that, the one whom such people serve, be it wittingly or unwittingly, is an enemy to them:

> 16 As the likeness of the satan:[1] — when he says to man: "Deny thou!" then, when he denies, he says: "I am quit of thee; I fear God, the Lord of All Creation!"
> 17 So[1] the final outcome for both is that they[2] are in the Fire, they[3] abiding eternally therein; and that is the reward of the wrongdoers.[4]
> (59:16-17)

> 22 And the satan[1] will say when the matter is concluded: "God promised you the promise of truth;[2] and I promised you, but I betrayed[3] you. And I had not over you any authority except to call you — and you responded to me;[4] so blame not me, but blame yourselves. I cannot aid you, and you cannot aid me. I deny your ascribing to me a partnership[5] before; the wrongdoers:[6] for them is a painful punishment."
> (14:22)

I urge those in places of genuine influence who read these words to consider that there may still be time to change course. No matter what repercussions may result for them in this life, they pale in comparison with suffering in Eternity.

We will close the topic of the plan of the elite with the following segment:

> 13 It is a decisive word,
> 14 And it is not in jest.
> 15 They plan a plan —
> 16 And I plan a plan.
> 17 So grant thou respite[1] to the false claimers of guidance;[2] grant thou them respite awhile.
> (86:13-17)

Final word

I would like the reader to note that I nowhere inveigh against the existence of a ruling elite. It is entirely natural that there should be one, and no other scenario is envisaged in the Qur'an.

My entire argument directed towards the ruling elites of today is that they have become excessively miscreant and deviant. Moreover, they have exceeded the bounds of what is right to such a degree that they have created a system which promotes the totality of those sins for which all previous communities for which we have data were destroyed under the protocol.

It is the result of those policies which the elites themselves have pursued over centuries which has made both necessary and possible implementation of the universal mission of warning pertaining to Muḥammad, the last prophet of God, under that frequent historical process found in the Qur'an and which we have called here the God protocol.

> 102 Do they await save the like of the days of those who passed away before them? Say thou: "Then wait — I am with you waiting."[1]
> (10:102)

> 23 The practice[1] of God which was before[...].[2] And thou wilt not find in the practice[3] of God any change.[4]
> (48:23)

The Mysterious Letters of The Qur'an

A Complete Solution

Sam Gerrans

THE MYSTERIOUS LETTERS OF THE QUR'AN
A COMPLETE SOLUTION

SAM GERRANS is an English writer and independent thinker with backgrounds in languages, media, strategic communications, and technologies. He is driven by commitment to ultimate meaning and focused on authentic approaches to revelation and Realpolitik.

His first and major work The Qur'an: A Complete Revelation was completed in order to provide a legitimate formal basis for his principal objective which is described in full in his book The God Protocol. That work identifies the mechanism the Qur'an contains by which miscreant ruling elites of the past were made accountable before God and applies the same principle to the worldwide ruling elite of today.

The Mysterious Letters of the Qur'an: A Complete Solution presents a convincing, cohesive, and logical description of the purposes and operations of those letters of a non-lexical character in the Qur'an which are called in Arabic al ḥurūf al muqaṭṭaʿāt (or the cut or disjointed letters), and called more generally in English the mysterious letters. Understanding of these letters has eluded Muslims for over 1,400 years, their default position being that any attempt to decode them is either futile or blasphemous.

Sam Gerrans submits his solution to this longstanding enigma in support of — and by way of authentication of — his broader project as summarised in The God Protocol.

Acknowledgements

My first debt of gratitude is to God, the Subtle, the Aware: for His guidance; for this task and everything necessary for its fulfilment, and for my inability to be truly satisfied with anything other than its completion.

My next debt of gratitude is to my wife, Karina Gerrans. Her faith, kindness, and belief in this mission have never wavered for a moment, and her reflections, observations and questions have helped greatly.

Our daughter Edith also saw much less of Daddy in her early years than she should have due to my commitment to this project. I tell myself that one day she will understand why this was important, and that we can make up for lost time.

I gratefully acknowledge all those who made financial contributions to this project. They were seeking the pleasure of God, and I understand that, but the fact is that their donations and personal messages of support (all of which I read) helped sustain me during this project. The result is the new edition of The Qur'an: A Complete Revelation, publication of The God Protocol, and a substantially improved solution to the mysterious letters. None of this would have been possible without their support.

I wish to acknowledge Hakim Sahin for his kind assistance expunging minor errors from the final manuscripts.

And I wish particularly to thank Said Mirza. His generous support on all fronts as well as his personal friendship made a difficult path easier to walk.

To those who might think that the presentation here presupposes certain qualities, I can only say that the quality of my work has been tediously geared to the amount of time and effort put in. Perhaps if I were brighter it would not all have taken so long. I claim nothing for myself beyond that I am a man who was determined to do his own due diligence on the Qur'an, a man who can read a book for himself and with his brain fully engaged, and who has been endowed with a capacity for persistence. God has blessed my affair. I have been enabled to complete my work. For that, I am deeply grateful.

I am indebted to Said Mirza and Vasily Gerrans for reading the torturous first draft of Solution to the Mysterious Letters of the Qur'an and for their feedback on it.

Preface

In this book I present a solution to the 1,400 year-old enigma embedded within the sacred scripture given by God to Prophet Muḥammad as a message for all mankind. That phenomenon is known in Arabic as al ḥurūf al muqaṭṭaʿāt (the cut or disjointed letters), and in English as the mysterious letters.

This book contains two analyses. The first is Framework for Qur'anic Methods of Exegesis and the second is Solution to the Mysterious Letters of the Qur'an. Together they present the same solution to the mysterious letters from different angles.

I reached a full understanding of the operations and mechanics of the mysterious letters at the close of 2020 but felt pressured, given world events at that time, to concentrate my forces on completion of The God Protocol. As a result, I was not able then to give the mysterious letters the attention they deserved prior to the 2021 release of The Qur'an: A Complete Revelation and The God Protocol.

I have now revised (both amplified and refined) some portions of my work on the mysterious letters (here: Solution to the Mysterious Letters of the Qur'an). There is no change to the logic, it is simply that, having spent some time away from this subject, I have returned to it better able to explain my findings to people who do not happen to be me.

Framework for Qur'anic Methods of Exegesis has its genesis in periods of fasting towards the end of 2021.

While these two presentations may be read in either order, Framework for Qur'anic Methods of Exegesis is presented first since it has a lower entry point and provides a gentler introduction to my broader method. Its contents will, it is hoped, pique the curiosity of the reader sufficiently for him to want to apply himself to Solution to the Mysterious Letters of the Qur'an.

The analyses which follow are, of necessity, not only written in a manner which is formulaic and highly structured (bound as I am to use terminology consistently), they are also studded with bullet points and punctuated by summaries. While the result is, perhaps, a victory of martial order over literary style, the approach taken here is the one best suited to the task in hand.

General Introduction

This book serves to pull together the main threads of my creative output in the area of Qur'anic investigation and analysis over the course of almost a decade.

Not only does it supply a comprehensive solution to the longstanding enigma presented by the mysterious letters of the Qur'an, it provides a broad and clear framework in which optimal processes of exegesis[1] upon the Qur'an using tools such as those which have informed my own engagement with the text may be undertaken — the ability to make interpretative determinations on a basis which comports with the Qur'an's internal architecture being understood here as the sine qua non of any community wishing to place that scripture at the centre of its social and legal systems.

The tools I refer to are those methods of hermeneutics[2] which underpin my books The Qur'an: A Complete Revelation and The God Protocol.[3] These tools provide intellectual independence from — and spiritual insulation against — assumed values for key terms the values for which have, historically, been extraneously derived and then imposed upon the reader of the Qur'an in a manner which presupposes rather than demonstrates those values.

Both Framework for Qur'anic Methods of Exegesis and Solution to the Mysterious Letters of the Qur'an utilise some of the same methods, the result providing a showcase for those methods in a format which is less soporific than would result from extensive demonstrations and explanations without a motivating context.[4]

Those who have followed my work over time will be aware that at the close of 2020 I published an analysis and demonstration of that phenomenon found in the Qur'an known in Arabic as al ḥurūf al muqaṭṭaʿāt (the cut or disjointed letters), and in English as the mysterious letters.[5]

That analysis is presented here as Solution to the Mysterious Letters of the Qur'an, with some amplification and clarification of certain points.

---

1 By exegesis I mean here critical explanation and / or interpretation of the Qur'an.

2 By hermeneutics I mean a theory or method of scriptural interpretation. By methods of hermeneutics I mean here procedures I have developed such as pan-textual analysis (by which all instances of particular words or roots are compared to see if definitions currently applied to them — especially where points of dogma Traditionalist Islam insists upon hinge thereon — are sustained in every case and, where they are not, consistent definitions derived) and Qur'anic definitions, by which term I mean cases where the Qur'an is shown to provide its own definitions for certain words, acting as its own dictionary.

3 Both may be accessed in their entirety free at quranite.com. The Arabic original, English translation, and all notes to The Qur'an: A Complete Revelation are available online also at reader.quranite.com thanks to the efforts of Said Mirza.

4 However, here, as in The God Protocol, the outcome is not dependent on those cases where key terms are demonstrated in The Qur'an: A Complete Revelation to be in tension with those Traditionalist Islam ascribes to them, and insists upon where the religion requires them.

5 Published initially in December 2020 as a seven-hour video on my YouTube channel and subsequently in hard copy as part of the appendix to the books listed in the footnote above. A first attempt was included in my work of 2017, and certain features from that analysis remain in the final presentation here.

I was, as I stated when I wrote my conclusions to Solution to the Mysterious Letters of the Qur'an, then ignorant of their application; that is, I was not able to show there what the mysterious letters are for.

This deficiency, understandably, impacts the motivation of readers.

And despite my best efforts in the direction of rendering that presentation in as accessible a form as possible, it makes certain demands upon the reader. Yet without a clear demonstration of an application, how far is it reasonable to expect even the serious-minded student of the Qur'an at whom my work is, in part, directed to exert himself in order to follow that analysis? Attention spans are dwindling appreciably, while distractions are both constant and alluring. And I sympathise: if one were never to have the opportunity to drive a car, how many of us would be interested in the details of auto mechanics?

Framework for Qur'anic Methods of Exegesis shows what the mysterious letters are for; that is, it demonstrates their application.

The conclusions of Solution to the Mysterious Letters of the Qur'an form the foundation upon which Framework for Qur'anic Methods of Exegesis builds. I do not in Framework for Qur'anic Methods of Exegesis demonstrate the conclusions which form that foundation.

These works may be read in either order, but Framework for Qur'anic Methods of Exegesis is less complex than the analysis which forms Solution to the Mysterious Letters of the Qur'an. Thus, in addition to the identification of a clear framework within which processes of intrinsically Qur'anic exegesis may be conducted, it is hoped that two further corresponding benefits might accrue to the reader of Framework for Qur'anic Methods of Exegesis: firstly, that of gaining the opportunity to see aspects of my hermeneutic toolkit where they are applied to a single and definable end and, secondly, that of gaining a reason to invest the time and mental resources required for a proper study of Solution to the Mysterious Letters of the Qur'an.

Finally, I should state why the first part of this book is entitled Framework for Qur'anic Methods of Exegesis rather than Framework for Methods of Qur'anic Exegesis. The object there is something other than solely to provide a framework for methods of exegesis upon the text of the Qur'an; it is to provide a framework for methods of exegesis upon the text of the Qur'an wherein the methods of exegesis themselves derive from the text of the Qur'an and not elsewhere.

Framework for Qur'anic Methods of Exegesis

And when the Qur'an is recited: heed it and listen attentively, that you might obtain mercy.

The Qur'an: A Complete Revelation

Introduction

Foreword

Framework for Qur'anic Methods of Exegesis supports a key conclusion of Solution to the Mysterious Letters of the Qur'an which is that the Qur'an is possessed of an intrinsic architecture in subordination to which its constituent sūrahs form a number of groups or sets.

But it expands also upon that conclusion, establishing that each set has its own focus and discernible audiences,[1] and that understanding of these features provides a framework which may facilitate processes of exegesis (i.e. of methodical, critical explanation) upon the Qur'an free of a number of problems.

For his part, the Traditionalist Muslim[2] understands the contents of the Qur'an in terms of what he calls Meccan and Medinan sūrahs,[3] and he tailors his exegesis to varying degrees on that basis.

He also assume the conclusions of his own religion, and excludes on that basis anyone who does not agree with him from access to the Qur'an.

His impositions upon the text inflict a range of problems on attempts at exegesis which first derive from, and then are exacerbated by, the practice of basing both definitions for key terms, and then for final interpretations, on the extraneous, extra-Qur'anic writings of later periods. That body of later writings is called the ḥadīṯ literature.

Such approaches acquired dominance in those societies which inherited, or acquired by other means, the Qur'anic revelation as their accepted scripture in the centuries subsequent to the lifetime of the Prophet.

At the root of much of the tension which resulted from this exegetical philosophy is the problem of what the Qur'an's imperatives to 'obey the Messenger' mean in a context in which the Messenger himself is no longer living, given a scripture which claims to be from God, complete, preserved, susceptible to reason, and sufficient for guidance.

1 In this presentation we use the term baseline addressees. By this we mean that to some degree the sūrahs of the Qur'an have intended audiences: while most are intended for all, some are intended, at least primarily, for men of piety, for example. These distinctions are explained later.

2 By this term I have in view those who take the Sunni, ḥadīṯ-based approach in general, but also those whose religion is conceived of in terms of historical and civilisational allegiances and predilections rather than by direct engagement with the contents of the Qur'an.

3 The word sūrah is used to mean a single chapter of the Qur'an. The Traditionalist Muslim divides the corpus of sūrahs into two along a fault line he discerns based on the location in which a sūrah is supposed (according to his extra-Qur'anic material) to have been revealed, namely, Mecca or Medina. Accordingly, one will find that indices to Arabic Qur'ans typically mark all sūrahs Meccan or Medinan.

In the absence of a sensible and acceptable resolution of this problem, much factionalism, enmity, distrust, intellectual torpidity, and obvious foolishness resulted, features which are lamentable, and widely acknowledged as such both within and without the church of Traditionalist Islam.

The Traditionalist's methods, even where intelligently applied, should be understood as capable of yielding only uneven, incomplete, or malformed results, compromised as they are by processes of derivative analogy originating in non-Qur'anic sources — which outcome is problematic in the context of a scripture which, again, claims to be from God, complete, preserved, susceptible to reason, and sufficient for guidance.

We take an uncompromisingly Qur'an-alone position[4] for reasons explained elsewhere.[5] However, people of a Qur'an-alone persuasion — i.e. those who, like me, reject Traditionalist's method — usually do no better than the scholars of the religion they seek to distance themselves from. Having, typically, been enabled by recent engagement with Western civilisation, itself in the throes of intellectual and moral atrophy, to shake off the rule-by-diktat of the mullahs, those who reject the Traditionalist's methods as specious adopt an eclectic, arbitrary, solipsistic approach to scripture, mirroring thereby many of the worst outcomes of the Protestant Reformation in response to the worst outcomes of the Catholic Church. Taken to its logical conclusion, such an approach leads to the complete fracture of societal norms, the atomisation of doctrine into personal — and personalised — preferences, and a general and debilitating spiritual incoherence.

The Traditionalist Muslim is against such an outcome, and I stand with him on that score. But simply sticking to his guns does not change the fact that, at least in my view, he is aiming at the wrong target.

I support the premises of the Traditional world, by which term I mean the premises of that world in which human rank is a function and a correlative of metaphysical reality. I have no antipathy towards religion in the true sense of that word. I just think that where wrong turns have been taken, that fact should be recognised and corrected. Without such measures, the further one continues, the more lost one ultimately is.

My own view is that God guides, or does not guide, a particular man. And I have no interest in compromise for its own sake. Thus, what follows is not an attempt to build bridges between factions. Factions will do what factions like doing. Rather, it is a framework upon which men of good will, fear of God, and sufficient rank — should such exist at this late stage in the present age — who choose to do so, may direct the development of methods of exegesis which are predicated entirely upon that about which all Muslims agree: the veracity and authenticity of the Qur'an.

4 Namely, that the Qur'an is from God, complete, preserved, susceptible to reason, and sufficient for guidance. See The Qur'an: A Complete Revelation for a full presentation of the original text on this basis, as well as for information on the methodologies which informed that work.

The Hebrew scriptures: parallels

We will begin by first considering the Hebrew scriptures as a case — although not an identical one — from which useful parallels may be drawn with respect to the Qur'an.

It is clear to all who read them, whether religious Jews or Christians, those who operate within the largely secular church of modern academic scholarship, or merely non-specialist but attentive readers, that the books which together comprise the present canons of Hebrew scriptures fall into a number of natural groupings. These groupings are based upon clear aggregates of thematic, textual, and stylistic features on the one hand, and purposes (or applications) on the other.

An immediate and obvious expression of what we mean is the word Tanakh itself.[6]

The term Tanakh is accepted parlance among Jews and some others for the Hebrew scriptures, being a vocalised acronym comprising the first Hebrew letter of each of the Masoretic Text's three traditional divisions: Torah (literally Instruction or Law), Nevi'im (Prophets), and Ketuvim (Writings) — hence T-N-K: Tanakh.

Clearly, one may drill down further. If we take the Writings (ketuvim), for example, we find that these divide into further categories:

- The Poetic Books (Psalms, Proverbs, and Job);
- The Five Megillot (Song of Songs, Book of Ruth, the Book of Lamentations, Ecclesiastes, and the Book of Esther);
- The Book of Daniel, Ezra–Nehemiah and the Books of Chronicles.

The Law (Torah) and the Prophets (Nevi'im) are likewise susceptible to further division and categorisation, the details of which need not detain us.

No one who engages with the Hebrew scriptures, no matter what his ideological orientation or scholarly background, would disregard the distinctions of genre, theme and focus which pertain to their parts. And if we limit our purview to pious readers of the texts, we may be certain that — while we will assume them to embrace all portions of the text as inspired scripture — they would never confuse the exegetical application of, say, Psalms, with that of the Book of Leviticus. While the books which comprise the various portions of the Tanakh may remain both intimately and transcendently connected in their minds (and correctly so, given the overlapping and interrelated themes and motifs which pervade the several genres), at the level of analysis and real-world application they are clearly of flavours so distinct as to make a full conflation between them unthinkable.

We assert that something similar, though not identical, applies in the case of the Qur'an.

6 The Hebrew Bible or Tanakh (/tɑːˈnɑːx/; Hebrew: תַּנַ"ךְ, pronounced [taˈnaχ] or [təˈnax]).

And it is for the inevitable impasse resulting from a conflation of precisely this type that Framework for Qur'anic Methods of Exegesis is intended to help resolve.

Summary

The object here is to identify those groupings by sūrah around dominant, distinguishing purposes and narrative flavour which are intrinsic to the Qur'an, the necessity for which is clear by analogy with the Hebrew scriptures.

As indicated, the Traditionalist Muslim admits a measure of the same rationale in his engagement with the Qur'an to the extent that he distinguishes sūrahs he claims were revealed prior to an event he calls the hijrah from those he claims were revealed subsequent to that event. In this — as in his treatment of the Qur'an in general — historical context and lexical definitions are either imported wholesale from, or highly coloured by, a later literature, the inherent problems of which method we have already touched upon.

The presentation which follows leads to the conclusion that all sūrahs of the Qur'an subsequent to sūrah 1 (al fātiḥah) belong to at least one of a total of five sets (i.e. groupings) of sūrahs. Moreover, the identification of sūrahs on this basis is shown to be an implicit function of the Qur'an's own structure and contents. As a result, the way is cleared, for those who so wish, to engage in processes of Qur'anic exegesis wherein — to return briefly for analogy to the Hebrew scriptures — there is no danger of treating Psalms on the same basis as the Book of Leviticus.

Since that previous research presented in this book as Solution to the Mysterious Letters of the Qur'an forms the basis from which what follows here proceeds, it is to the topic of the mysterious letters that we now turn.

The mysterious letters

Introduction

As we said in the Preface, the Qur'an includes within it a phenomenon which in Arabic is called al ḥurūf al muqaṭṭaʿāt (which means the cut or disjointed letters) and which in English tends to be called the mysterious letters.

This phenomenon comprises thirty instances of between one and five letters with no lexical value which together preface twenty-nine of the Qur'an's one-hundred-and-fourteen chapters.

The standard Traditionalist position is that the meaning of the mysterious letters is known to God alone and that any attempt to discern their import is, at best, condemned to failure and, at worst, an act of blasphemy.

Despite that dominant view many theories have been advanced on this subject, but none are impressive. And the sole case which claims a coherent model resorts to an ad hoc manipulation of the letters themselves in order to wring required outcomes from them.[7]

I have been privileged to be able to present a cogent solution to the mysterious letters which is demonstrably consistent with the contents of the Qur'an and free of any imposition upon the letters themselves.

That work requires separate, diligent study. And while it is not possible here to explain in full or justify those findings I present below in summary, I hope to provide readers with an introduction in this presentation to the analysis contained in Solution to the Mysterious Letters of the Qur'an which underpins it.

In the remainder of this section, I summarise the findings of that work as they pertain to this one.

Solution to the Mysterious Letters of the Qur'an

Solution to the Mysterious Letters of the Qur'an reveals all instances of the mysterious letters to be symbols of various types; that is: each instance of the mysterious letters is symbolic of something else.

In algebra, the symbol x may have a certain value (for example, of a particular number). Something similar applies in the case of the mysterious letters. Instances of the mysterious letters have values, and these values are, in each case, some discrete portion of the text of the Qur'an.

All instances of the mysterious letters prior to sūrah 50 fall into one of two sets of different types which we term the Writ Set and the Remembrance Set.

Sūrahs prior to sūrah 50 without an instance of the mysterious letters fall into neither set.

7 I am referring here to Rashad Khalifa's model predicated on the number nineteen. In order to extract what he needs from the available options he changes ن to نون.

The instances of the mysterious letters at sūrah 50 and beyond comprise a further type and occupy a further set which we term the Qur'an Set. This set contains all sūrahs from sūrah 50 to the end of the Qur'an — including all those without an instance of the mysterious letters.

We will now provide a brief summary of each set.

The Writ Set

The value of those instances of the mysterious letters which comprise the Writ Set is in all cases al fātiḥah (i.e. sūrah 1). No matter what formulation of letters makes up any individual instance of the Writ Set, the value of the symbol as a whole is sūrah 1; that is: it is not that any of the individual letters which comprise that instance of the mysterious letters are each equal to some portion of sūrah 1.[8]

The Remembrance Set

The value of those instances of the mysterious letters which comprise the Remembrance Set in all cases comprises one of more of five narrative blocks which follow the opening context of sūrah 19. Unlike in the Writ Set, each individual letter in the Remembrance Set is bears a value (or values).

The Qur'an Set

The value of the mysterious letters governing the Qur'an Set (i.e. all sūrahs from 50 to the end of the Qur'an) results from the "fusion" of the value of the Writ Set with those of the Remembrance Set.

Summary

- Prior to sūrah 50, the mysterious letters comprise two sets of distinct types, each with its own values and logic: the Writ Set and the Remembrance Set;
- The values which pertain to sūrahs in the Writ Set and the Remembrance Set affect those sūrahs only; sūrahs prior to sūrah 50 without mysterious letters fall into neither set;

8 With some measure of qualification, the details of which are in Solution to the Mysterious Letters of the Qur'an.

- The values of the Writ Set and the Remembrance Set "fuse" into a further type in qāf at sūrah 50 which point marks the beginning of the Qur'an Set;
- The Qur'an Set comprises all sūrahs (including those with no mysterious letters) from sūrah 50 through to the end of the Qur'an.

All instances of the mysterious letters and the sets to which they pertain are listed below:[9]

sūrah 2	alif lām mīm	Writ Set
sūrah 3	alif lām mīm	Writ Set
sūrah 7	alif lām mīm ṣād	Writ Set
sūrah 10	alif lām rā	Writ Set
sūrah 11	alif lām rā	Writ Set
sūrah 12	alif lām mīm rā	Writ Set
sūrah 13	alif lām rā	Writ Set
sūrah 14	alif lām rā	Writ Set
sūrah 15	alif lām rā	Writ Set
sūrah 19	kāf hā yā ʿayn ṣād	Remembrance Set sūrah 20	ṭā hā	Remembrance Set
sūrah 26	ṭā sīn mīm	Remembrance Set
sūrah 27	ṭā sīn	Remembrance Set
sūrah 28	ṭā sīn mīm	Remembrance Set
sūrah 29	alif lām mīm	Writ Set
sūrah 30	alif lām mīm	Writ Set
sūrah 31	alif lām mīm	Writ Set
sūrah 32	alif lām mīm	Writ Set
sūrah 36	yā sīn	Remembrance Set sūrah 38	ṣād	Remembrance Set
sūrah 40	ḥā mīm	Writ Set
sūrah 41	ḥā mīm	Writ Set
sūrah 42	ḥā mīm	Writ Set
	ʿayn sīn qāf[10]
sūrah 43	ḥā mīm	Writ Set
sūrah 44	ḥā mīm	Writ Set
sūrah 45	ḥā mīm	Writ Set
sūrah 46	ḥā mīm	Writ Set
sūrah 50	qāf	Qur'an Set
sūrah 68	nūn	Qur'an Set

A final synthesis and simplification follows:

9 Additionally, there are two "implicit" phenomena which augment the mysterious letters (at sūrah 55 and sūrah 73), which we term implicit instances, the details of which are outside the purview of this analysis.

10 The instance of the mysterious letters in ʿayn sīn qāf is parenthetical to the broader sequence. All operations and mechanics in this regard are described and demonstrated in the second part of this book.

- Prior to sūrah 50 every sūrah beyond al fātiḥah (sūrah 1) belongs to one of the following:
  - The Writ Set;
  - The Remembrance Set;
  - No set.
- From sūrah 50 to the end of the Qur'an every sūrah belongs to the Qur'an Set.

We now summarise the values for each set, after which we will progress to the main portion of the present analysis.

The value of the Writ Set

Sūrah 1 (al fātiḥah) is the value for all instances in the Writ Set, and applies to the instances which comprise the set irrespective of their order in the sequence.[11]

> 1 In the name of God, the Almighty, the Merciful.
> 2 Praise belongs to God, the Lord of All Creation,
> 3 The Almighty, the Merciful,
> 4 Master of the Day of Judgment.
> 5 Thee alone do we serve, and from Thee alone do we seek help.
> 6 Guide Thou us on the straight path,
> 7 The path of those whom Thou hast favoured; not of those who incur wrath, nor of those who go astray.
> (1:1-7)

The values of the Remembrance Set

The first instance of the Remembrance Set is at sūrah 19 and comprises there the five letters kāf hā yā ʿayn ṣād. The values which attach to these letters comprise those blocks of text within sūrah 19 which treat of Jesus, Abraham, Moses, Ishmael and Idrīs respectively:[12]

- Jesus: 19:16-33;
- Abraham: 19:41-50;
- Moses: 19:51-53;
- Ishmael: 19:54-55;
- Idrīs: 19:56-57.

11 Accordingly, one must regard a deep appreciation of al fātiḥah to be of great importance. One will note that the sūrah presents a treaty between a plurality of believers on the one hand, and God on the other.

12 These segments run concurrently, admitting a single portion of intervening text between that treating of Jesus at 19:16-33 and that treating of Abraham at 19:41-50.

Unlike the Writ Set, where the value of al fātiḥah attaches to the symbol as a whole in every case,[13] each individual letter in the Remembrance Set bears a textual value — or values — discretely, and a single letter holds either single or multiple values which descend through the set according to operations and mechanics specific to that set.

The value of the Qur'an Set

The Qur'an Set comprises all sūrahs from sūrah 50 to the end of the Qur'an, and its value results from a "fusion" of the value of the Writ Set with those of the Remembrance Set.

•

This concludes our summary of Solution to the Mysterious Letters of the Qur'an for the purposes of following the present analysis.

Further developments

Introduction

This section summarises developments subsequent to the bulk of that analysis which informs that presentation entitled here Solution to the Mysterious Letters of the Qur'an and which comprises the second portion of this book.

In that work I anticipate the possibility of future applications for the findings I present there while declaring my own ignorance of what those applications might be.

The present analysis not only supplies a textual, technical confirmation of those findings summarised in the previous section, it both expands upon those findings and provides access to an application for them.

These later developments establish all sūrahs of the Qur'an beyond sūrah 1 (al fātiḥah) as members of definable sets with their own discernible baseline addressees[14] and thematic focus, which result has the effect of allowing future exegetical engagements with the Qur'an to make appropriate distinctions between Psalms and Leviticus, as it were.

13 With some measure of qualification, the details of which are in Solution to the Mysterious Letters of the Qur'an.

14 This term is defined shortly.

I have long since recognised that I am incapable of explaining in a linear, rational manner why I follow particular paths in my creative process, but this is not surprising given that my creative process is neither linear nor rational.[15] Therefore, I will simply walk the reader through the product of my intellectual intuition[16] without attempting to convince either the reader or myself that it is the function of a process that either of us might understand in the modern Western sense of that word.[17]

New insights

The first key development was the realisation, now rather obvious, that sūrahs prior to sūrah 50 which participate in neither the Writ Set nor the Remembrance Set themselves comprise a set.

Since the first sūrah in this newly-recognised entity is sūrah 4, which sūrah opens with the words 'O mankind', I term this grouping of sūrahs the Mankind Set.

I then read the Qur'an through on the basis of the four groupings thus identified:

- The Mankind Set (sūrahs 4, 5, 6, 8, 9, 16, 17, 18, 21, 22, 23, 24, 25, 33, 34, 35, 37, 39, 47, 48 and 49);
- The Qur'an Set (sūrahs 50 through to 114);
- The Writ Set (sūrahs 2, 3, 7, 10, 11, 12, 13, 14, 15, 29, 30, 31, 32, 40, 41, 42, 43, 44, 45 and 46);
- The Remembrance Set (sūrahs 19, 20, 26, 27, 28, 36 and 38).

Certain features which have struck me repeatedly over my longstanding engagement with the Qur'anic text impacted me again, but more forcibly, distinctly and pointedly than before due to reading the entire corpus on the basis of these four sets.

While we are speaking here of relative emphasis rather than of characteristics exclusive to each set, the following points were apparent:

- The Mankind Set:
  - Applies to all mankind;
  - Provides a general matrix for improvement;
  - Contains:
    - The significant majority of verses which treat of legal matters and which permit of inclusion as the basis for a legal system;
    - Most major portions which treat unambiguously of events within the lifetime of the Prophet (i.e. narrative current events now become history — and clearly intended to be treated subsequent to the fact as historical);
    - Most direct, vocative appeals by God to Muḥammad in 'O Prophet' (8:64, 8:65, 8:70, 9:73, 33:1, 33:28, 33:45, 33:50 and 33:59),[18] both in 'O Messenger' (5:41 and 5:67), and all but one of the direct imperatives to 'obey the Messenger' (4:49, 5:92, 24:54, 24:56 and 47:33).[19]
- The Qur'an Set:
  - I knew as a result of my work on the mysterious letters that the Qur'an Set applies to all mankind since it comprises a series of ten possible readings[20] which together have at least three applications:
    - As a nightly vigil intended to fortify believers;
    - As a witness intended both to make converts and identify rejecters;
    - As a warning to communities under what I term the God protocol.[21]
  - What was new that emerged from this reading was recognition of a contiguous block of ten sūrahs (namely, sūrah 57 through to sūrah 66) the narrative flavour and focus of which are consonant with those of the Mankind Set.
- The Writ Set:
  - Applies principally to the plurality of men of piety;
  - Serves to provide guidance to the above category.
- The Remembrance Set:
  - Applies principally to the individual man called by God for a particular mission;
  - Serves to fortify the above category in those conflicts which arise in consequence of his mission.[22]

What follows treats of what we term baseline addressees. By baseline addressees we mean that segment of mankind which meets the minimum standard required by a given set.

My full reading of the Qur'an informed by recognition of the sets identified to this point resulted in the conclusions which follow:

- The baseline addressees of the Mankind Set are all mankind;
- The baseline addressees of the Qur'an Set are all mankind;
- The baseline addressees of the Writ Set are a subset of all mankind: namely, the plurality of those of piety or 'prudent fear';[23]

15 I expand somewhat on this point in the introduction to Solution to the Mysterious Letters of the Qur'an.

16 Which term and definition I borrow here from René Guénon.

17 This is not to suggest that the findings themselves defy analysis or understanding in our currently accepted sense; quite the contrary: they invite them. But I cannot explain how the insights which spawned them were arrived at in terms of those faculties by which they are to be understood. In short, art may be susceptible to understanding by means of reason; but art is not born of reason. This is the distinction I wish to draw.

18 The remaining verses which contain 'O Prophet' are 60:12, 65:1, 66:1 and 66:9 and are in the Hidden Set, a set with direct thematic connections with the Mankind Set, the features of which are discussed shortly.

19 The remaining verse which contains a direct imperative to 'obey the Messenger' is 64:1, again in the Hidden Set, a set with direct thematic connections with the Mankind Set the features of which are discussed shortly.

22 I.e. between him and the broader society (family, society, political structures, etc.).

23 This is how I render the Arabic term taqwā in my translation.

- The baseline addressees of the Remembrance Set are a subset of the plurality of those of piety: namely, individual men called by God for particular missions.[24]

We observe the graded filtration that results from three widths of gauge: while the first gauge admits all mankind, the second gauge admits only a subset of all mankind, while the third gauge admits only a subset of those admitted by the second gauge.

I also noted that:

- The Mankind Set, the Writ Set, the Remembrance Set and the Qur'an Set each have their own dominant flavour and focus;
- The Qur'an Set contains a subset of ten sūrahs the flavour and focus of which are also those of the Mankind Set. We term this subset the Hidden Set.

A further, seemingly unrelated — but pivotal — insight, one which both informs what follows and confirms what precedes, attaches to the features of verse endings across the Qur'an, and it is to this subject that we now turn.

Verse endings in the Qur'an

Introduction

Extended periods of both reading and listening to the Qur'an in Arabic, combined with both reflection and fasting, led me to recognition of the fact that certain distinct rhythmic patterns mark the final syllables of almost all verses in the Qur'an.

The development to completion of this insight forms the substance of the analysis which follows.

There are three distinct patterns. We render these pattern A, pattern B and pattern C in our notation, and refer to these three patterns collectively as the general model.[25]

24 It is a (currently unpopular) fact that all principal actors in the Qur'anic narrative are male. It is true that Mary (Maryam) features in the Qur'an; however, her primary quality beyond her faith and dedication to God is her chastity. While both men and women have comparable value and may earn equivalent rewards with God, the notion that men and women are in any sense interchangeable finds no purchase in the Qur'an. While I certainly favour women aspiring to those degrees of faith which make the Remembrance Set applicable to them, their defining model there is provided by Mary.

25 We should add here that in few cases verse markers (i.e. those visual markers by which verses are delineated in both Arabic and non-Arabic Qur'ans) split a single sentence in two. One example is at 2:219-220. The segment which crosses the verse marker there reads: [...]Thus does God make plain to you the proofs, that you might reflect / Upon the world and the Hereafter[...]. Clearly, these phrases comprise a single thought. In almost all such cases the visual markers have no material bearing on the findings of this analysis since the component ending on both sides of the verse division is the same, and our thesis stands on the occurrence

The vast majority of verse endings in the Qur'an conform to pattern A with 5,256 verses, fewer to pattern B with 850, and fewer still to pattern C with 95.

At a certain point the distinctions which produce patterns A, B and C break down, for reasons we will understand shortly. This breakdown of distinctions results in two further categories of verse endings, which we term components, and which we render in our notation D^1 and D^2.

There is a total of thirty-four components in either D^1 or D^2.

We use the term component endings to refer to patterns A, B and C and components D^1 and D^2 collectively.

Thus, a total of five possible component endings conclude all verses in the Qur'an.

It happens that the five possible component endings occur in unique[26] combinations in that text which comprises each of the five sets now identified.
We term the exact, unique combination of the occurrence of component endings in the case of each set the signature.

In addition to the unique correlation between signatures and sets, one of each of those five component endings which comprise signatures (i.e. patterns A, B and C and components D^1 and D^2) bears an exclusive correlation with one of the five sets. We term that component ending in each case the set's distinguishing feature.

Those verses in each set which end in the component ending of that set's distinguishing feature will be seen shortly to provide narrative evidence by which the features for each set which we arrived at on the basis of a reflective reading may be considered. We will see that the broader findings here not only confirm the underlying analysis of Solution to the Mysterious Letters of the Qur'an in that they support the groupings of sūrahs we identify there as sets, they confirm — and provide a technical basis for — the insights which follow from that analysis as summarised in the previous section.

In four of the total of five sets, verses with component endings in the distinguishing feature comprise a subset of the total verses of that set.

or not of particular component endings in a given set. The verses at 47:20-21 present a further case: [...]But better for them are / Obedience and fitting speech[...]. Again, this is a single thought and neither part forms a sentence without the other. The same text is translated by both Muhammad Asad and Saheeh International, for example, as a single thought, and various qaris (experts in a highly stylised reading of the Qur'an in Arabic) also ignore the verse marker in their reading here, giving precedence to the sense of the text over the visual marker which disrupts it in this case (such is the practice of one of my personal favourite practitioners of this genre, Mohamed Rachad Al Sharif). No matter how one parses the first part of that thought which strides two verses (i.e. as it stands at the end of the first verse, or by joining the 'hanging' phrase with its mate in the subsequent verse) the outcome is the same: a component ending in D^2. Thus, this point has no impact upon our analysis, either.

26 I use unique throughout in the (correct) sense of unrepeated, one-of-a-kind, meaning existing nowhere else, not in the fuzzy, modern American sense of interesting or compelling and therefore capable of comparison or intensification (cf. more unique and very unique). Correctly speaking, something is either unique or it is not.

The Writ Set consists entirely of verse endings in pattern A. However, it is directly prefaced by al fātiḥah (itself also entirely in pattern A), which provides the distinguishing feature for this set, for reasons we will later be able to appreciate.

The occurrence of those component endings which form the signature for each set is below. The distinguishing feature in each case is in bold.

Writ Set:	A
Hidden Set:	A | B
Mankind Set:	A | B | C | D¹ | D²
Qur'an Set:	A | B | C | D²
Remembrance Set:	A | B | D¹ | D²

In what follows we will consider the five component endings, signatures, and distinguishing features more closely, and see on what basis distinguishing features are identified.

Terms, concepts, and system of notation

The component endings with which we will be dealing are simple. But since they exist by virtue of their particular distinctions, we need a way to discuss those distinctions distinctly. The purpose of this segment is to provide the terms, concepts, and system of notation we need to do that, none of which requires pre-existing specialist knowledge to understand.[27]

We begin with general concepts.

A component ending for our purposes is a closed packet of sound: a packet of sound which begins and ends in consonants and between which vowels may or may not occur.

In English, consonant sounds include those commonly associated with the letters b, c, d, f, g, h, j, l, m, n, p, q, r, s, t, v, w, z.[28] All consonant sounds are represented by • in our notation.

In English, vowel sounds include those commonly associated with the letters a, e, i, o, u. Vowel sounds can be short (the a in cat; the i in bit), or long (the a in father; the ee in seems). In our notation - represents any short vowel sound while — represents any long vowel sound. Thus, •-•- is both butter and wicker, while •—•- is both father and barter.[29]

27 Specialists in linguistics and metre may be scandalised at my cavalier treatment of their areas of expertise. The object here is to provide a tool equal to the task, nothing more.

28 One assumes in what follows educated British English (Received Pronunciation).

29 We note that identical sound patterns may happen to rhyme but do not have to. The words biddy, wicker, and butter have the same sound pattern (i.e. •-•-), but they do not rhyme.

The next concept we need is the syllable. There are two syllables in water, three in absolute, and four in undercover. In our system of notation water is shown as •—•-, absolute as -••-•—•, and undercover as -••-•-•-. As mentioned above, the syllables of all five components endings in our analysis are closed, both beginning and ending in a consonant.

The final concept we need is the diphthong. A diphthong is a sound formed by the combination of two vowels. In a diphthong the sound begins as one vowel sound and moves towards another. Common diphthongs in English correspond with the letter combinations oy/oi, as in boy or coin, and ou/ow, as in cloud or cow.

The interesting thing about diphthongs for our purposes is that they are neither short vowels nor long vowels but something in-between. We indicate diphthongs by means of /. Thus boycott (where the oy sound is a diphthong) is •/•-•.

Single consonants in the Arabic text are marked by • in our notation and possess no features requiring further comment.

Arabic uses three long vowels: ā, ū, ī. While there are factors affecting the precise pronunciation, these sounds correspond roughly to ah, oo, and ee respectively in English. These sounds are represented by the long-vowel symbol — in our notation.

Arabic uses three short vowels: a, u, i. Again, while there exist further nuances in real-world pronunciation, these sounds correspond roughly to the a in bat, the u in bush, and the i in bin respectively in English. These sounds are represented by the short-vowel symbol - in our notation.

Arabic also features diphthongs, and these are represented by / in our notation.

Finally, Arabic allows for a feature absent in English: the doubled consonant. Where these occur in Arabic the doubling of the consonant is heard in pronunciation.[30] In our notation such cases are indistinguishable from other consecutive consonants.

The remaining items we will use in our notation are:

- * which denotes a wildcard (namely, case ending or other elided items);[31]
- (-) which indicates that a short vowel is optional.

30 That is, it results in a marked elongation of the consonant sound. While English features doubled consonants in writing (e.g. hugging), there is no change in the length of the consonant sound in such cases.

31 Classical Arabic features endings which express the grammatical function of words in a sentence. English speakers who care about the particulars of their language will find that the difference between who and whom provides a measure of orientation in this regard. Details which pertain to other elided items are found in an extended footnote which attaches to the end of the introduction to pattern C.

We will look now at the patterns themselves. What follows naturally pertains to the Arabic text of the Qur'an, but no knowledge of Arabic is needed to understand it.[32]

The component endings for all verses in the Qur'an are listed in tabulated form in the addenda section to this part of this book.

Pattern A

Pattern A is •—•*

Pattern A is, as we have said, by far the most frequent in the Qur'an, and all five sets are predominantly comprised of it.

And, again, the Writ Set is unique among sets in that it is comprised exclusively of endings in pattern A.

We will now unpack the component symbols which make up the notation for pattern A before considering examples from the text.

The first • indicates any consonant, the — indicates any long vowel, the second • indicates any consonant, while the wildcard symbol * indicates any feature which occurs subsequent to the pattern, namely: case ending or other elided items.

Thus, this pattern consists of a long vowel bordered by a consonant on other side.

Our convention will be to present the component ending in notation, then sūrah and verse number, then the verse ending in transliterated English in which the features which match the notation are in bold. Following this, we will unpack all parts of the component ending.

•—•*
1:1 *ar-raḥīm
Consonant [here ḥ], long vowel [here ī], consonant [here m], followed by nothing [i.e. no wildcard].

•—•*
2:4 yūqinūna
Consonant [here n], long vowel [here ū], consonant [here n], followed by a [i.e. wildcard].

32 Since we are writing in English, we will be indicating the features of component endings from left to right, the direction we read and write in English, while Arabic, of course, is written from right to left.

•—•*
2:20 qadīrun
Consonant [here d], long vowel [here ī], consonant [here r], followed by un [i.e. wildcard].

•—•*
2:176 ba'īdin
Consonant [here ʿ], long vowel [here ī], consonant [here d], followed by in [i.e. wildcard].
•—•*
2:206 al-mihādu
Consonant [here h], long vowel [here ā], consonant [here d], followed by u [i.e. wildcard].

The A pattern is highly regular; however, the following examples are worthy of note:

•—•*
4:3 ta'ūlū
Consonant [here ʿ], long vowel [here ū], consonant [here l], followed by ū [i.e. wildcard].

•—•*
79:33 li'an'āmikum
Consonant [here ʿ], long vowel [here ā], consonant [here m], followed by ikum [wildcard]. The wildcard in this case is a possessive pronoun object.[33]

This accounts for all points of interest in pattern A.

Pattern B

Pattern B is •(-)•*

The first • indicates any consonant, the (-) indicates any optional short vowel, the second • indicates any consonant, while the wildcard symbol * indicates any feature which occurs subsequent to the pattern; namely, case ending or other elided items.

Thus, this pattern consists of two consonants and the absence of a long vowel.

•(-)•*
38:1 adh-dhikri
Consonant [here k], short vowel omitted, consonant [here r], wildcard ending in i.

33 Again, details which pertain to such elided items are found in an extended footnote which attaches to the end of the introduction to pattern C.

•(-)•*
51:1 dharwan
Consonant [here r], short vowel omitted, consonant [here w], wildcard ending in an.

•(-)•*
51:2 wiqran
Consonant [here q], short vowel omitted, consonant [here r], wildcard ending in an.

•(-)•*
52:13 da‘an
Consonant [here ʿ], short vowel omitted, consonant [here ʿ], wildcard ending in an.[34]

•(-)•*
51:9 ufika
Consonant [here f], short vowel [here i], consonant [here k], wildcard ending in a.

•(-)•*
53:1 hawā*
Consonant [here h], short vowel [here a], consonant [here w], wildcard ending in ā.

This accounts for all points of interest in pattern B.

Pattern C

Pattern C is •—•-•*

The first • indicates any consonant, the — indicates any long vowel, the second • indicates any consonant, the - indicates any short vowel, the third • indicates any consonant, while the wildcard symbol * indicates any feature which occurs subsequent to the pattern; namely, case ending or other elided items.

Thus, this pattern consists of three consonants, a first syllable in a long vowel, and a second syllable in a short vowel.

•—•-•*
37:5 al-mashhāriqi
Consonant [here sh], long vowel [here ā], consonant [here r], short vowel [here i], consonant [here q], followed by i [i.e. wildcard].

34 Here the ʿayn radical is doubled (as indicated by shadda in the Arabic).

•—•-•*
112:3 yūlad
Consonant [here y], long vowel [here ū], consonant [here l], short vowel [here a], consonant [here d], followed by nothing [i.e. no wildcard].

•—•-•*
79:13 wāḥidatun*
Consonant [here w], long vowel [here ā], consonant [here ḥ], short vowel [here i], consonant [here d], followed by atun [elided item and wildcard].[35]
This accounts for all points of interest in pattern C.

Recognising patterns

Before we consider diphthongs in detail, we will provide a context and basis for the main component endings we identify in this analysis. Since recognition of these is a function to some degree of their relative incidence in the text as a whole we will use an analogy of a journey by road for this purpose.[36]

All verses from 1:1 through to 17:106 are entirely in pattern A. This accounts for a stretch of some 2,128 verses — around a third of the entire corpus of the Qur'an. It is natural 35 In what we have seen above case endings, which are a feature of the grammar of Classical Arabic, when elided from verse endings reveal the three patterns we have identified to be fixed and firm in all cases, and we elide case endings on that basis when considering all verse endings. But a further key question remains to be decided: on what basis one should assess other non-core items which feature in verse endings. This question affects the parsing of syllables, which in turn impacts the identification of component endings in a number of cases. In terms of typical features, we have in view personal pronoun objects (e.g. me, you, him, etc.), any prepositions which may attach to them (e.g. to me, to you, to him, etc.), and possessive pronoun adjectives (e.g. mine, yours, his, etc.) including those which attach to verbs in Arabic. This question then extends to endings in tā marbūṭa and the Qur'an's atypical inclusion of certain features, particularly towards the end of the textual corpus. Do these items form part of the verse-ending pattern or not? The answer is not only that they do not, the text itself provides contexts by which the matters just summarised are made clear. The first of such contexts is sūrah 47 — which itself precedes all but two of those cases where the question it resolves are found. Every one of the 38 verses in sūrah 47 ends in a pronoun object or a pronoun object qualified by a preposition. Meanwhile, the noun or verb prior to these items is resoundingly in one of the three patterns which comprise the general model. The totality of sūrah 47, therefore, establishes the principle that the non-core items which attach to the end of each of its verses do not comprise part of patterns, and thus we elide all such items on that basis. A comparable case attaches to sūrah 56. Verses 56:1-3 end in tā marbūṭa — a fact which might potentially create ambiguity in certain circumstances. But since verses 51:6, 52:7, 70:1 and 77:7 end in precisely the same word as that which concludes each of the three verses at 56:1-3 — minus the "additional" tā marbūṭa — and are unambiguously in pattern C, the case is clear: the tā marbūṭa is a non-core item which does not comprise part of patterns, and thus we elide the tā marbūṭa on that basis. The above facts are then confirmed in all cases, first at 69:1-29, then at 69:30-32, and again at 70:11-14. Together, they provide clarity at 20:78, 21:66, 56:15, 74:38, 74:50-56, 75:1-6, 75:14-25, 79:6-14, 79:27-33, 79:42-46, 80:11-24, 80:32-42, 82:7-8, 84:6-7, 84:10, 88:1-5, 88:8-16, 88:25-26, 89:15-16, 89:24, 89:27-30, 90:11-20, 91:1-15, 94:1-4, 96:15-18, 98:1-8, 99:1-8, 101:1-3, 101:6-11, 104:1-9 and 109:4. A further case attaches to 77:8-12. There all words are clearly in pattern B, but have an "extra" tā as required by the verb conjugation. This establishes the "extra" tā as an elided feature, which fact both sets up and clarifies 81:1-14, 82:1-6 and 88:17-20. Additionally, at verse 99:3 the noun in pattern A (al-insān) establishes that both parts of what follows are elided. This fact then serves to preclude any possibility of ambiguity at 79:35 (and shows it to be in pattern B rather than two words together forming pattern C). Several points covered above apply in combination at 101:10, together allowing us to know that this verse is in pattern B (and that the following three pronouns of various types and the further additional atypical ending are elided since all are accounted for within the principles we describe here). A final related question pertains to how one regards that instance of the mysterious letters in ṭā hā at verse 20:1. These letters are usually written in transliteration, as here with long vowels. However, they are not signalled as long in the Arabic text and the vowels are read short. Depending on how one treats the vowels, the result is either pattern A or pattern B. In the event, I have opted for pattern B and marked it as such in the appendix to this presentation. But it should be noted that it makes no difference to the constitution of sound components in the sūrah since sūrah 20 contains both pattern A and pattern B elsewhere within it.

36 My inability to discuss in linear fashion the actual process by which various insights were arrived at having been touched on above I am here summarising the product of a number of processes which integrated reflection with analysis.

to regard the first change in verse ending in the order of the text as a significant event. Indeed, the effect is jolting, as though intended to wake one up — like applying the brakes after many miles of uninterrupted freeway driving.

The point at which we hit this first bump in the road is presented below together with the two verses in pattern A which precede it. The verse in pattern B itself is in italics.

> 105 And with the truth have We sent it down, and with the truth has it come down — and We sent thee only as a bearer of glad tidings and a warner —
> 106 And as a recitation We divided, that thou recite it to men in stages; and We have sent it down as a successive revelation.
> 107 Say thou: "Believe in it, or believe not"; those given knowledge before it, when it is recited to them, they fall on their faces in submission,[37]
> (17:105-107)

The reader may care to consider these verses in the context of the broader analysis; we must push on with our journey.

Sūrah 17 itself shortly concludes, after four further verses in pattern A.

Sūrah 18 then opens in a contiguous sequence of 102 verses entirely in pattern B, broken only by 18:93. Verse 18:93 is the first case of a diphthong ending to this point in our journey, which component ending will be understood to be in D^1 when the distinction between diphthongs is discussed. Thus, verse 18:93 marks the first feature to be distinct thus far from both pattern A (which comprises the freeway of the bulk of our journey) and pattern B (on which minor road we have travelled sufficiently long to become accustomed to its rhythm). It is also the only new feature in sūrah 18.[38]

To summarise: interruption to the plain drive from 1:1 to 17:106 entirely in pattern A is signalled at 17:107 by a single verse in pattern B, which feature is followed shortly by sizable block entirely in pattern B within which block a further key feature is introduced: the diphthong.

To continue on our journey then, the stretch from 18:94 to 20:8 is again in the new pattern B, intersected only by the following:

- Verses 18:103, 19:1 and 19:34-40 in pattern A;
- Verses 19:9, 19:42, 19:60 and 19:67.

These interruptions in the new pattern have the following effects:

37 The word which we translate as submission here is, as we have said, in what we now call pattern B. It would be indicated in the appropriate segment above sujadan.

38 It is also the only component ending of its type in the Mankind Set, and plays a role the significance of which we consider shortly.

- Verses 18:103 and 19:1 provide snippets which remind us of the long freeway from which we turned off, while verses 19:34-40 mark the sole interlude within that block of five contiguous narratives treating of five prophets which extends otherwise from 19:16 to 19:57;
- Verses 19:9, 19:42, 19:60 and 19:67 are not only all in a diphthong, they are all in the same word (Arabic: shay'an*). This word punctuates the road, repeatedly emphasising the presence of a new textual phenomenon, which component ending will be understood below as the second diphthong: D^2.

From this point onwards we are back on a highway (though not the open freeway of verses 1:1 through to 17:106) in which the component endings we have recognised to this point all feature and in which pattern A remains the stock component.

This new expanse of road continues for 1,470 verses, at which point we reach a further point of audial distinction: sūrah 37.

The first three verses of sūrah 37 are in pattern B, which we recognise. Following these, verses 37:4-11 beat with a cadence which is both distinct and new, comprising what we know as pattern C.

While this new pattern rhythm could be reduced ultimately to that form of pattern B in which the short vowel is firm, the clear audial and contextual signposts which attach to the first appearance of this cadence confirm it as a separate pattern.

The full context described above is presented below, with verses in pattern C in italics:

> 1 By those lined up in rows,
> 2 And those driving with force,
> 3 And the reciters of a remembrance!
> 4 Your God is One:
> 5 Lord of the Heavens and the Earth and what is between them, and the Lord of the Easts.
> 6 We have adorned the lower heaven with the adornment of the stars
> 7 And as protection against every refractory satan.
> 8 They listen not to the exalted assembly, and they are pelted from every side,
> 9 Repelled — and they have a constant punishment —
> 10 Save he who snatches a fragment; and a piercing flame follows him.
> 11 So ask thou them: are they harder to create, or those We have created? We created them of clinging clay.
> (37:1-11)

The reader may care to consider these verses in the context of the broader analysis;[39] we must push on to complete what remains of our journey.

39 And, perhaps, particularly the first verse in pattern C at 37:4 in the light of verses 37:1-3

Travelling from the segment above at 37:1-11 through to sūrah 47, we encounter a further stretch of highway consisting of 746 verses entirely in pattern A intersected by a single verse in pattern B. The effect of this range is settling after the changes encountered above.

From the beginning of sūrah 47 onwards, all components now identified occur in combinations of greater or lesser degrees of complexity, interspersed by further stretches of road in more-or-less uniform patterns until the end of the text.

We have concentrated above on the features of those patterns which comprise the general model. The thirty-four verses which end in diphthongs are discussed now in some detail.

Diphthongs

As we have said, the final closed syllable in the case of thirty-four verses is a diphthong. And we have noted where and how the two types of diphthong identified in this analysis are signalled within the framework of our journey through the text of the Qur'an above.

While the reason may not immediately be clear, we do not overstate the case when we say that the occurrence of diphthong verse endings creates a problem with existential significance for the general model.

We will first discuss how the diphthong ending causes the general model to break down, and then what the implications of that breakdown are. We will then describe the resolution to the resulting impasse, following which we present samples of component endings in the two types of diphthong which are identified in process of resolving that impasse.

We understand that diphthongs are neither short nor long vowels. But to see why their occurrence results in an impasse with existential implications for the general model we should consider more deeply the nature of those patterns which make up the general model.

Patterns A, B and C are small sound packets in which consonants contain a short vowel, a long vowel, or no vowel. These distinctions give them existence, and without these distinctions they cease to be what they are.

We begin by comparing "pattern A" and "pattern B" with the "inclusion" of a diphthong:

- "Pattern A" with a diphthong: •/•*
- "Pattern B" with a diphthong: •/•*

What we see above is not a matter of conflation, or of merging, between pattern A and pattern B. A diphthong in the final syllable of verse endings means that pattern A and pattern B simply do not exist in those particular verses.

We will now consider the following:

- "Pattern C" with a diphthong: •—•/•*

With a last syllable in a diphthong, the fact that such a syllable is predicated by a syllable in a long vowel is now irrelevant: pattern C does not exist in such cases.

In short: a diphthong in the final closed syllable of a verse ending removes all three patterns from existence at those places where it occurs.

It may seem reasonable, then, to treat all final diphthong syllables equally:

- Diphthong ending: •/•*

The problem here has a philosophical component: while the diphthong ending is itself distinct from patterns A, B and C, it possesses an implicit relationship simultaneously with patterns A and B and (on occasion) with pattern C because, given anything other than a diphthong between these two consonants — whether a short vowel, a long vowel or no vowel — the result would be one of the three patterns which make up the general model.

If each ending in a diphthong cannot be reduced to clear identification with one of the three parts of the general model — and it cannot — it leaves patterns A, B and C themselves in existential limbo.

I will describe the same problem another way.

Let us say we have three secondary colours: yellow, blue and pink (representing the three patterns of the general model). These colours are each predicated upon the existence of the three primary colours: green, blue and red (representing the factors which give the general model existence). Now let us say that it is known that inclusion of what we shall call factor x in every case renders yellow, blue and pink a uniform white. While we would be unable to tell from the resultant white which secondary colour would have existed were it not for the inclusion of factor x, we would know that this colour would have been either yellow, or blue, or pink.

We will further say that white itself has no colour distinction within itself. If we then say that the fact that white itself has no colour distinction within itself divests us of distinction between colours (as in a case where white only exists) we remove the premise upon which yellow, blue, and pink depend for their existence, which is distinction between colours.

But we must go further. Just as both primary and secondary colours require a distinction between black and white to exist — while they cannot themselves provide for that distinction — so the general model needs a distinction to exist between types of diphthong, but cannot itself provide for one.

Without a distinction between types of diphthong originating outside the general model, the result is a world in which a white without a black renders the three primary colours — and everything that follows from them — incapable of existence.

In other words: if final diphthong syllables do not obtain distinction outside the general model, the premises upon which patterns A, B and C are predicated are invalidated since the loss of those distinctions by which the general model exists results.

And without those distinctions what remains is, well, indistinct.

We are between a rock and a hard place, and to emerge from between the two requires distinctions between diphthongs provided for outside the general model.

We will now consider the incidence of diphthong syllables and in which sets they occur.

There are two types of diphthong syllable, marked D^1 and D^2 in our notation, the basis for which distinction we discuss shortly. Those verses in D^1 are marked in bold below:

Mankind Set
18:93, 47:11, 47:20, 47:21.

Remembrance Set
19:9, 19:42, 19:60, 19:67, 20:28, 20:39, 20:94, 20:104, 20:109.

Qur'an Set
52:9, 52:10, 53:10, 53:28, 53:41, 55:17, 70:18, 75:34, 75:35, 75:40, 86:15, 86:16, 86:17, 90:8, 90:9, 90:10, 99:5, 106:1, 106:2, 106:3, 106:4.

In the totality of those verses which end in diphthong syllables in the context of those sets which contain them, only one unambiguous point of distinction exists: that the Mankind Set contains one verse in D^1.

And that one verse is also the first diphthong syllable in the order of the text noted within the framework of that journey described in the previous segment.

Thus, we look to that verse for a point of distinction:

> When he had reached between the two barriers, and found besides them a people scarcely understanding speech,
> (18:93)

The diphthong in which verse 18:93 ends is in Arabic qawl (meaning speech or word).

The sole point of distinction, then, between diphthong syllables is this: those verses which end in qawl belong to one category; those which do not belong to another.

Examples of verse endings in diphthong syllables follow:

- 18:93 qawl*an*
- 19:9 sh*a*y'*an
- 20:39 'ayn*ī*
- 55:17 *al-magh*rabayn*i*
- 86:15 kayd*an*
- 86:17 *ru*wayd*an*
- 106:3 *al-*bayt*i*

Signatures and distinguishing features

We present all set signatures and their respective distinguishing features again for ease of reference:

Writ Set:	A
Hidden Set:	A | B
Mankind Set:	A | B | C | D^1 | D^2
Qur'an Set:	A | B | C | D^2
Remembrance Set:	A | B | D^1 | D^2

Not only is the signature unique in every case, we can identify the distinguishing feature for each set (marked above in bold) on the basis of an exclusive correlation:

- A is the only option available to the Writ Set, therefore A is the distinguishing feature for that set;
- Given that A is the distinguishing feature for the Writ Set, B must be the distinguishing feature for the Hidden Set since B is the only remaining option available to it.

The remaining signatures do not permit of an extension of the same logic; but while we change tools, our principle remains that of exclusive correlation. Since diphthong endings obtain the required characteristic of distinction by means of the single occurrence of that ending in the Mankind Set, an exclusive correlation exists between the Mankind Set and D^1 which identifies D^1 as the distinguishing feature for this set.

From that it follows that C is the distinguishing feature for the Qur'an Set and D^2 the distinguishing feature for the Remembrance Set.

Interim summary

We have to this point:

- Considered in brief summary the need for a framework for processes of exegesis upon the Qur'an by analogy with those distinctions understood and assumed in approaches to the Hebrew scriptures, and noted certain deficiencies in the Traditionalist Muslim's method as well as the general lack of one in Qur'an-alone circles;
- Presented in brief summary certain conclusions from Solution to the Mysterious Letters of the Qur'an, introduced the concept of sets, and listed the sūrahs which pertain to each within that analysis;
- Listed insights based upon a further reading of the Qur'an strictly on the basis of set, including:
  - Recognition of those sūrahs with no preceding mysterious letters prior to sūrah 50 as a distinct set (which we now term the Mankind Set);
  - Recognition of a subset of ten contiguous sūrahs "hidden" within the Qur'an Set (which we now term the Hidden Set) with thematic features which associate it with the Mankind Set.
- Introduced the features of the three verse-ending patterns we term pattern A, pattern B and pattern C (and which together we term the general model);
- Presented the occurrence of each pattern within the context of a journey through the corpus of the Qur'an in which we also encountered diphthongs;
- Noted that the general model breaks down at the point at which diphthongs feature in the final syllables of verse endings and the reasons why that breakdown occurs;
- Understood that the general model requires a distinction between the final syllables of verse endings which feature diphthongs for its own survival and that such a distinction is impossible on the basis of the framework the general model provides;
- Understood that a resolution of the impasse described above must be based on an objective distinction provided for outside the framework of the general model;
- Identified an objective distinction between verse endings which feature diphthongs outside the framework of the general model.

To summarise our analysis of component endings and related conclusions in the context of the five sets now identified:

- Five component endings together comprise all verse endings in the Qur'an;
- The combination in which the component endings occur in each of the five sets now identified is different in each case, which distinct combinations we term signatures;
- An exclusive correlation exists between one of the component endings which feature in signatures and each of the sets, which component endings we term distinguishing features.

The remainder of the presentation here turns upon the following:

- The exclusive correlation between each set and one distinguishing feature;
- That the verses in the distinguishing feature for each set form a subset, the verses of which produce textual narrative evidence sufficient to support our identification of:
  - The baseline addressees of each set;
  - The narrative focus of each set.

We note that the fact that the Writ Set is in pattern A throughout means that the signature and the distinguishing feature in that set are the same. In this case, al fātiḥah (which directly precedes the first instance of the Writ Set and is in the same pattern) provides the narrative evidence in this case, for reasons we supply shortly.

In what follows we present the narrative evidence for each set produced by those verses in the component ending of the distinguishing feature for that set or, in the case of the Writ Set, by al fātiḥah.

The Mankind Set

My initial response to reading all sūrahs which comprise this set as a group[40] was that:

- It applies to all humankind;[41]
- It provides a general matrix for improvement;
- It contains the significant majority of verses which permit of inclusion as the basis for a legal system.

I noted also that:

40 I.e. sūrahs 4, 5, 6, 8, 9, 16, 17, 18, 21, 22, 23, 24, 25, 33, 34, 35, 37, 39, 47, 48 and 49.

41 Which category naturally includes the baseline addressees of both the Writ Set and the Remembrance Set.

- It contains most major portions which treat unambiguously of events within the lifetime of the Prophet (i.e. narrative current events now become history — and clearly intended to be treated subsequent to the fact as historical);
- It contains most direct, vocative appeals by God to Muḥammad in 'O Prophet' (8:64, 8:65, 8:70, 9:73, 33:1, 33:28, 33:45, 33:50 and 33:59),[42] both in 'O Messenger' (5:41 and 5:67), and all but one of the direct imperatives to 'obey the Messenger' (4:49, 5:92, 24:54, 24:56 and 47:33).[43]

We established the distinguishing feature of the Mankind Set as component D^1.

Verse 18:93 is, as we have seen, the sole instance of component D^1 in the Mankind Set, so it is to the verse in this component ending in that set that we look for narrative evidence.

Verse 18:93 is presented below and our observations follow:

> When he had reached between the two barriers, and found besides them a people scarcely understanding speech,
> (18:93)

The subject is Dhūl-Qarnayn, a military and political leader, and the broader context treats of ignorant and limited peoples.

At the point at which verse 18:93 intersects the story we find a people imploring Dhūl-Qarnayn to help them resolve their pressing political concerns, which he does by supplying wise commands and leadership.

This broader context is presented below:

> 83 And they ask thee about Dhūl-Qarnayn. Say thou: "I will recite to you a remembrance of him: —"
> 84 We established him in the earth, and gave him to everything a way;
> 85 So he went his way.
> 86 When he had reached the setting of the sun, and found it setting in a murky spring, and found a people nearby, We said: "O Dhūl-Qarnayn: thou shalt either punish, or take concerning them good."
> 87 He said: "As for him who does wrong: we will punish him; then will he be brought back to his Lord, and He will punish him with a terrible punishment.
> 88 "And as for him who believes and works righteousness: for him is the best reward; and we will speak lightly to him from our command."
> 89 Then he went his way.

42 The remaining verses which contain 'O Prophet' are 60:12, 65:1, 66:1 and 66:9 and are in the Hidden Set, a set with a direct connection with the Mankind Set and with the same baseline addressees.

43 The remaining verse which contains a direct imperative to 'obey the Messenger' is 64:1, again in the Hidden Set, a set with a direct thematic connection with the Mankind Set and with the same baseline addressees.

> 90 When he had reached the rising of the sun, he found it rising upon a people for whom We had not appointed besides it any cover.
> 91 Thus! — and We have encompassed what is with it in knowledge —
> 92 Then he went his way.
> 93 When he had reached between the two barriers, and found besides them a people scarcely understanding speech,
> 94 They said: "O Dhūl-Qarnayn: Ya'jūj and Ma'jūj are workers of corruption in the land; so may we appoint for thee payment, that thou make between us and them a barrier?"
> 95 He said: "That wherein my Lord has established me is better; but assist me with strength: I will make between you and them a dam.
> 96 "Give me sheets of iron." When he had made level between the two openings, he said: "Blow." When he had made it a fire, he said: "Bring me to pour thereon molten brass."
> 97 And they could not pass over it, and they could not pierce it.
> 98 He said: "This is a mercy from my Lord. But when the promise of my Lord comes to pass, He will make it level; and the promise of my Lord is true."
> (18:83-98)

We now summarise key features from the broader context apropos our opening thoughts:

- The story of Dhūl-Qarnayn treats of abject and ignorant peoples with practical, temporal concerns;
- Dhūl-Qarnayn supplies clear commands, fulfilment of which result in general improvement for the people who submit to them, while requiring initiative and application on their part;
- Dhūl-Qarnayn places that process he directs within a framework of fear of God. While a leader, he is neither haughty nor does he abuse his position (a point underscored by the fact that he both refuses payment and cites his own dependence upon God in the same breath);
- The story of Dhūl-Qarnayn is presented as narrative fact, but the events of which it treats are patently historical and clearly intended to be treated as such;[44]
- Dhūl-Qarnayn is addressed by God in the vocative, and in terms which emphasise his right to rule.

The larger story of Dhūl-Qarnayn above, then, not only comports with the general themes we discerned but provides the ideal model for both ruler and legal system: clear commands combined with a firm hand, incorruptibility, fear of God, and the linking of practical affairs and concerns with higher considerations.

The immediate context of verse 18:93 in isolation, then, treats of a man whose very name means 'he of two horns' (and which itself ends in a diphthong) at the intersection between two immovable objects engaged by people for whom the distinctions required by intelligible speech have all but collapsed — a scenario which aptly mirrors the impasse which the introduction of final diphthong syllables in verse endings creates and which verse 18:93 itself resolves.

44 A point with which even the most dogmatic adherent to the outcomes required by Traditionalist Islam would not — and could not — disagree.

We turn now to the Qur'an Set.

The Qur'an Set

I was aware as a result of the analysis presented in the second part of this book as Solution to the Mysterious Letters of the Qur'an that the Qur'an Set applies to all mankind since it comprises a series of ten possible readings which together have at least three applications:[45]

- As a nightly vigil intended to fortify existing believers;
- As a witness intended both to make converts and identify rejecters;
- As a warning to communities under what I term the God protocol.

We established the distinguishing feature of the Qur'an Set as pattern C, so it is to the verses in this pattern in that set that we look for narrative evidence.

The following verses in the Qur'an Set are in pattern C: 51:5-6, 52:7-8, 53:57-58, 56:1-3, 69:4-29, 70:1-3, 74:53, 75:20-25, 77:7, 79:6-10, 79:12-14, 86:1-4, 86:6-10, 88:1-5, 88:8-12, 96:15-18, 101:1-3, 101:7, 101:9, 101:11, 102:1-2 and 112:3.

It will be seen that these segments permit presentation in an order which all but forms a single narrative — which result we have attempted below — following which we list our observations.

> He neither begets, nor is He begotten.
> (112:3)
>
> 57 The Drawing Near has drawn near.
> 58 There is none, besides God, to remove it.
> (53:57-58)
> 1 By the sky and the night-comer!
> 2 And what will convey to thee what the night-comer is?
> 3 The piercing star!
> 4 There is no soul but has over it a custodian.
> (86:1-4)

45 Expanded upon below, and dealt with in full in the second part of this book.

> 6 He was created from a gushing water,
> 7 Issuing forth from between the loins and the breast-bones.
> 8 He is able to return him.
> 9 The day the secrets are tried,
> 10 Then will he have neither power nor helper.
> (86:6-10)
> 7 The punishment of thy Lord will befall;
> 8 There is none to avert it.
> (52:7-8)
> 1 A petitioner asked about a punishment to come
> 2 To the false claimers of guidance — there is none to avert it —
> 3 From God, Owner of the Means of Ascent.
> (70:1-3)
> 1 Has there come to thee the narrative of the Enveloping?
> 2 Faces, that day, will be humbled:
> 3 Toiling, exhausted,
> 4 Burning in a scorching Fire,
> 5 Watered from a boiling spring.
> (88:1-5)
>
> 11 A scorching Fire.
> (101:11)
>
> 8 Faces, that day, will be joyous:
> 9 With their striving well-pleased,
> 10 In a high garden.
> 11 They hear therein no vain speech;
> 12 Therein — a flowing spring.
> (88:8-12)
>
> 7 He is in a pleasing life.
> (101:7)
> 1 The competition for increase diverts you
> 2 Until you visit the graves.
> (102:1-2)
>
> No, indeed! The truth is, they fear not the Hereafter.
> (74:53)

5 What you are promised is true,
6 And the Judgment will befall.
(51:5-6)

1 When the Event befalls,
2 — There is no denying its befalling —
3 Abasing, exalting!
(56:1-3)

6 On the day the convulsion convulses
7 There will follow it the second.
8 Hearts, that day, will tremble,
9 Their eyes humbled.
10 They say: "Are we to be returned to our former state?"
(79:6-10)

12 "Even when we are decayed bones?"
13 And there will be but one cry
14 And then will they be awakened.
(79:12-14)

What you are promised — it will befall.
(77:7)

20 No, indeed! The truth is, you love this fleeting life
21 And leave the Hereafter.
22 (Faces, that day, will be radiant,
23 Looking upon their Lord.
24 And faces, that day, will be scowling,
25 Thinking that a crushing calamity is upon them.)
(75:20-25)

1 The Calamity!
2 What is the Calamity?
3 And what will convey to thee what the Calamity is?
(101:1-3)

4 Thamūd and ʿĀd denied the Calamity.
5 Then as for Thamūd: they were destroyed by the overpowering blast.
6 And as for ʿĀd: they were destroyed by a howling, raging wind
7 Which He compelled against them seven nights and eight days without let; and thou mightest see the people therein lying prostrate like stumps of hollow date-palms.
8 Then seest thou of them any remnant?

9 And there came Pharaoh — and those before him, and the cities thrown down — with offence,
10 And they opposed the messenger of their Lord, but He seized them with a surpassing grip.
11 When the water had burst all bounds, We bore you in the ship
12 That We might make it a reminder for you, and that a conscious ear might be conscious of it.
13 Then when the Trumpet is blown with a single blast,
14 And the earth and the mountains are lifted up and levelled with a single blow,
15 Then, that day, the Event will befall,
16 And the sky be split asunder for it, that day, is frail,
17 And the angels on its sides; and there will bear the Throne of thy Lord above them, that day, eight.
18 That day, you will be presented; no secret among you will be concealed.
19 And as for him who is given his writ in his right hand, he will say: "Here, read my writ!
20 "I knew that I should meet my reckoning."
21 Then is he in a pleasing life,
22 In a high garden
23 The fruits whereof are near.
24 "Eat and drink with satisfaction for what you sent ahead in days past."
25 And as for him who is given his writ in his left hand, he will say: "Would that I had not been given my writ
26 "And had not known what is my reckoning!
27 "Would that it had been the end!
28 "My wealth has not availed me.
29 "Gone from me is my authority."
(69:4-29)

15 No, indeed! If he cease not, We will drag him by the forelock,
16 The lying, offending forelock.
17 Then let him call his council.
18 We will call the guards of Hell.
(96:15-18)

9 His embrace is an abyss.
(101:9)

We now summarise key features from the narrative above apropos our opening thoughts:

- Consistent emphasis on the Event (i.e. the Hour), the inevitability of the meeting with God, Judgment, and reference to Man's origins and his typical preoccupations — which subjects comprise all mankind within their purview;

- The division of men on the basis of faith and works, with eternal pleasures for those who do right and eternal damnation for those who do otherwise;
- The inclusion of summaries of examples of that protocol of warning intrinsic to the Qur'an,[46] and a clear connection between the resultant temporal destruction and the eventual final Event: the Trumpet which event marks the End of the Age;[47]
- An emphasis on night,[48] which fact tends to support both our identification of a night vigil and the purposes we ascribe to it.

To conclude: the whole serves to put existing believers in mind of Eternity, to call others to faith, and to put rejecters on notice of what awaits them — and does so while specifying night. The aggregate, then, of these features confirms our initial thoughts in general terms.

The Hidden Set

I became aware of the Hidden Set as a distinct entity only after recognising those sūrahs I now collectively term the Mankind Set as a set in their own right.

Having read all sūrahs which comprise the Mankind Set through together, I reflected that in terms of subject matter and narrative flavour they have much in common with a sequence of ten contiguous sūrahs located within the Qur'an Set. That area of the Qur'an Set had long struck a dissonant chord with me given the themes which dominate in the Qur'an Set more broadly such as the warning, cataclysm, the Garden, Hell, Judgment, Resurrection and other memento mori such as we reviewed above. It became clear to me that certain thematics in that sequence of ten contiguous sūrahs correlates more readily with the Mankind Set, such as actions and incidents within the lifetime of the Prophet, verses which contribute to the Qur'an's body of law, and vocative statements addressed to the Prophet.

In consequence, I tested that discrete sequence of sūrahs I now term the Hidden Set (i.e. sūrah 57 through to sūrah 66) and found not only that it produced a further, unique signature, but that it also rendered the remaining possible distinguishing feature.[49]

We established the distinguishing feature of the Hidden Set as pattern B, so it is to the verses in this pattern in that set that we look for narrative evidence.

The verses at 65:1-12 comprise all those in pattern B in this set — and together form the whole of sūrah 65. We present sūrah 65 and initial comments below following which we provide our thoughts on the segment more fully:

46 At 64:4-12.

47 Both topics are developed to completion in The God Protocol.

48 At 86:1-3.

49 To be more precise: it made the final distribution of the five distinguishing features among the five signatures possible.

1 O Prophet: when you divorce women, divorce them after their waiting period; and count the waiting period, and be in prudent fear of God, your Lord. Turn them not out of their houses, nor let them go forth save if they commit manifest sexual immorality. And those are the limits of God; and whoso transgresses the limits of God has wronged his soul. Thou knowest not, that God might, after that, bring about a new matter.
2 And when they have reached their term, retain them according to what is fitting, or release them according to what is fitting. And call to witness two just men from among you; and uphold the witness for God. By that is admonished he who believes in God and the Last Day; and whoso is in prudent fear of God — He will make for him a way out,
3 And He will provide for him from where he reckoned not. And whoso places his trust in God, He is sufficient for him. God achieves His purpose; God has appointed a measure for all things.
4 And for such of your women as despair of menstruation, if you doubt, their waiting period is three months, as well as for those who have not menstruated. And for those who are bearing, their waiting period is until they lay down their burden. And whoso is in prudent fear of God — He will make for him, of His command, ease.
5 That is the command of God that He sent down to you; and whoso is in prudent fear of God — He will remove from him his evil deeds and make great for him his reward.
6 Let them dwell in what manner you dwell, out of your means, and harm them not so as to straiten them. And if they be bearing, then spend on them until they lay down their burden. Then if they suckle for you, then give them their reward, and take counsel among you according to what is fitting. And if there be difficulties between you, another shall suckle for him.
7 Let him who has abundance spend out of his abundance, and whose provision is measured — let him spend out of what God has given him. God charges not a soul save with what He has given it. God will make, after hardship, ease.
8 And how many a city scorned the command of its Lord and His messengers so We called it to a stern account and punished it with a terrible punishment!
9 So it tasted the evil consequences of its affair, and the final outcome of its affair was loss.
10 God prepared for them a severe punishment. So be in prudent fear of God, O you men of understanding who heed warning. God has sent down to you, as a remembrance,
11 A messenger reciting to you the manifest proofs of God, that He might bring forth those who heed warning and do righteous deeds out of darkness into the light. And whoso believes in God and works righteousness — He will make him enter gardens beneath which rivers flow, they abiding eternally therein forever. God has made good for him his provision.

> 12 God is He who created seven heavens — and of the earth their like — the command descending between them, that you might know that God is over all things powerful, and that God has encompassed all things in knowledge.
> (65:1-12)

Verses 65:1-7, which treat exclusively of matters concerning women, permit of broader legal application. This emphasis on legal principles provides a thematic connection with the Mankind Set.

We look now at the closing verses of the sūrah, interweaving our comments below:

> 8 And how many a city scorned the command of its Lord and His messengers so We called it to a stern account and punished it with a terrible punishment!
> 9 So it tasted the evil consequences of its affair, and the final outcome of its affair was loss.
> 10 God prepared for them a severe punishment.[...]

The portion above opens with a warning typical of the type found in the Qur'an as a whole and, in more condensed forms, across the broader range of the Qur'an Set of which the Hidden Set is a subset, wherein a messenger's mission of warning to a community is scorned and thus results in punishment in an act of God.

> 10 [...]So be in prudent fear of God, O you men of understanding who heed warning. God has sent down to you, as a remembrance,
> 11 A messenger reciting to you the manifest proofs of God, that He might bring forth those who heed warning and do righteous deeds out of darkness into the light. And whoso believes in God and works righteousness — He will make him enter gardens beneath which rivers flow, they abiding eternally therein forever. God has made good for him his provision.

Verse 65:10 appeals to 'men of understanding' to 'be in prudent fear of God'. The additional qualification is that they are those 'who heed warning' (which is how I render the Arabic alladhīna āmanū which strictly means — and is commonly translated as — those who believe).[50] Thus, the exhortation here is to men who (already) believe to demonstrate taqwā; that is, it urges believing men who possess intelligence and insight to practice prudent fear of God, or piety.

The resultant distinction here between believers on the one hand, and those of prudent fear on the other, reflects a key difference between the baseline addressees of the Mankind Set and those of the Writ Set. While the Mankind Set is intended for all mankind (which category naturally includes believers within its scope), the Writ Set is 'a guidance for those of prudent fear'.[51] Thus, firstly, verse 65:10 both indicates that its range of baseline addressees does not include 'those of prudent fear' (which fact brings the Hidden Set into alignment with the Mankind Set) and, secondly, appeals to those who do believe to acquire that very quality — i.e. of taqwā or prudent fear of God — the possession of which admits the hearers to the baseline addressees of those for whom the Writ Set is intended.

50 My rendering emphasises the fact that belief is a response to warning; all notes pursuant to this decision in my process of translation are found in the notes to The Qur'an: A Complete Revelation available free in pdf from quranite.com or online at reader.quranite.com.

To summarise: this appeal calls qualified hearers to advance through, or beyond, the degree pertaining to the baseline addressees of the set.

Verse 65:11 unambiguously refers to a time in which Muḥammad was living. As we have noted, a key emphasis within the Mankind Set (which set we link thematically with the Hidden Set) is also upon events in the narrative present, though history for us now. The verse also summarises principles by which faith and works lead to an eternity of blessed abundance, and which apply in the first instance to baseline addressees of all mankind rather than to those of prudent fear.

> 12 God is He who created seven heavens — and of the earth their like — the command descending between them, that you might know that God is over all things powerful, and that God has encompassed all things in knowledge.

Verse 65:12 cites God as the omnipotent, omniscient creator — a principle which must be accounted among the basics of faith — and closes the sūrah on that note. The formulation at verse 65:12 correlates thematically with the opening contexts of precisely half of those sūrahs which comprise the Hidden Set, the opening phrase of which is identical in every case and which opens no other sūrah in the Qur'an.

We list all five opening contexts below:

> 1 What is in the heavens and the earth gives glory to God; and He is the Exalted in Might, the Wise.
> 2 To Him belongs the dominion of the heavens and the earth; He gives life, and He gives death, and He is over all things powerful.
> 3 He is the First and the Last, and the Outer and the Inner; and He knows all things.
> (57:1-3)

> What is in the heavens and what is in the earth gives glory to God; and He is the Exalted in Might, the Wise.
> (59:1)

> What is in the heavens and what is in the earth gives glory to God; and He is the Exalted in Might, the Wise.
> (61:1)

51 Arabic: hudan lilmuttaqīn. See Solution to the Mysterious Letters of the Qur'an.

1 What is in the heavens and what is in the earth gives glory to God, the King, the Holy, the Exalted in Might, the Wise.
2 He it is that raised up among the unschooled a messenger from among them, reciting to them His proofs, and increasing them in purity, and teaching them the Writ and wisdom — though they were before in manifest error —
3 And others of them who have not yet joined them. And He is the Exalted in Might, the Wise.
4 That is the bounty of God; — He gives it to whom He wills — and God is possessor of tremendous bounty.
(62:1-4)

1 What is in the heavens and what is in the earth gives glory to God. To Him belongs the dominion, and to Him belongs the praise; and He is over all things powerful.
2 He it is that created you; and among you is a false claimer of guidance, and among you is a believer; and God sees what you do.
3 He created the heavens and the earth in truth, and He formed you and made good your forms; and to Him is the journey's end.
4 He knows what is in the heavens and the earth, and He knows what you conceal and what you make known; and God knows that which is in the breasts.
(64:1-4)

There is a further point of interest we wish briefly to present before we list our broader conclusions to this section treating of the Hidden Set.

A 'hidden writ'

Solution to the Mysterious Letters of the Qur'an demonstrates that the textual real estate which makes up the Qur'an Set (i.e. from sūrah 50 to the end of the Qur'an) is intersected at three places by what we term there nodes.

These nodes are at sūrah 55, sūrah 68 (the last instance of the mysterious letters), and sūrah 73, the result of which is that the Qur'an Set is divided into four segments.[52]

Treating these segments as 1, 2, 3 and 4 respectively, it is apparent that there are ten possible ways of reading the Qur'an Set by whole, contiguous segments:[53]

52 The reasons for the inclusion of sūrah 55 and sūrah 73 are beyond the purview of the present analysis.

53 The resulting segments are intended, in my view, to form the litany for nightly vigils with the purposes summarised in the section treating of the Qur'an Set above.

1. 1	6. 2 3
2. 1 2	7. 2 3 4
3. 1 2 3	8. 3
4. 1 2 3 4	9. 3 4
5. 2	10. 4

The Hidden Set (sūrahs 57 through 66) has a single "insulating" sūrah at either end, neither of which is itself a node (namely, sūrahs 56 and 67).

It follows that, within that framework of segmentation we identify across the Qur'an Set, any of the readings listed above which includes within it the Hidden Set must both begin and end in the Qur'an Set proper.

With these facts in view, we wish to offer the suggestion that the broader Qur'an Set itself may be understood at 56:78 to imply the presence within it of what we term the Hidden Set by means of mention of 'a hidden Writ':

75 Then I swear by the setting of the stars:
76 — And it is a tremendous oath, if you but knew —
77 It is a noble recitation
78 In a hidden Writ,
79 — None will touch it save those purified—
80 A revelation from the Lord of All Creation!
(56:75-80)

We do not suggest this to be the only or even the primary sense of the verse; rather, we indicate it as a possible subtext, and present this observation only in passing and for general interest.

The Hidden Set: conclusions

While the Hidden Set is a distinct set on the basis of its individual set signature, we regard it also (and primarily) as a subset of the Qur'an Set, and maintain that it should be understood in that way.

The thematics in the narrative evidence derived from the verses in the distinguishing feature of the Hidden Set form a natural counterpart with the Mankind Set, with the first two-thirds of sūrah 65 dealing with matters of law treating of women. That thematic corresponds most obviously with sūrah 4 — the first sūrah in the Mankind Set — and which is traditionally called al nisā' (The Women).[54]

54 In sūrah 4, verses 4:1-35 treat widely of legal matters relating to women and directly-related issues (children; inheritance; sexual impropriety — and conditions for related punishments — categories of women who may or may not be married; men's

The narrative evidence generated by verses in the distinguishing feature for the Hidden Set opens in 'O Prophet', and the broader Hidden Set contains three further equivalent vocative addresses.[55] All others occur in the Mankind Set.[56] Meanwhile, the two vocative addresses in 'O Messenger' in the Qur'an are both in the Mankind Set.[57] No vocative of either type is found in the Writ Set or the Remembrance Set, and none is found in the Qur'an Set outside those ten sūrahs which comprise the Hidden Set. Additionally, the sole statement in the Qur'an which names Muḥammad as the messenger of God is in the Mankind Set.[58]

Of note also is the fact that the Hidden Set contains a single imperative to 'obey the Messenger'.[59] The remaining cases in which a separate imperative to obey attaches to the Messenger occur exclusively in the Mankind Set.[60] None is found in either the Writ Set or the Remembrance Set, and none is found in the Qur'an Set outside the Hidden Set.

Meanwhile, the Qur'an contains just two imperatives to 'obey God and the Messenger' and both occur in the Writ Set.[61]

The significance of the points above for matters of exegesis upon the Qur'an will be plain to anyone who has engaged with its contents for any length of time or is familiar with debates which centre around the application of these imperatives in the present.

We have explained that the Qur'an Set consists of ten possible readings by units comprising the four segments we have identified. All details pursuant to this point are found in Solution to the Mysterious Letters of the Qur'an. The Hidden Set may be read within that framework only as a subordinate or nested grouping of sūrahs, being within that framework buffered both fore and aft by a single sūrah in the Qur'an Set proper, which fact ensures that a thematic focus which pertains to the broader Qur'an Set is operative at whatever point is chosen to begin or end any reading by segment, which fact tends also to support our identification of the Hidden Set as 'a hidden writ'.

We note again the fact that the narrative evidence derived from the verses in the Hidden Set's distinguishing feature provides thematic references to the opening portions of five other sūrahs within the same set,[62] and that no other sūrah in the Qur'an opens in the same expression.

responsibilities and rights over women and vice versa), before proceeding to cover a range of cases, events and principles effective upon the community over which the Prophet was head. The sūrah returns to matters concerning women at 4:127-130 and closes at 4:176 with a final ruling pertaining to inheritance which specifically safeguards women's interests.

62 I.e. at 57:1, 59:1, 61:1, 62:1 and 64:1.

The question remains: what purpose is served by the "insinuation" (as one might term it) of the Hidden Set with its distinctly Mankind-Set focus into the Qur'an Set, which set is possessed of its own distinct dominant focus and concerns?

I can offer the following thought: the "insinuation" of the Hidden Set block (with its partially this-worldly concerns and inclusion of legal issues intended as principles for jurisprudence) into the Qur'an Set (with, as mentioned, its frequent references to warning and cataclysms, as well as memento mori) places a counterbalance with Mankind-Set features (i.e. practical, this-worldly concerns largely rooted in the lifetime of the Prophet) within the apocalyptic and eternal concerns of the overarching Qur'an Set, thus signalling the interplay between actions in this life and consequences in the next and forcing those temperamentally inclined to this life and those temperamentally inclined to the next to engage with aspects of both as part of that practice of regular nightly litany we have identified (i.e. the ten readings discussed above) which the Qur'an Set provides for.

We will recall that the Mankind Set has baseline addressees of all mankind, whereas the Writ Set and the Remembrance Set have certain qualifications placed upon their baseline audiences. The Qur'an Set, meanwhile, is as an address and warning to all. Thus, while the Writ Set and the Remembrance Set attach to baseline addressees which are a subset of all mankind, the Mankind Set (with which the Hidden Set itself correlates thematically) is the sole legitimate associate of the Qur'an Set (which also contains the Hidden Set) since both attach to baseline addressees of all mankind.

We turn now to the Writ Set.

The Writ Set

My initial response to reading all sūrahs which comprise this set as a group[63] was that:

- It applies principally to the plurality of men of piety;
- It serves to provide guidance to the above category.

We established the distinguishing feature of the Writ Set as pattern A. But, as previously mentioned, since the Writ Set features just one pattern — being entirely composed of endings in pattern A — the set signature and the distinguishing feature are necessarily the same.

Identification of a discrete subset of the text from which to derive key narrative information is therefore, by definition, impossible.

63 I.e. sūrahs 2, 3, 7, 10, 11, 12, 13, 14, 15, 29, 30, 31, 32, 40, 41, 42, 43, 44, 45 and 46.

The only sūrah not to feature in the any of the five sets we have identified is al fātiḥah (sūrah 1) which sūrah prefaces the entire Qur'an.

Sūrah 1, naturally, borders sūrah 2, and sūrah 2 is the first sūrah in the Writ Set — and like the Writ Set, the verses which make up sūrah 1 are all in pattern A.[64]

On this basis we treat sūrah 1 as the distinguishing feature of the Writ Set, so it is to sūrah 1 that we look for narrative evidence.

Sūrah 1 reads:

> 1 In the name of God, the Almighty, the Merciful.
> 2 Praise belongs to God, the Lord of All Creation,
> 3 The Almighty, the Merciful,
> 4 Master of the Day of Judgment.
> 5 Thee alone do we serve, and from Thee alone do we seek help.
> 6 Guide Thou us on the straight path,
> 7 The path of those whom Thou hast favoured; not of those who incur wrath, nor of those who go astray.
> (1:1-7)

Those who observe the religion of Islam as intoned by its mullahs and scholars repeat this sūrah in every unit of their daily ritual. Within that religion, seventeen such units are regarded as obligatory each day. If every one of the 1.8 billion people alive today who are said to subscribe to that religion abide by this obligation, then al fātiḥah is recited over 11 trillion times a year, making it a contender for the most oft-repeated text of all time.[65]

This sūrah has much in common with a suzerainty treaty, an agreement by which a lord and vassals come to terms. Such treaties open with acknowledgement of the supremacy of the lord, before stating the obligations binding upon both parties. Verse 1:5 above comprises the part the vassals in this case take upon themselves, while verses 1:6-7 are those parts of the treaty which become binding upon God given fulfilment of the assurances supplied by the supplicants.

As regards the two points we listed at the opening of this section, we note that:

- Verse 1:5 comprises the supplicants' part of the treaty;
- A plurality of speakers is implicit in the grammar of verse 1:5;
- The substance of verse 1:5 is the sine qua non of piety;[66]
- Verse 1:6 identifies the requirement to guide as God's part of the treaty.

64 Again, this fact corroborates the findings of Solution to the Mysterious Letters of the Qur'an wherein al fātiḥah is identified as the value of all instances of the Writ Set.

65 The only text which comes to mind that could conceivably match or exceed it in terms of the number of times it has passed human lips is the Rosary.

66 That is, without serving God alone and seeking help from Him alone, one is not truly dedicated to Him.

To summarise: the narrative evidence derived from the verses in the set's distinguishing feature serves to confirm our initial thoughts in general terms.

We provide what follows here for additional interest only: if we are correct in identifying sūrah 1 as the distinguishing feature of the Writ Set, and one views the order of the Qur'anic text as both intended and fixed by God and the *bismillah*s beyond 1:1 as visual accoutrements serving as sūrah divisions only,[67] then the opening of sūrah 2 — which is the point at which the Writ Set begins — must be regarded as a narrative continuation of what precedes it.

Sūrah 2 opens:

> 1 alif lām mīm
> 2 That is the Writ about which there is no doubt, a guidance to those of prudent fear:
> 3 Those who believe in the Unseen, and uphold the duty, and of what We have provided them they spend;
> 4 And those who believe in what was sent down to thee, and what was sent down before thee, and of the Hereafter they are certain:
> 5 Those are upon guidance from their Lord; and it is they who are the successful.
> (2:1-5)

Verse 2:2 cites 'a guidance to those of prudent fear' (i.e. to those possessed of piety) the qualities of which category are expanded upon at verse 2:3 and seen at verse 2:4 to apply to believers in the present revelation (the Qur'an) and what came before it. Such persons are then identified at verse 2:5 as those who 'are upon guidance from their Lord'.

Thus, this segment expands upon, qualifies and corroborates verses 1:6-7 which precede it.

And while we do not hang our hat upon this hook, it is a fact that copies of the Qur'an have for centuries been laid out in a manner congruent with this understanding: with sūrah 1 and the opening verses of sūrah 2 in illuminated script on facing pages.

We turn now to the Remembrance Set.

67 It is a fact that all *bismillah*s subsequent to that which opens the Qur'an at verse 1:1 tend not to be numbered in Arabic texts or regarded as part of the revelation.

The Remembrance Set

My initial response to reading all sūrahs which comprise this set as a group[68] was that:

- It applies principally to the individual man called by God for a particular mission;
- It serves to fortify the above category in those conflicts which arise in consequence of his mission.[69]

We established the distinguishing feature of the Remembrance Set as component D^2, so it is to the verses in that set in this component that we look for narrative evidence.

The following verses in the Remembrance Set are in pattern D^2: 19:9, 19:42, 19:60, 19:67, 20:39 and 20:104.

These verses are treated in order below:

> Said he: "Thus said thy Lord: 'It is easy for Me; and I created thee before when thou wast nothing.'"
> (19:9)

The broader context is at verses 19:1-15. There, Zachariah petitions God for a righteous son to serve God after him. The immediate context is Zachariah's hesitancy to believe in the promise of fulfilment of his request when that promise was delivered to him.

Zachariah was alone, with no point of support or source of help but God. And, despite his initial hesitancy, his faith was justified and he was granted a son (identified as John in the Christian tradition).

As Solution to the Mysterious Letters of the Qur'an demonstrates, verses 19:1-15 are intrinsically connected with each in a series of five narrative blocks which together treat of five prophets of God: Jesus, Abraham, Moses, Ishmael and Idrīs. The next portion in this series of narrative evidence comprises part of that narrative block which treats of Abraham:

> When he said to his father: "O my father: why servest thou what neither hears nor sees, nor can avail thee anything?"
> (19:42)

The broader context is that of Abraham's schism with both his father and the wider community, in which he disavows false gods, declares his allegiance to God, calls his father to follow him in faith, has that call rejected, and then withdraws from his community

68 I.e. sūrahs 19, 20, 26, 27, 28, 36 and 38.

69 I.e. between him and the broader society (family, society, political structures, etc.).

entirely. He is ultimately rewarded with Isaac and Jacob. This broader narrative is found at 19:41-50.

The next verse in this series of narrative evidence immediately follows that sequence of five narrative blocks treating of Jesus, Abraham, Moses, Ishmael and Idrīs mentioned above. We place the verse under consideration below in bold within its broader context:

> 58 Those are they whom God favoured among the prophets of the progeny of Adam, and of those We bore with Noah, and of the progeny of Abraham and Israel, and of those We guided and chose. When the proofs of the Almighty were recited to them, they fell down in submission weeping.
> 59 But there succeeded them successors who caused the duty to be lost, and followed lusts; they will meet with error
> 60 Save he who repents and believes and works righteousness, for those will enter the Garden, and they will not be wronged in anything:
> 61 (Gardens of perpetual abode that the Almighty has promised His servants in the Unseen — His promise is to come to pass.
> 62 They will hear therein no vain speech; only: "Peace!" And they will have therein provision morning and evening.)
> 63 That is the Garden which We cause those to inherit among Our servants who are in prudent fear.
> (19:58-63)

The extended context preceding the segment above treats specifically of individual men of God chosen for specific missions. The conclusion to that extended context begins at verse 19:58 which restates the case in summary and then, at verse 19:59, laments that those who came after abandoned faith — which parallels the first segment treating of Zachariah — while supplying the provision which comprises the verse in view in this case. The people of which it treats are then identified as 'Our servants who are in prudent fear' at 19:63.

Thus, a clear distinction is drawn between individual, appointed men of God (whom we identify as the baseline addressees of the Remembrance Set) on the one hand, and the broader category of those of prudent fear (whom we identify as the baseline addressees of the Writ Set) on the other.

We place the next verse in this series of narrative evidence below in bold within its broader context:

> 66 And man says: "When I am dead, am I then to be brought forth alive?"
> 67 Does not man remember that We created him before, when he was nothing?
> 68 Then, by thy Lord, will We gather them and the satans! Then will We bring them to be present round about Gehenna on bended knee;

69 Then will We extract from every sect those of them most severe towards the Almighty in disdain;
70 Then will We best know those most worthy to be burned therein.
71 And there is not one of you save will arrive at it; that is upon thy Lord an inevitability decreed.
72 Then will We deliver those who were in prudent fear, and leave the wrongdoers therein on bended knee.
(19:66-72)

The immediate context of the verse under review echoes and supports the first verse in this part of our presentation which, again, reads:

Said he: "Thus said thy Lord: 'It is easy for Me; and I created thee before when thou wast nothing.'"
(19:9)

Taken more broadly, it emphasises that those exceptional men of God of whom the sequence at 19:9-67 as a whole treats — Adam, Noah, Idrīs, Abraham, Ishmael, Isaac, Jacob, Moses, Aaron, Zachariah, John and Jesus — were nevertheless no more than men created by God.

The broader segment at 19:66-72 above closes with a clear distinction between 'those who were in prudent fear' on the one hand (which motif echoes our points above treating of 19:58-63), and 'the wrongdoers' on the other, and contrasts the outcome for each.

The overall implications are twofold: firstly, that no prophet or righteous man is more than a man (we note in this regard that the narrative block which features Jesus at 19:15-37 both treats of his birth and emphasises his birth as a function of God's will) and, secondly, that men are of different orders — among whom those individual men listed above are of the first rank.

We look now at the next verse in this series of narrative evidence:

"'Hurl thou him into the chest, and hurl thou it into the water; the water will cast him upon the shore. An enemy to Me and an enemy to him will take him.' And I cast upon thee love from Me, and that thou be wrought under My eye
(20:39)

The overall context is at verses 20:9-97 which segment forms the greater part of sūrah 20 and comprises all key parts of the mission of Moses: his call by God; the appointment of his brother Aaron; his mission to Pharaoh; his delivery of the children of Israel out of the hand of Pharaoh; his people's subsequent denial in the wilderness.

The broader context in which verse 20:39 occurs is Moses' initial encounter with God. There God reveals to Moses that his life had been entirely under a veil of love from God and that he himself was "wrought under My eye". That interview concludes:

41 "And I chose thee for Myself;
42 "Go thou and thy brother with My proofs — and flag not in My remembrance —
43 "Go to Pharaoh. He has transgressed.
44 "And speak to him a gentle word, that he might take heed, or fear."
45 They said: "Our Lord: we fear lest he hasten against us, or that he will transgress."
46 He said: "Fear not; I am with you, hearing and seeing.
47 "So go to him, and say: 'We are the messengers of thy Lord, so send thou the children of Israel with us, and punish thou them not. We have come to thee with a proof from thy Lord; and peace be upon him who follows the guidance!
48 "'It has been revealed to us that the punishment is upon him who denies and turns away.'"
(20:41-48)

Here, then, Moses is tasked with a mission from God: to go to Pharaoh in order to deliver the children of Israel out of his hand, and to warn Pharaoh of impending punishment if he fails to follow the guidance with which he was sent.

We note that Moses was sent together with his brother Aaron. Certainly, both were prophets and men of God, men to whom, within our system of taxonomy, the Remembrance Set applies. While the fact that they were sent together may seem a fly in the ointment of our broader scheme (since the emphasis we intuit is on the individual man called for a particular mission), we find the point clarified at the end of the broader segment. There Moses rebukes Aaron for allowing the children of Israel to turn to idol worship in his absence:

92 He said: "O Aaron: what prevented thee, when thou sawest them going astray,
93 "From following me? Didst thou then disobey my command?"
94 Said he: "O son of my mother: seize thou me not by my beard, nor by my head! I feared lest thou say: 'Thou hast caused division among the children of Israel, and hast not observed my word.'"
(20:92-94)

Thus, despite Moses having Aaron to assist him in his mission, he stands, in the final analysis, alone.

We turn now to the last verse in this series of narrative evidence, which is below in bold within its broader context:

> 99 Thus do We relate to thee from reports of what has gone before, and have given thee a remembrance from Us.
> 100 Whoso turns away from it, he will bear a burden on the Day of Resurrection,
> 101 They abiding eternally therein; and evil is it for them on the Day of Resurrection as a load,
> 102 The day the Trumpet is blown. And We will assemble the lawbreakers, that day, white-eyed,
> 103 Whispering among themselves: "You tarried only ten."
> 104 We best know what they will say, when their exemplars in the path will say: "You tarried only a day."
> (20:99-104)

While we translate the Arabic in our principal verse at 20:104 as literally as possible as their exemplars in the path, the expression is rendered more freely by other translators, consideration of examples of which provides a broader handle on the sense in this case.

I list for purposes of comparison the renderings of the same expression (Arabic: أَمْثَلُهُمْ طَرِيقَةً) by a number of translators from various parts of that spectrum which ranges from secular readers of the text at one end to highly dogmatic adherents to the outcomes required by Traditionalist Islam at the other:

- A. J. Arberry: the justest of them in the way;
- N. J. Dawood: the most upright among them;
- Muhammad Asad: the most perceptive of them;
- Abdul Yusuf Ali: their leader most eminent in conduct;
- Saheeh International: the best of them in manner;
- Hilali & Khan: the best among them in knowledge and wisdom.

What is beyond question, then, is that their exemplars in the path indicates a distinct subset among mankind, one characterised by righteousness and leadership.

That concludes our examination of the narrative evidence which attaches to the Remembrance Set on the basis of its distinguishing feature.

Despite their various points of intersection with the text, the verses above attach to contexts which emphasise the individual man chosen by God or leaders in righteousness more generally.

They provide not only histories but paradigms, serving also to fortify those men in any generation who are called individually to particular missions in those conflicts with the broader society which inevitably result.

On this basis, the narrative evidence both confirms the baseline addressees for the Remembrance Set as men of God who have taken a dynamic and uncompromising position for Him, who trust in Him, and who have a clearly defined mission. It thus confirms out initial thoughts in general terms.

We turn now to consider the topic of baseline addressees in more detail and, as a related matter, narrative structure.

Baseline addressees and narrative structure

Baseline addressees

The term baseline addressees has been employed here for the reason that it includes also all degrees above the baseline.

As a corollary in this regard we note that the Qur'an expresses the notion of degree in multiple places,[70] the last of which in the order of the text reads:

> O you who heed warning: when it is said to you: "Make room in the assemblies," then make room; God will make room for you. And when it is said: "Arise," then arise. God will raise those who heed warning and those given knowledge among you in degree. And God is aware of what you do.
> (58:11)

The point we wish to make here is this: the spiritual force of the Qur'an is always upwards: calling rejecters to believe, believers to have prudent fear, while those of prudent fear are then challenged further by the examples of individual men called by God for particular missions.

We note that textual real estate with baseline addressees of all mankind forms the clear majority of the total with 3,583 verses, while that with baseline addressees of those of prudent fear is about that with 1,834 verses. Meanwhile, that with baseline addressees of a man called by God for a particular mission is by far the smallest portion among the three designations with 811 verses.

These proportions comport generally with what one might expect.

70 Arabic: daraja, pl. darajāt. See 2:228, 2:253, 3:163, 4:95, 4:96, 6:83, 6:132, 6:165, 8:4, 9:20, 12:76, 17:21, 20:75, 43:32, 46:19, 57:10 and 58:11.

Narrative structure

We will expand now on the exegetical significance of baseline addressees as it pertains to our concerns via an excursion into the topic of narrative structure.

We will leverage for our purposes aspects of both literature and scripture, taking Hero of Our Time by Mikhail Lermontov and The Gospel According to St. Luke as our points of departure.

By narrative structure we mean here: that literary mechanism by which the narrative (the story and how it is told) reaches the reader.

In the Russian classic Hero of Our Time, naturally, there is the author himself — in this case, Lermontov. He (the author) relates a story about Pechorin, the central character of the story. But much of what reaches us about Pechorin is presented via what one might term the prism of a further character (a traveller-narrator). But the traveller-narrator himself receives his information from yet another source (a mountain guide named Maxim Maximych) and, later in the story, from a cache of diaries the reader is required to believe the traveller-narrator chanced upon.

Clearly, the story is directed to us, the readers. But the means by which the story reaches us is heavily layered — and to disregard that fact is to miss the foundation upon which the whole stands. And while a superficial reading Hero of Our Time is certainly possible without consideration of such matters, a critical analysis of the work which fails to include them within its purview is guilty of significant error, and capable only of misshapen, incomplete conclusions.

A simpler example is found in The Gospel According to St. Luke. This account of the life of Jesus opens with an unnamed narrator and (self-proclaimed) expert eye-witness who asserts that he will correctly relate to the 'most excellent Theophilus' the events about which he writes:

> 1 Forasmuch as many have taken in hand to set forth in order a declaration of those things which are most surely believed among us,
> 2 Even as they delivered them unto us, which from the beginning were eyewitnesses, and ministers of the word;
> 3 It seemed good to me also, having had perfect understanding of all things from the very first, to write unto thee in order, most excellent Theophilus,
> 4 That thou mightest know the certainty of those things, wherein thou hast been instructed.
> (The Gospel According to St. Luke, 1:1-4, King James Version)

Views of Theophilus' identity vary wildly. Some assert Theophilus to be a generic or honorary title (meaning 'friend of God', 'beloved of God', or 'loving God' in the original Greek); some (among Coptic Christians particularly) hold that Theophilus was a Jew of Alexandria; others that Theophilus was a Roman official; others that Theophilus was Paul's lawyer during his trial in Rome; yet others point to Theophilus ben Ananus, the Sadducee High Priest of the Temple in Jerusalem from 37 to 41 CE.

One may, naturally, profitably engage with The Gospel According to St. Luke without either a clear view on the identity of Theophilus or retaining foremost in one's mind the fact that what follows was directed in the first instance to him (whoever he was). But any exegetical analysis of The Gospel According to St. Luke, even on the basis of sola scriptura, which fails to place its assessment within the framework of Luke 1:1-4 will always lack a vital context which should inform the whole.

What, then, is the application of all of this for the Qur'an?

It is this: when the sūrahs which comprise the two sets with baseline addressees narrower than that of all mankind (i.e. the Writ Set and the Remembrance Set) are regarded as pertaining, in the first instance, to their respective baseline addressees, this creates a narrative framework within which the contents of each set (and thus of the Qur'an as a whole) may be better understood. This is the result because provision is made for exegesis in which one is cognisant of each 'Theophilus' in each case.

It is true that particular categories of men are addressed directly in the vocative mood within all sets (e.g. 'O mankind' and 'O children of Israel'). Vocative addresses are an important tool in our processes of both hermeneutics and exegesis upon the Qur'an. But the fact of their occurrence within the Writ Set and Remembrance Set does not negate our broader point — rather, it strengthens it. We may use The Gospel According to St. Luke to illustrate what we mean. There, Jesus addresses multiple audiences directly (e.g. "O generation of vipers, who hath warned to you flee from the wrath to come?" at Luke 3:7, and "O Jerusalem, Jerusalem, which killest the prophets[…]" at Luke 13:34). A given assessment of Theophilus' identity will play an important role in any proper analysis of these statements. They exude entirely different flavours when understood as communicated in the first instance to a generic 'friend of God'; to a Jew of Alexandria; to a Roman official; to a lawyer at Paul's trial in Rome; to a Sadducee High Priest in Jerusalem.

And we have the advantage over the reader of The Gospel According to St. Luke in that we are able to identify our 'Theophilus' in all cases from the scripture itself.

To summarise: based on the analysis here, proper exegesis is possible only when the baseline addressees for each set are recognised. Failure to understand the Writ Set primarily as a 'guide' intended for 'those of prudent fear' and the Remembrance Set as intended primarily for the man called by God for a particular mission is to miss the meta-context which sits atop everything else.

We turn now to the last section in this work where we present a summary, conclusions and some final thoughts.

Summary, conclusions and final thoughts

Summary

We have demonstrated here a method of segmenting the sūrahs of the Qur'an by set which not only confirms the findings of Solution to the Mysterious Letters of the Qur'an which comprises the second part of this book, but which builds upon and provides an application for the same.

We summarise below in tabular form what we now know about each set:

Set	Baseline addressees	Focus
Mankind Set (sūrahs 4, 5, 6, 8, 9, 16, 17, 18, 21, 22, 23, 24, 25, 33, 34, 35, 37, 39, 47, 48 and 49).	All mankind	■ Matrix for improvement; ■ Historical import; ■ Legal principles.
Qur'an Set (sūrahs 50 through to 114).	All mankind	■ To fortify believers; ■ To call to faith; ■ To warn.
Hidden Set (sūrahs 57, 58, 59, 60, 61, 62, 63, 64, 65 and 66).	All mankind	■ Matrix for improvement; ■ Historical import; ■ Legal principles.
Writ Set (sūrahs 2, 3, 7, 10, 11, 12, 13, 14, 15, 29, 30, 31, 32, 40, 41, 42, 43, 44, 45 and 46).	Those of prudent fear	■ To provide guidance.
Remembrance Set (sūrahs 19, 20, 26, 27, 28, 36 and 38).	The man called by God for a particular mission	■ To fortify lone leaders in conflict with the broader society.

Conclusions

We state in the General Introduction that the object of Framework for Qur'anic Methods of Exegesis is something other than merely to provide a framework for methods of exegesis upon the text of the Qur'an: it is to provide a framework for methods of exegesis upon the text of the Qur'an wherein the methods of exegesis themselves originate in the text of the Qur'an and not elsewhere.

The question now is: are we any closer to that goal?[71]

I believe that we are and that, moreover, the resultant framework will be capable of accommodating changing human conditions while adhering to fixed principles, for such is the requirement for any system in which the blessing — and burden — of revelation is applied to the myriad conditions of men. And, importantly, if developed by capable legal minds, it may then provide a credible alternative to those systems of jurisprudence which are called Islamic but which are, lamentably, far removed from both the spirit and the letter of the Qur'an.

What it will not do is provide for a system of micromanagement over, and intrusion into, the minutia of people's lives, for such is not the purpose of the Qur'an.

Methods of exegesis upon the Qur'anic text which account for the Qur'an's internal segmentation by set may serve to preclude confusion of the type we considered earlier, such as would arise from disregarding distinctions between Psalms and the Book of Leviticus.

The correct application of such methods would, it is anticipated, be able successfully to navigate the Qur'an's segmentation by individual sūrah, its clear points of demarcation between historical narrative and general application, and the fact that the whole was evidently revealed on two sides of a critical event.[72]

Finally, it is hoped that such methods might provide a framework in which problems created by the Traditionalist's doctrine of abrogation may be resolved,[73] in which the extraneously-derived division into what he calls Meccan and Medinan sūrahs might be either relinquished or modified on a basis intrinsic to the Qur'an, and in which imperatives to 'obey the Messenger' might be better understood in a context in which the Messenger himself is no longer living. They may also provide the Qur'an-alone movement with a framework in which principles, rather than eclectic theories, guide thinking.

71 Given, of course, that our underlying analysis of the mysterious letters of the Qur'an is materially correct.

72 The Traditionalist calls this the hijrah, which he takes to be an emigration from Mecca to Medina. The Qur'anic evidence points, rather, to a cataclysmic event, however. We discuss this more fully in The God Protocol.

73 Clearly, certain things are abrogated. I am thinking here of the import of verse 9:28 (for which see the translation and notes at reader.quranite.com). But these can be understood within the framework of the Qur'an, and should not be attached piecemeal from another literature.

Final thoughts

In closing, I would like to add the following: two personal thoughts, a caveat, and a note of caution.

Firstly, I consider that the comprehensive and, I hope, comprehensible system of categorisation within which we may place our broader reading of the Qur'an provides a meta-structure within which other Qur'an-based hermeneutic tools may be used to advantage.[74]

I would add to this point that an attentive reading of the Qur'an reveals that the opening context of all sūrahs longer than a few verses typically presents the dominant theme for what follows. To miss that signpost is to enter a room of a major museum ignorant of the period of which it treats and, inevitably, leads to unbalanced exegetical outcomes.

One should also be aware where specific audiences are addressed (cf. O mankind, etc.); to miss these signposts is also to miss a natural point of collation both within the set divisions we have identified here and across the Qur'an as a whole.

Secondly, I am by no means suggesting that the Qur'an is not of a single piece. But if I might turn one last time to our well-worn example of the Hebrew scriptures: just as the parts which comprise the Hebrew scriptures have identifiable ranges of tone, genre, preoccupation and context — and are handled accordingly by the pious student — the parts which make up the whole of the Qur'an require consideration on a comparable basis in order for correct and consistent conclusions to be drawn.

This, then, is the light in which I regard the right application of the findings in this presentation.

I will include the caveat that future extensions of what is covered here may prove possible. However, I anticipate that any genuine extension of these results will be consistent with them.

Lastly, a note of caution: while it has been gratifying personally to see the findings of Solution to the Mysterious Letters of the Qur'an confirmed by entirely different means, enlarged upon, and imbued with a clear application, I am concerned — knowing what I do about human nature — that my output may be used by others to create a politically- and humanly-motivated hierarchy which will then be leveraged to nefarious ends.

While men of ill will are frequently ingenious at finding grist for the mills they wish to feed, I will state here that this is not how I understand my own work. It is God who raises men in degree, and it is God who guides. And men who have not genuinely internalised these truths identify themselves thereby as men who are still at the beginning of their journey.

74 For example, those I have been privileged to develop such as pan-textual analysis and Qur'anic definitions.

Those who wish to verify the component endings which form the basis of the conclusions of this presentation will find all data pursuant to that requirement in the addenda section which follows.

Solution to the Mysterious Letters of the Qur'an

And this Qur'an is not such as could be invented by other than God; but it is a confirmation of what is before it, and an exposition of the Writ about which there is no doubt, from the Lord of All Creation.
(10:37)

The Qur'an: A Complete Revelation

Background to the Solution

Introduction

Twenty-nine chapters of the Qur'an begin with certain letters the meanings of which have eluded Muslims for over 1,400 years. They are referred to in Arabic by the term al ḥurūf al muqaṭṭaʿāt (the cut or disjointed letters), and tend to be referred to as the mysterious letters in English. I use the terms al ḥurūf al muqaṭṭaʿāt and the mysterious letters interchangeably in my presentation of this subject.

I offer in the Solution which follows a cogent, consistent and compelling explanation both of the meanings of these letters and of their operation in the Qur'an.

Before we go further, I should say something about the word Solution. This presentation comprises the application of an organic, pan-textual hermeneutic, one which first identifies and then leverages the incidence of textual phenomena in order to demonstrate the architecture of the mysterious letters beyond a reasonable doubt. That is not what one means by the solution to a problem of arithmetic, of course, where one applies agreed patterns and principles in order to produce an answer which can then be assessed on the basis of established conventions. So while Solution may be an imperfect term in the present context, I use it as shorthand for what I mean by it.

If a solution to the mysterious letters were susceptible to the type of facile summary people today expect every topic worth knowing to submit to, this enigma would have been resolved long ago. But it isn't. It is difficult. It has eluded men for so long precisely because it is difficult. And while I will consider any completed examples of how this Solution may be explained more simply than I have done, what follows is the best of which I am capable at this time, and that is all we have.

Thus, while very effort has been made to present this Solution in as simple a form as the material will allow, it does require both attention to follow, and, should one choose to, effort and some basic knowledge to verify.[1] But it does not require specialist knowledge, and apprehension of its contents is within the capabilities of anyone prepared to apply himself to them.

A full treatment of this subject requires inclusion of an overview of those theories on al ḥurūf al muqaṭṭaʿāt which pre-date this Solution. Such is provided in the addenda section to this presentation. However, the short version is, as alluded to above, that the Traditionalist Muslim does not know what the mysterious letters mean. In general, his dogma is that 1 At the very least, the ability to run text-string searches on the Qur'an in the Arabic language.

God alone knows what they mean, and any attempt to understand them is impossible, presumptuous, or blasphemous — or some combination of all three.

I am temperamentally disinclined to believe that a message from God — one which itself challenges the reader to reason[2] — would frustrate all attempts to understand certain portions of itself, which is why I have presumed to risk the accusation of blasphemy and attempt the impossible: to understand al ḥurūf al muqaṭṭa'āt.

A summary of my works

This Solution is presented in support of my existing publications. Those works, when taken together with this Solution, provide the basis for my principal project, and I supply a summary below for those encountering my output for the first time.

The Qur'an: A Complete Revelation is a full translation of the Qur'an, one which operates without reliance upon extraneous sources and those subsequent cultures regarded as Islamic. While not its primary goal, one result of this work is to illustrate where and how the religion which claims the Qur'an as its foundational scripture is at unambiguous odds with that scripture. This work comprises a full translation of the Arabic into English supported by a large body of related analysis. Quotes from the Qur'an in translation below are from The Qur'an: A Complete Revelation, but the Solution is in no way dependent upon the particulars of that translation.

The God Protocol identifies that mechanism in the Qur'an by which miscreant ruling elites of the past were made accountable before God and applies the same principle to the worldwide ruling elite of today. The application of that mechanism is the object to which all other ends have been bent, including the work which underpins The Qur'an: A Complete Revelation and this Solution.

This project: a short history

This segment presents something of my personal history as relates to this project. It may be of interest to some, although it is not required for what follows.

I entered university only after spending seven years after leaving school at sixteen in a smorgasbord of manual and service jobs. My academic background includes a degree in Russian Language and Literature. My professional life began in language teaching, but I quickly moved into translation, and from translation into technical and financial marketing, copywriting, media training, and then into print and radio journalism. At the peak of this trajectory, I was a director in the largest Russian strategic communications company and personally responsible for the international public relations of the president of a Russian company which, at that time, employed over a million people. I managed seven-figure dollar budgets annually. And I travelled internationally several times a month as a function of that role, only ever flying business-class and staying at the best hotels.

2 I offer the following verses as a sample in this regard: 2:44, 2:73, 2:76, 2:164, 2:170, 2:171, 2:242, 3:65, 3:118, 5:58, 5:103, 6:32, 6:151, 7:169, 8:22, 10:16, 10:42, 10:100, 11:51, 12:2, 12:109, 13:4, 16:12, 16:67, 21:10, 21:67, 22:46, 23:80, 24:61, 25:44, 26:28, 28:60, 29:35, 29:63, 30:24, 30:28, 36:62, 36:68, 37:138, 39:43, 40:67, 43:3, 45:5, 49:4, 52:32, 57:17, 59:14, 67:10.

But I felt strongly that there was something else I should be doing — not a job, but a mission. And that feeling would not be quieted by the blandishments of a good salary and high-status profession.

The result is the project introduced above.

I took the decision to detach myself from the demands of the career I had created, at least for a few years, and attend instead to the demands of that feeling that would not let me go.

Western universities are all but discredited in my view. Rather than being places of learning and committed to an unfettered quest for truth, they are become debt-creation centres committed to the universalisation of the current orthodoxy of delusion, perversion, mediocrity and conformity. And as such, they would not be conducive to the paradigm-challenging research I envisaged.

I therefore spent more than two years on a punishing schedule to produce the first draft of my work The Qur'an: A Complete Revelation, funded out of personal savings, and with only modest additional income originating in a role as an occasional freelance op-ed contributor to Russia Today.

Over time, I became cognisant that publication of my work, when it came, would be tantamount to career suicide; that is: there would be no way back to the comfy leather seats of expenses-paid business-class flights and the smiles of well-groomed air hostesses for me. All companies which intend to invest in a key hire routinely conduct background checks. If one has published a work which challenges the world's 1.8 billion Muslims' understanding of the book they claim as their foundational scripture, Human Resources will become aware of that fact early on in any hiring process. Corporations care about their image, and they tend to view candidates with a zero chance of attracting death threats or mysterious packages to their offices more favourably than the alternative.

Thus, as a result of publication of my early output, I became definitively and irredeemably unemployable, at least by Western corporations — a situation which is not now as regrettable as it once seemed.

I had been working to that point in a bubble, albeit one of my own choosing. The object now was to soft-release my work (to use an IT term) — to use it "to poke life" as Steve Jobs once put it — and thereby provoke responses that would challenge, test and refine my thinking, since I had no other crucible.

The first release was an e-book edition of The Qur'an: A Complete Revelation early in 2016.[3]

In that edition I stated frankly that I did not know what the mysterious letters mean. Having tried and failed to decipher them on more than one occasion, I had made peace with the fact that I would have to proceed without an answer to this enduring enigma.

Certainly, publication drew some attention of the undesirable type I had anticipated, but it also garnered some genuine support, including financial. This came in the form of donations from private individuals; these grew over time to pick up the slack of my own savings which, by that time, were gone.

As I was approaching the end of the process of correcting the text prior to the first "rough" hard-copy release of The Qur'an: A Complete Revelation in mid-2017, I was privileged to gain the beginnings of a cohesive understanding of the meaning of the mysterious letters in response to prayer, and I published my first attempt at a solution at that time.[4]

Over the intervening period, I have — again, thanks in large part to those individuals who have backed me on the basis of the early releases of The Qur'an: A Complete Revelation — been privileged to be able to complete the equally demanding task of bringing that work to its present form.[5] My guiding objective since I embarked on this journey has been, as indicated, to identify and summarise the method the Qur'an contains by which tyranny is overthrown, to the end of applying the same principle in the present context. That method is outlined in The God Protocol, and I regard this Solution as an authentication of the premises underpinning that work.

Corrected editions of The Qur'an: A Complete Revelation and The God Protocol were released in mid-2022 in tandem with release of the present book: The Mysterious Letters of the Qur'an: A Complete Solution.

The present book comprises the totality of my efforts in the direction of a solution to the mysterious letters now developed to completion, improved by better editing and layout, and prefaced by Framework for Qur'anic Methods of Exegesis.

3 While I intended to produce physical books downstream, I was primarily interested in making my work as widely available as possible, and early on decided that all my output connected with this project would be made available in an electronic format of some kind at no charge — a policy which holds to this day.

4 While my original analysis of al ḥurūf al muqaṭṭaʿāt is confirmed here to be correct in several key parts, it was wrong in others, and it entirely missed more than one crucial dimension. It is possible that those with a historical interest in my process will compare that version with this in order to see where I was wrong there and what breakthroughs followed.

5 Solution to the Mysterious Letters of the Qur'an replaces those iterations of the same Solution which appeared as Article II in the appendix of previous editions of The Qur'an: A Complete Revelation and the first edition of The God Protocol.

With these works now brought to the best condition of which I am capable, and having executed on the substance of the God protocol, I consider the project I began eight years ago to be complete.

The Solution to the mysterious letters

The Solution which follows is cohesive, consistent and intellectually rewarding. But it is not something one can summarise in a few words.

Attainment of a satisfactory explanation of the mysterious letters defeated the best minds of the Islamic world over the course of fourteen centuries; it is hoped that one will allow that it might require concentration and application to follow their explanation now that we have one. However, these factors being present, a full understanding of the mysterious letters may be gained in a few hours by the diligent student; and once gained, that student's engagement with, and appreciation of, the Qur'an will be greatly enhanced.

I allow that what follows might be explained using a system of terminology and a logical progression simpler and superior to what I have used here. I can only say that I have tried several, and this is the least complicated of the options I was able to devise.

I do not imagine that this Solution cannot be expanded upon and improved. However, I believe that the core pieces are in place — the framework, as it were — upon which new layers of detail and nuance may be added.[6]

Notes on process

My translation of the Qur'an, The Qur'an: A Complete Revelation, is largely the function of a hermeneutic system I developed, and then refined, which regards the text of the Qur'an as complete, and which disregards the Traditionalist's voluminous extra-Qur'anic literature entirely. This undertaking engendered an iterative process of textual engagement, and that habit has become ingrained in me to the point of reflex.

By iterative process of textual engagement I mean that when investigating any topic — be it the meaning of a particular word, or of particular usage — I am accustomed to make a number of passes across the entire text, checking every instance of a word, expression or root to draw in data and build up a picture on that basis.

6 This Solution was materially complete and published before I gained the insights which grew into the presentation now entitled Framework for Qur'anic Methods of Exegesis.

This process may be likened to that of a deep-sea trawler when compared to that of a man with a spear trying to catch fish from the shore. The spear-fisher has one spear and may bag one fish at a time: if he hits something and it sticks to his spear he has made a catch. My hermeneutic process is fundamentally different: my nets suck into them and retain everything in their path greater than the gauge of the nets I have cast; when I have hauled the nets onto the deck of my vessel, I sort through the result according to set criteria, and it is only when that process is to some degree complete that I can think in terms of a catch.

At that point, having amassed my source material, I then sort through it and assess it further according to refined criteria.

I have performed this process countless thousands of times researching and developing the contents which underpin The Qur'an: A Complete Revelation and The God Protocol.

I term this process pan-textual analysis. And it was natural for me to employ something of the same process in my engagement with the mysterious letters, since habits acquired over countless repetitions in one context seek to express themselves in others.

Thus, the hermeneutic tool of pan-textual analysis served as a method by which it was possible to verify and shape the thinking which informs this Solution.

But the thinking which informs this Solution did not originate in that method.

I appreciate that some highly analytical people will not find what I am about to say satisfactory to them, but the fact is that I cannot provide them with a linear, step-by-step description of that process of thinking which informs this analysis. I simply spent days on end considering the symbols which comprise the mysterious letters both in their immediate contexts and as found across the text as a whole, until the pieces of the Solution which follows formed, bit by bit, somewhere within the tangle of my mind.

Though underpinned by a combination of data-collation and analysis, my process was driven by what is essentially a waking dream-state. This is me in a sailing dinghy catching the winds of intuition upon the sea of what facts are known in the hope of reaching the next port of call, while remaining generally unsure of the specifics of that destination. By catching those winds I eventually reach an inlet where I can weigh anchor. At that point I update my maps on the basis of the last completed leg of the journey, and recalibrate what I think I know about what the final destination might be. And then, after some rest and a good long walk, I embark on the next stage of the voyage.

I do not myself understand the mechanics which drive this process. But if you have ever seen an image in a Magic Eye picture reveal itself to you then you can understand how certain shifts in perspective make all the difference. In any case, what I have described is what I am referring to when I say that I am thinking deeply about something. I know that it works, but why and how it works is not something I can explain.

Since I arrived at this Solution largely by a mechanism I myself do not understand, I hope the reader will excuse the fact that I cannot walk him through my process as a logical series of plot points. What I do here is present my findings — the output of my total process.

I describe in this work the patterns I have observed that the mysterious letters conform to within the mechanics of the Qur'an as a whole, and show how they fit together into a cogent and compelling structure.

Notes on logic

Most of us are not professional logicians. But we all use logic of different types to some degree; we could not operate otherwise.

I, too, am not a professional logician. But my work with the mysterious letters has required me to think a little more deeply about logic than would otherwise have been the case. By briefly summarising some of the basic concepts I have myself had to learn, I hope better to prepare the reader to engage with the presentation which follows.

As I said above: we all use logic. But what we mean by the term typically depends to some extent on who we are and what our background is. A mathematician working from first principles to final conclusions will have one understanding of the term. A computer programmer working with nested loops in a stream of code will have another. And a psychologist picking apart the emotions of a disaffected teenager will have yet another.

In each case, logic is employed to describe and define processes and to assess the correctness or otherwise of conclusions. But the nature of that logic will not be the same in each case.

Typically, when a logician speaks about logic, he tends to have in view a particular strain of logic known as deductive reasoning. This type of logic consists of an argument comprising premises and a conclusion.

The classic example of an argument using deductive reasoning which leads to a correct conclusion is:

- All men are mortal [first premise];
- Socrates is a man [second premise];
- Therefore, Socrates is mortal [conclusion].

An example of an argument using deductive reasoning leading to an erroneous conclusion would be:

- Nothing is better than love [first premise];
- A bowl of pea soup is better than nothing [second premise];
- Therefore, pea soup is better than love [conclusion].

Accordingly, deductive arguments are evaluated in terms of their validity and soundness, the details of which need not detain us here.

However, there is a second general type of reasoning. This can, broadly speaking, be termed inductive reasoning.

We can characterise inductive reasoning as a method of reasoning in which we work backwards from what is evident to make suppositions with varying degrees of confidence about what is happening, has happened, or will happen.

This type of structured inference is the area of reason to which I appeal in this presentation.

It is true that this type of reasoning does not produce neat syllogisms susceptible to logical certainty in particular circumstances as in the deductive method. But it is the type of reasoning we use in real life: it forms a cornerstone of the modern scientific method; we used it when we first learned to speak; we use it when assessing evidence on jury service; we use it when making a judgment on whether the sun will come up in the morning.

Notes on approach

My eventual arrival at an understanding of the mysterious letters which was — further processes of refinement notwithstanding — correct (in the sense that I use that term), created two new problems for me. These problems were both unexpected and, in the event, as challenging as the one I knew I had solved.

They were, firstly, how to explain what I now understood to other people and, — given that I was able to solve that problem — secondly, how to provide a reason for other people to follow that explanation.

The solution to the second problem is found as Framework for Qur'anic Methods of Exegesis.

The first problem can be compared to a requirement to demonstrate that a seemingly random set of strips made up of black and white squares, in fact, forms a three-dimensional crossword which fits together by means of interlocking parts, like a Chinese puzzle. What one has to do is to assemble that puzzle, methodically and by stages, to the point where a perfect cube comprising black-and-white crossword schematics on all six sides results, then, both to infer the questions for that three-dimensional crossword and provide the answers to those questions while demonstrating convincingly both that what one is doing is correct and that the mechanism of the Chinese puzzle works as one says it does — and to present all this to someone who has never seen a crossword or a Chinese puzzle before.

Moreover, this must be achieved in a way which does not send the reader to sleep.

This problem being what it is, portions of my analysis defy two-dimensional sequential description, and I have done my best to help the reader trace connected and interlocking parts of the whole by supplying references to segments of the presentation where related portions of the puzzle are laid out.

I also state certain points more than once in the course of the analysis. While I recognise that some will instantly pick up and remember every concept as we proceed (and will therefore find my occasional reinforcing of particular concepts redundant), I believe such people will be in the minority, and I have attempted to make these findings accessible to as broad a swathe of readers as possible, even at the risk of irritating a few.

Finally, I will repeat here what is stated in the Preface: the analyses which follow are, of necessity, not only written in a manner which is formulaic and highly structured (bound as I am to use terminology consistently), they are also studded with bullet points and punctuated by summaries. While the result is, perhaps, a victory of martial order over literary style, the approach taken here is the one best suited to the task in hand.

Falsifiability

It is common among academics and others who pride themselves on intellectual achievements, real or imagined, to belittle the work of those they fear may have surpassed them, either by damning them with faint praise or by dismissing their work as "unfalsifiable".

One can do little about the tactic of faint praise other than to ask oneself if those who thus damn one are right in their lack of enthusiasm for one's results. If they are, then one should improve the quality of one's work or modify or abandon one's claim. And if they are wrong, then one must put their response down to the usual human factors.

The charge of "unfalsifiability" is different.

This is essentially the idea that what is asserted is not valid because there is no way to prove it wrong. It is something like an accusation of circular reasoning or assumed conclusions: all one has done (it is claimed) is to create a theory which is right because it is right. If there exists no circumstance in which it could be shown to be wrong then it cannot be claimed to be right.

While used also as a stock put-down, the principle itself is a useful guard both against wrong thinking and against dogma disguised as right thinking.

Here I make the following claims:

1. This Solution is consistent with the broader text. By this, I mean that the phenomena I identify in the text and which provide the leverage points by which this Solution demonstrates the operation of the mysterious letters occur in the text only in those places identified within this Solution.
2. This Solution is consistent with the local text. There is no adjustment either to what we term the opening contexts cited in this Solution or to the components of the mysterious letters themselves as found on the page.[7]
3. This Solution is comprehensive. On the basis of the incidence of the leverage points identified here, this Solution shows every instance of the mysterious letters to participate in a single integrated, interlocking structure.
4. This Solution meets the standard of reasonable proof. In a court of law, a jury must decide whether the evidence presented to it bears the interpretation put upon that evidence beyond a reasonable doubt; given the incidence of the textual phenomena presented as evidence here, I claim that the interpretation put upon that evidence — whatever imperfections may attach to my presentation of that evidence — is the only reasonable one.

I will regard this Solution as "falsified", surpassed or discredited if:

- A materially different solution is presented which both conforms to those statements presented in bold at points 1 through to 4 above and is convincing beyond a reasonable doubt to an extent superior to that attained here; or if
- The leverage points identified in this Solution are shown to have been misused (i.e. if the results are shown to depend upon a lack of transparency in either the incidence or type of textual phenomena which this Solution leverages).

I will not regard this Solution as "falsified", surpassed or discredited on the basis of subjective opinions or personal judgments upon it which do not meet either point above.

I consider that uninformed or incoherent addenda to this Solution by others neither imply a refutation nor necessarily warrant a response.

One is forced to add, given the generalised tendency towards solipsism, delusion, entitlement and sloth, that failure or refusal to apply oneself to this presentation does not imply a refutation of any kind.

7 I allude here to Rashad Khalifa's model predicated on the number nineteen. In order to extract what he needs from the available options he changes ن to نۏن.

I accept that this Solution may be added to, developed, or systematised further by others.

I also think it would benefit from analysis by a statistician to assess mathematically what level of probability attaches to its conclusions. Data of that kind would, I think, provide some interesting numbers to consider.

Assessing the Solution

In considering what follows one should ask himself whether this Solution, whatever my deficiencies in conveying it may be, is correct beyond a reasonable doubt. If it is, then certain things follow, some of which are touched upon in the Conclusion.

My own assessment is that what follows is correct beyond a reasonable doubt. And on that basis, I regard it as the solution to that 1,400 year-old enigma embedded within the sacred scripture given by God to Prophet Muḥammad as a message for all mankind.

Though my feeling for what I have uncovered runs deep, sentiment has no place here. I can serve best by presenting what follows without subjecting the reader to my personal enthusiasms, and by allowing the results to speak for themselves.

Overview of the Solution

This section is intended to provide initial acquaintance with the concepts the Solution contains and to be a resource for later reference. The concepts themselves will become clear with the application of concrete examples.

This presentation aims to use terminology consistently. Certain key terms are emphasised in the text by means of bold or italics, while certain important or recurring features in the argument may be in italics or underlined. These conventions are used from this point forward. And while a full list of all Arabic letters in all forms with English transliteration is found in the addenda section, no knowledge of Arabic letters is needed to follow this presentation.

We use indented notes to supply some items of related interest within the main presentation, while footnotes supply the rest.

1. The mysterious letters as symbols

Fourteen Arabic letters participate in the mysterious letters. In my initial process of investigation, I thought it might be possible — having noted the correspondences between Arabic and Hebrew letters — to discern meaningful relationships between those letters and certain esoteric traditions.

Ultimately, this line of enquiry proved fruitless. But it yielded one interesting outcome: it led me to consider the mysterious letters not as letters per se, but as symbols — i.e. as visual entities representative of some other data.

A requisite characteristic of a symbol is that it be recognisable. And for a symbol to be recognisable as such, it must be visually distinct (i.e. distinguishable) from any other symbol.

If one sets out the constituent letters of Arabic in the alphabetical order favoured today, even one with no knowledge of Arabic will see that certain basic shapes repeat, and are to some degree grouped together:

ا	ب	ت	ث	ج	ح	خ
د	ذ	ر	ز	س	ش	ص
ض	ط	ظ	ع	غ	ف	ق
ك	ل	م	ن	ه	و	ي

If we set out the same alphabet as below, even one with no understanding of the Arabic alphabet will appreciate that letters have been grouped according to visually similar characteristics where such exist and left singly where they do not.[1]

	ك		ا
	ل		ن	ت	ث	ب
	م		ح	خ	ج
ش	س		ه
ض	ص		ر	ز	ذ	د
غ	ع		ط	ظ
	ي		ق	ف	و

I invite the reader now to consider the following in the light of what precedes:

1 We address the cases of kāf / ك and lām / ل below.

ك	ا
ل	ن
م	ح
س	ه
ص	ر
ع	ط
ي	ق

The list above, then, comprises the fourteen letters which feature in al ḥurūf al muqaṭṭa'āt.

In no case is any letter which contributes to the mysterious letters found more than once in any single visually-connected group. Moreover, a single representative from each visually-distinct group is present.

This observation indicated to me that visual distinction is implicit in the mysterious letters, from which fact it follows that the mysterious letters must, as we have touched upon above, be symbols; that is: they must indicate values beyond those which attach to them as letters.

> Note: those with knowledge of Arabic letters may discern a discrepancy in the cases of kāf / ك and lām / ل and feel that since these two letters are materially the same when written separately, they should therefore be grouped together. The reasons why this is not the case follow:
> Firstly, the internal qualities of these two letters are inherently different since kāf / ك and lām / ل behave differently to each other in initial and medial positions; secondly, neither occurs singly or in final position (i.e. in those positions in which they do look similar) in the mysterious letters. Thus — within the context of the mysterious letters — they are correctly regarded as members of different visual groups.

> A further point may be raised with regard to و / wāw: since this letter behaves in initial and medial positions unlike either ف / fā or ق / qāf (since و / wāw does not merge with the letter which follows whereas both ف / fā and ق / qāf do), why is it not listed separately from ف / fā and ق / qāf despite the three letters' visual similarities when written separately?
> The answer in this case is the inverse of the one previous: the visual element in this group which occurs in the mysterious letters is ق / qāf — and that letter occurs only singly or in final position (i.e. in positions in which — were و / wāw to be found within the mysterious letters — it would operate identically visually). Thus — within the framework of the mysterious letters — و / wāw, ف / fā and ق / qāf are correctly regarded as members of the same visual group.[2]

A symbol, then, represents or stands for something else. And this, as we shall see, is what the mysterious letters do.

2. Core concepts

We have considered the letters which comprise al ḥurūf al muqaṭṭaʿāt as symbols; that is, as representative of some value other than that which pertains to them normally as letters.

The next key point — which we describe in short here and in full over the course of this presentation — is that al ḥurūf al muqaṭṭaʿāt comprise a sequence of instances: a single architecture which overlays the Qur'an from beginning to end.

The term instance refers to one of those thirty cases in which the mysterious letters feature in the Qur'an. Together, all instances comprise three sets. I term these the Writ Set, the Remembrance Set and the Qur'an Set.

The Writ Set and the Remembrance Set comprise instances which attach to values of different types[3] and operate according to discrete sets of principles.

The value of the Writ Set and those of the Remembrance Set "fuse" into a single value at instance #29 in sūrah 50, which point marks the beginning of the Qur'an Set.

The Qur'an Set comprises all sūrahs from that point forward to the end of the Qur'an.[4]

2 This can be confirmed by non-readers of Arabic by reviewing the Summary of Arabic Letters in the addenda section to this analysis. That lists each letter in all visual forms: isolated, initial, medial, and final.

3 Type is explained shortly.

4 The main principles which inform Solution to the Mysterious Letters of the Qur'an were made public before the thinking which underpins Framework for Qur'anic Methods of Exegesis was begun, in process of which I became aware of the existence of the Mankind Set and Hidden Set.

We will now review the three sets in more detail.

The Writ Set

The Writ Set operates independently of the order in which the individual instances which comprise it occur in the text.

The value of each instance in the Writ Set is both fixed and uniform. It is the same for every instance of the Writ Set, occurring without variation or modification throughout.

The value of the Writ Set is first established at 2:1-2 as al fātiḥah (sūrah 1) by means of an exclusive statement,[5] and every instance in the Writ Set bears the same value.

In all instances in the Writ Set the value pertains to the symbol as a whole (not to the aggregate of the letters which comprise it). While this point will become more nuanced later, it is important to think past the idea that each letter in an instance of the Writ Set corresponds individually with a discrete value. Thinking in terms of the whole symbol will provide a better start.

The Remembrance Set

The operations and mechanics of the Remembrance Set are entirely different to those of the Writ Set, and the order of the text is intrinsic to those operations and mechanics which attach to it.

Unlike the letters which comprise the Writ Set, each letter in the Remembrance Set has a discrete value. But beyond being discrete, each letter in the Remembrance Set is a variable:[6] the values they hold may change, and do so according to fixed principles. The values in the Remembrance Set pass downwards within it in accordance with those principles.

The five values of the Remembrance Set are established at sūrah 19 by means of five identical statements. Each value comprises one of the stories of the five prophets listed in that sūrah.

5 Statements are explained shortly.

6 Variables are explained shortly.

The Qur'an Set

The value of the Writ Set and the values of the Remembrance Set exist independently of one another throughout, but converge in dramatic fashion at sūrah 50 in the instance of the mysterious letters at that sūrah: the letter qāf / ق.

This single letter, then, is invested by means of a "fusion" between the value of the Writ Set and those of Remembrance Set. The resultant value, having been instituted at sūrah 50, governs every sūrah in the remainder of the Qur'an, being duplicated by nūn / ن at sūrah 68.

Instance #24

While instance #24 both participates in and expresses actions which pertain to the operations and mechanics of the Remembrance Set, it is parenthetical to the sequence and belongs to no set.

Type

The term type refers to the nature of instances in a given set. This is expressed by the distinctions between their respective values, statements, operations and mechanics.

The values of different types defy correlation. For analogy we can consider the impossibility of comparing apples with excitement, for example, which concepts exist on different ontological planes.

3. Visual landscape

The sequence of the mysterious letters is laid out in four aspects, each with different emphasis, in the tables which comprise the next section. The reader should refer to these as needed, and reference is made to them at certain points in the analysis.

Tables provide an overview of the mysterious letters and have the following features:

- Instances which comprise the Writ Set are indicated by double vertical lines;
- Instances which comprise the Remembrance Set are indicated by horizontal hash lines;
- Instances which comprise the Qur'an Set are indicated by sequential vertical diamonds;

- Instance #24 is indicated by no marker; since it is parenthetical to the sequence it belongs to no set.

4. Leverage points: the basis of evidence

The foundation upon which this Solution stands is the incidence of very particular textual events in concert with the very particular textual locations in which those events are seen.

By this we mean that the occurrence across the corpus of the Qur'an — which occurrence this analysis makes fully transparent — of limited, very particular textual events in very particular textual locations has significance. Moreover, in aggregate, the totality of these textual phenomena comprises a unified and interlocking body of evidence which places the interpretation put upon that evidence by this analysis beyond the realm of reasonable doubt.

The textual events we have in view are expressions in the text the particulars of which meet precisely-defined standards, while the locations in which those precisely-defined expressions occur are consistent throughout.

Those portions of the Qur'anic corpus which meet exactly the criteria defined by this analysis are termed leverage points. These provide the means by which purchase upon the mysterious letters is achieved, and it is the description and demonstration of these means which is the mainstay of this analysis.

Principal leverage points are:

- Statement
- Formula

Supporting leverage points are:

- Signpost
- Oath

We define the leverage points listed above in some detail below.

> Note: not all instances of the mysterious letters attach to leverage points. Those instances which attach to leverage points are required by this Solution. Those which do not attach to leverage points are not required by this Solution and are therefore elided from our presentation. The reader may verify for himself the fact that those we have omitted do not meet the standards for leverage points in this analysis.

There is a further important item which, while not a leverage point as we define the term, features prominently in our analysis since it both drives the operation of the Remembrance Set and materially impacts instance #24 and what follows from that. We term this item the variable, and its description features in what follows also.

Statements

Statements establish a value.

There is a total of ten statements: five in the Writ Set and five in the Remembrance Set.

Statements in the Writ Set:

- Directly attach to an instance of the mysterious letters in a nominative phrase in which Writ (Arabic: kitāb) forms the subject;[7]
- Establish the value of a symbol by means of Writ (Arabic: kitāb) in the nominative case as al fātiḥah.

Five places in the Qur'an meet the standard for a statement in the Writ Set.

In the first instance of the mysterious letters in the order of the text (at verse 2:1), the nominative noun in this case is definite — i.e. the Writ (Arabic: al kitābu). This statement establishes the symbol at that instance to have a value of al fātiḥah.

In the remaining four instances in the Writ Set the nominative noun is indefinite — i.e. a Writ (Arabic: kitābun). The statements at these instances likewise establish the symbols in each case to have a value — like that of instance #1 — of al fātiḥah.

The distinction between the first statement in a definite nominative noun and the subsequent statements in indefinite nominative nouns means that we regard the former as the axiom-statement in the set (an axiom being something accepted as true).

The remaining instances in the Writ Set attach to the value of al fātiḥah on a basis which is ultimately reduced to the fact that the axiom-statement is true.

All statements in the Writ Set, then, and the instances to which they attach are listed below:

7 Verse 41:2 intervenes between instance #22 and the related leverage point, but it does not impact the direct attachment of a nominative phrase at 42:3 in which a Writ (Arabic: kitābun) forms a subject of that instance of the mysterious letters. This unique intervening verse plays a role in the sequence the significance of which is discussed in due course.

1. instance #1 That is the Writ about which there is no doubt
2. instance #3 A Writ sent down to thee
3. instance #5 A Writ the proofs whereof are fortified then set out and detailed
4. instance #8 A Writ We have sent down to thee
5. instance #22 A Writ the proofs whereof are set out and detailed

Statements in the Writ Set divide into two categories:

- Those statements which function as a statement only;
- Those statements which meet also the standard for a formula.

The second category is explained where we discuss formulas below.

Statements in the Remembrance Set:

- Establish a value by means of And remember thou in the writ[...] (Arabic: وَٱذۡكُرۡ فِي ٱلۡكِتَٰبِ).

Five places in the Qur'an meet the standard for a statement in the Remembrance Set, all in sūrah 19, which sūrah is headed by instance #10 of the mysterious letters.

In each case the expression And remember thou in the writ[...] introduces a discrete narrative block treating of one of five prophets, thereby establishing the value for one of the five letters in that instance of the mysterious letters as that discrete narrative block.

Variables

In coding, a variable is an item in a program used to store or pass other items, and from which items may be removed. It is like a box in which items may be kept or moved, to which items may be added or from which items may be removed, or within which items may be operated upon. This paradigm provides a useful baseline from which to understand the operation of variables in this analysis.

All letters in the Remembrance Set are variables, and the five values in the Remembrance Set are the five discrete narrative blocks summarised above. The operations of variables are the means by which values in the Remembrance Set, individually or in combination, descend through the set.

Variables fall into two categories: ordinary variables and special variables.

Special variables have the following characteristics:

- They are letters in the Remembrance Set which comprise instance #10: kāf hā yā ʿayn ṣād / كهيعص;
- They begin with the value which attaches to them at instance #10;
- They can both travel down the line of position[8] and cross the line of position;
- They take their original value with them whether they travel down the line of position or cross the line of position;
- Where they cross the line of position, they accumulate also the value or values held above them in the line of position of their destination.

Ordinary variables have the following characteristics:

- They are those letters in the Remembrance Set which do not comprise instance #10: kāf hā yā ʿayn ṣād / كهيعص;
- They begin with no value;
- They receive the value held above them by the special variable in the same line of position;
- They take that value down the line of position;
- They do not cross the line of position and they do not accumulate further or multiple values.

The letter qāf / ق is termed a new special variable. It does not feature at instance #10 and is outside the Remembrance Set.

> Note: by the line of position we mean the lines which result when the letters in the Remembrance Set are recognised to occupy column positions. The first letter at any given instance occupies position 1, the second letter at any given instance occupies position 2, and so on. By crossing the line of position we mean that event in which a letter which participates in instance #10 of the Remembrance Set (and later qāf / ق at instance #24) descends to a further point in the sequence (taking its respective value or values with it) which act involves re-entering the sequence in position 1 which, in all cases, is other than its original position.

Formulas

Formulas provide for logical conclusions or additional nuance on the basis of comparisons.

Ten expressions in the Qur'an meet the standard of formula: seven in the Writ Set and three in the Remembrance Set.

8 The line of position is explained shortly.

Formulas fall into two categories:

- Those formulas which function as a formula only;
- Those formulas which meet also the standard for a statement in the Writ Set.

Those formulas which function as a formula only:

- Immediately follow an instance of the mysterious letters;
- Form expressions which combine the proofs (Arabic: āyāt) with Writ (Arabic: kitāb) where Writ is in the genitive case: Those are the proofs of the[...] Writ.

Those formulas which meet also the standard for a statement in the Writ Set:

- Directly attach to an instance of the mysterious letters in a nominative phrase in which Writ forms the subject[9]
- Form expressions which combine the proofs (Arabic: āyāt) with Writ (Arabic: kitāb) where Writ is in the nominative case: A Writ the proofs whereof[...].

Formulas can be unique,[10] occur in identical cases, or occur in significant variations between otherwise identical cases.

Significant variations between formulas invite comparison on the basis of their distinctions.

All formulas and the instances in which they are found are listed below; those formulas which meet also the standard for a statement in the Writ Set are marked with an asterisk:

1. instance #4 Those are the proofs of the Wise Writ
2. instance #5 A Writ the proofs whereof are fortified then set out and detailed*
3. instance #6 Those are the proofs of the Clear Writ
4. instance #7 Those are the proofs of the Writ
5. instance #9 Those are the proofs of the Writ and of a clear recitation
6. instance #12 Those are the proofs of the Clear Writ
7. instance #13 Those are the proofs of the Qur'an and of a Clear Writ
8. instance #14 Those are the proofs of the Clear Writ
9. instance #17 Those are the proofs of the Wise Writ
10. instance #22 A Writ the proofs whereof are set out and detailed*

9 Verse 41:2 intervenes between instance #22 and the related leverage point, but it does not impact the direct attachment of a nominative phrase at 42:3 in which a Writ (Arabic: kitābun) forms a subject of that instance of the mysterious letters. This unique intervening verse plays a role in the sequence the significance of which is discussed in due course.

10 I use unique throughout in the (correct) sense of unrepeated, one-of-a-kind, meaning existing nowhere else, not in the fuzzy, modern American sense of interesting or compelling and therefore capable of comparison or intensification (cf. more unique and very unique). Correctly speaking, something is either unique or it is not.

Signposts

Signposts provide evidence or explanation to facilitate understanding of operations in the sequence where exceptional events occur.

Four expressions in the Qur'an meet the standard for a signpost, all in the Writ Set.

Signposts:

- Immediately follow an instance of the mysterious letters;
- Open in the expression The revelation of the Writ[...].

Oaths

Oaths provide evidence or explanation to facilitate understanding of operations in the sequence where exceptional events occur.

Six expressions in the Qur'an meet the standard for an oath: two in the Remembrance Set, two in the Writ Set, and two in the Qur'an Set.

Of these six oaths, three appeal to the Qur'an itself. Together they comprise all appeals to the Qur'an itself in the entirety of the text.[11]

Oaths:

- Immediately follow an instance of the mysterious letters;
- Conform to the recognised, definable conventions of oaths.[12]

Tables intended for reference over the course of what follows comprise the next section, after which we embark on the analysis itself.

11 Thus, the six oaths are distributed in three batches of two. But they also divide into two again along a different line: those which appeal to the Qur'an itself, and those which do not. The motif of doubling and the dual will be seen to be a frequent feature of this analysis.

12 The word oath, as we are using it here, is the assertion of the veracity of something on the basis of an appeal to some other thing. For example, in English, one might say, "He swore by all that is holy that he returned the money." The Qur'an contains a considerable number of oaths. The format, typically, is: By such-and-such! or I swear by such-and-such! These conventions are universally acknowledged as a feature of the Qur'an, and oaths in Classical Arabic are expressed by means of recognised grammatical conventions. The identification of oaths, as of the other leverage points in this analysis, is dependent neither upon the particulars of my translation nor upon features of my translation which pertain to my hermeneutic process. The interested reader without access to Arabic may confirm this fact by recourse to other translations, although some access to the Arabic will be necessary to confirm that my renderings are consistent where other translators' are not.

The Writ Set

5. Introduction to the Writ Set

We begin our presentation of the Writ Set by expanding upon points explained in summary in Segment 4.

In all instances of the mysterious letters in the Writ Set the value pertains to the symbol rather than to the individual letters which comprise that symbol.

As in the English language, here it is the totality of letters as a word-symbol which contains meaning, and not the individual letters per se. So it is the word fish which puts one in mind of a fish, not that each of the letters of the word fish individually puts one in mind of some fraction of a fish.

To take the analogy further: the fact that some letters in English are silent does not detract from the point above (just because some letters in the word bough are silent does not reduce or impact the meaning of the word in any way).

The point will become more nuanced as we proceed, but it is important to think past the idea that each letter in the Writ Set corresponds individually with a discrete value.[1] While our understanding of this point will be refined downstream, thinking in terms of the whole symbol will provide the best start.

The value of all instances in the Writ Set is al fātiḥah (i.e. sūrah 1). That value is established by the first of the five statements in the Writ Set. We call this initial statement the axiom-statement.

Statements are nowhere arbitrarily chosen or cherry-picked from the broader text. Those presented in this section are the only five cases which exist in the Qur'an which meet the standard for a statement in the Writ Set by those criteria set out at Segment 4.

Beyond statements, we look to the wording of what we term formulas.

Formulas provide for logical conclusions or additional nuance on the basis of comparisons. Like statements, they are nowhere arbitrarily chosen and, as with statements, details as to their frequency in the Qur'an as a whole are supplied.

1 I fell at this fence in my initial analysis a few years ago, and it was correction of this error which precipitated much of the advance which has been made since.

Concrete examples will facilitate understanding, and we will do our best to walk the reader through each case using accessible, if formulaic, language.

The statement which attaches to the first instance of the mysterious letters is also the sole axiom in the analysis, and it is to that instance which we now turn.

6. Instance #1 (also #2, #15, #16, #17 and #18) symbol	الم

Instance #1 at 2:1

The opening context reads:

> 1 alif lām mīm
> 2 That is the Writ about which there is no doubt[...]
> (2:1-2)

> Note: the Arabic dhālika is equivalent to the English demonstrative pronoun that, and in Qur'anic usage refers always backwards to that which comes before the point in question.[2]

> It is widely accepted that the *bismillah*s — other than that verse which opens al fātiḥah — are later textual accoutrements which serve as sūrah divisions rather than comprise part of the revelation, and it is a fact that they are not generally numbered as verses in texts. Accordingly, one should regard the bismillah which divides al fātiḥah (sūrah 1) and al baqarah (sūrah 2) as ornamentation of logistical rather than intrinsic value.

We will now review instance #1 in the context of those verses which precede it:

> 1:1 In the name of God, the Almighty, the Merciful.
> 1:2 Praise belongs to God, the Lord of All Creation,
> 1:3 The Almighty, the Merciful,
> 1:4 Master of the Day of Judgment.
> 1:5 Thee alone do we serve, and from Thee alone do we seek help.
> 1:6 Guide Thou us on the straight path,

2 Despite irregularities among some translators, this point is correct. I have reviewed every instance of dhālika in the Qur'an and this principle holds true in every case, and is applied accordingly to every case of dhālika in my translation from the Arabic in The Qur'an: A Complete Revelation. For interest: Arabist and non-sectarian translator from Classical Arabic to English A. J. Arberry renders dhālika at 2:2 likewise.

> 1:7 The path of those whom Thou hast favoured; not of those who incur wrath, nor of those who go astray.
> 2:1 alif lām mīm
> 2:2 That is the Writ about which there is no doubt[...]

Thus, if one opens a copy of the Qur'an and reads from the very beginning at 1:1 through to the point at which we curtail verse 2:2 with a determination to understand every word, the only way what he reads can make logical and narrative sense is if the symbol alif lām mīm / الم is referred to by what immediately follows it — i.e. if the symbol alif lām mīm / الم is indicated by the Writ about which there is no doubt — while at the same time the symbol alif lām mīm / الم itself possesses a value equal to al fātiḥah (i.e. sūrah 1).

To put it another way: at this point in the text, doubt can exist about the symbol alif lām mīm / الم. But none exists about al fātiḥah: it is both a thing complete in itself and in normal language. However, for the whole (i.e. from 1:1 through to the point at which the text stops in 2:2) to make sense, there must exist a correlation between alif lām mīm / الم and what precedes it.

We will expand by means of analogy.

Let us say we have a cookery book in which the first page contains a recipe for cheesecake; following the recipe for cheesecake is a pictorial representation of a cheesecake, and following that pictorial representation of a cheesecake is written: That is the recipe about which there is no doubt.

Let us also assume, for the sake of our point, that the rest of this cookery book has been lost in a freak house fire.

How would we understand the recipe for cheesecake, the pictorial representation of a cheesecake, and the single following phrase?

We would know that the single thing about which doubt cannot exist is the recipe for cheesecake. We would then understand that the pictorial representation of the cheesecake indicates the recipe for cheesecake, albeit by means of a different format. We would thus understand the phrase That is the recipe about which there is no doubt to indicate both entities preceding that phrase, the value of each of which we would understand to be the same.

The lexical unit the Writ in this instance meets the standard for a statement in the Writ Set. Of the five statements in the Writ Set this is the only one in a definite noun, which reflects its role also as the sole precept 'about which there is no doubt' — or axiom.

Having established the symbol alif lām mīm / الم at instance #1 to have a value of al fātiḥah, we know the value of instances #2, #15, #16, #17 and #18 to be al fātiḥah also because they comprise the same symbol.

الم 1:1-7 (al fātiḥah)

> Note: neither the expression That is the Writ (Arabic: ذَٰلِكَ ٱلْكِتَٰبُ) nor the expression That is the Writ about which there is no doubt (Arabic: ذَٰلِكَ ٱلْكِتَٰبُ لَا رَيْبَ فِيهِ) occurs anywhere else in the Qur'an.
>
> The expression the Writ about which there is no doubt (Arabic: ٱلْكِتَٰبُ لَا رَيْبَ فِيهِ) occurs twice more in the Qur'an. These are addressed at Segment 34, and in the Final Evidence segment at the end of this work.

7. Instance #3

symbol المص

Instance #3 at 7:1

The opening context reads:

> 1 alif lām mīm ṣād
> 2 A Writ sent down to thee[...]
> (7:1-2)

Since the opening context meets the standard for a statement in the Writ Set, the value of the symbol alif lām mīm ṣād / المص is al fātiḥah — i.e. the same as the axiom-statement at instance #1.

The symbol alif lām mīm ṣād / المص occurs once in the mysterious letters, thus this statement establishes the value of instance #3 only.

> Note: the expression A Writ sent down to thee (Arabic: كِتَٰبٌ أُنزِلَ إِلَيْكَ) occurs nowhere else in the Qur'an.

المص 1:1-7 (al fātiḥah)

> Note: the value of all instances in the Writ Set is independent of the order in which the instances of the set occur in the text, the axiom-statement having established the first case. Since we are not now bound to a linear discussion, we present the instances below in an order which, it is hoped, is optimal.

8. Instance #8 (also #4, #5, #6 and #9)

symbol الر

We begin this segment by noting that the symbol alif lām rā / الر is unique within the mysterious letters in that it is attached to two statements.

As we progress, we will come to understand that while motifs of doubling and the dual attach to many aspects of this Solution, they attach most markedly and emphatically to alif lām rā / الر, which will be highly significant when we reach Segment 40.

> Note: statements attach to the symbol alif lām rā / الر at both instance #5 and instance #8. We look at them in reverse order and interpose a review of instance #22 at Segment 9. This arrangement will prepare the reader for certain key points in advance.

Instance #8 at 14:1

The opening context reads:

> alif lām rā A Writ We have sent down to thee[...]
> (14:1)

Since the opening context meets the standard for a statement in the Writ Set the value of the symbol alif lām rā / الر is al fātiḥah — i.e. the same as the axiom-statement at instance #1.

Having established the symbol alif lām rā / الر at instance #8 to have a value of al fātiḥah, we know the value of instances #4, #5, #6 and #9 to be al fātiḥah also because they comprise the same symbol.

> Note: the expression A Writ We have sent down to thee (Arabic: كِتَٰبٌ أَنزَلْنَٰهُ إِلَيْكَ) occurs once more in the Qur'an, but does not meet the standard for a statement in the Writ Set on the basis of location. It reads:

A Writ We have sent down to thee, one blessed, that they might consider its proofs with care, and that those of insight might take heed.
(38:29)

We note two points in this regard:

- It is precisely careful consideration of the proofs pertaining to a 'Writ' God sent down which is the engine driving the current analysis;
- A single echo of the opening context which supplies the statement at 14:1 comports with the motifs of doubling and the dual which frequently attach to the symbol alif lām rā / الر.

The principal takeaway of this segment is, as we have said, that the symbol alif lām rā / الر is uniquely attached to two statements. We have looked at the first here, and include the second within the purview of Segment 10.

الر	1:1-7 (al fātiḥah)

9. Instance #22 (also #21, #23, #25, #26, #27 and #28)

symbol	حم

Instance #22 at 41:1

The opening context reads:

1 ḥā mīm
2 A revelation from the Almighty, the Merciful,
3 A Writ the proofs whereof are set out and detailed[...]
(41:1-3)

There are three points of complexity we should note here:

- Verse 41:2 intervenes between the instance of the mysterious letters and the statement;
- The expression in which the statement occurs comprises a formula also;
- This formula is a significant variation of the formula at instance #5.

We observe that the leverage point in this case is separated from the instance of the mysterious letters by a single intervening verse. Since no other instance of the mysterious letters is separated from a leverage point which attaches to it by an intervening verse this case demands both attention and resolution. We consider the implications of 41:2 in full as part of Segment 40.

Despite the intervening verse at 41:2, verse 41:3 meets the standard for a statement in the Writ Set because it attaches grammatically directly to an instance of the mysterious letters in a nominative phrase in which a Writ (Arabic: kitābun) forms the subject.

Since the opening context meets the standard for a statement in the Writ Set the value of the symbol ḥā mīm / حم is al fātiḥah — i.e. the same as the axiom-statement at instance #1.

Having established the symbol ḥā mīm / حم at instance #22 to have a value of al fātiḥah, we know the value of instances #21, #23, #25, #26, #27 and #28 to be al fātiḥah also because they comprise the same symbol.

As noted, the expression A Writ the proofs whereof are set out and detailed (Arabic: كِتَٰبٌ فُصِّلَتْ ءَايَٰتُهُۥ) is also a formula — specifically a significant variation of the formula at instance #5. We consider both formulas at Segment 10.

This is the last of the five statements in the Writ Set in the order of the text.

Note: the expression A Writ the proofs whereof are set out and detailed (Arabic: كِتَٰبٌ فُصِّلَتْ ءَايَٰتُهُۥ) occurs nowhere else in the Qur'an.

حم	1:1-7 (al fātiḥah)

10. Formulas at instance #5 and instance #22

This segment provides our first exposure to, and engagement with, formulas. Again, formulas provide for logical conclusions or additional nuance on the basis of comparisons. In this case, the emphasis is on additional nuance.

Instance #5 at 11:1

The opening context reads:

alif lām rā A Writ the proofs whereof are fortified then set out and detailed[...]
(11:1)

While we note that the opening context here meets the standard for a statement in the Writ Set, the value of the symbol alif lām rā / الر is established as al fātiḥah in Segment 8. And since we know the value of this symbol on that basis that point requires no further proof.

However, the fact that the symbol alif lām rā / الر — uniquely among the mysterious letters — attaches to two statements is important, the significance of which will be understood when we reach Segment 40.

> Note: the expression A Writ the proofs whereof are fortified then set out and detailed (Arabic: كِتَٰبٌ أُحۡكِمَتۡ ءَايَٰتُهُۥ ثُمَّ فُصِّلَتۡ) occurs nowhere else in the Qur'an.

As at Segment 9 which treats of instance #22, the expression in which the statement occurs here comprises a formula also. Moreover, the formulas at instance #5 and instance #22 are significant variations of each other, and this fact is the focus of what follows.

Again, the formula at instance #5 in alif lām rā / الر reads:

> alif lām rā A Writ the proofs whereof are fortified then set out and detailed[...]
> (11:1)

While, again, the opening context at instance #22 in ḥā mīm / حم, in which the significant variation of this formula occurs, reads:

> 1 ḥā mīm
> 2 A revelation from the Almighty, the Merciful,
> 3 A Writ the proofs whereof are set out and detailed[...]
> (41:1-3)

The significant variation between these two formulas provides additional nuance on the basis of the differences between the two symbols to which the formulas attach:

- The symbol alif lām rā / الر and the symbol ḥā mīm / حم both attach in a single instance to both a statement and a formula, a case which is true for no other instance of the mysterious letters;
- But the symbol alif lām rā / الر only attaches to two statements — a case which is true for no other instance of the mysterious letters.

Thus, both the symbol alif lām rā / الر and the symbol ḥā mīm / حم can be said to be 'set out and detailed' on the basis of the first point, while on the basis of the second point the symbol alif lām rā / الر can be said to be 'fortified' in a way which is true for no other symbol, including ḥā mīm / حم.

In addition, we will see the symbol alif lām rā / الر uniquely 'fortified' further in dramatic fashion at Segment 40 where the features which attach to the intervening verse at 41:2 are shown:

- To prove a connection between the formula which follows it and the symbol alif lām rā / الر at instance #5;
- To confirm and to signal features of significance later in the sequence.

11. Instance #7

symbol	المر

This part of this segment provides our second exposure to, and engagement with, formulas. Again, formulas provide for logical conclusions or additional nuance on the basis of comparisons. In this case, the emphasis is on logical conclusions.

Instance #7 at 13:1

The opening context reads:

> alif lām mīm rā Those are the proofs of the Writ[...]
> (13:1)

We note first that the symbol alif lām mīm rā / المر occurs once only in the mysterious letters.

Next we observe that the opening context of this once-occurring symbol does not meet the standard for a statement in the Writ Set (i.e. it does not attach to Writ in the nominative case).

Rather, this unique[3] symbol is followed by a formula.

Yet again: formulas provide for logical conclusions or additional nuance on the basis of comparisons.

3 I regret that I am compelled to restate that I use unique throughout in the (correct) sense of unrepeated, one-of-a-kind, meaning existing nowhere else, not in the fuzzy, modern American sense of interesting or compelling and therefore capable of comparison or intensification (cf. more unique and very unique). Correctly speaking, something is either unique or it is not.

The question is: in the absence of a statement at instance #7 — and, again, the symbol alif lām mīm rā / المر occurs nowhere else in the sequence — can we know the value of its symbol?

The answer is that we can: by comparing pairs of identical formulas.

Pairs of identical formulas

> Note: before commencing, I would like to reiterate here that it is best to think past the idea of individual letters in the Writ Set holding "parts" of al fātiḥah. This will facilitate a better grasp of the nature of the set moving forward (the analogy of a word containing silent letters considered earlier is apposite here).

We begin with what we know:[4]

- Instance #4 (in alif lām rā / الر) and instance #17 (in alif lām mīm / الم) attach to an identical formula: Those are the proofs of the Wise Writ;
- Instance #9 (in alif lām rā / الر) and instance #7 (in alif lām mīm rā / المر) also attach to an identical formula: Those are the proofs of the Writ.[5]

> Note: the expressions Those are the proofs of the Wise Writ (Arabic: تِلْكَ ءَايَٰتُ ٱلْكِتَٰبِ ٱلْحَكِيمِ) and Those are the proofs of the Writ (Arabic: تِلْكَ ءَايَٰتُ ٱلْكِتَٰبِ) occur nowhere else in the Qur'an.

These pairs of identical formulas may be made amenable to logical consideration in the following way:

- Those are the proofs of the Wise Writ = a
- Those are the proofs of the Writ = b

We now state the same case on the basis of symbols:

- The symbol alif lām rā / الر = a;
- The symbol alif lām mīm / الم = a;
- The symbol alif lām rā / الر = b;
- The symbol alif lām mīm rā / المر = b.

We now consider what these facts mean:

4 See Table 2 or Table 4.

5 Instance #9 provides also what we are calling a significant variation of this formula in the remaining portion of the clause: and of a clear recitation. This significant variation is considered at the end of the current segment. For the present we are looking only at the identical portions of the two formulas.

1. IF alif lām rā / الر = a ;
2. AND alif lām mīm / الم = a;
3. AND alif lām rā / الر = b;
4. AND alif lām mīm rā / المر = b;
5. THEN a must equal b;
6. AND both mīm / م and rā / ر must be null.

Put another way: if alif lām rā / الر and alif lām mīm / الم are equal to one thing (a) and alif lām rā / الر and alif lām mīm rā / المر are equal to one thing (b), then a and b must be equal (i.e. have the same value) because alif lām rā / الر is equal to both a and to b.

And since the symbol alif lām rā / الر has a value of al fātiḥah — and we know the symbol alif lām mīm / الم to have the same value — it follows that the symbol alif lām mīm rā / المر has a value of al fātiḥah also because alif lām rā / الر and alif lām mīm rā / المر are equal to the same thing: b.

But more than that: if all three symbols have the same value, then mīm / م and rā / ر themselves must be null.

This is so because anything other than null understood for mīm / م and rā / ر when applied to all three symbols precludes what is now demonstrated as a fact by means of statements and formulas: that the value of all three symbols is the same.

We now build upon those findings to understand better the relationship between what one might call the alif lām / ال sector of the Writ Set (i.e. the four distinct symbols which begin in alif lām / ال) and the ḥā mīm / حم block (i.e. instances #21, #22, #23, #25, #26, #27 and #28).

> Note: again, we are not here contemplating values for individual letters; we are considering what further logical implications attach to what is established at this point in our analysis.

We begin by listing those symbols in the alif lām / ال sector of the Writ Set the value of which has been established:

- The symbol alif lām mīm / الم has a value of al fātiḥah;
- The symbol alif lām rā / الر has a value of al fātiḥah;
- The symbol alif lām mīm rā / المر has a value of al fātiḥah;
- The symbol alif lām mīm ṣād / المص has a value of al fātiḥah.

We use x to indicate the value in each case in the logic which follows:

1. IF alif lām mīm / الم = x;
2. AND alif lām rā / الر = x;
3. THEN mīm / م = rā / ر;

Put another way: if alif lām mīm / الم and alif lām rā / الر are equal, then mīm / م and rā / ر must themselves be equal.

To continue:

4. IF alif lām mīm rā / المر = x;
5. AND alif lām mīm ṣād / المص = x;
6. THEN rā / ر = ṣād / ص.

Put another way: if alif lām mīm rā / المر and alif lām mīm ṣād / المص are equal, then rā / ر and ṣād / ص must themselves be equal.

However, mīm / م, rā / ر and ṣād / ص must also be null, because in no other case can the following established facts be true:

- The symbol alif lām mīm / الم = x;
- The symbol alif lām rā / الر = x;
- The symbol alif lām mīm rā / المر = x;
- The symbol alif lām mīm ṣād / المص = x.

Thus, not only are mīm / م and rā / ر null within the Writ Set but ṣād / ص also.

This means that the value of al fātiḥah is borne by the letters alif lām / ال only within the alif lām / ال sector of the Writ Set, the remaining letters in every symbol in this sector being as it were "silent" (i.e. null).

But there is a further and important consequence: given that mīm / م is null in the Writ Set: it follows that the value of al fātiḥah must pertain to the letter ḥā / ح only in the ḥā mīm / حم block.

Again, we urge the reader not to think in terms of a discrete value for those letters in the Writ Set which are not null, but rather to consider the entire value to be borne by these two means: alif lām / ال and ḥā / ح.

Further into our analysis we will appreciate:

- Why the Writ Set uses ḥā / ح as the value-bearer at the end of the set rather than staying with alif lām / ال throughout (at Segments 33.i and 33.ii);
- Why the letters ṣād / ص, mīm / م and rā / ر are made null in the Writ Set (at Segments 20, 24 and 40).

المر 1:1-7 (al fātiḥah)

In the remainder of this segment formulas provide additional nuance.

Significant variation in formula

We turn now to the significant variation in formula which also exists between instance #7 and instance #9.

> alif lām mīm rā Those are the proofs of the Writ[...]
> (13:1)

> alif lām rā Those are the proofs of the Writ and of a clear recitation.
> (15:1)

Above, then:

- The symbol alif lām mīm rā / المر at instance #7 attaches to the formula Those are the proofs of the Writ;
- The symbol alif lām rā / الر at instance #9 attaches to the formula Those are the proofs of the Writ and of a clear recitation.

Thus, the symbol alif lām rā / الر must be proofs of something in addition to that which attaches to the symbol alif lām mīm rā / المر at instance #7 as evinced by the additional expression and of a clear recitation.

> Note: the genitive expression of a clear recitation (Arabic: قُرْءَانٍ مُّبِينٍ) occurs nowhere else in the Qur'an.

We begin by noting the following:

- The symbol alif lām rā / الر occurs multiple times in the set whereas the symbol alif lām mīm rā / المر occurs once only;
- The symbol alif lām rā / الر (uniquely within the Writ Set) possesses two statements whereas the symbol alif lām mīm rā / المر (again, uniquely within the Writ Set) possesses no statement.

So in both regards one can say that the symbol alif lām rā / الر is proof of a clear recitation in ways which cannot be said of the symbol alif lām mīm rā / المر.

However, there is a third, far more significant sense in which the symbol alif lām rā / الر is uniquely proof of a clear recitation, and we will encounter that at Segment 40 and beyond.

Nothing remotely comparable can be said of the symbol alif lām mīm rā / المر.

Thus, we will see the significant variation in this formula not only confirm our general thesis but add verifiable detail to our understanding of that thesis.

The review of the principal features of the Writ Set is now complete

12. Summary of the Writ Set

Our process has been neither arbitrary nor eclectic, nor have we cherry-picked our evidence. The analysis is consistent and founded upon leverage points, beginning with a single, unique axiom — itself a statement — in combination with the only remaining four cases in the Qur'an which also meet the standard for a statement in the Writ Set, and logic and additional nuance derived from comparison of formulas and significant variations thereof, the total incidence of which across the corpus of the Qur'an has been provided.

The key points we have established in our analysis of the Writ Set are:

- That the value of all instances in the Writ Set is al fātiḥah;
- That within the Writ Set it is ḥā / ح in the ḥā mīm / حم block and alif lām / ال in the alif lām / ال sector which are value-bearing, the remaining three letters available to the Writ Set — ṣād / ص, mīm / م and rā / ر — being null where they occur within the Writ Set;
- That the symbol alif lām rā / الر repeatedly and emphatically attaches to significant measures of doubling and the dual.

13. Questions remaining

The segments in this section have provided data sufficient to identify the value of all symbols which participate in the Writ Set.

We have not here considered the formula at instance #6, however. Since this formula (uniquely) occurs also in the Remembrance Set, it is better included within the analysis of that set[6] and understanding of this point is not needed to identify the principal features of the Writ Set.

We reiterate here what was stated at the close of Segment 10: that we will see the symbol alif lām rā / الر uniquely fortified in dramatic fashion further into our analysis, at Segment 40 and beyond.

At Segment 40 also we present a full treatment of the significance of the intervening verse at 41:2, a verse which, uniquely in the sequence of the *mysterious letter*s, separates an instance from the leverage point to which it attaches. This question is better left to that stage in the analysis because what we will cover in the meantime will prepare us to understand its import.

Discussion of the oaths and signposts which occur in the Writ Set is better left to a later point in the presentation for the same reason.

That completes this section.

The Remembrance Set

14. Introduction to the Remembrance Set

Having completed our analysis of the Writ Set we turn now to the Remembrance Set. The Remembrance Set is fundamentally different.

The statement by which each of the five values which participate in the Remembrance Set is defined is in each case And remember thou in the Writ[...], which expression introduces a narrative block associated with a particular prophet.

> Note: the expression And remember thou in the Writ[...] (Arabic: وَٱذۡكُرۡ فِي ٱلۡكِتَٰبِ) occurs nowhere in the Qur'an beyond these five statements.

We will consider the Remembrance Set in three series of segments:

- Segments 15-21. This series introduces the features of instance #10 at sūrah 19, presenting the sūrah's extended opening context, and correlating motifs from that extended opening context with each of the five narrative blocks which follow. These five narrative blocks each treat of a different prophet and are introduced individually by a statement — thus identifying each narrative block in turn as a value for one of the letters of instance #10.
- Segments 22-29. This series provides a summary of the operations and mechanics in effect across the Remembrance Set.
- Segment 30 and beyond. This series provides the evidence which supports both the introduction to instance #10 at sūrah 19 and the summary of the operations and mechanics in effect across the Remembrance Set which follows it.

As part of our broader analysis we will examine instance #24 and see why it is parenthetical to the sequence, understand the operations and mechanics which attach to qāf / ق at instance #29, and demonstrate certain exceptional events required by the sequence by means of the remaining leverage points introduced at Segment 4: signposts and oaths.

15. Introduction to sūrah 19 instance	كهيعص

sūrah 19

Instance #10 at 19:1

The immediate visual impact of instance #10 in kāf hā yā ʿayn ṣād / كهيعص is appreciable. It consists of five letters — more than any other in the sequence — four of which are new to us at this point in the analysis.

The opening context in this case comprises 19:1-15, a segment which opens in A remembrance of the mercy of thy Lord to His servant Zachariah and which features motifs which correspond with motifs in the five narrative blocks which follow, it as we shall see.

> Note: the expression A remembrance of the mercy of thy Lord (Arabic: ذِكْرُ رَحْمَتِ رَبِّكَ) occurs nowhere else in the Qur'an.[1]

The opening context of sūrah 19 reads:

> 1 kāf hā yā ʿayn ṣād
> 2 A remembrance of the mercy of thy Lord to His servant Zachariah.
> 3 When he called to his Lord with a secret call,
> 4 He said: "My Lord: feeble are become the bones within me, and my head is aflame with white hair, yet never have I been wretched in my call to Thee, my Lord,
> 5 "But I fear my heirs after me, and my wife is barren, so give Thou me from Thyself an heir
> 6 "To inherit from me and to inherit from the house of Jacob; and make Thou him, my Lord, pleasing."
> 7 "O Zachariah: We bring thee glad tidings of a lad whose name is John. We have not made a namesake for him before."
> 8 He said: "My Lord: how will I have a lad when my wife is barren and I have reached extreme old age?"
> 9 Said he: "Thus said thy Lord: 'It is easy for Me; and I created thee before when thou wast not anything.'"
> 10 He said: "My Lord: make Thou for me a proof." Said He: "Thy proof is that thou shalt not speak to men three nights, being sound."
> 11 And he went out to his people from the chamber and instructed them: "Give you glory morning and evening!"
> 12 "O John: hold thou fast the Writ!" And We gave him judgment when a child,
> 13 And tenderness from Us, and purity; and he was in prudent fear,

1 This expression is not a leverage point. We include transparency on the occurrence of this expression for the sake of completion.

> 14 And dutiful to his parents; and he was not arrogant or defiant.
> 15 And peace be upon him the day he was born, and the day he dies, and the day he is raised up alive!
> (19:1-15)

Each of the five narrative blocks which follow is introduced by the statement: And remember thou in the Writ[...], which expression, again, occurs nowhere in the Qur'an beyond these five statements.

These narrative blocks treat of:

1. (Mary and) Jesus (19:16-33);
2. Abraham (19:41-50);
3. Moses (19:51-53);
4. Ishmael (19:54-55);
5. Idrīs (19:56-57).

With the exception of verses 19:34-40, the five segments from 19:16 through to 19:57 are contiguous.

We now consider the narrative blocks which follow in terms of the 'remembrance of the mercy of thy Lord to His servant Zachariah' at 19:1-15.

16. Narrative block #1

> 16 And remember thou in the Writ Mary: — when she withdrew from her people to a place in the East,
> 17 So she separated herself from them; then We sent to her Our Spirit, and he appeared to her as a mortal without fault.
> 18 She said: "I seek refuge in the Almighty from thee[...], if thou be in prudent fear."
> 19 He said: "I am only a messenger of thy Lord, that I might give thee a pure lad."
> 20 She said: "How can I have a lad, when no mortal has touched me, neither have I been unchaste?"
> 21 He said: "Thus said thy Lord: 'It is easy for Me — and that We make him a proof for mankind, and a mercy from Us; and it is a matter ordained.'"
> 22 Then she bore him, and withdrew with him to a distant place.
> 23 And the pains of childbirth brought her to the trunk of the date-palm. She said: "Would that I had died before this and been utterly forgotten!"
> 24 Then he called to her, from below her: "Grieve thou not; thy Lord has placed beneath thee a stream.

25 "And shake thou towards thee the trunk of the date-palm; it will drop upon thee ripe, fresh dates.
26 "So eat thou, and drink thou, and let thine eye be comforted; and if thou see any mortal, say thou: 'I have vowed to the Almighty a fast, so I will not speak this day to any man.'"
27 And she brought him to her people, bearing him. They said: "O Mary: thou hast done an unheard-of thing.
28 "O sister of Aaron: thy father was not an evil man, and thy mother was not unchaste."
29 Then she pointed to him. They said: "How can we speak to one who is in the cradle a child?"
30 He said: "I am the servant of God; He has given me the Writ, and made me a prophet,
31 "And made me blessed wherever I be — and enjoined upon me the duty and the purity as long as I live —
32 "And dutiful to my mother; and He has not made me arrogant or wretched.
33 "And peace be upon me the day I was born, and the day I die, and the day I am raised up alive!"
(19:16-33)

Connections
The following points connect the two narratives:[2]

- Names which attach to acts of remembrance: Mary at 19:16, Zachariah at 19:2;
- People who withdraw from their people: Mary at 19:16, Zachariah at 19:3;[3]
- People who receive answers from God: Mary at 19:17, Zachariah at 19:7;
- People who address messengers from God: Mary at 19:19, Zachariah at 19:9;[4]
- People who are promised a son by God's command: Mary at 19:19, Zachariah at 19:7;
- People who question that command: Mary at 19:20, Zachariah at 19:8;
- People who are promised a miracle: Mary at 19:20-21, Zachariah at 19:8-9;
- Men who attach to mercy from God: Jesus at 19:21, John at 19:2;[5]
- People who are told "It is easy for Me": Mary at 19:21, Zachariah at 19:9;
- People who do not speak to men for a term: Mary at 19:26, Zachariah at 19:10;
- People who return to their people: Mary at 19:27, Zachariah at 19:11;
- Use of the vocative:[6] to Mary at 19:28, to Zachariah at 19:7 and to John at 19:12;
- Sons who are given the Writ: for Jesus see 19:30, for John see 19:12;
- Sons who are prophets: for Jesus see 19:30, for John see outside the sūrah at 3:39;

2 Of course, Zachariah was also Mary's guardian (see outside the sūrah at 3:37).

3 We note that at 19:3 Zachariah called to his Lord with a secret call (which indicates that he was in seclusion), and that he returns to his people at 19:11.

4 A careful reading of 19:9 shows the message there to be conveyed by a third party.

5 It is the person of John who is the mercy of thy Lord referred to at this verse.

6 The vocative is how a direct address is formed in Arabic (cf. English: O John).

- Sons who are dutiful to their parents: Jesus at 19:32, John at 19:14;
- Sons who are stated to have good natures: Jesus at 19:32, John at 19:12-14;
- Peace in birth, death, and at the Resurrection: Jesus at 19:33, John at 19:15.

On this basis we can reliably identify a letter at instance #10 with the first of the five narrative blocks which open in the statement And remember thou in the Writ[...].

Observations
The story of Mary is directed towards Jesus — and we mark it as such in what follows. A standard epithet for Jesus in the Qur'an is God's word (Arabic: كَلِمَة).[7] This epithet begins with the letter kāf / ك — the first letter of instance #10.

17. Narrative block #2

41 And remember thou in the Writ Abraham: — he was a man of truth and a prophet.
42 When he said to his father: "O my father: why servest thou what neither hears nor sees, nor can avail thee anything?"
43 "O my father: there has come to me knowledge that has come not to thee, so follow thou me; I will lead thee to an even path."
44 "O my father: serve thou not the satan; the satan is to the Almighty defiant."
45 "O my father: I fear lest there touch thee a punishment from the Almighty, and thou be an ally to the satan."
46 Said he: "Art thou averse to my gods, O Abraham? If thou cease not, I will stone thee; so depart thou from me a good while."
47 He said: "Peace be upon thee! I will ask forgiveness for thee of my Lord; He is gracious towards me.
48 "And I will withdraw from you and that to which you call besides God, and I will call to my Lord; it may be that I will not in my call to my Lord be wretched."
49 So when he had withdrawn from them, and what they served besides God, We gave him Isaac and Jacob; and each We made a prophet.
50 And We gave to them of Our mercy, and We made for them a tongue of truthfulness exalted.
(19:41-50)

Connections
The following points connect the two narratives:

- Use of the vocative: to Abraham's father at 19:42, 19:43, 19:44 and 19:45 and to Abraham at 19:46; to Zachariah at 19:7, to John at 19:12;

7 Found at 3:39, 3:45 and 4:171.

- Men who are not — or anticipate that they may not be — wretched (Arabic: شَقِيًّا) in their call to God: Abraham at 19:48, Zachariah at 19:4;
- Men who call — or are about to call — upon their Lord: Abraham at 19:48, Zachariah at 19:2;
- Men in schism with their sons: Abraham's father at 19:42-48, Zachariah at 19:5;[8]
- Men who withdraw from their people: Abraham at 19:49, Zachariah at 19:3;[9]
- Men who turn in trust to God alone: Abraham at 19:49, Zachariah 19:3-6;
- Men whose wives are barren: Abraham outside the sūrah at 51:29, Zachariah at 19:5;
- Men who are given progeny in old age: Abraham at 19:49, Zachariah 19:7;
- Sons who are prophets: Isaac and Jacob at 19:49, John outside the sūrah at 3:39;
- Mention of the name of Jacob: in connection with Abraham at 19:49 and with Zachariah at 19:6;
- Men who attach to mercy from God: Isaac and Jacob at 19:50, John at 19:2.[10]

On this basis we can reliably identify a letter at instance #10 with the second of the five narrative blocks which open in the statement And remember thou in the Writ[...].

Observations
The Arabic name Abraham (إِبْرَٰهِيم) contains the lettter hā / ه — the second letter of instance #10.

18. Narrative block #3

51 And remember thou in the Writ Moses: — he was sincere, and was a messenger and a prophet.
52 And We called to him from the right side of the mount, and brought him near in private conference.
53 And We gave him, of Our mercy, his brother Aaron, a prophet.
(19:51-53)

Connections
The following points connect the two narratives:

- Men who are addressed individually by God: Moses at 19:52,[11] Zachariah at 19:7;

8 Zachariah says "But I fear my heirs after me" at 19:5, indicating that his sons did not submit to God.

9 We note that at 19:3 Zachariah called to his Lord with a secret call (which indicates that he was in seclusion), and that he returns to his people at 19:11.

10 It is the person of John who is the mercy of thy Lord referred to at this verse.

11 By means of narrative summary which references God's direct addresses to Moses outside the sūrah at 7:144, 20:11, 20:17, 20:19, 20:36, 20:40, 20:83, 27:9, 27:10, 28:30 and 28:31.

- Use of the vocative: implied to Moses at 19:52;[12] explicitly to Zachariah at 19:7 and to John at 19:12;
- Men who are prophets: Moses at 19:51 and Aaron at 19:53, John outside the sūrah at 3:39;
- Men who ask for and receive human support: Moses outside the sūrah at 26:13, Zachariah at 19:5;
- Men given close male relatives as prophets: Moses given his brother at 19:53, Zachariah given his son John who is confirmed as a prophet outside the sūrah at 3:39;
- Men who attach to mercy from God: Aaron at 19:53, John at 19:2.[13]

On this basis we can reliably identify a letter at instance #10 with the third of the five narrative blocks which open in the statement And remember thou in the Writ[...].

Observations
The Arabic name Moses (مُوسَىٰٓ) ends in ى which is visually identical in the unadorned text with yā / ي — the third letter of instance #10.[14]

19. Narrative block #4

54 And remember thou in the Writ Ishmael: — He was true to the promise — and he was a messenger and a prophet;
55 He enjoined upon his people the duty and the purity, and was pleasing in the sight of his Lord.
(19:54-55)

Connections
The segment treating of Ishmael comprises just two verses, but the following points connect it with the opening narrative:

- Promises from God: Ishmael at 19:54,[15] Zachariah at 19:7;
- Men who are prophets: Ishmael at 19:54, John outside the sūrah at 3:39;

12 By means of narrative summary which references God's direct addresses to Moses outside the sūrah at 7:144, 20:11, 20:17, 20:19, 20:36, 20:40, 20:83, 27:9, 27:10, 28:30 and 28:31. Such a form of address requires the use of the vocative (Arabic: yā — the third letter at instance #10 — is the means by which the vocative is formed in Arabic). Moreover, Moses is the individual addressed in the vocative in the Qur'an more frequently than any other — and by a wide margin: Moses: 24 times, Adam: 5, Mary: 5, Jesus: 4, Abraham: 4, Noah: 4, Shu'ayb: 3, Ṣāliḥ: 2, Lot: 2, Hūd: 1, Zachariah: 1, John: 1, Aaron: 1, David: 1; note: one might admit the following individuals also if one regards the epithets as names rather than titles: Pharaoh: 2, Dhūl-Qarnayn: 2, Hāmān: 2, Iblīs: 2, Sāmiriyy: 1, Mālik: 1.

13 It is the person of John who is the mercy of thy Lord referred to at this verse.

14 Additionally, at Segment 24 we will see the value held by the letter yā / ي at instance #10 descend the line of position to the ordinary variable in mīm / م at instance #12 — mīm / م being the letter with which the name Moses (Arabic: مُوسَىٰٓ) begins.

15 This verse states He was true to the promise. Although generally attributed to Ishmael himself, it can be read also as an aside referencing God's promise to Abraham of a son, of which Ishmael was the result. Whereas the Hebrew scriptures claim Isaac as the son of promise delivered to Abraham in his old age, both Ishmael and Isaac are presented in the Qur'an as sons of Abraham's old age and fruit of his supplication to God (see 14:39).

- Men who give people direction: Ishmael at 19:55, Zachariah at 19:11;
- The quality of pleasing: Ishmael at 19:55 (Arabic: مَرْضِيًّا), John at 19:6 (Arabic: رَضِيًّا).[16]

On this basis we can reliably identify a letter at instance #10 with the fourth of the five narrative blocks which open in the statement And remember thou in the Writ[...].

Observations
The Arabic name Ishmael (إِسْمَٰعِيل) contains ʿayn / ع at its centre — the fourth letter of instance #10 — as does the Arabic for promise (وَعْد).

20. Narrative block #5

> 56 And remember thou in the Writ Idrīs: — he was a man of truth and a prophet.
> 57 And We raised him to a high station.
> (19:56-57)

Connections
The segment treating of Idrīs is also very short, again comprising only two verses, but the following points connect it with the opening narrative:

- High levels of exaltation or praise: Idrīs at 19:57, John at 19:15;
- Men who are prophets: Idrīs at 19:56, John outside the sūrah at 3:39;
- Patience: Idrīs outside the sūrah at 21:85,[17] John at 19:12.[18]

On this basis we can reliably identify a letter at instance #10 with the fifth of the five narrative blocks which open in the statement And remember thou in the Writ[...].

Observations
Verse 19:56 states that Idrīs was a man of truth. The word rendered here man of truth is in Arabic ṣiddīq and begins with ṣād / ص (Arabic: صِدِّيق). Meanwhile, the word patient as it appears in the expression among the patient[19] begins with a doubled ṣād / ص (Arabic: ٱلصَّٰبِرِينَ). The letter ṣād / ص is the fifth letter of instance #10.

16 Both words are formed in Arabic on the same root.

17 This is the only other place in the Qur'an in which Idrīs is mentioned. There he is counted among the patient.

18 John is there exhorted: O John! Hold thou fast the Writ! In the context of a written revelation this imperative implies a requirement to be patient in adhering to the directives of that revelation.

19 Cf. the footnote which expands upon 21:85 above.

Note: we will recall that the letter ṣād / ص is shown in the Writ Set to be null.[20] Were that not the case, ambiguity between ṣād / ص in its role in the Writ Set and ṣād / ص in its role in the Remembrance Set would arise.[21]

21. Summary of instance #10

Our identification of the values for the component letters of instance #10 which preface sūrah 19 — kāf hā yā ʿayn ṣād / كهيعص — as the five discrete narrative blocks which follow the opening context to that sūrah at 19:1-15 stands on the following:

- The correlation in number between the five letters of instance #10 and the five narrative blocks which follow the opening context;
- The fact that each of the five discrete narrative blocks is prefaced by And remember thou in the Writ[...] in concert with the fact that this formulation occurs nowhere else in the Qur'an;
- The fact that each of the five discrete narrative blocks evinces considerable thematic correlations with the opening context to the same sūrah and which immediately precedes the first of the five discrete narrative blocks.

The correlation we draw between the number of letters at instance #10 and the number of discrete narrative blocks prefaced exclusively by And remember thou in the Writ[...] is objectively correct, and the quantity of thematic correlations between those segments and the opening context to the same sūrah at 19:1-15 is impressive.

Those observations which follow the presentation of each discrete narrative block and which provide correlations between the name of the principal prophet in a given segment and one of the letters which make up instance #10 in kāf hā yā ʿayn ṣād / كهيعص are of interest, but are not conclusive.

While we incline to the view that an identification in the order of the text of the letters kāf hā yā ʿayn ṣād / كهيعص with the discrete narrative blocks which follow in the order of the text is correct — and we proceed on that basis — that conclusion is not vital to our analysis.

All that is necessary is that there be an exclusive correspondence between each of the five letters and one of the five discrete narrative blocks. That much granted, the logic of what follows holds.

20 See Segment 11.

21 We will see the same provision facilitate later inclusion of the remaining two letters shown to be null in the Writ Set: mīm / م and rā / ر.

The values at instance #10 are listed below. Again, these are the only values available to the Remembrance Set.

kāf	ك	19:16-33 (Jesus)
hā	ه	19:41-50 (Abraham)
yā	ي	19:51-53 (Moses)
ʿayn	ع	19:54-55 (Ishmael)
ṣād	ص	19:56-57 (Idrīs)

The Remembrance Set represents a fundamental sea-change: whereas the value of each instance in the Writ Set is in all cases one thing (al fātiḥah), the Remembrance Set contains five discrete values, and those values pertain individually at the outset to five discrete letters.

And whereas the value of the Writ Set attaches to the symbols which comprise it irrespective of the order in which they occur, values in the Remembrance Set descend through the set according to discernible principles, as we shall see.

> Note: this is not the place for a detailed examination of the collective or relative significance of the prophets Jesus, Abraham, Moses, Ishmael and Idrīs. The principal purpose of this work is to demonstrate the mechanism of the mysterious letters. However, I will allow myself the following observations:
> - Abraham is, of course, the great Patriarch, following whom Moses brought the Torah and Jesus the Gospel;[22]
> - Parenthood, seniority, inheritance and offspring are discernible themes within sūrah 19. This fact accords with the operations and mechanics of the Remembrance Set itself wherein values proceed downwards, as we shall see;
> - While the first three discrete narratives contain many of the themes just listed[23] the last two lack them, both of which seem also junior given the limited text they comprise locally and in the Qur'an overall;
> - The identity of Idrīs is contested. A number of Islamic writers and certain academics connect Idrīs with the prophet Enoch. Less mainstream writers may connect him with Hermes Trismegistus, a mythological or semi-mythological personality associated with Thoth, the Egyptian god of wisdom.[24]

22 The Qur'an's treatment of this term presupposes something which confirms the Torah. Dominant Christian dogmas, however, are in conflict with both the Qur'an and certain statements of Jesus in this regard.

23 We note that in the opening segment Zachariah is the father of John. In the narrative blocks which provide the values of the Remembrance Set Mary is the mother of Jesus (which we tend to identify with kāf / ك), Abraham is the father of Isaac and grandfather of Jacob (which we tend to identify with hā / ه), and Moses is the senior brother of Aaron (which we tend to identify with yā / ي). The issue in each case (Jesus, Isaac and Jacob) and the junior brother (Aaron) are all identified as prophets in situ. John is identified as a prophet outside the sūrah at 3:39.

22. Operations and mechanics of the Remembrance Set

Segments 22-29 provide a summary of the operations and mechanics in effect across the Remembrance Set.

That the constitution of the Remembrance Set is dynamically different to that of the Writ Set is seen in our introduction to variables at Segment 4, which bears review at this stage.

We turn now to the operations and mechanics of the Remembrance Set for which Table 3 presents a visual overview and the evidence for which is supplied at Segment 30 and beyond.

In process of what follows we will describe (and then later demonstrate) the letter qāf / ق at instance #24 as a new special variable, and instance #24 as parenthetical to the sequence.

The relevant part of the sequence is presented below for ease of reference, including lines of position. The English transliteration of all special variables is here in bold:

	1	2	3	4	5
instance #10	kāf	hā	yā	ʿayn	ṣād	كهيعص
instance #11	ṭā	hā				طه
instance #12	ṭā	sīn	mīm			طسم
instance #13	ṭā	sīn				طس
instance #14	ṭā	sīn	mīm			طسم
instance #19	yā	sīn				يس
instance #20	ṣād					ص
instance #24	ʿayn	sīn	qāf[25]			عسق

23. Instance #11

instance طه
sūrah 20

24 I know of no means of establishing the case one way or the other on the basis of the Qur'an, and this is not the place for speculation.

25 The letter qāf / ق is a new special variable, the details of which are discussed in due course.

Instance #11 at 20:1

The opening context at instance #11 features no leverage point, and we omit further verses here on this basis.

Operations and mechanics:

- The value of special variable kāf / ك passes from position 1 at instance #10 down the line of position to the ordinary variable ṭā / ط at position 1 here. Ordinary variables simply adopt values passed to them having no inherent value of their own. Accordingly, there is no change in value;
- The special variable hā / ه descends the line of position from position 2 at instance #10 to position 2 here. Special variables bring their original value with them. Accordingly, there is no change in value.

  Note: this is the only case in the Remembrance Set where a special variable descends the line of position directly, and is also the only case where a special variable has the same value outside instance #10 as in it. We discuss points associated with these features at Segments 30 and 31.

ṭā	ط	19:16-33 (Jesus)
hā	ه	19:41-50 (Abraham)

24. Instance #12

instance	طسم
sūrah 26

Instance #12 at 26:1

The opening context reads:

> 1 ṭā sīn mīm
> 2 Those are the proofs of the Clear Writ.
> (26:1-2)

The opening context comprises a formula. We consider this formula in two places:

- At Segment 31 together with the sole incidence of the same formula in the Remembrance Set;
- At Segment 32 together with sole incidence of the same formula in the Writ Set.

Operations and mechanics:

- The ordinary variable ṭā / ط at position 1 at instance #11 passes down the line of position to position 1 here. Accordingly, there is no change in value;
- The value of special variable hā / ه passes from position 2 at instance #11 down the line of position to the ordinary variable sīn / س at position 2 here. Ordinary variables simply adopt values passed to them having no inherent value of their own. Accordingly, there is no change in value;
- The value of special variable yā / ي passes from position 3 at instance #10 down the line of position to the ordinary variable mīm / م at position 3 here. Again, ordinary variables simply adopt values passed to them having no inherent value of their own. Accordingly, there is no change in value.

  Note: the original letters of the Remembrance Set (i.e. the special variables of instance #10) have now been replaced in all occupied positions. We consider the implications of this replacement at Segment 30.

  As is the case with ṣād / ص, we will recall that the letter mīm / م is shown also in the Writ Set to be null.[26] Were that not the case, ambiguity between mīm / م in its role in the Writ Set and mīm / م in its role in the Remembrance Set would arise.[27]

The opening context comprises a formula. We consider this formula at Segment 31.

Operations and mechanics:

- The ordinary variable ṭā / ط at position 1 at instance #12 passes down the line of position to position 1 here. Accordingly, there is no change in value;
- The ordinary variable sīn / س at position 2 at instance #12 passes down the line of position to position 2 here. Accordingly, there is no change in value.

The opening context comprises a formula. We consider this formula in two places:

- At Segment 31 together with the sole incidence of the same formula in the Remembrance Set;
- At Segment 32 together with sole incidence of the same formula in the Writ Set.

Operations and mechanics:

- The ordinary variable ṭā / ط at position 1 at instance #13 passes down the line of position to position 1 here. Accordingly, there is no change in value;

The opening context comprises an oath. We consider oaths in the Remembrance Set at Segment 35.

Operations and mechanics:

- The special variable yā / ي descends, crossing the line of position, from position 3 at instance #10 to position 1 here. Special variables bring their original value with them;
- Since where special variables cross the line of position they accumulate also the value or values held above them in the line of position at their destination, the value of ordinary variable ṭā / ط passes from position 1 at instance #14 down the line of position to position 1 here. This results in two accumulated values;
- The ordinary variable sīn / س at position 2 at instance #14 passes down the line of position to position 2 here. Accordingly, there is no change in value.

The opening context comprises an oath. We consider oaths in the Remembrance Set at Segment 35.

Operations and mechanics:

- The special variable ṣād / ص descends, crossing the line of position, from position 5 at instance #10 to position 1 here. Special variables bring their original value with them;
- Since where special variables cross the line of position they accumulate also the value or values held above them in the line of position at their destination, the values of special variable yā / ي pass from position 1 at instance #19 down the line of position to position 1 here. 29. Instance #24 instance	عسق

sūrah 42

Instance #24 at 42:2

The opening context at instance #24 features no leverage point, and we omit further verses on this basis. But it is helpful for what follows to note the context in which this instance appears:

> 1 ḥā mīm
> 2 ʿayn sīn qāf
> (42:1-2)

Instance #24 in ʿayn sīn qāf / عسق occurs as the second instance of the mysterious letters in a single sūrah. This is a unique occurrence, and prepares us for the fact that instance #24 in ʿayn sīn qāf / عسق is an exceptional case.

A summary of the characteristics specific to instance #24 follows:

- While it receives values from the Remembrance Set it is parenthetical both to it and to the broader sequence;
- It introduces a new special variable — that is: a special variable which does not feature at instance #10: the letter qāf / ق;
- The operation which occurs at instance #24 is unique, having the following characteristics:
  - The values which result at position 1 and position 2 then pass horizontally to the new special variable at position 3 in qāf / ق, where they accumulate;
  - There remains a further step for the value which results at the new special variable at position 3 in qāf / ق to be made complete. This takes place at instance #29.

An exceptional case requires exceptional evidence, and we examine that evidence at Segment 33.iii. For now, we summarise the operations and mechanics of instance #24.

Operations and mechanics:

- The special variable ʿayn / ع descends, crossing the line of position, from position 4 at instance #10 to position 1 here. Special variables bring their original value with them;
- Since where special variables cross the line of position they accumulate also the value or values held above them in the line of position at their destination, the values of special variable ṣād / ص pass from position 1 at instance #20 down the line of position to position 1 here. This results in four accumulated values;
- The ordinary variable sīn / س at position 2 at instance #19 passes down the line of position to position 2 here. Accordingly, there is no change in value;
- The values at special variable ʿayn / ع at position 1 and the value of ordinary variable sīn / س at position 2 together pass horizontally to the new special variable qāf / ق at position 3 where the result is five accumulated values.

It will be noted that the original values of instance #10 have now been reconstituted in a single letter:

ʿayn	ع	19:16-33 (Jesus) 19:51-53 (Moses) 19:56-57 (Idrīs) 19:54-55 (Ishmael)
sīn	س	19:41-50 (Abraham)
qāf	ق	19:16-33 (Jesus) 19:51-53 (Moses) 19:56-57 (Idrīs) 19:54-55 (Ishmael) 19:41-50 (Abraham)

While what has been described at Segments 14 through to 29 fits together in terms of summary, it remains to be confirmed by evidence.

In Segment 30 and beyond we provide that evidence, confirming the general mechanism we have described to be in effect and correct while demonstrating how the exceptional features that attach to instance #24 in ʿayn sīn qāf / عسق fit into that mechanism.

30. Replacement of kāf hā yā by ṭā sīn mīm: overview

We have noted that block in which the original letters (special variables) at instance #10 are fully replaced by ordinary variables comprising instances #12, #13 and #14.

The relevant part of the sequence is presented below for ease of reference, including lines of position. The English transliteration of all special variables is here in bold.

	1	2	3	4	5
instance #10	kāf	hā	yā	ʿayn	ṣād	كهيعص
instance #11	ṭā	hā				طه
instance #12	ṭā	sīn	mīm			طسم
instance #13	ṭā	sīn				طس
instance #14	ṭā	sīn	mīm			طسم

In the three-instance block at instances #12, #13 and #14:

- The same three letters only appear;
- A single instance in ṭā sīn / طس is "sandwiched" between two identical instances in ṭā sīn mīm / طسم;
- The original special variables kāf, hā and yā in positions 1, 2 and 3 respectively at instance #10 have been fully replaced by ordinary variables: ṭā, sīn and (where it occurs) mīm;
- There has been no change in value at any position in this three-instance block from those at positions 1, 2 and 3 at instance #10;[28]
- Instance #14 forms the terminus of the three-instance block.

This context is one which formulas occur, and thus must therefore provide for logical conclusions or additional nuance on the basis of comparisons, and that is the focus of the following segment.

That segment is divided by subheadings in order to present the topic in digestible chunks.

31.i Component parts of the three-instance block

The following facts attach to instances #12, #13 and #14:

- Instances #12, #13 and #14 are the sole instances in the Remembrance Set comprising ordinary variables only;
- Instances #12, #13 and #14 each draw from the same pool of three letters;
- Within this three-instance block instance #13 (in ṭā sīn / طس) comprises the "filling" between two identical "slices of bread" (instances #12 and #14, both in 28 And no position greater than that of the third occurs in the Remembrance Set beyond instance #10.

ṭā sīn mīm / طسم) by virtue of the fact that instance #13 differs from instances #12 and #14 by dint of its lack of a letter mīm / م.

That three-instance block is reproduced below for ease of reference:

instance #12	ṭā sīn mīm	طسم
instance #13	ṭā sīn	طس
instance #14	ṭā sīn mīm	طسم

Key information about formulas from Segment 4 is also reproduced below for ease of reference:

Those formulas which serve the function of a formula only:

- Immediately follow an instance of the mysterious letters;
- Form expressions which combine the proofs (Arabic: āyāt) with Writ (Arabic: kitāb) where Writ is in the genitive case: Those are the proofs of the[...] Writ.

Formulas can be unique,[29] occur in identical cases, or occur in significant variations between otherwise identical cases.

Significant variations between formulas invite comparison on the basis of their distinctions.

31.ii Disconnected formula at instance #13

Instance #13 attaches to the following formula:

ṭā sīn Those are the proofs of the Qur'an and of a Clear Writ
(27:1)

The formula at instance #13 is distinguished among formulas by the fact that it is unique:[30] it has no duplicate and no significant variation.

Thus it is disconnected, bereft of any possible point of comparison with any other formula.

29 I am forced to state again that I use unique throughout in the (correct) sense of unrepeated, one-of-a-kind, meaning existing nowhere else, not in the fuzzy, modern American sense of interesting or compelling and therefore capable of comparison or intensification (cf. more unique and very unique). Correctly speaking, something is either unique or it is not.

30 There is a total of ten formulas in the mysterious letters, occurring at instances #4, #5, #6, #7, #9, #12, #13, #14, #17 and #22. They are presented now again grouped where either duplicates or significant variations occur: #4 and #17; #5 and #22; #6, #12 and #14; #7 and #9. Instance #13 alone is absent from these groupings.

However, we are still able to access the logical conclusions which attach to this formula by way of comparisons.

In order to access those conclusions we must begin with the fact that instance #13 — and it alone — attaches to the two portions which comprise its formula:

- portion a: the proofs of the Qur'an
- portion b: [the proofs] of a Clear Writ

Note: neither the proofs of the Qur'an (Arabic: ءَايَٰتُ ٱلْقُرْءَانِ) nor the genitive expression of a Clear Writ (Arabic: كِتَابٍ مُّبِينٍ) occurs anywhere else in the Qur'an.[31]

31.iii Values of letters in the three-instance block

We must preface our analysis here by recognising those features which attach to the letters which form the symbols in this three-instance block:

- Each letter has a value;
- The value of each letter is a single value;
- The value of each letter is held by that letter alone within a given instance (there is no duplicate of any value at any single instance in this three-instance block);
- In no case is a value null.

Thus, each letter has a known, single, positive value and holds that value consistently and uniquely in those instances where it appears in this three-instance block.

31.iv Identical instances

The next point for consideration concerns instance #12 and instance #14.

Instance #12 and instance #14 (i.e. those instances which "sandwich" instance #13 between them) are both identical and attach to the same formula:

1 ṭā sīn mīm
2 Those are the proofs of the Clear Writ.
(26:1-2 & 28:1-2)

31 The expression and a Clear Writ (Arabic: وَكِتَٰبٌ مُّبِينٌ) occurs at 5:15. However, there the case (as expressed by the ending) is the nominative and performs a function entirely different to the expression and of a Clear Writ (Arabic: وَكِتَابٍ مُّبِينٍ). The expression in a clear writ (Arabic: فِى كِتَٰبٍ مُّبِينٍ) occurs five times (6:59, 10:61, 11:6, 27:75 and 34:3). There the oblique case is a function of the preposition; it is not a genitive construction.

> Note: this formula has no place in this part of our analysis for the reason that it occurs (uniquely) also in two sets.[32] Formulas provide for logical conclusions or additional nuance on the basis of comparisons. The instances which comprise the Writ Set and those which comprise the Remembrance Set are of different types, therefore their components do not bear logical comparison (think of comparing apples with excitement, for example). We develop this point to completion at Segment 32.

To reiterate the present case: instance #12 and instance #14 are not only identical in form but attach to the same formula — a formula which occurs nowhere else within the Remembrance Set, and for which no significant variation exists. Thus, in every respect instance #12 and instance #14 are identical.

Importantly for our purposes, no comparison is possible between instance #12 and instance #14 themselves because comparing x with x is meaningless.

31.v Comparisons by means of the disconnected formula

Again, instance #13 — and it alone — attaches to the two portions which comprise its formula:

- portion a: the proofs of the Qur'an
- portion b: [the proofs] of a Clear Writ

And again: no comparison is possible between instance #12 and instance #14 themselves since comparing x with x is meaningless.

However, it must be the case that clear conclusions attach to the formula at instance #13 because formulas by their nature provide for logical conclusions or additional nuance on the basis of comparisons.

With these facts in view, we may proceed to our point: while instance #12 and instance #14 may not meaningfully be compared with each other, instance #13 may meaningfully be compared with them.

The reasons for this follow:

- Instance #13 is of the same type as instance #12 and instance #14;
- Instance #13 features letters which feature also at instances #12 and #14;
- All letters in all three instances attach to the features listed above at 31.iii.

32 I.e. also in the Writ Set at instance #6.

31.vi Conclusions drawn

We now draw conclusions from the three-instance "sandwich". That block is reproduced below for ease of reference:

instance #12	ṭā sīn mīm	طسم
instance #13	ṭā sīn	طس
instance #14	ṭā sīn mīm	طسم

And again: instance #13 — and it alone — attaches to the two portions which comprise its formula:

- the proofs of the Qur'an (a)
- [the proofs] of a Clear Writ (b)

On the basis of what we have covered to this point we can logically conclude the following about ṭā / ط and sīn / س at instance #13 in respect of the formula which attaches to them:

1. EITHER ṭā / ط = a AND sīn / س = b;
2. OR ṭā / ط = b AND sīn / س = a.

While this conclusion is unremarkable it is also unassailable.

And, importantly, it has inevitable implications for mīm / م at instance #12 and instance #14 — which letter occurs nowhere else in the Remembrance Set.

We can identify those implications by renewing our process of logic:

1. IF ṭā / ط = a AND sīn / س = b;
2. OR ṭā / ط = b AND sīn / س = a;
3. THEN mīm / م ≠ a or b.

Put another way: we must conclude that the proofs of the Qur'an on the one hand (portion a) and [the proofs of] a Clear Writ on the other (portion b) are equal either to ṭā / ط or to sīn / س. While we have no way of knowing which is equal to which, that fact has no material impact upon the outcome: in the context of the three-instance block possessing those features we have noted to this point it is impossible for mīm / م to be equal either to the proofs of the Qur'an or to [the proofs of] a Clear Writ.

To conclude: within the framework of the Remembrance Set mīm / م is logically excluded from attachment to:

- a: the proofs of the Qur'an
- b: [the proofs] of a Clear Writ

We will now consider the implications of this conclusion.

31.vii Implications of portion a

The conclusion above as it attaches to portion a has implications for the letter qāf / ق where it appears at instance #24 as well as for what follows in consequence of the operations and mechanics of the letter qāf / ق in the remainder of the sequence.

We reproduce the following summary of the characteristics of instance #24 from Segment 29 for ease of reference:

> Instance #24 in 'ayn sīn qāf / عسق is an exceptional case the details of which are summarised below:
>
> - While it receives values from the Remembrance Set it is parenthetical both to it and to the broader sequence;
> - It introduces a new special variable — that is: a special variable which does not feature at instance #10: the letter qāf / ق;
> - The operation which occurs at instance #24 is unique, having the following characteristics:
>   - The values which result at position 1 and position 2 then pass horizontally to the new special variable at position 3 in qāf / ق, where they accumulate;
>   - There remains a further step for the value which results at the new special variable at position 3 in qāf / ق to be made complete. This takes place at instance #29.

An exceptional case requires exceptional evidence, and we present that evidence in full at Segment 33.iii.

However, we are prepared to absorb now one important component of that evidence: since we know mīm / م to be logically excluded from the proofs of the Qur'an if, within the mechanics of the mysterious letters, the letter qāf / ق itself is identified unambiguously as a proof of 'the Qur'an', mīm / م is therefore logically excluded from qāf / ق.

And if mīm / م is logically excluded from qāf / ق, that fact has the following implications:

- It confirms that mīm / م at position 3 at instance #14 can not — as required by the general operation of the mechanism — pass down the line of position to position 3 at instance #24 because it is explicitly excluded from doing so;
- An explicit exception to a general rule tends to confirm the rule. Thus, the explicit exclusion of mīm / م from position 3 at instance #24 tends to support the general rule of the mechanism we describe to be in operation across the Remembrance Set;[33]
- That this explicit exception to the general rule occurs at instance #24 tends to support our analysis that instance #24 is parenthetical to the sequence;
- It confirms that we are correct to assign portion a rather than portion b to this logical process since portion b contains no mention of 'the Qur'an' — which is the linchpin upon which this entire area of our analysis depends.

To summarise: given that the letter qāf / ق itself is later identified unambiguously as a proof of 'the Qur'an', we now know, given the three-instance block possessing those features we have noted to this point, the following about portion a:

- That it provides conclusions vital to the mechanics of the Remembrance Set;
- That it fits the logical process in a way unavailable to portion b.

The project to establish an unambiguous identification of the letter qāf / ق as a proof of 'the Qur'an' within the mechanics of the mysterious letters is a matter of accumulative as well as final evidence. It is revisited in further parts of this analysis, and both attains completion at the conclusion of Segment 40 and is further confirmed beyond that point.

31.viii Interim summary

Within the framework of the Remembrance Set mīm / م is logically excluded from attachment to:

- a: the proofs of the Qur'an
- b: [the proofs] of a Clear Writ

Meanwhile, portion a:

- Provides conclusions vital to the mechanics of the Remembrance Set;
- Fits the logical process in a way unavailable to portion b.

We consider now the implications of the same conclusion as it attaches to portion b.

Accordingly, we must expect that those implications should:

- Provide conclusions vital to the mechanics of the Remembrance Set;
- Fit the logical process in a way unavailable to portion a.

33 See Segments 22 through to 29.

31.ix Implications of portion b

We address the first point above by beginning with our conclusions, following which we supply the facts which inform those conclusions. The requirement that portion b should fit the logical process in a way unavailable to portion a is discussed separately.

The two principal conclusions which attach to portion b are that:

- Portion b in [the proofs] of a Clear Writ expresses an exclusive correlation between instance #13 in ṭā sīn / طس and instance #11 in ṭā hā / طه;
- The exclusive correlation between instance #13 in ṭā sīn / طس and instance #11 in ṭā hā / طه forces recognition of the distinction between special variables and ordinary variables, a distinction not only vital to the operation of the Remembrance Set but with implications for further operations in the sequence.

The facts which inform these conclusions follow:

- Two values attach to instance #13 in ṭā sīn / طس, namely: 19:16-33 (Jesus) and 19:41-50 (Abraham).[34] The same two values attach in the same combination to one other instance only: to instance #11 in ṭā hā / طه.[35] Thus, the values of instance #13 and instance #11 enjoy an exclusive correspondence;
- While instance #13 in ṭā sīn / طس and instance #11 in ṭā hā / طه attach to identical values they — and this is important — do not comprise identical letters. The fact that identical values attach to instance #13 in ṭā sīn / طس and to instance #11 in ṭā hā / طه means that the letters hā / ه and sīn / س must function differently.

As with the letter qāf / ق as a proof of 'the Qur'an' at Segment 31.vii above, positive demonstration of ṭā sīn / طس as [the proofs] of a Clear Writ is a matter of accumulative as well as final evidence.

The thematic background to that evidence is intrinsic to at Segment 32.

The technical background to that evidence is intrinsic to the fact that instance #24 is parenthetical to the sequence, which point is demonstrated at Segment 33.iii.

Supporting evidence is supplied at Segment 36.

The final evidence for ṭā sīn / طس as [the proofs] of a Clear Writ is provided at the conclusion of Segment 40 where the project to demonstrate the letter qāf / ق as a proof of 'the Qur'an' is also concluded.

34 For which see Segment 25.

35 For which see Segment 23.

Demonstration of the requirement that portion b should fit the logical process we have just seen in a way unavailable to portion a is a function of that evidence summarised above.

We proceed in our analysis on the basis of the conclusions which result from that evidence.

To summarise those conclusions here: the exclusive correspondence between instance #13 in ṭā sīn / طس and instance #11 in ṭā hā / طه acts as a linchpin, fixing within — and requiring of — the Remembrance Set the distinction between ordinary variables and special variables.

While, generally speaking, the present section treats of the Remembrance Set, we will in what follows of necessity be treating increasingly also of the Writ Set.

32. Formula at instances #6, #12 and #14

There exists a further formula in the Remembrance Set, as remarked upon above,[36] which has the distinction — unique across the mysterious letters — that it occurs in both the Writ Set and the Remembrance Set:

- In the Writ Set it attaches to instance #6 in alif lām rā / الر;
- In the Remembrance Set it attaches to instance #12 and instance #14, both in ṭā sīn mīm / طسم.

That formula reads:

> Those are the proofs of the Clear Writ.
> (12:1, 26:2 & 28:2)
> Note: neither the expression Those are the proofs of the Clear Writ (Arabic: تِلْكَ ءَايَٰتُ ٱلْكِتَٰبِ ٱلْمُبِينِ) nor the truncated form the proofs of the Clear Writ (Arabic: ءَايَٰتُ ٱلْكِتَٰبِ ٱلْمُبِينِ) occurs anywhere else in the Qur'an.

We know that formulas provide for logical conclusions or additional nuance on the basis of comparisons. The question then is: how does this formula, which uniquely occurs in two sets, provide for meaningful comparison leading to logical conclusions?

We can gain purchase on this question by reviewing the following points:

36 At Segments 13, 24, 26, 31.iv and 31.vi.

- The formulas we considered in the Writ Set provided logic on the basis either of differences between instances[37] or on the basis of significant variations between formulas;[38]
- Where this formula occurs in the Remembrance Set the instances themselves are also identical — both in ṭā sīn mīm / طسم; as previously noted, comparing x with x is meaningless;
- This formula occurs once only in the Writ Set, thus there is nothing within the Writ Set to compare it with;
- There exists no significant variation of this formula in either set, thus there is nothing to compare it with on that basis;
- The Writ Set and the Remembrance Set are of different types. Things bear comparison only with relatable things; we have already noted the impossibility of comparing things occupying different ontological planes such as apples and excitement. Likewise, comparison of instances in sets of different types is both meaningless and impossible;
- The visual distinctions between instance #6 in alif lām rā / الر on the one hand and instances #12 and #14 in ṭā sīn mīm / طسم on the other provide no point of purchase for logical comparison due to the difference in type.

Meanwhile, the disconnected formula at instance #13 provided logic on two bases:

- Its own uniqueness;
- The exclusive correlation of its components (portion a and portion b) to itself.

We must conclude in the light of the points above that:

- The formula Those are the proofs of the Clear Writ can provide meaningful comparison on one basis only: on the basis of that by which the instances which contain it are distinct;
- The sole point of meaningful distinction which exists between the two identical instances in the Remembrance Set on the one hand, and a single instance in the Writ Set on the other attached to the same formula is that of the type of the two sets.

And the only logically unassailable conclusion possible in a comparison between the Writ Set type and the Remembrance Set type is that the two types are distinct from one another.

We shall come to see this very conclusion — i.e. that the Clear Writ (Arabic: ٱلْكِتَٰبِ ٱلْمُبِينِ) emphasises the Remembrance Set and the Writ Set as distinct, separate entities — both required and confirmed later in this analysis.[39]

37 E.g. between instance #4 and instance #17 (instance #4 is in alif lām rā / الر while instance #17 is in alif lām mīm / الم).

38 E.g. between the formulas at instance #5 and instance #22.

39 At Segment 36.

Lastly, the motifs of doubling and the dual which attach to the symbol alif lām rā / الر and which we considered as part of our analysis of the Writ Set[40] feature here also:

- This formula uniquely occurs in both the Writ Set and the Remembrance Set;
- Instance #12 and instance#14 are both in ṭā sīn mīm / طسم, and the symbol ṭā sīn mīm / طسم alone within the Remembrance Set occurs twice;
- This formula is the only case of a doubled formula in the Remembrance Set.

We make use of subdivisions in the next segment to facilitate navigation of a subject comprising a number of facets.

33.i The ḥā mīm block and instances #24 and #29

We turn now to what we term the ḥā mīm / حم block: that series of seven instances in ḥā mīm / حم (i.e. instances #21, #22, #23, #25, #26, #27 and #28) located at sūrahs 40, 41, 42, 43, 44, 45 and 46 respectively.

This block of contiguous sūrahs in uniform instances forms the context in which instance #24 in ʿayn sīn qāf / عسق occurs.

We provide below those parts of the sequence which pertain to the question in view for ease of reference. Complete value-bearing letters are marked in the English transliteration in bold. The letter qāf / ق at instance #24 is underlined because although it receives values, further operations and mechanics are yet to occur before it becomes complete.

Sūrah 40	instance #21	ḥā	mīm		حم
Sūrah 41	instance #22	ḥā	mīm		حم
Sūrah 42	instance #23	ḥā	mīm		حم
Sūrah 42	instance #24	ʿayn	sīn	qāf	عسق
Sūrah 43	instance #25	ḥā	mīm		حم
Sūrah 44	instance #26	ḥā	mīm		حم
Sūrah 45	instance #27	ḥā	mīm		حم
Sūrah 46	instance #28	ḥā	mīm		حم
Sūrah 50	instance #29	qāf			ق

We will recall that instance #24, uniquely, is the second instance of the mysterious letters in a single sūrah. This fact, taken together with the broader context in which instance #24 in ʿayn sīn qāf / عسق occurs, is important to our analysis for two reasons:

40 Instance #6 is in alif lām rā / الر. The symbol alif lām rā / الر is unique within the Writ Set for possessing two statements. See Segments 8 and 10.

- It supports our later demonstration of instance #24 in ʿayn sīn qāf / عسق as parenthetical to the sequence;
- It sets up the mechanics of the sequence beyond the ḥā mīm / حم block: the vital descent of the value of the Writ Set from position 1 at instance #28 to position 1 at instance #29.

We begin with the second point.

33.ii The two modes of value-bearing in the Writ Set

In Segment 11 we established that the value of al fātiḥah is borne throughout the Writ Set first by the two letters alif lām / ال,[41] then by the single letter ḥā / ح,[42] with all remaining letters in the Writ Set being null.

That the first letter alone in the ḥā mīm / حم block bears the same value in the second recognisable portion of the Writ Set as do the two letters alif lām / ال in the first might seem an unnecessary complication given that no change in value results.

However, this development is crucial to the broader requirements of the sequence, and we explain why below:

- At instance #29 the new special variable qāf / ق from instance #24 re-enters the sequence, crossing the line of position, bringing with it all five values of the Remembrance Set and receiving there the value of al fātiḥah held above it by ḥā / ح at instance #28 down the line of position;[43]
- Were the value of al fātiḥah not established in the first line of position prior to instance #29, the letter qāf / ق would not there be able to receive that value. A single letter can occupy the first line of position only; it follows that it can receive a value which descends the first line of position only.[44]

What then is the purpose of the alif lām / ال sector in the Writ Set in which the value of al fātiḥah is borne by two letters?

The following points address this question:

41 I.e. at instances #1, #2, #3, #4, #5, #6, #7, #8, #9, #15, #16, #17 and #18.

42 I.e. at instances #21, #22, #23, #25, #26, #27 and #28.

43 See Table 3.

44 Clearly, the value of the Writ Set has nowhere descended to this point in our analysis. The evidence for this exceptional event is provided at Segment 34.

- Our analysis began with recognition of the fourteen letters which participate in the mysterious letters as representative of the fourteen visually distinct symbols available to the Arabic alphabet.[45] It may seem a trite observation, but recognition of this feature does nothing to dilute the requirement that it has also to be a fact. In other words: it is a positive requirement for representatives of all fourteen visually distinct symbols available to the Arabic alphabet in fact to participate in the mysterious letters for recognition of this feature of the mysterious letters to be possible. Thus, participation of precisely fourteen letters within the mysterious letters is not a minor point: it is the door by which access to the whole is gained. Accordingly, an imperative exists for the letters alif / ا and lām / ل — or, at least, for equivalent visually distinct symbols within the Arabic alphabet were such to exist — to participate in the mysterious letters;
- While the logical operations by which the letters ṣād / ص, mīm / م and rā / ر are shown to be null in the Writ Set[46] would be equally valid without further letters in each instance, at least one non-null letter is required to bear the value throughout both the alif lām / ال sector and the ḥā mīm / حم block. The reason for the second non-null letter in each instance of the alif lām / ال sector should be understood by the fact that, as we shall see later, the totals of letters in both the Writ Set and the Remembrance Set explicitly confirm later parts of this analysis;[47]
- The hard limit of fourteen distinct symbols available to the Arabic alphabet obliges the Remembrance Set to employ two letters which occur also elsewhere in the sequence in order to perform its own functions. Provision is made for that requirement by the fact that both ṣād / ص and mīm / م are shown within the Writ Set to be null, which process precludes the possibility of ambiguity where they occur in the Remembrance Set. A similar case attaches to rā / ر within the Qur'an Set as we shall see at Segment 40 and beyond.

The mechanism by which the value of al fātiḥah is borne within the Writ Set, first by the two letters alif lām / ال and then by the single letter ḥā / ح, is vital to the logical operations of all three sets for without it:

- The total letters within the Writ Set would be insufficient to confirm a later part of this analysis;[48]
- The letter qāf / ق would not be able at instance #29 to receive the value of al fātiḥah at position 1 along the line of position;
- A confirmation of the exceptional event at instance #24 would be lost.[49]

45 See Segment 1.

46 At Segment 11.

47 Presented in the Final Evidence segment.

48 Presented in the Final Evidence segment.

49 See Segment 34.

We conclude here by observing that the two modes by which the Writ Set bears its value throughout provides a further example of the motif of doubling and the dual.

33.iii The parenthetical instance of the mysterious letters

We have stated that instance #24 is parenthetical to the sequence of the mysterious letters at a number of junctures, including:

- At Segment 29, where we describe instance #24 as the scene of an exceptional event, one parenthetical to the sequence of the mysterious letters;
- At Segment 31.vii where we discuss the implications of the fact that mīm / م is logically excluded from qāf / ق;
- At Segment 33.i, where we cite the ḥā mīm / حم block as support for a later demonstration of the same point.

In this segment we present the evidence which is anticipated above.

We provide below those parts of the sequence which pertain to the question in view for ease of reference. Complete value-bearing letters are marked in the English transliteration in bold. The letter qāf / ق at instance #24 is underlined because although it receives values, further operations and mechanics are yet to occur before it becomes complete.

Sūrah 40	instance #21	ḥā	mīm		حم
Sūrah 41	instance #22	ḥā	mīm		حم
Sūrah 42	instance #23	ḥā	mīm		حم
Sūrah 42	instance #24	ʿayn	sīn	qāf	عسق
Sūrah 43	instance #25	ḥā	mīm		حم
Sūrah 44	instance #26	ḥā	mīm		حم
Sūrah 45	instance #27	ḥā	mīm		حم
Sūrah 46	instance #28	ḥā	mīm		حم
Sūrah 50	instance #29	qāf			ق

We turn now to the opening context at instance #24 itself. That opening context features no leverage point, and we omit further verses on this basis.

But the context preceding instance #24 in ʿayn sīn qāf / عسق is crucial:

1 ḥā mīm
2 ʿayn sīn qāf
(42:1-2)

Additionally, both the summary of instance #24 and the description of its operations and mechanics at Segment 29 bear review at this point.

Before proceeding we should consider the values which result at positions 1 and 2 at instance #24, as outlined at Segment 29:

ʿayn	ع	19:16-33 (Jesus) 19:51-53 (Moses) 19:56-57 (Idrīs) 19:54-55 (Ishmael)
sīn	س	19:41-50 (Abraham)

We observe that the full complement of values identified at instance #10 is reconstituted by the variables in these first two positions.

This fact confirms the operations and mechanics at instance #24 as related to the Remembrance Set.

But — and this is important — if instance #24 belonged to the Remembrance Set, the expectation would be for the operations and mechanics at instance #24 to conclude as follows:

- The ordinary variable mīm / م at position 3 at instance #14 passes down the line of position to position 3 here. Accordingly there is no change in the value.

But this is not the case. The ordinary variable mīm / م does not occur at position 3 at instance #24.

Instead, there the previously unseen letter qāf / ق itself excludes the ordinary variable mīm / م from that position for the reasons we summarised at Segment 31.vii, the evidence for which is unambiguous correlation of qāf / ق as a proof of 'the Qur'an' within the mechanics of the mysterious letters.[50]

Moreover, were the expectation of the ordinary variable mīm / م at position 3 a fact, that — and this also is important — would result in a duplicate of the value of 19:51-53 (Moses) at instance #24, which outcome would undo the perfect reconstitution at instance #24 of the original values of the Remembrance Set at instance #10.

But instance #24 in ʿayn sīn qāf / عسق is an exceptional case, and we list now why such must be the case below:

50 The project to demonstrate which, as we have said, forms a component of the remainder of this analysis and achieves completion at Segment 40.

- Instance #24 is the second instance within a single sūrah — a phenomenon unique among the instances of the mysterious letters;
- Instance #23 in ḥā mīm / حم, which directly precedes instance #24 in the same sūrah, belongs unambiguously to the Writ Set. Since, as the first portion of this book shows, the complete text of the sūrah in each case pertains to that set by which it is grouped, the complete text of sūrah 42 pertains to the Writ Set;[51]
- Instance #24 in ʿayn sīn qāf / عسق at 42:2 itself comprises part of the text of sūrah 42 — the text of which sūrah pertains to the Writ Set. The text which comprises instance #24 in ʿayn sīn qāf / عسق at 42:2 therefore cannot pertain to the Remembrance Set.

For the reasons above, instance #24 in ʿayn sīn qāf / عسق at 42:2 — while inheriting all values and certain features of operations and mechanics from the Remembrance Set — is both:

- Excluded from imparting the quality of the Remembrance Set to the sūrah in which it is located;
- Excluded from participating in that quality itself, being located in a sūrah which itself pertains to the Writ Set.

No instance in the Remembrance Set occurs beyond instance #24. Therefore there is simply nowhere for the values held at position 1 and position 2 at instance #24 to pass to — other than horizontally to the new special variable qāf / ق at position 3.

Finally, we will recall that there is a "contraction" of the value-bearing component across the broader Writ Set from two letters (i.e. from positions 1 and 2 in the alif lām / ال sector) to one letter (i.e. to position 1 only in the ḥā mīm / حم block).[52] That ḥā mīm / حم block of contiguous sūrahs itself forms the broader context in which instance #24 is not only located, but in which it occurs uniquely as the second instance in a single sūrah.

Thus, the exceptional event we point to at instance #24 in which the values held at two letters (i.e. at positions 1 and 2 in ʿayn / ع and sīn / س respectively) pass horizontally into one letter — the qāf / ق at instance #24 — itself occurs within a contiguous block the value of which is itself the function of an equivalent event.

To summarise:

- Instance #24 is parenthetical to the sequence;
- While instance #24 is parenthetical to the sequence, it both participates in and expresses actions which pertain to the operations and mechanics of the Remembrance Set;

51 This point became apparent after the writing of Framework for Qur'anic Methods of Exegesis.

52 Summarised at Segment 33.ii.

- At instance #24 all five values of the Remembrance Set attach to the new special variable qāf / ق in readiness for the further step which completes qāf / ق when it re-enters the sequence at instance #29 — which event initiates the Qur'an Set.

What we have covered in this segment comprises the evidence for instance #24 in ʿayn sīn qāf / عسق as parenthetical to the sequence, and provides the context within which the evidence which follows should be viewed.

33.iv. Descent of the value of the Writ Set

The general mechanisms of both the Writ Set and the Remembrance Set are understood.

We have also established that instance #24 in ʿayn sīn qāf / عسق, while parenthetical to the sequence, both participates in and expresses actions which pertain generally to the operations and mechanics of the Remembrance Set.

This means that the new special variable qāf / ق will behave like any special variable in any further operations.

To review the relevant characteristics which attach to special variables:

- They take their original value with them whether they travel down the line of position or cross the line of position;
- Where they cross the line of position, they accumulate also the value or values held above them in the line of position of their destination.

Where the new special variable qāf / ق re-enters the sequence at instance #29 it does both, which event marks the beginning of the Qur'an Set.[53]

This event requires the following component:

- The value held by the letter ḥā / ح in position 1 at instance #28 in the Writ Set must descend the line of position to the special variable qāf / ق (which re-enters the sequence, crossing the line of position, at instance #29).

However, to this point in our analysis no value in the Writ Set is seen to descend. This is an exceptional event, and claims of exceptional events, as we have noted, require exceptional evidence.

53 The reason for the choice of this term will be clear at Segment 40.

Moreover, exceptional evidence is outstanding, both in cases described previously in the analysis and in further cases required to complete it.

The aggregate of cases which, given exceptional evidence for each, would allow us to develop our core analysis to completion is implicit in the questions which follow:

1. Can we point to exceptional evidence that the value held across the Writ Set descends the line of position to the new special variable qāf / ق at instance #29?
2. Can we point to exceptional evidence which provides for the distinction between special variables ṣād / ص, yā / ي and ʿayn / ع — all of which begin with an existing value — and the new special variable qāf / ق at instance #24 which appears with no existing value?
3. Can we point to exceptional evidence that, given that instance #24 in ʿayn sīn qāf / عسق is parenthetical to the sequence and the point at which the values of Remembrance Set combine in a single letter, it is not also the point at which the "fusion" between the Writ Set and the Remembrance Set, which we discern at instance #29, occurs?
4. Can we point to exceptional evidence that the "fusion" between the Writ Set and the Remembrance Set which we discern at qāf / ق at instance #29 in fact occurs at that location?
5. Can we point to exceptional evidence that explains the nature and function in the sequence of nūn / ن at sūrah 68?
6. Can we point to exceptional evidence which unambiguously identifies qāf / ق as a proof of 'the Qur'an' and thereby confirm the linchpin required for so much of this analysis?
7. Can we point to exceptional evidence which confirms that portion a and portion b of the disconnected formula at instance #13 fit those logical processes described at Segment 31.vii and Segment 31.ix respectively in a way which is both exclusive to that portion and unavailable to the remaining one?

The process of addressing these questions will include utilisation of the remaining leverage points:

- Signposts
- Oaths

Again, signposts and oaths provide evidence or explanation to facilitate understanding of operations in the sequence where exceptional events occur.

We address the questions listed above in the remainder of the present section and much of the next.

34. The four signposts

1. Can we point to exceptional evidence that the value held across the Writ Set descends the line of position to the new special variable qāf / ق at instance #29?

We provide below those parts of the sequence which pertain to the question in view for ease of reference, including all sūrah numbers and lines of position. The value-bearing letters are marked in the English transliteration in bold.[54]

Sūrah 32	instance #18	alif	lām	mīm	الم
Sūrah 38	instance #20	ṣād			ص
Sūrah 40	instance #21	ḥā	mīm		حم
Sūrah 41	instance #22	ḥā	mīm		حم
Sūrah 42	instance #23	ḥā	mīm		حم
Sūrah 43	instance #25	ḥā	mīm		حم
Sūrah 44	instance #26	ḥā	mīm		حم
Sūrah 45	instance #27	ḥā	mīm		حم
Sūrah 46	instance #28	ḥā	mīm		حم
Sūrah 50	instance #29	qāf			ق

As is the case for all leverage points, all four signposts meet precise standards, which for signposts are that:

- They occur in the opening context immediately following an instance of the mysterious letters;
- They open in the expression The revelation of the Writ[...] (Arabic: تَنزِيلُ ٱلْكِتَٰبِ).[55]

Again, signposts provide evidence or explanation to facilitate understanding of operations in the sequence where exceptional events occur.

The etymological constant and salient point central to all four signposts — though diffused somewhat in translation — which pertains to the Arabic word tanzīl (rendered in all cases revelation) is of something sent down.[56]

54 To follow the broader points in this segment see Table 3.

55 There exists also a single location where this convention exists outside the mysterious letters, a case we look at in due course.

56 I invite the reader to verify this point by considering words in the Qur'an in the same root (n-z-l). He will see that across the totality of cases the words are grounded in the concept of sending down: 2:4, 2:22, 2:23, 2:41, 2:57, 2:59, 2:90, 2:91, 2:97, 2:99, 2:102, 2:105, 2:136, 2:159, 2:164, 2:170, 2:174, 2:176, 2:185, 2:213, 2:231, 2:285, 3:3, 3:4, 3:7, 3:53, 3:65, 3:72, 3:84, 3:93, 3:124, 3:151, 3:154, 3:198, 3:199, 4:47, 4:60, 4:61, 4:105, 4:113, 4:136, 4:140, 4:153, 4:162, 4:166, 4:174, 5:44, 5:45, 5:47, 5:48, 5:49, 5:59, 5:64, 5:66, 5:67, 5:68, 5:81, 5:83, 5:101, 5:104, 5:112, 5:114, 5:115, 6:7, 6:8, 6:37, 6:81, 6:91, 6:92, 6:93, 6:99, 6:111, 6:114, 6:155, 6:156, 6:157, 7:2, 7:3, 7:26, 7:33, 7:57, 7:71, 7:157, 7:160, 7:196, 8:11, 8:41, 9:26, 9:40, 9:64, 9:86, 9:97, 9:124, 9:127, 10:5, 10:20, 10:24, 10:59, 10:94, 11:12, 11:14, 12:2, 12:40, 12:59, 13:1, 13:7, 13:17, 13:19, 13:27, 13:36, 13:37, 14:1, 14:32, 15:6, 15:8, 15:9, 15:21, 15:22, 15:90, 16:2, 16:10, 16:24, 16:30, 16:44, 16:64, 16:65, 16:89, 16:101, 16:102, 17:82, 17:93, 17:95, 17:102, 17:105, 17:106, 18:1, 18:45, 18:102, 18:107, 19:64, 20:2, 20:4, 20:53, 20:80, 20:113, 21:10, 21:50, 22:5, 22:16, 22:63, 22:71, 23:18, 23:24, 23:29, 24:1, 24:34, 24:43, 24:46, 25:1, 25:6, 25:7, 25:21, 25:25, 25:32, 25:48, 26:4, 26:192, 26:193, 26:198, 26:210, 26:221, 26:222, 27:60, 28:24, 28:87, 29:34, 29:46, 29:47, 29:50, 29:51, 29:63, 30:24, 30:35, 30:49, 31:10, 31:21, 31:34, 32:2, 32:19, 33:26, 34:2, 34:6, 35:27, 36:5, 36:15, 36:28, 36:39, 37:62, 37:177, 38:8, 38:29, 39:1, 39:2, 39:6, 39:21, 39:23, 39:41, 39:55, 40:2, 40:13, 41:2, 41:14, 41:30, 41:32, 41:39, 41:42, 42:15, 42:17, 42:27, 42:28, 43:11, 43:31, 44:3, 45:2, 45:5, 46:2, 46:30, 47:2, 47:9, 47:20, 47:26, 48:4, 48:18, 48:26, 50:9, 53:13, 53:23, 56:56, 56:69, 56:80, 56:93, 57:4, 57:9, 57:16, 57:25, 58:5, 59:21,

Signposts occur at instances #18, #21, #27 and #28. We will present each instance together with its opening context and list points which relate to our topic below. The signposts themselves are in italics.

Instance #18:

1 alif lām mīm
2 The revelation [i.e. sending down] of the Writ about which there is no doubt, from the Lord of All Creation.
(32:1-2)

- Instance #18 itself is the terminus of the alif lām / ال sector of the Writ Set; that is, it is the final point at which the value of the Writ Set is held by the two letters alif lām / ال;
- We first met the symbol alif lām mīm / الم at instance #1 where the axiom-statement establishes the value of that instance as al fātiḥah (and, by extension, that of all other instances in the Writ Set as al fātiḥah also). The opening context of instance #1 itself reads That is the Writ about which there is no doubt[...]. Thus, the Writ about which there is no doubt attaches to instances in the Writ Set (and in the sequence as a whole) at two places only: at the very beginning and very end of that part of the Writ Set in which the value of al fātiḥah is borne by the two letters alif lām / ال;
- The phrase from the Lord of All Creation echoes verse 1:2 in al fātiḥah itself, which sūrah comprises the value of the Writ Set.

Finally, we note that this single echo within the mysterious letters of the axiom-statement supplies another example of doubling or the dual.

Note: the expression The revelation of the Writ about which there is no doubt (Arabic: تَنزِيلُ ٱلْكِتَٰبِ لَا رَيْبَ فِيهِ) occurs nowhere else in the Qur'an.[57]

Instance #21:

1 ḥā mīm
2 The revelation [i.e. sending down] of the Writ is from God, the Exalted in Might, the Knowing
(40:1-2)

Instance #21 is the first instance in the seven-sūrah Writ-Set block in ḥā mīm / حم; that is, it is the point in the sequence at which the value which to that point in the set is borne by the two letters alif lām / ال is first borne by the single letter ḥā / ح.

64:8, 65:5, 65:10, 65:12, 67:9, 69:43, 76:23, 78:14, 97:1 and 97:4

57 The expression the Writ about which there is no doubt occurs once more outside the mysterious letters, which case we comment upon in the Final Evidence segment.

Note: the expression The revelation of the Writ is from God, the Exalted in Might, the Knowing (Arabic: تَنزِيلُ ٱلْكِتَٰبِ مِنَ ٱللَّهِ ٱلْعَزِيزِ ٱلْعَلِيمِ) occurs nowhere else in the Qur'an.

Instance #27 & instance #28:

1 ḥā mīm
2 The revelation [i.e. sending down] of the Writ is from God, the Exalted in Might, the Wise.
(45:1-2 & 46:1-2)

- The final two signposts are identical. Together they form a doubled end point for the seven-sūrah Writ Set block in ḥā mīm / حم; that is, they together underscore the final point in the sequence at which the value of the Writ Set is borne by the single letter ḥā / ح;
- In that system of operations and mechanics we are in process of demonstrating, the value of the Writ Set at this point passes from the ordinary variable ḥā / ح in position 1 at instance #28 down the line of position to the special variable qāf / ق at position 1 at instance #29.

Instance #27 and instance #28 and their opening contexts are identical, providing a further example of doubling or the dual.

The exceptional evidence we point to in this case is the fact that, at that stage in the sequence where proof of an exceptional event is required — here that the value held across the Writ Set descends the line of position to the new special variable qāf / ق at instance #29 — that stage in the sequence itself provides precise signals in this regard.

Those signals are expressions with strict and identified features of incidence and location in the Qur'anic text, and which together form a comprehensive, exclusive, and ultimately symmetrical framework which emphasises the sending down of the Writ expressly and repeatedly.

Finally, in this segment we observed further examples of doubling or the dual.

There is a further point which requires attention here. It both supports and expands upon what we have seen above and supplies in soft form a concept which we will later encounter in hard form when we meet the implicit instance.

The expression which we reviewed above and which occurs at instance #27 and instance #28 — The revelation of the Writ is from God, the Exalted in Might, the Wise (Arabic: تَنزِيلُ ٱلْكِتَٰبِ مِنَ ٱللَّهِ ٱلْعَزِيزِ ٱلْحَكِيمِ) — occurs also at one other place in the Qur'an.

The location in this case is, likewise, the opening context of a sūrah, but of a sūrah which itself contains no instance of the mysterious letters:

> The revelation [i.e. sending down] of the Writ is from God, the Exalted in Might, the Wise.
> (39:1)

Since this expression has no preceding instance of the mysterious letters it does not meet the standard for a signpost.

However, within the context of the mysterious letters, the expression at 39:1 is of some significance and for the following reasons:

- Located at the opening of sūrah 39, it falls directly between the sole instance in the Remembrance Set in which values are borne by a single letter (i.e. by ṣād / ص at instance #20 at sūrah 38) and the first instance of the ḥā mīm / حم block at which point the value of the Writ Set is first borne by a single letter (i.e. by ḥā / ح at instance #21 at sūrah 40);
- Located at the opening of sūrah 39, it provides soft support for the signpost at instance #21 at sūrah 40 by means of anticipation. Given that the opening of the expression at 39:1 conforms to that convention by which signposts are identified, it — in concert with the signpost which attaches to the instance in the next sūrah — serves to mirror at the beginning of the ḥā mīm / حم block that feature of doubling and the dual which the two signposts at instance #27 and instance #28 supply at the end of it.

The expression at 39:1 is what we might term an associated feature of the mysterious letters since it serves to support processes in the broader sequence. It has none of the hard features which attach to the two implicit instances which we meet later in this analysis. The hard features which attach to these two cases pertain either to the sūrah as a whole, or enclose it entirely. No feature of this kind attaches to sūrah 39.[58]

The factor which forces recognition of the relevance of 39:1 to the mysterious letters is location, and the same consideration will be vital later when we come to consider nodes, but 39:1 has none of the hard features which attach to nodes, either.

58 We may add here that, on the basis of that later analysis which comprises Framework for Qur'anic Methods of Exegesis, it is now known that sūrah 39 forms part of the Mankind Set (whereas the ḥā mīm / حم block is entirely in the Writ Set). Where we encounter the two implicit instances we will see them fully form part of — and play integral roles in — the set in which they are located.

To summarise: the expression at 39:1 both supports the broader sequence and functions to set up in soft form concepts which feature in hard form later in the analysis.

> Note: the expression The revelation of the Writ (Arabic: تَنزِيلُ ٱلْكِتَٰبِ) occurs nowhere else in the Qur'an beyond those places reviewed in this segment.

35. The two oaths in the Remembrance Set

2. Can we point to exceptional evidence which provides for the distinction between special variables ṣād / ص, yā / ي and ʿayn / ع — all of which begin with an existing value — and the new special variable qāf / ق at instance #24 which appears with no existing value?

Certainly, oaths feature in the Qur'an far more broadly than those six expressions which meet the standard for oaths in the mysterious letters. However, within the context of our analysis, as is the case for all leverage points, all six oaths meet precise standards:

- They occur in the opening context immediately following an instance of the mysterious letters;
- They conform to the recognised, definable conventions of oaths.

Like signposts, oaths provide evidence or explanation to facilitate understanding of operations in the sequence where exceptional events occur.

Six expressions in the Qur'an meet the standard for an oath: two in the Remembrance Set, two in the Writ Set, and two in the Qur'an Set.

Of these six oaths, three appeal to the Qur'an itself. Together they comprise all appeals to the Qur'an itself in the entirety of the text.[59] In this segment we consider the first two of these in the sequence, both in the Remembrance Set.

These oaths attach to instance #19 and instance #20, which we will look at together. We will present the instances together with their respective opening contexts and list points which relate to our topic below. The oaths themselves are in italics.

The opening context at instance #19 at sūrah 36 reads:

> 1 yā sīn
> 2 By the wise Qur'an!
> (36:1-2)

59 Thus, the six oaths are distributed in three batches of two. But they also divide into two again along a different line: those which appeal to the Qur'an itself, and those which do not, providing a further example of doubling and the dual.

The opening context at instance #20 reads:

> ṣād By the Qur'an full of remembrance!
> (38:1)

We will appreciate that at the two instances above the same event occurs:[60]

- A special variable re-enters the sequence by crossing the line of position bringing its original value with it;
- The same special variable receives a value or values along the line of position from above which it absorbs.

We provide below those parts of the sequence which pertain to the question in view followed by the opening context of instance #24 for ease of reference. Complete value-bearing letters are marked in the English transliteration in bold. The letter qāf / ق at instance #24 is underlined because although it receives values, further operations and mechanics are yet to occur before it becomes complete.

Sūrah 36	instance #19	yā	sīn		يس
Sūrah 38	instance #20	ṣād			ص
Sūrah 42	instance #24	ʿayn	sīn	qāf	عسق
Sūrah 50	instance #29	qāf			ق

Again, the context in which instance #24 occurs is:

> 1 ḥā mīm
> 2 ʿayn sīn qāf
> (42:1-2)

Importantly, while the remaining special variable to re-enter the sequence by crossing the line of position bringing its original value with it — the letter ʿayn / ع — likewise receives values along the line of position from above which it absorbs at instance #24, that instance is not supported by an oath by the Qur'an.

And this distinction provides the exceptional evidence in this case: that at that stage in the sequence where proof of an exceptional event is required — here to provide for the distinction between special variables ṣād / ص, yā / ي and ʿayn / ع (all of which begin with an existing value) and the new special variable qāf / ق at instance #24 which appears with no original value — that stage in the sequence provides a precise signal: the fact that instance #24 is not supported by an oath by the Qur'an.

To amplify this point: an oath by the Qur'an itself requires that those special variables which feature in it be complete. As indicated above, the new special variable qāf / ق at instance #24 appears with no original value. Accordingly, the new special variable qāf / ق at instance #24 is incomplete.

60 See Table 3.

The new special variable qāf / ق becomes complete at instance #29. That event provides both a corollary and a confirmation for those events which attach to instance #19 and instance #20 as described above, the details of which are presented at Segment 37.

In closing, we note that the two oaths in the Remembrance Set which form the subject of this segment provide a further example of doubling or the dual.

36. The two oaths in the Writ Set

3. Can we point to exceptional evidence that, given that instance #24 in ʿayn sīn qāf / عسق is parenthetical to the sequence and the point at which the values of Remembrance Set combine in a single letter, it is not also the point at which the "fusion" between the Writ Set and the Remembrance Set, which we discern at instance #29, occurs?

In this segment we consider the two oaths in the Writ Set.

These oaths attach to instance #25 and instance #26 and we will look at them together.

We provide below those parts of the sequence which pertain to the question in view for ease of reference. Complete value-bearing letters are marked in the English transliteration in bold. The letter qāf / ق at instance #24 is underlined because although it receives values, further operations and mechanics are yet to occur before it becomes complete.

Sūrah 40	instance #21	ḥā	mīm		حم
Sūrah 41	instance #22	ḥā	mīm		حم
Sūrah 42	instance #23	ḥā	mīm		حم
Sūrah 42	instance #24	ʿayn	sīn	qāf	عسق
Sūrah 43	instance #25	ḥā	mīm		حم
Sūrah 44	instance #26	ḥā	mīm		حم
Sūrah 45	instance #27	ḥā	mīm		حم
Sūrah 46	instance #28	ḥā	mīm		حم
Sūrah 50	instance #29	qāf			ق

We will present the instances together with their identical opening contexts and list points which relate to our topic below. The oath itself is in italics.

The opening context of both instances reads:

1 ḥā mīm
2 By the Clear Writ!
(43:1-2 & 44:1-2)

The expression the Clear Writ (Arabic: ٱلۡكِتَٰبِ ٱلۡمُبِينِ) — which forms the import of the oaths in question — occurs a total of five times in the Qur'an, in all cases within the opening context immediately following an instance of the mysterious letters:

- Three times in the formula Those are the proofs of the Clear Writ at instances #12 and #14 (Remembrance Set) and instance #6 (Writ Set) consideration of which established that formula capable logically of providing one unassailable conclusion only: that the Writ Set and the Remembrance Set are of different types;[61]
- Twice in the expression the Clear Writ (Arabic: ٱلۡكِتَٰبِ ٱلۡمُبِينِ) — i.e. in the oaths in currently under review.

These two facts together provide the exceptional evidence in this case: that at that stage in the sequence where proof of an exceptional event is required — here to establish that, given that instance #24 in ʿayn sīn qāf / عسق is parenthetical to the sequence and the point at which the values of the Remembrance Set combine in a single letter, it is not also the point at which the "fusion" between the Writ Set and the Remembrance Set takes place — that stage in the sequence provides precise signals in this regard: a doubled oath comprising an expression the only unassailable conclusion of which is of the Writ Set and the Remembrance Set as distinct, separate entities. Both oaths directly follow instance #24 in the sequence where, but for these oaths and the implications which attach to them, the point would be moot.

We note that the two oaths in the Writ Set which form the subject of this segment provide a further example of doubling or the dual.

Moreover, By the Clear Writ! is the only oath in the entirety of the Qur'an to occur twice.

That completes this section.

61 See Segments 31 and 32.

37. The letter qāf at instance #29

4. Can we point to exceptional evidence that the “fusion” between the Writ Set and the Remembrance Set which we discern at qāf / ق at instance #29 in fact occurs at that location?

We provide below those parts of the sequence which pertain to the question in view for ease of reference, including all sūrah numbers and lines of position. Complete value-bearing letters are marked in the English transliteration in bold. The letter qāf / ق at instance #24 is underlined because although it receives values, further operations and mechanics are yet to occur before it becomes complete.[1]

Sūrah 40	instance #21	ḥā	mīm		حم
Sūrah 41	instance #22	ḥā	mīm		حم
Sūrah 42	instance #23	ḥā	mīm		حم
Sūrah 42	instance #24	ʿayn	sīn	qāf	عسق
Sūrah 43	instance #25	ḥā	mīm		حم
Sūrah 44	instance #26	ḥā	mīm		حم
Sūrah 45	instance #27	ḥā	mīm		حم
Sūrah 46	instance #28	ḥā	mīm		حم
Sūrah 50	instance #29	qāf			ق

The leverage point in this case is the final oath in the Qur’an by the Qur’an itself.

Again, oaths provide evidence or explanation to facilitate understanding of operations in the sequence where exceptional events occur.

This oath attaches to instance #29. We present that instance together with its opening context and list points which relate to our topic below. The oath itself is in italics.

The opening context reads:

> qāf By the glorious Qur’an!
> (50:1)

At instance #29 the standard event for special variables which re-enter the sequence occurs here:

1 To follow the broader points in this segment see Table 3.

- A special variable re-enters the sequence by crossing the line of position bringing its original value with it;
- The same special variable receives a value or values along the line of position from above which it absorbs.

We note the following by way of context:

- Instance #19 and instance #20: there the special variables yā / ي and ṣād / ص re-enter the sequence, bringing their original value with them and receiving there values from above along the line of position. Thus both instances are complete. Accordingly, they attach to oaths by the Qur'an itself;
- Instance #24: while the special variable ʿayn / ع re-enters the sequence, bringing its original value with it and receiving there values from above along the line of position, there the new special variable qāf / ق appears in the sequence with no original value. Instance #24 is, therefore, incomplete. Accordingly, it attaches to no oath by the Qur'an itself.

At instance #29, however, the letter qāf / ق re-enters the sequence, this time both bringing its acquired values with it and there receiving a value along the line of position from the value-bearing letter in position 1 at instance #28 — the final instance of the ḥā mīm / حم block. In this case, instance #29 is complete. Accordingly, it attaches to an oath by the Qur'an itself.

This, then, is the exceptional evidence we point to in this case: the fact that at that stage in the sequence where proof of an exceptional event is required — here to confirm that the "fusion" between the Writ Set and the Remembrance Set which we discern at qāf / ق at instance #29 in fact occurs at that location — that stage in the sequence provides a precise signal in this regard: the final oath by the Qur'an itself.

To conclude the present point: instance #29 at sūrah 50 is the juncture at which the values of the Writ Set and the Remembrance Set "fuse" and attach to that set which sūrah 50 itself opens: the Qur'an Set.

Finally, the two-step process by which the new special variable qāf / ق is made complete and the "fusion" of the values of the two sets which supplies its own value both provide further examples of doubling or the dual.

qāf	ق	19:16-33 (Jesus) 19:51-53 (Moses) 19:56-57 (Idrīs) 19:54-55 (Ishmael) 19:41-50 (Abraham) 1:1-7 (al fātiḥah)

38. The letter nūn at instance #30

5. Can we point to exceptional evidence that explains the nature and function in the sequence of nūn / ن at sūrah 68?

In this segment we consider instance #30, the final instance in the sequence. It attaches to an oath the details of which are below.

We will present the instance together with its opening context and list initial observations. Following that we will expand upon key points. The oath itself is in italics.

The opening context reads:

> nūn By the pen and what they inscribe!
> (68:1)

We note that:

1. Instance #30 is both new to the sequence and the last instance in the sequence;
2. Instance #30 attaches to an oath;
3. While instance #30 attaches to an oath that oath is by something other than the Qur'an itself.

To address Point 1: since nothing follows instance #30 the question of whether it is a new special variable like qāf / ق — or something else entirely — is both moot (since there are no further instances to correlate it with) and of no consequence (since there are no further instances for it to engage with).

We should also remember that this instance pertains to the Qur'an Set, which set is distinct from both the Writ Set and the Remembrance Set, while comprising the values which attach to both.

To address Point 2: three instances attach to oaths by the Qur'an itself: instance #19, instance #20 and instance #29.

In all three cases a special variable in the Remembrance Set:

- Re-enters the sequence, bringing its original value or values with it and receives at its destination a value (or values) from above along the line of position, being there made complete.

The first part of the scenario above does not attach to instance #30 in any way. The second part is discussed below.

To address Point 3: two instances attach to oaths which are by something other than the Qur'an itself: instance #25 and instance #26. These are both in the Writ Set.

In this regard we note:

- Where in the Writ Set any instance in a given symbol attaches to the value of the Writ Set (al fātiḥah) on the basis of a single statement, that value attaches to all instances in that symbol;
- Since neither instance #25 nor instance #26 attaches to a statement, they are not made complete. Because instance #22 (which is in ḥā mīm / حم) attaches to a statement, instance #25 and instance #26 (both of which are also in ḥā mīm / حم) are already complete.

So while instance #25 and instance #26 attach to oaths, they do not attach to oaths by the Qur'an itself for the reason that they are already complete.

While the precise nature of instance #30 itself is, as we have said, moot, the undeniable fact is that:

- Instance #30 — like instance #25 and instance #26 — attaches to an oath which is by something other than the Qur'an itself.

On that basis, then, instance #30 must — like instance #25 and instance #26 — be already complete.

The only scenario in which instance #30 can be already complete is this: if it duplicates the value at instance #29 — a value which is previously made complete.

Since the value at instance #29 is there made complete it occurs at instance #30 fully formed. Since no process of completion occurs at instance #30 no oath by the Qur'an itself is possible.

This, then, is the exceptional evidence we point to as concerns the nature of nūn / ن at sūrah 68: that at that stage in the sequence where proof of an exceptional event is required to explain the nature of nūn / ن at sūrah 68, the only logical outcome of comparison of the contexts of all other oaths in the sequence is that the value at instance #30 is already complete. And on this basis we know instance #30 to be a duplicate of instance #29.

> Note: neither the oath at 68:1 nor either of its two components — by the pen (Arabic: وَٱلْقَلَمِ) or what they inscribe! (Arabic: مَا يَسْطُرُونَ) — occurs anywhere else in the Qur'an.

However, two important questions remain:

- What is the significance of the two-part oath which attaches to instance #30?
- What is the broader function of nūn / ن at instance #30 given that it merely duplicates instance #29?

To answer the first question: certainly, this two-part oath (a feature found nowhere else in the sequence) which attaches to instance #30 provides yet a further example of doubling and the dual, which feature we have seen so often in evidence to this juncture, and which will play a crucial role in what follows.

But it finds echoes also in features which pertain to the immediate context. These are listed below:

- The fact that the value which attaches to the Qur'an Set comprises the values of two sets: the Writ Set and the Remembrance Set;
- The fact that the Qur'an Set itself comprises two explicit instances;[2]
- The fact that the letters which comprise the two explicit instances in the Qur'an Set are both new to the sequence;
- The fact that instance #30 — which uniquely attaches to an oath of two parts — is itself the second of those two explicit instances.

We will understand the broader significance of doubling and the dual as they attach to instance #30 when we consider doubling and the dual at all key points in the Qur'an Set at Segment 42.

To answer to the second question: instance #30 operates as a node.

The subject of nodes is the focus of the next segment.

nūn	ن	19:16-33 (Jesus) 19:51-53 (Moses) 19:56-57 (Idrīs) 19:54-55 (Ishmael) 19:41-50 (Abraham) 1:1-7 (al fātiḥah)

39. Introduction to nodes

The function of what we term nodes is to segment that textual real estate which the Qur'an Set contains and which, as we will soon come to appreciate, extends from the letter qāf / ق at sūrah 50 to the end of the Qur'an and comprises all points in-between.

2 The reason for our use of the term explicit instances will be clear when we consider the two implicit instances of the Qur'an Set.

This, again, is an exceptional claim, and in what follows, we present the exceptional evidence which supports it.

The point we wish to make at this juncture is best introduced diagrammatically:

Q----------*----------N-------§----------|

The diagram above gives a proportional, visual description of the approximately 86 pages in most fifteen-line-per-page Arabic Qur'ans from sūrah 50 (qāf / ق — Q) through sūrah 68 (nūn / ن — N) to the end of the text marked |.

Meanwhile, the asterisk (*) indicates sūrah 55 and the section sign (§) indicates sūrah 73.

We will first present the reasons for the introduction of sūrah 55 (*) into our analysis when it is not explicitly marked as an instance, and in that process address the remaining points from that list of questions requiring exceptional evidence which is the mainstay of recent segments.

Following that, we will address the reason for the inclusion of sūrah 73 (§) in our diagram, in process of which we will consider the phenomenon we term segmentation.

40. Sūrah 55

This segment draws together a number of features from across the broad sweep of our analysis to this point and, given the requirement to impose a measure of order upon the sum of such disparate elements, is subdivided into parts.

Part 1: Unambiguous identification of qāf as a proof of 'the Qur'an'

The sixth point from our list of items requiring exceptional evidence remains:

6. Can we point to exceptional evidence which unambiguously identifies qāf / ق as a proof of 'the Qur'an' and thereby confirm the linchpin required for so much of this analysis?

At this point in this segment we will revisit the need for proof of this point by reproducing the conclusion at Segment 31.vii:

> To summarise: given that the letter qāf / ق itself is later identified unambiguously as a proof of 'the Qur'an', we now know — in the context of the three-instance block possessing those features we have noted to this point — the following about portion a:
>
> - That it provides conclusions vital to the mechanics of the Remembrance Set;
> - That it fits the logical process in a way unavailable to portion b.
> The project to establish an unambiguous identification of the letter qāf / ق as a proof of 'the Qur'an' within the mechanics of the mysterious letters thus forms a component of the remainder of this analysis, one which attains completion at the conclusion of Segment 40.

A related case attaches to the final point from our list of items requiring exceptional evidence:

7. Can we point to exceptional evidence which confirms that portion a and portion b of the disconnected formula at instance #13 fit those logical processes described at Segment 31.vii and Segment 31.ix respectively in a way which is both exclusive to that portion and unavailable to the remaining one?

The final evidence in both regards is supplied at the close of this segment, for which what precedes serves as preparation.

Part 2: Introduction to sūrah 55

While the associations — either between the points themselves, or between them and the broader presentation — will not at this stage be clear, the list below introduces the reasons for the inclusion of sūrah 55 in our analysis:

- While all three sets attach to examples of doubling or the dual, analysis of alif lām rā / الر reveals associations between that symbol and doubling and the dual to a degree matched nowhere else;
- Three letters are identified as null in the Writ Set: ṣād / ص, mīm / م and rā / ر, with the result that the reappearance of mīm / م and ṣād / ص in the Remembrance Set is free of any ambiguity. The reappearance of these two letters creates the expectation that rā / ر should reappear also;
- In the segment treating of signposts we saw that the expression at verse 39:1 — a verse which is not preceded by an instance of the mysterious letters — serves to support the broader sequence.[3] This fact creates an awareness that further implicit features may occur in the mysterious letters.

The points above serve by way of broader introduction to the further topics of which this segment treats.

3 See Segment 34.

Part 3: The uniquely intervening verse at instance #22

We must now resolve a point which is, of necessity, left incomplete at Segment 9. The reason for its inclusion at this point of our analysis will be understood in the light of the conclusions it supplies.

In our treatment at Segment 9 of instance #22 we observe that the leverage point in that case is separated from the instance of the mysterious letters by a single intervening verse. Since no other instance of the mysterious letters is separated from a leverage point which attaches to it by an intervening verse this case demands both attention and resolution.

At Segment 10 we anticipate a significance for this intervening verse later in the analysis. Our concluding thoughts there are reproduced below:

> In addition, we will see the symbol alif lām rā / الر uniquely 'fortified' further in dramatic fashion at Segment 40 where the features which attach to the intervening verse at 41:2 are shown:
>
> - To prove a connection between the formula which follows it and the symbol alif lām rā / الر at instance #5;
> - To confirm and to signal features of significance later in the sequence.

We develop these points in order.

Formulas are underlined while the single intervening verse is in italics. We present the background to each case in summary followed by those conclusions which pertain more generally to this part of the present segment.

The opening context of instance #5 reads:

> alif lām rā A Writ the proofs whereof are fortified then set out and detailed[...] (11:1)

The opening context of instance #22 reads:

> 1 ḥā mīm
> 2 A revelation from the Almighty, the Merciful,
> 3 A Writ the proofs whereof are set out and detailed[...]
> (41:1-3)
> Note: A revelation from the Almighty, the Merciful (Arabic: تَنزِيلٌ مِّنَ ٱلرَّحۡمَٰنِ ٱلرَّحِيمِ) occurs nowhere else in the Qur'an.

Background:

- Instance #22 and instance #5 are attached to significant variations of a single formula;
- Those formulas are in the Writ Set;
- The intervening verse at verse 41:2 reads A revelation from the Almighty, the Merciful (Arabic: ٱلرَّحۡمَٰنِ ٱلرَّحِيمِ) both parts of the underlined portions of which begin in Arabic with alif lām rā / الر.

Thus, instance #22 is doubly associated further with the symbol of its corresponding significant variation at instance #5 which is itself alif lām rā / الر.

Moreover, this fact provides further confirmation for the distinction between these significant variations. Since the symbol at instance #5 is alif lām rā / الر — and those letters are confirmed twice in the uniquely intervening verse at instance #22, the formula of which comprises its corresponding significant variation — it is fortified in a way which may not be said of instance #22 (which is in ḥā mīm / حم).

We note also that the expression the Almighty, the Merciful itself features twice in that segment of text which comprises the value of the Writ Set itself (al fātiḥah). The same expression occurs more than once in no other sūrah.

In both parts of the Almighty, the Merciful (Arabic: ٱلرَّحۡمَٰنِ ٱلرَّحِيمِ) the alif lām rā / الر which opens each features a doubled rā / ر (indicated by the shadda or small mark something like a 'w'). While we note this as yet a further example of the doubling and the dual which attaches to the symbol alif lām rā / الر, it also emphasises doubling and the dual in the case of the letter rā / ر itself.

Finally, the Almighty, the Merciful (Arabic: ٱلرَّحۡمَٰنِ ٱلرَّحِيمِ) not only comprises the only expression to occur twice in that text which itself is the value of the Writ Set (al fātiḥah), every letter in that expression is one which participates in the mysterious letters.[4]

We look now at the second point: that the symbol alif lām rā / الر is uniquely 'fortified' further where the features which attach to the intervening verse at 41:2 are shown both to confirm and to signal features of significance later in the sequence.

Background:

- The intervening verse is A revelation from the Almighty, the Merciful. The words underlined here are, in Arabic, tanzīl;

4 Moreover, as we will observe later, this expression comprises the only verse in al fātiḥah to be formed entirely of letters which participate in the mysterious letters.

- The key feature which pertains to the Arabic word tanzīl — rendered in all cases revelation — is of something which is sent down.[5]

The feature of sending down, as identified in signposts, plays a pivotal role in our analysis at Segment 34, providing evidence in support of that exceptional event in which the value of the Writ Set is sent down from instance #28 in ḥā mīm / حم to instance #29 in qāf / ق.

In the light of both the centrality of tanzīl to signposts and the function of signposts themselves, we can now appreciate the import of tanzīl as it features in the sole intervening verse in the sequence. The implication which attaches to tanzīl there, given that alif lām rā / الر features twice in the words which follow, is that alif lām rā / الر itself has been sent down (i.e. from where it occurs at instance #5 at sūrah 11 to instance #22 at sūrah 41) — which fact serves also to confirm our understanding of the import of tanzīl in all four signposts as having a literal, linear significance.

We have seen in this part of the present segment that the effect of the uniquely intervening verse at 41:2 is:

- To confirm the significant variation between the formulas at instance #5 and instance #22;
- To confirm the signficance of tanzīl within the mysterious letters as sending down in a literal, linear sense;
- To establish alif lām rā / الر itself both as something sent down and as something uniquely 'fortified';
- To emphasise further the unmatched connection between alif lām rā / الر and doubling and the dual;
- To emphasise the letter rā / ر by means of further doubling and the dual through the expression the Almighty, the Merciful (Arabic: ٱلرَّحۡمَٰنِ ٱلرَّحِيمِ).

In addition, the symbol alif lām rā / الر is uniquely 'fortified' further in dramatic fashion at sūrah 55, where the letter rā / ر itself is identifed as an implicit instance of the mysterious letters.

5 Again, I invite the reader to verify this point by considering words in the Qur'an in the same root (n-z-l). He will see that across the totality of cases the words are grounded in the concept of sending down: 2:4, 2:22, 2:23, 2:41, 2:57, 2:59, 2:90, 2:91, 2:97, 2:99, 2:102, 2:105, 2:136, 2:159, 2:164, 2:170, 2:174, 2:176, 2:185, 2:213, 2:231, 2:285, 3:3, 3:4, 3:7, 3:53, 3:65, 3:72, 3:84, 3:93, 3:124, 3:151, 3:154, 3:198, 3:199, 4:47, 4:60, 4:61, 4:105, 4:113, 4:136, 4:140, 4:153, 4:162, 4:166, 4:174, 5:44, 5:45, 5:47, 5:48, 5:49, 5:59, 5:64, 5:66, 5:67, 5:68, 5:81, 5:83, 5:101, 5:104, 5:112, 5:114, 5:115, 6:7, 6:8, 6:37, 6:81, 6:91, 6:92, 6:93, 6:99, 6:111, 6:114, 6:155, 6:156, 6:157, 7:2, 7:3, 7:26, 7:33, 7:57, 7:71, 7:157, 7:160, 7:196, 8:11, 8:41, 9:26, 9:40, 9:64, 9:86, 9:97, 9:124, 9:127, 10:5, 10:20, 10:24, 10:59, 10:94, 11:12, 11:14, 12:2, 12:40, 12:59, 13:1, 13:7, 13:17, 13:19, 13:27, 13:36, 13:37, 14:1, 14:32, 15:6, 15:8, 15:9, 15:21, 15:22, 15:90, 16:2, 16:10, 16:24, 16:30, 16:44, 16:64, 16:65, 16:89, 16:101, 16:102, 17:82, 17:93, 17:95, 17:102, 17:105, 17:106, 18:1, 18:45, 18:102, 18:107, 19:64, 20:2, 20:4, 20:53, 20:80, 20:113, 21:10, 21:50, 22:5, 22:16, 22:63, 22:71, 23:18, 23:24, 23:29, 24:1, 24:34, 24:43, 24:46, 25:1, 25:6, 25:7, 25:21, 25:25, 25:32, 25:48, 26:4, 26:192, 26:193, 26:198, 26:210, 26:221, 26:222, 27:60, 28:24, 28:87, 29:34, 29:46, 29:47, 29:50, 29:51, 29:63, 30:24, 30:35, 30:49, 31:10, 31:21, 31:34, 32:2, 32:19, 33:26, 34:2, 34:6, 35:27, 36:5, 36:15, 36:28, 36:39, 37:62, 37:177, 38:8, 38:29, 39:1, 39:2, 39:6, 39:21, 39:23, 39:41, 39:55, 40:2, 40:13, 41:2, 41:14, 41:30, 41:32, 41:39, 41:42, 42:15, 42:17, 42:27, 42:28, 43:11, 43:31, 44:3, 45:2, 45:5, 46:2, 46:30, 47:2, 47:9, 47:20, 47:26, 48:4, 48:18, 48:26, 50:9, 53:13, 53:23, 56:56, 56:69, 56:80, 56:93, 57:4, 57:9, 57:16, 57:25, 58:5, 59:21, 64:8, 65:5, 65:10, 65:12, 67:9, 69:43, 76:23, 78:14, 97:1 and 97:4

Part 4: Review of features of doubling and the dual which attach to alif lām rā

We list below a number of those features of doubling and the dual which attach to alif lām rā / الر for the purposes of review at this stage:

- The symbol alif lām rā / الر — uniquely among the instances of the mysterious letters — attaches to two statements (at instance #5 and instance #8);[6]
- The symbol alif lām rā / الر — uniquely among the symbols of the Writ Set — attaches to a formula which occurs in both sets[7] (and which also uniquely occurs twice in the Remembrance Set);[8]
- The symbol alif lām rā / الر — uniquely among the symbols in the alif lām / ال sector of the Writ Set — attaches to an instance which is both a statement and a formula;[9]
- The instance at which alif lām rā / الر — uniquely among the symbols in the alif lām / ال sector of the Writ Set — attaches to both a statement and a formula is itself a significant variation of the sole remaining instance which attaches also to both a statement and a formula;[10]
- The letters alif lām rā / الر are themselves uniquely sent down twice as part of the the intervening verse at 41:2, in which the letter rā / ر is further doubled twice.

While examples of doubling and the dual feature in the mysterious letters generally, they attach to the symbol alif lām rā / الر to a degree unmatched elsewhere.[11]

Part 5: Consideration of the letter rā

We now consider the letter rā / ر as it relates to the symbol alif lām rā / الر:

- In the symbol alif lām rā / الر, the letter rā / ر is the only letter to have a null value in the Writ Set;[12]
- In Part 3 above we noted that the uniquely intervening verse at instance #22 features motifs of doubling and the dual which attach both to the symbol alif lām rā / الر itself and, in that context, particularly to the letter rā / ر.

6 See Segment 8 and Segment 10.

7 See Segment 32.

8 See Segment 31.iv.

9 See Segment 10.

10 See Segment 10.

11 A satisfying explanation for their incidence also across the broader text was not available to me at the time of the research which resulted in Solution to the Mysterious Letters of the Qur'an. But one results from consideration of the later work Framework for Qur'anic Methods of Exegesis. That explanation follows by points: 1. Motifs of doubling and the dual (as we shall shortly see) attach to sūrah 55 to a degree unmatched in all other sūrahs (to which sūrah alif lām rā / الر itself will shortly be shown to possess unique relevance). 2. Sūrah 55 itself is in the Qur'an Set. 3. The baseline addressees of the Qur'an Set are all mankind. 4. A baseline of all mankind comprises also the remaining baseline addressees since such are subsets of all mankind. Thus, the unmatched expression of doubling and the dual given voice in sūrah 55 attaches to all mankind, of which baseline the remaining baseline addressees are, as we have said, subsets.

12 See Segment 11.

In what follows we demonstrate the letter rā / ر to be what we term an implicit instance of the mysterious letters, that is: an instance of the of the mysterious letters capable of identification on the basis of features other than the presence of an explicit instance at the head of a sūrah.

Clearly, the letter rā / ر does not feature alone as an explicit instance within the sequence, and to accept that it does so as an implicit instance requires exceptional evidence.

The standard of exceptional evidence in this case would be met by a textual entity with the following features:

- Demonstrable emphasis on the letter rā / ر in the context in which it is found;
- A location the specific features of which comport with the requirements of explicit instances of the mysterious letters;
- Unique and demonstrable correlation with the symbol alif lām rā / الر both in the context in which it occurs and apropos the sequence of the mysterious letters;
- Unique and demonstrable emphasis on that feature which attaches most demonstrably to the symbol alif lām rā / الر — doubling and the dual — in the context in which that textual entity occurs.

Part 6: The letter rā and sūrah 55

The requirements listed above are met within the Qur'an and at one place only: sūrah 55.

The reasons for the identification of the letter rā / ر as a non-explicit implicit instance of the mysterious letters at sūrah 55 follow:

- The Almighty (Arabic: ٱلرَّحۡمَٰنُ) is the first word in sūrah 55. In transliterated English this is al raḥmān (or ar-raḥmān, depending on which transliteration system one uses). What is unambiguous in the Arabic is that the first word of sūrah 55 itself opens in those three letters which comprise that symbol which dominates our discussion above: alif lām rā / الر. This is true of no other sūrah which does not itself open in alif lām rā / الر as an instance of the mysterious letters;
- While the alif lām rā / الر which opens sūrah 55 is followed by further text in the verse — in this case the remainder of the word The Almighty (Arabic: ٱلرَّحۡمَٰنُ) — all five sūrahs which open in alif lām rā / الر as an explicit instance of the mysterious letters are similarly followed by further text in each verse. In no instance does alif lām rā / الر occur as the sole component of any verse;
- The Almighty (Arabic: ٱلرَّحۡمَٰنُ) is itself formed exclusively of letters which participate in the mysterious letters, and come from all three sets;[13]

13 Which fact implies support for those values identified for the Qur'an Set (in which sūrah 55 itself occurs) as the "fusion" of the values of the Writ Set and the Remembrance Set.

- The Almighty (Arabic: ٱلرَّحۡمَٰنُ) which opens sūrah 55 occurs in that sūrah once only;
- The Almighty (Arabic: ٱلرَّحۡمَٰنُ) features a doubled rā / ر (indicated by the shadda or small mark something like a 'w'). This doubling both echoes the unmatched degree of doubling and the dual which attaches to the symbol alif lām rā / الر and emphasises the letter rā / ر itself.[14]

Thus, The Almighty (Arabic: ٱلرَّحۡمَٰنُ) as it occurs in sūrah 55 features:

- Unique and demonstrable correlation with the symbol alif lām rā / الر both textually and in the context in which it occurs in the sūrah;
- A location the specific features of which comport with the requirements of explicit instances of the mysterious letters (which point it meets, being the first textual entity in the sūrah);
- Demonstrable emphasis on the letter rā / ر in the context in which it occurs within alif lām rā / الر, as expressed by that feature of doubling and the dual which attaches to that letter.

On the basis of these facts we identify the letter rā / ر as an implicit instance of the mysterious letters at sūrah 55.

> Note: we will recall that the letter rā / ر is shown in the Writ Set to be null.[15] Were that not the case, ambiguity between rā / ر in its role in the Writ Set and rā / ر in its role in the Qur'an Set would arise.[16]

However, we will come to see that the qualities which identify an implicit instance of the mysterious letters either:

- Infuse the entire sūrah to which they attach; or
- Serve to hold the entire sūrah to which they attach in their grip, as in a vise.

We will see the first feature expressed in Part 7 below, and will see the second at Segment 41 when we come to consider the second implicit instance of the mysterious letters at sūrah 73.

14 While The Almighty (Arabic: ٱلرَّحۡمَٰنُ) occurs nowhere else in the sūrah, alif lām rā / الر (again with a doubled rā / ر) occurs at the head of one further word in the sūrah, at 55:12, in a word which means (the) fragrant herbs (Arabic: ٱلرَّيۡحَانُ). One might infer that this permits the repetition of the motif of doubling of the alif lām rā/الر form without diluting the quality of uniqueness which attaches to The Almighty (Arabic: ٱلرَّحۡمَٰنُ) in the sūrah. Additionally, fragrant herbs (Arabic: ٱلرَّيۡحَانُ) itself is also formed exclusively of letters which participate in the mysterious letters — again from all three sets. Finally, the same word (Arabic: رَيۡحَانٌ) occurs once more in the Qur'an without the definite article (at 56:89) which fact provides a further example of doubling but without diluting the quality of uniqueness which attaches to its alif lām rā/الر form in sūrah 55. Thus, alif lām rā / الر is both doubled in the sūrah and the doubled rā / ر is itself doubled within sūrah 55. Beyond these two cases, there is no doubled rā / ر in sūrah 55.

15 See Segment 11.

16 We will see the same provision facilitate later inclusion of the remaining two letters shown to be null in the Writ Set: mīm / م and rā / ر.

Part 7: Doubling and the dual in sūrah 55

The implicit instance of the mysterious letters in rā / ر at sūrah 55 is identified on the basis of the exceptional incidence of motifs of doubling and the dual which attach to that letter and to the core in which it comprises the only letter shown in the Writ Set to be null.

However, the qualities of doubling and the dual which identify this implicit instance infuse the entire sūrah to which it is attached, the facts of which we summarise below.

We do not use the dual in English much beyond pair to describe something which necessarily comes in twos (e.g. a pair of scissors), and the words both, either, and neither.

Arabic, on the other hand, routinely employs the dual to indicate two of something.

Sūrah 55 itself is the Qur'an's supreme expression of doubling and the dual, and the core expressions of that characteristic are listed below:

- While the dual is employed where the sense requires it across the whole of the Qur'an, it occurs in no sūrah as demonstrably, emphatically and intensively as in sūrah 55;
- Over eighty words in sūrah express the dual grammatically (while sūrah 55 consists of only 78 verses). No other portion of the Qur'an can begin to compare with such density and incidence of doubling and the dual;
- The refrain which punctuates the sūrah is: Then which of the blessings of your Lord will you deny? (Arabic: فَبِأَيِّ ءَالَآءِ رَبِّكُمَا تُكَذِّبَانِ). In this refrain both your Lord and you deny are in the dual: i.e. your Lord (the Lord of you two), and you (two) deny. Thus, this heavily-repeated dual phrase itself contains precisely two dual components. This refrain repeats throughout sūrah 55 more than does any other refrain in the Qur'an: a total of thirty-one times within this sūrah — and nowhere outside it.

While The Almighty (Arabic: ٱلرَّحۡمَٰنُ) is not itself in the dual, the final sound is typical of the dual (the -ān in ar-raḥmān), and that tone pulses throughout the sūrah with rhythmic, almost monotonous regularity, a fact one can verify by listening to the sūrah in Arabic.[17]

Thus, features which pertain to doubling and the dual infuse sūrah 55 as a whole, and this fact seals its identification as an implicit instance.

17 I counted over sixty such beats in this sūrah.

Part 8: Unambiguous identification of qāf as a proof of 'the Qur'an' (conclusion)

On the basis of the evidence presented to this point in the present segment, we replace the asterisk which in our diagram marked sūrah 55 with the letter of the implicit instance rā / ر (R).

The result is below:

Q---------R----------N-------§----------|

Presented another way:

- qāf / ق at sūrah 50: Q
- rā / ر at sūrah 55: R
- nūn / ن at sūrah 68: N

We suggest that the reader pause to consider this short sequence of letters.

The letters above form the core of the Arabic word qur'ān — or in English: Qur'an.

And this is the basis upon which the Qur'an Set is thus termed.

Not only do the three letters above comport in our diagram with the word qur'ān in terms of textual order, they are spaced in general proportion by those measures by which qur'ān is pronounced in Arabic — with a short u and a long ā.

This, at last, is exceptional evidence equal to the sixth question in need of resolution in our list:

6. Can we point to exceptional evidence which unambiguously identifies qāf / ق as a proof of 'the Qur'an' and thereby confirm the linchpin required for so much of this analysis?

Given Q-R-N as 'the Qur'an', the letter qāf / ق (Q) is — beyond question — a proof of 'the Qur'an'.

Additionally, the same point provides exceptional evidence equal to the requirement to confirm finally ṭā sīn / طس as [the proofs] of a Clear Writ, for were it not for the distinction between ordinary variables and special variables which instance #11 in ṭā sīn / طس identifies, 'a Clear Writ' — i.e. Q-R-N as 'the Qur'an' — would be simply unobtainable.

But it is exceptional evidence equal to the last question in need of resolution in our list also:

7. Can we point to exceptional evidence which confirms that portion a and portion b of the disconnected formula at instance #13 fit those logical processes described at Segment 31.vii and Segment 31.ix respectively in a way which is both exclusive to that portion and unavailable to the remaining one?

The identification of Q-R-N above also means that portion a and portion b of the disconnected formula at instance #13 fit their respective logical processes in a way which is both exclusive to them and unavailable to the other:

- Portion a: the proofs of the Qur'an
- Portion b: [the proofs] of a Clear Writ

It is impossible to switch the logical processes we assigned to each portion and reach this stage in our analysis.

Lastly, the remaining letter shown to be null in the Writ Set is finally accounted for.

41. Sūrah 73

We turn now to the inclusion of sūrah 73.

In this segment we will recognise sūrah 55 (R), sūrah 68 (N) and sūrah 73 (§) as nodes within the Qur'an Set, and consider the significance of the segmentation which results for the Qur'an Set as well as see on what basis sūrah 73 itself is an implicit instance of the mysterious letters.

> Note: it is my opinion that the Prophet recited segments of the Qur'an Set, both to warn unbelievers and to fortify himself and other believers, and that this practice is referred to in the Qur'an by the term al sujūd (see 48:29, 50:40, 68:42, 68:43). It is not necessary for the reader to accept this understanding at this point, or at any future one. I mention it only by way of introduction to consideration of the purpose of sūrah 73.

The visual representation of the proportions of physical, textual real estate between instance #29 (Q) at sūrah 50 and the end of the Qur'anic text marked by | is reproduced below:

Q----------R----------N-------§----------|

We will now consider the proportions which result in the light of verses from sūrah 73.

Again, we identify sūrah 73 an implicit instance of the mysterious letters. The basis for this identification is two-fold:

- The correspondence of the proportions it supplies with those of the segmentation which results in the Qur'an Set on the basis of nodes;
- The fact that the sources of the proportions it supplies comprises the opening and the closing segment of the sūrah thereby, in effect, locking between them the sūrah as a whole.

Key parts of the text are underlined.

The sūrah opens:

> 1 O thou one enwrapped!
> 2 Arise thou the night save a little,
> 3 (A half thereof, or take thou a little therefrom,
> 4 Or add thou thereto) and recite thou the Qur'an distinctly.
> (73:1-4)

The sūrah closes:

> Thy Lord knows that thou standest nearly two-thirds of the night, or a half of it, or a third of it, as does a number of those with thee. And God determines the night and the day. He knew that you will not calculate it, and has turned towards you: — so recite what is made easy of the Qur'an. He knows that there will be some sick among you, and others travelling in the earth in search of the bounty of God, and others fighting in the cause of God: — so recite what is made easy thereof, and uphold the duty, and render the purity, and lend to God a goodly loan. And what good you send ahead for your souls — you will find it with God, better and greater in reward. And ask forgiveness of God; God is forgiving and merciful.
> (73:20)

We now consider the correspondences between with the divisions identified above and the proportions which result from segmentation of the Qur'an Set:

1. [...]the night (73:2)
We begin with the inference (based on points 2 through to 10 below) that 'the night' at 73:2 in which 'the Qur'an' is to be recited distinctly (see 73:4) corresponds with 'the [entire] Qur'an' as identified in this analysis of the mysterious letters — namely, all those sūrahs which extend from Q to |.

Q----------R----------N-------§----------|

2. [...]the night save a little (73:2)
From R to | is a little less than 'the [entire] Qur'an'.

R----------N-------§----------|

3. A half thereof (73:3)
From R to § is half of 'the [entire] Qur'an'.

R----------N-------§

4. [...]or take thou a little therefrom (73:3)
From N to | is a little less than the half from R to § (see 3).

N-------§----------|

5. Or add thou thereto (73:4)
From Q to N is a little more than from either R to § (see 3) or from N to | (see 4).

Q----------R----------N

6. [...]thou standest nearly two-thirds of the night (73:20)
From Q to § is nearly two-thirds of 'the [entire] Qur'an'.

Q----------R----------N-------§

[...]or a half of it (73:20)
(i.e. portion 3)

7. or a third of it (73:20)
From § to | is about a third of 'the [entire] Qur'an'.

§----------|

8. or a third of it (73:20)
From R to N is also about a third of 'the [entire] Qur'an'.

R----------N

The word rendered made easy at 73:20 is, in the Arabic, the verb tayassara. This (form V) verb has the primary connotation of to be (made) easy, but also has the sense of to be prepared (i.e. by another for ease of use).

This form V verb occurs twice only in the Qur'an, both times in this verse — which fact provides yet another example of doubling and the dual.

This doubled statement makes provision for times, surely, when it is simply not possible to read the longer portions identified in the sūrah; rather, one is to read what is made easy (i.e. prepared, made ready).

Q----------R----------N-------§----------|

Looking again at the diagram, what is made easy must refer to the two final segments: between Q and R on the one hand, and between N and § on the other — both of which segments exist as a result of the inclusion of the two implicit instances: R at sūrah 55 and sūrah 73 itself, marked by §.

For the reasons listed above, these two segments are prepared; but they are also made easy in the sense that they are shorter.

9. [...]recite what is made easy of the Qur'an (73:20)

Q----------R

10. [...]recite what is made easy thereof (73:20)

N-------§

The ten divisions by segment listed above represent every possible variation of a single unbroken reading by segment from sūrah 50 through to the end of the text intersected by the nodes identified in this analysis.

While we take the evidence presented above as sufficient for the purposes of confirming sūrah 55 and sūrah 73 as both implicit instances and nodes, we find further confirmation in the segment which follows.

42. Doubling and the dual at all key points in the Qur'an Set

We can complete our general consideration of the Qur'an Set by reflecting that motifs of doubling and the dual attach to all those junctures in it that we have considered above:

- Q: the value of which is a "fusion" of the values of two sets: the Writ Set and the Remembrance Set, which letter itself receives those two values in a two-step process;

- R: derived from the doubled rā / ر as signalled by alif lām rā / الر — itself uniquely associated with doubling and the dual — in a sūrah the substance of which is supremely expressive of doubling and the dual;
- N: which instance attaches to the only doubled oath in the mysterious letters and which duplicates the value of Q (itself the "fusion" of the values of two sets);
- §: the substance of which occurs in two places in the sūrah — at its beginning and at its end — and in which the proportion half is cited twice, and the imperative to recite what is made easy is issued twice.

But what of |, the end point of that portion of the text we identify as 'the Qur'an' within the framework of the mysterious letters?

Surely, given those features of doubling and the dual which attach to the junctures in the Qur'an Set listed above, should not doubling or the dual ring out at its end point also?

We produce below, in full, the final two sūrahs in the Qur'an:

Say thou: "I seek refuge in the Lord of the Daybreak
"From the evil of what He created;
"And from the evil of darkness when it gathers;
"And from the evil of the blowers on knots;
"And from the evil of an envier when he envies."
(113:1-5)

Say thou: "I seek refuge in the Lord of mankind,
"The King of mankind,
"The God of mankind,
"From the evil of the retreating whisperer
"Who whispers in the breasts of mankind;
"From the jinna and mankind."
(114:1-6)

> Note: the expression I seek refuge in the Lord[...] (Arabic: أَعُوذُ بِرَبِّ) occurs nowhere else in the Qur'an.

This, then, completes our general presentation of the Qur'an Set.

While sūrah has come to mean a chapter of the Qur'an by dint of usage, its meaning is broader than that, as any good dictionary will confirm, and indicates interlocking segments or layers such as go to make up a single standing structure (such as a wall).

With both that thought and the features which result from segmentation in mind, we conclude the main portion of this Solution to the mysterious letters of the Qur'an with the following:

> If they say: "He has invented it," then say thou: "Then bring ten sūrahs the like thereof, invented; and call to whom you can, besides God, if you be truthful."
> (11:13)

Final evidence & conclusion

I do not intend here to speculate widely on the import of the values this Solution identifies.

I will, however, repeat my own view that the ten possible readings of 'the Qur'an' actuated by the segmentation which results from the intersection by nodes of the Qur'an Set — and as articulated by sūrah 73 — constitute ready-made blocks intended as night vigils for the spiritual fortification of believers and for preaching and warning.[1]

I also think that the Islamic tradition in the first two units of the ritual prayer, as practiced today, of reciting short sūrahs from the latter portions of the Qur'an after al fātiḥah is an unwitting re-enactment of this original function in vestigial form.

And while the main examination of this Solution is complete, I am pleased to present three final items of evidence. These both bring our analysis full circle and form its end point.

Final evidence

Our journey began with recognition both of the letters which comprise the mysterious letters as symbols and of the fact that those letters form a subset of the Arabic alphabet, and on what basis they do so.

This brings us to our first point: we first met the expression the Writ about which there is no doubt (Arabic: ٱلْكِتَٰبُ لَا رَيْبَ فِيهِ) at the outset of our journey through the Writ Set where it forms part of the axiom-statement which attaches to the first symbol in the alif lām / ال sector and establishes that value which attaches to all instances in the Writ Set:

> 1 alif lām mīm
> 2 That is the Writ about which there is no doubt[...]
> (2:1-2)

We met the Writ about which there is no doubt again at Segment 34 where it forms part of the unique expression at instance #18, the final symbol in the alif lām / ال sector:

> 1 alif lām mīm
> 2 The revelation of the Writ about which there is no doubt, from the Lord of All Creation.
> (32:1-2)

However, the expression the Writ about which there is no doubt occurs once more in the Qur'an. That verse reads:

1 I explore the subject of warning fully in my book The God Protocol.

> And this Qur'an is not such as could be invented by other than God; but it is a confirmation of what is before it, and an exposition of the Writ about which there is no doubt, from the Lord of All Creation.
> (10:37)

Strictly within the terms of the broader analysis here, in which 'this Qur'an' is what we term the Qur'an Set, we can say the following:

- That 'this Qur'an' is 'a confirmation of what is before it' since it comprises within itself the values of both the Writ Set and the Remembrance Set, both of which precede it in a linear reading of the text;
- That 'this Qur'an' is 'an exposition of the Writ about which there is no doubt', given that 'the Writ about which there is no doubt' is al fātiḥah (i.e. sūrah 1), and 'this Qur'an' develops its themes — which fact is confirmed further by the expression 'the Lord of All Creation' which itself features in al fātiḥah (at verse 1:2);
- That 'this Qur'an' was — at least in our view — used originally to expand upon al fātiḥah in those readings which we identify here by means of segmentation, and from which segments portions are still used many times each day, after recitation of al fātiḥah, in that ritual associated with the Islamic religion, in what we regard as an unwitting re-enactment of the original application in vestigial form.

However, there is a further, yet more comprehensive, and even definitive, sense in which 'this Qur'an' is 'an exposition of the Writ about which there is no doubt' (i.e. sūrah 1).

All letters which participate in the mysterious letters are present in the Qur'an Set: either through the "fusion" of those values which attach to them at qāf / ق, or through the presence of qāf / ق and nūn / ن within the set itself. By these means 'this Qur'an' comprises within itself everything which pertains to all fourteen letters which feature in the mysterious letters.

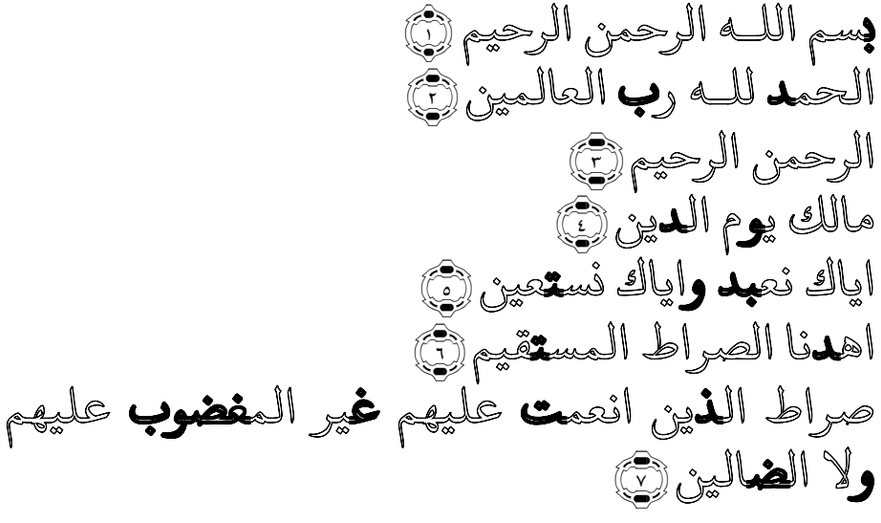
With this awareness in mind, let us consider further the sense in which 'this Qur'an' is 'an exposition of the Writ about which there is no doubt'.

Certainly, it is true that sūrahs 50-114 expand upon the import of 'the Writ about which there is no doubt' which is al fātiḥah (i.e. sūrah 1), and serve to expand upon that doctrine of which sūrah 1 forms the essence.

But what about in that sense in which we present 'this Qur'an' above: as an entity which comprises within it all letters which feature in the mysterious letters? In that sense is 'this Qur'an' an exposition of al fātiḥah? Is there a sense in which all letters which feature across the mysterious letters, and are comprised in toto within 'this Qur'an', are an exposition of — i.e. a widening and expansion upon — the contents of al fātiḥah itself?

We find that there is. And to see why requires only that we briefly consider al fātiḥah from the point of view of those letters which participate in the mysterious letters.

Sūrah 1 (al fātiḥah) is presented in Arabic below. We have used unadorned script to facilitate our point with all letters which participate in the mysterious letters in outline and those which do not in black.



Simply put: the letters which participate in the mysterious letters not only feature in al fātiḥah, they do so copiously.[2] And — importantly — no letter which features in the mysterious letters is absent from al fātiḥah.

But more than that: the number of letters which participate in the mysterious letters is, as we know, fourteen; meanwhile, the number of letters which feature in al fātiḥah and which do not participate in the mysterious letters is seven.

This means that the number of letters which participate in the mysterious letters is precisely twice the number of those which do not that feature in al fātiḥah. Thus, the motif of doubling and the dual which we have seen attach to the sequence of the mysterious

2 Certainly, most of the fourteen letters which participate in the mysterious letters are among those which occur most frequently in the Qur'anic text as a whole. Nevertheless, in al fātiḥah there is more than a 7:1 ratio between the incidence of those letters which participate in the mysterious letters and those which do not. While I am not among those who regard complex correspondences between abstruse numerical aspects of the Qur'anic text as principal proofs, I would be curious to know if there exists any similarly-sized portion of the Qur'an in which all letters which participate in the mysterious letters feature so densely, and how the proportion of those letters which do so at al fātiḥah compares with their average incidence across the broader text. However, even without that data, it is possible that a new hermeneutic is in the offing, one in which words and / or phrases can be assessed on the basis of their values apropos the mysterious letters. It is possible also that further investigations will provide the type of derivative data such as result from particular applications of gematria. Properly established and applied, such a field of study may open up degrees of access to the Qur'anic text the significance of which no one, myself included, can conceive of today.

letters in process of our analysis finds further expression in that sūrah which both serves to preface the entire Qur'an and is itself the value of the Writ Set.

We are now at our second point: one finds that the number of letters which comprise all instances in the sequence in the Writ Set totals 55 — the number of that sūrah which supplies the first implicit instance in the Qur'an Set.

Moreover, one finds that the number of letters which comprise all instances in the sequence in the Remembrance Set, when added to 55, results in 73 — the number of that sūrah which supplies the second implicit instance in the Qur'an Set.

These facts not only serve to provide further confirmation of our identification of these two implicit instances themselves, but also further confirm the correctness of regarding instance #24 as parenthetical to the sequence.

We are now at our final point: given that instance #24 is proven to be parenthetical to the sequence, the result is 29 instances of the mysterious letters — one less than the 30 we see on the page. But if one adds to that number the two implicit instances we identify in the Qur'an Set, the result is 31 instances.

This matches exactly the thirty-one times the most conspicuous and frequent refrain in the entire Qur'an rings out — and does so only within sūrah 55:

> Then which of the blessings of your Lord will you deny?[3]

With these facts in view, 'this Qur'an' is confirmed truly to be what verse 10:37 claims for it:

> And this Qur'an is not such as could be invented by other than God; but it is a confirmation of what is before it, and an exposition of the Writ about which there is no doubt, from the Lord of All Creation.
> (10:37)

Conclusion

Another man may be equal to the task of conveying the facts which comprise this analysis using means acceptable to those who reject anything which is not digestible in terms a distracted child can grasp. I, however, am not.

3 All occurrences are at 55:13, 55:16, 55:18, 55:21, 55:23, 55:25, 55:28, 55:30, 55:32, 55:34, 55:36, 55:38, 55:40, 55:42, 55:45, 55:47, 55:49, 55:51, 55:53, 55:55, 55:57, 55:59, 55:61, 55:63, 55:65, 55:67, 55:69, 55:71, 55:73, 55:75 and 55:77.

As I say in the Introduction: if a solution to the mysterious letters were susceptible to the type of facile summary people today expect every topic worth knowing to submit to, this enigma would have been resolved long ago. But it isn't. It is difficult. It has eluded men for so long precisely because it is difficult. And while I will consider any completed examples of how this Solution may be explained more simply than I have done, what follows is the best of which I am capable at this time, and that is all we have.

What I could do, I have done. I can do no more. Can I prove that every facet of this analysis bears the imprint of the intention of God at every point of interpretation I put upon it? No, I cannot.

What I can do is extend Ockham's razor: the simplest consistent and complete solution is likely the correct one.

The Traditionalist has many suggestions for the meaning of the mysterious letters. None is by any means complete, and the question of consistency does not even arise. The reader may care to peruse the summary of his efforts which follows in the addenda section.

Rashad Khalifa's application of the number nineteen to the corpus of the Qur'an is, in my view, unjustified.[4] Whether or not I am correct in that view, the fact is that it does not allow him to complete his numerical exposition of the mysterious letters without adapting one of the instances to fit his model, and so his model is neither consistent with the contents of the Qur'an and nor is it complete.

While the fact may bring one who has mastered its contents a wry smile, the analysis presented here is the simplest consistent and complete solution to the mysterious letters.[5]

It is, therefore, (at least, according to our extension of Ockham's razor), likely to be correct.

And I do not claim this Solution to be correct in the sense that a perfect syllogism is correct; I claim it to be correct beyond a reasonable doubt. The reader who has followed this analysis to its conclusion, and understood the evidence it presents, must form an assessment of that claim for himself.

4 One of my notes in The Qur'an: A Complete Revelation to the verse from which Rashad Khalifa derives a universal application of the number nineteen to the contents of the Qur'an reads: This expression, which I render outside the present instance the companions of the Fire (Arabic: aṣḥāb al nār), occurs a total of 20 times (2:39, 2:81, 2:217, 2:257, 2:275, 3:116, 5:29, 7:36, 7:44, 7:47, 7:50, 10:27, 13:5, 39:8, 40:6, 40:43, 58:17, 59:20, 64:10, 74:31) and in all cases outside the one under discussion at 74:31 unquestionably references those who are to suffer in Hell (see also note to 74:30 above). In the absence of explicit evidence to the contrary, a reasonable man must assume that what is meant in each of the remaining 19 instances is what is meant here also. However, we do have explicit evidence in the words 'Over it are nineteen'. I take this as recognition of the distinction between the meaning of aṣḥāb al nār in those cases and its meaning here; thus, the fact that there are nineteen cases different to the present one is allowed for by the text. This provides also a reasonable answer to what is referenced by the number nineteen here (which itself has served as the catalyst for so much generative and speculative output of a mathematical nature beginning with Rashad Khalifa), namely: all other cases of aṣḥāb al nār. Thus understood, the number nineteen found at 74:30 merely indicates the number of the remaining cases aṣḥāb al nār is found meaning something other than what it means here, which fact also provides a parity bit supportive of the Qur'an's claim to be complete and preserved.

5 My inability to present it more simply is both acknowledged and regrettable, while the bases upon which it can be "falsified" are supplied.

Now that we have completed our analysis, I will draw together a summary of some of the things which this Solution — taken to be correct beyond a reasonable doubt — implies.

Firstly, it puts the Traditionalist Muslim's claim that the means by which the Qur'an is to be understood is the application to it of that literature called the ḥadīṯh under new pressure. His insistence upon this premise has not yielded him any notable progress on the subject of al ḥurūf al muqaṭṭaʿāt in more than a millennium whereas it is now solved beyond a reasonable doubt by someone who rejects his entire hermeneutic process as specious. For a Traditionalist Muslim to accept this Solution requires him also to acknowledge that he now knows something which (according to him) Muḥammad himself did not know.

Both points have myriad implications for the Traditionalist-Muslim worldview, and I leave people who labour within that worldview to work out what those implications are.

Secondly, a stock put-down on the part of the Traditionalist Muslim to non-Arabs who challenge his assumptions and assertions is the claim that one cannot understand the Qur'an unless he is a native speaker of Arabic.[6] The question now arises: why is it that those who cite their command of Arabic as a defining qualification have proven incapable of solving the problem of al ḥurūf al muqaṭṭaʿāt?

And this question acquires a particular resonance when one considers the Qur'an's mention of Arabic in the following places:

> 1 ḥā mīm
> 2 A revelation from the Almighty, the Merciful,
> 3 A Writ the proofs whereof are set out and detailed, an Arabic recitation for people who know,
> 4 As a bearer of glad tidings and a warner; but most of them turn away, so they hear not.
> (41:1-4)

6 There are other stock put-downs for critics of his dogma who speak Arabic natively, of course, the details of which need not detain us. However, the reality is that no one today is a native speaker of the Arabic of the Qur'an; Arabic speakers natively speak dialects which bear varying degrees of resemblance to Classical Arabic, and then learn Modern Standard Arabic (a form of Arabic related to, but less exacting grammatically than, Classical Arabic) to some degree of proficiency, the result of which operates as a lingua franca between educated Arabs. While the parallel is not exact, the function of MSA is generally comparable to how Latin operated in Christian Europe.

If those who claim monopoly rights over the Qur'an are exclusively equipped with the language skills required to understand it, why is it that they have failed for over a millennium to do what a native speaker of English has done without either their oversight or their method? One is tempted to conclude that their command of the 'Arabic recitation' is deficient, or that they are not 'people who know', or that they are unable to 'use reason' — or some combination of all three.[7] Whatever the precise case, such men are precluded from claiming mastery of their subject on any sort of exclusive basis. And given the situation as it now stands, it would be more appropriate for them to modify their claims — at least until they can develop a solution to al ḥurūf al muqaṭṭaʿāt superior to that presented here.

For my part, I am not antagonistic to Islamic civilisation. I have great appreciation for its architecture, for its historical achievements in many fields, and for the manners of its finer people. I support its women whose respect for themselves extends to dressing in accordance with their value as women, rather than succumbing to the blandishments of decadent and insidious influences.

I am simply opposed to dogma dressed up as decency — especially when it can maintain its position only by means of propaganda, name-calling, shaming language, threats and violence. I grew up in the West; we have those features there in abundance.

My principal interest is not now, and never has been, to convince the generality of cultural Muslims of anything.[8] My sole focus remains what it was when I began this project: to provide proof to the ruling elite of this time equal to the task of executing the God protocol against them — after which point the judgments of God may become binding.

The details pursuant to that project are set out in my book The God Protocol, which may be accessed in full and for free at quranite.com in pdf and audio formats.

Given that this Solution to the mysterious letters, preserved in the scripture God imparted to Prophet Muḥammad and intended as a warning to all mankind, is correct beyond a reasonable doubt, the analysis above is an authentication of the contents of the Qur'an and, therefore, of that protocol which the Qur'an contains — which protocol I invoke against the ruling elites of today in their capacity as the spiritual and political heirs of Pharaoh and his ilk.

7 Or even that 'Arabic' simply does not mean in the Qur'an what Arabs say it does.

8 Those Muslims of today possessed of the same fervour and talent for classification, systematisation, and legal extrapolation which characterised so many of the past, will find much to occupy them in both portions of this book.

Summary of previous theories

After a brief list of the characteristics of al ḥurūf al muqaṭṭaʿāt, what follows summarises the attempts by Muslims of various stripes to make sense of these letters in the Qur'an.

This text is taken wholesale — complete with most typographical errors found in the original — from the Wikipedia entry on this subject as of December 2015. I regret that all numbered references in this section were no longer available at the time of publication.

- مقطعات or al ḥurūf al muqaṭṭaʿāt are unique letter combinations that appear in the beginning of 29 suras (chapters) of the Qur'an.
- Of the 28 letters of the Arabic alphabet, exactly one half appear as muqatta'at, either singly or in combinations of two, three, four or five letters. The fourteen letters are alif, ḥa, ra, sin, ṣad, ṭa, ʿain, qaf, kaf, lam, mim, nun, ha, ya.
- Certain co-occurrence restrictions are observable in these letters; for instance, alif is invariably followed by lam. The substantial majority of the combinations begin either alif lam or ha mim.
- In all but 3 of the 29 cases, these letters are almost immediately followed by mention of the Qur'anic revelation itself (the exceptions are suras 29, 30, and 68); and some argue that even these three cases should be included, since mention of the revelation is made later on in the sura. More specifically, one may note that in 8 cases the following verse begins "These are the signs...", and in another 5 it begins "The successive revelation..."; another 3 begin "By the Qur'an...", and another 2 "By the Book..."
- The suras that contain these letters are: sura 2, sura 3, sura 7, sura 10, sura 11, sura 12, sura 13, sura 14, sura 15, sura 19,sura 20, sura 26, sura 27, sura 28, sura 29, sura 30, sura 31, sura 32, sura 36, sura 38, sura 40, sura 41, sura 42, sura 43,sura 44, sura 45, sura 46, sura 50, sura 68.
- lam and mim are conjoined and both are written with prolongation sign/mark. One letter is written in two styles. [Refer 19:01 and 20:01] Letter 20:01 is used only in the beginning and middle of a word and that in 19:01 is not used as such. الم is also the first ayah of Sura 3, 29, 30, 31 and 32 [total 6].
- Tomes have been written over the centuries on the possible meanings and probable significance of these 'mystical letters' as they are sometimes called. Opinions have been numerous but a consensus elusive. There is no reliable report of Muhammad having used such expressions in his ordinary speech, or his having shed light on its usage in the Qur'an. And, more importantly, none of his Companions seemed to have asked him about it. This apparent lack of inquisitiveness is cited as proof that such abbreviations were well known to the Arabs of the time and were in vogue long before the advent of Islam.
- One opinion is that these letters stand for words or phrases related to God and His Attributes. The Companions Ibn Abbas and Ibn Mas'ud are said to have favored this view, as cited by Abu Hayyan Al Gharnati in his Bahr Al Muhit. As plausible as it may sound, this opinion does not find favor among other classical commentators, because the possible combinations of letters are virtually infinite and the Attributes they represent seem to be chosen arbitrarily. For example, the translator Maulana Muhammad Ali translates these letters in his editions of the Holy Qur'an as follows:
- Alif (ا): an abbreviation for Ana (أنا, I am)Ḥā (ح): an abbreviation for Al-Ḥamīd (الحميد, the Praised),Rā (ر): an abbreviation for the Seeing (راءي / رأى / رؤيا / يرى بصير /)Sīn (س): as either an abbreviation for Man or an abbreviation for As-Samī' (السميع, the Hearing), Ṣād (ص): an abbreviation for As-Ṣādiq (الصادق, the Truthful), Ṭā (ط): as either an abbreviation for the Benignant or an interjection equivalent to O (in dialect),ʿ*Ayn* (ع): an abbreviation for Al-'Alīm (العليم, the Knowing),Qāf (ق): an abbreviation for Al-Qādir (القادر, the Almighty),Kāf (ك): an abbreviation for Al-Kāfi (كافي, the Sufficient), Lām (ل): an abbreviation for Allāh (الله, using the second letter), Mīm (م): as either an abbreviation for Al-'Alīm (العليم, the Knowing, using the ending letter) or for Al-Majīd (المجيد, the Glorious), Nūn (ن): a word meaning Inkstand, Hā (ه): as either an abbreviation for Al-Hādīy (الهادي, the Guide) or an abbreviation for Man (in dialect), andYā (ي): an interjection equivalent to O.
- Fakhr al-Din al-Razi, a classical commentator of the Qur'an, has noted some twenty opinions regarding these letters, and mentions multiple opinions that these letters present the names of the Surahs as appointed by God. In addition, he mentions that Arabs would name things after such letters (for example, 'eye' as 'ع', clouds as 'غ', and whale as 'ن').
- Amin Ahsan Islahi, a renowned exegete of the Qur'an, has mentioned that since Arabs once used such letters in their poetry, it was only appropriate for the Qur'an to use that same style. He agrees with Razi and mentions that since these letters are names for Surahs, they are proper nouns. As such, they do not necessarily refer to other matters. At the same time, he cites research from Hamiduddin Farahi, a Quranic scholar from the Indian subcontinent, on how these letters must be appropriately chosen according to the content and theme of the surahs. Farahi links these letters back to the Abjad-ordered Arabic Alphabet, and Hebrew Alphabet, as well as Classical Akkadian philology, in the sense that all of these make use of alphanumerical correspondence, as in Greek and Latin (use of the letter "V" for "5", etc.). He also suggests that letters not only represented phonetic sounds but also had symbolic meanings, and Qur'an perhaps uses the same meanings when choosing the letters for surahs. For instance, in support of his opinion, he presents the letter Nun (ن), which symbolizes fish and Surah Nun mentions Prophet Jonah as 'companion of the fish'. Similarly, the letter Ta or Tuay (ط) represents a serpent and all the Surahs that begin with this letter mention the story of Prophet Moses and serpents.[3]
- The Hebrew Theory[4] refers to imports from the Torah. The two-letter group transliterated as A-L in Hebrew reading would be El (pronounced like "ale"). This was used to avoid saying out loud the four letters Y-H-W-H (see Masoretic Text), the proper name of God. The Hebrew origin of AL is more likely than an Aramaic origin "EL" as a part word for God in Aramaic. Elijah is an affirmation of faith "My God is Yah" The suffix –M for a Hebrew speaker could be Malchut "kingdom",Masoretic, the definitive version of the Tanakh, milameaning "word".

The suffix –R would be ruach – "spirit". Ta would logically be "Torah", though ta-ha could be the Hebrew letters ת֫ח (techiyat hameitim) stand for "resurrection of the dead". Sad would be shebichtav, "written". Ha is likely to be the prestigious word hashem, which combines another Jewish word for God wit the name of Mohammed's tribe.

- Abbreviations from Aramaic or Greek are also possible. Luxenberg [5] argues that 20% of the Quran is better read in Aramaic. The letters Ta-Ha could mean "marvel" or "be amazed!" in Aramaic. The single letter Taf could be "Theodotion", a six-volume bible, and Ha could be "hallelujah".[6] The kaf-ha-ya-ayn-sad in Maryam is more likely to be be from Greek, and start with kyrios ("Lord").
- In 1973, it was proposed that the letters are the remnants of abbreviations for the Bismillah.[7] In 1996, Keith Massey proposed new evidence for an older theory that the "Mystery Letters" were the initials or monograms of the scribes who originally transcribed the suras .[8] As evidence for this, he demonstrated that the letters themselves occur in a specific order, suggesting a hierarchy of importance. A recent PhD thesis by Ahsan ur Rehman entitled "Morpho Phonemic Patterns in the Prefixed Chapters of the Qur'an: A Stylistic Approach" claims that there are phonological, syntactic and semantic links between the prefixed letters and the text of the chapters: accepted as twelfth theory of Muqatta'at.The article: A stylistic study of the consonant Ṣād (ص) in three Qur'anic chapters:Ṣād (38), Maryam (19) and Al A'rāf (7) provides substantial linguistic evidence to the claim made in the doctoral thesis. His Ms thesis is also on the same topic that covers six ALM chapters of the Qur'an "Morpho Phonemic templates in the Prefixed Chapters of the Qur'an", aik baab ka urdu iqtabass
- In 1974, an Egyptian biochemist named Rashad Khalifa claimed to have discovered a mathematical code in the Qur'an based on these initials and the number 19,[9] which is mentioned in Sura 74:30[10] of the Qur'an. According to his claims, these initials, which prefix 29 chapters of the Qur'an, occur throughout their respective chapters in multiples of nineteen. He has noted other mathematical phenomena throughout the Qur'an, all related to what he describes as the "mathematical miracle of the Qur'an." Some of his findings relating to Sura (Chapters) with initials (Muqatta'ats) are: 1. Between the first initialed sura (Sura 2) and the last initialed sura (Sura 68) there are 38 = 19 x 2 un-initialed suras.[11] 2. Between the first and last initialed sura there are 19 sets of alternating "initialed" and "uninitialed" suras.[11] This view isn't however widely accepted due to the controversy around Rashad Khalifa's claim of messengership and the notion that the Qur'an in its current written form should be tweaked in certain places in order to come to this conclusion. For example, according to Rashad Khalifa, the initial Muqatta'at Nun (ن) in Sura 68 should be written as 'Nun Waw Nun' (نۏن)

Further research turned up another list of theories. It comes from the studying-islam.org website. While it rehearses some of the views seen above, it adds much new material.

As above, all opinions, expressions and (mis-)use of the English language in the section which follows originate with the source.

- A large number of scholarly books have been written over the centuries on the possible meanings and probable significance of these disjointed letters the muqatta'at. Opinions have been numerous but without a final conclusion. There is no reliable report of Hazrat Muhammad SWA having used such expressions in his ordinary speech, or his having thrown light on its usage in the Qur'an. And, more importantly, none of his Companions seemed to have asked him about it. This apparent lack of inquisitiveness is cited as proof that such abbreviations were well known to the Arabs of the time and were in vogue long before the advent of Islam. However the use of such letters faded away from Arabic literature with the passage of time.
- These letters- the muqatta'at fall into the category of 'mutashabihat' and what Qur'an says about 'mutashabihat in surah Aal-e-Imran verse 5-7: " Nothing in the earth or the heavens is hidden from Allah, It is He Who shapes you in the wombs of your mothers as He wills. There is no deity but He, the All-Mighty, the All-Wise. It is He who sent down this Book for you. There are two kinds of verses in this Book: muhkamat': they are the essence of the Book, and others, 'mutashabihat'. Those who are perverse of heart, always go after the 'mutashabihat' in pursuit of mischief and try to interpret them arbitrarily, whereas, in fact none save Allah knows their real meaning. In contrast to them, those who possess sound knowledge, say, :We believe in them because all of them are from our Lord". And the fact is that only the people of insight can learn lessons from such things".[1]
- There is not a single saheeh(authentic) hadith that could provide the meanings, details or explanations of these disjointed letters- the muqatta'at. "Allah knows the best" could only be the most proper refrence regarding these letters. However there is a saheeh hadith in which Allah's Rasool SWA says ' I don't say that alif, laam, meem ia single word but alif is a letter, laam is a letter and meem is aletter, and there is a 'naikee' (good-deed) to recite one letter and each naikee (good-deed) is rewarded ten times'.[2
- Allāh states clearly in the text that the Qur'ān is, 'A Book whereof the Verses are explained in detail – a Qur'ān in Arabic for people who know.' (Sūrat al-Fuilat /ha meem sejda – 41:3). The Qur'ān is referred to as a 'clear proof' (6:157) 'a manifest light' (4:174; 42:52) and it has been 'fully explained to mankind' (17:89; 18:54; 39:27) readers are also encouraged to 'think deeply' (47:24) about the text. In this particular verse, the Arabic verb 'تدبر' is used: it means 'to consider, reflect or meditate upon'. In other words, although Allāh has stated categorically that the Qur'ān is a comprehensively revealed, unambiguous text, readers are encouraged to reflect on it. Hence, scholars have put forward a number of views regarding the significance of the muqatta'at, their co-occurrence and placement.

[3] Traditional scholars have their opinions to account for their(muqatta'at) meaning as follows:[4]

Opinion-1:

- These letters contain the names of Allah SWT. Contradicting this opinion, scholars say that as per saheeh hadith there are 99 names of Allah SWT and those names have no relevance with these letters.
- Hazrat Ibn Abbas RA has said that in these muqatta'at the Ism-e-Azam is hidden and 'alif laam meem' is an Ism-e-Azam. (Tafseer Ibn Kathir)

Opinion-2:

- These letters when joined together with different combinations they emerge as Allah's name. For example when alif, laam,meem and ha, meem are joined with noon, it makes Al-Rahman. It makes sense in this case but no second name can be made with any other set of combinations.

Opinion-3:

- These are the name of Rasool Allah SWA, while referring to 'Ta-ha' and 'ya-seen'. However this can also not be taken as very correct, because Rasool Allah SWA himself told his names as Muhammad, Ahmad, Mahi and Hashir (Saheeh Bukhari).

Opinion-4:

- These letters represent different names of Qur'an. Whereas Qur'an has itself named as Al-kitab, Kitab-e-Mubeen, Qur'an, Qur'an majeed, Qur'an kareem, Qur'an azeem, Firqan, Al-zikr, Al-hadith and Ahsanul hadith.

Opinion-5:

- These letters are the names of different surahs. To some extent it appears to be correct as 'Suad', Quaf, Taha, Yaseen are also the names of surahs. Sura 'Al-Qalam' is also called surah 'noon'.
- Abdul Rehman bin Zaid bin Aslam is also of this opinion. Allama Abul Qasim Mehmood bin Umar Zamhashiri in his tafseer has written that a number of scholars are also in agreement with this opinion. (Tafseer Ibn Kathir)

Opinion-6:

- These letters refer to entire Islamic system. For example, 'alif' stands for Allah, 'laam' stands for Jibraeel (Gabriel) and 'meem' stands for Muhammad SWA. But this logic does not seem to be applicable to other letters.

Opinion-7:

- These letters are challenges to infidels that you people also start your writings and literature with such letters but look and realize the difference between your literature and Qur'an and that you and all your companions together can not present even a single sura like in Qur'an. Imam Bezavi stands with this opinion. But this opinion does not seem to be logical because when the meanings of these letters are not clear then how these letters could be termed as challenge.

Opinion-8:

- By counting and summing up the numerical values, through the science of numerology, of these letters the time for the doomsday and the age of the humanity can be determined. This opinion also does not hold ground, as at the first instance to have faith on numerology is against shariah, and secondly the humans can never, whatsoever, determine the time the day of judgment will occur. Even Rasool Allah SWA was told about the timings of this day by Allah SWT.

Opinion-9:

- These letters stand for words or phrases related to Allah and His attributes and only the prophet Hazrat Muhammad SWA knows their meanings and details. It means that these letters depict the private conversations between Allah SWT and Hazrat Muhammad SWA. For this opinion it can be said that 'Allah knows the best'.

Opinion-10:

- These letters are based upon hard facts and are the secrets of Allah SWT. It is not possible for the mankind to explore their realities and factualness. In these such attributes of Allah SWT are hidden which are beyond human perceptions.

Opinion-11:

- These letters were used to attract the attention of the prophet and later his audience. (Marhoom Dr. Israr Ahmad of Tanzeem-e-Islami was of this view.)

Opinion-12:

- Imam Fakhar uddin Al Razi (1149 – 1209) opined that Arabs used to name things after such letters (for example, 'money' as 'ع', clouds as 'ع', and fish as 'ن'.)[5]

Opinion -13:

- These letters are the abbreviations of the names of 'katib-e-wahi' (the companions of Rasool Allah SWA to whom he SWA used to dictates the 'wahi' – the Qur'anic revelations.
- This opinion is also presumptuous and have no authentic basis. There were not less than 42 'katib-e-wahi' whereas there are only 14 different muqatta'at. Moreover the Qur'an was dictated by the prophet and the 'katibs' wrote under his direct supervision of Hazrat Muhammad SWA and they had no more connection with the text nor there was any reason to permanently relate the text with their names.

Modern Research

- One suggestion offered by an Qur'anic scholar Dr. Hashim Amir Ali (1903 – 1987) From Hyderabad India deserves consideration. According to him: "A simple explanation, but one which has not been offered by a single commentator, is that each and every one of these 29 openings, without exception, are vocatives or forms of address to the Prophet similar to "Ta Ha!" (S. 20), "Ya –Sin!" (S. 36), "O thou, who is ordained!" (S. 73) or "O thou, on whom has fallen the mantle!" (S. 74): their general sense can be conveyed by replacing them with "O Muhammad!'' The following facts go to prove or support the above thesis:
- (a) Every one of these 9 instances occur in the beginnings of the Surahs and have, in fact, been referred to in early commentaries as al-Fawatih, or 'openings' of the Surahs. It is therefore, logical to regard them as forms of address. This assumption is confirmed by the fact that the text which follows the 'Fawatih' in each of the 29 cases, without exception, is couched in the second person, singular.

- (b) Only with one or two exceptions the immediately following words consist of one or more of the following four reassuring statements so often addressed to the Prophet in the Qur'an:
- i. That the Qur'anic message is Truth manifest
- ii. That the Addressee is ordained by the Divine and not by any other agency;
- iii. That the righteous will accept the Message: the Addressee must not consider his mission in vain and
- iv. That failure to convince the hard-hearted must not daunt the Addressee.
- (c) The fact that these letter-openings do not affect the meaning of the text that follows supports the thesis that they are mere vocatives.
- (a) The thesis is also supported by the fact that, by far the majority of the Surahs beginning with such openings, 25 out of 29, were revealed during the period when ostracized by people, the Prophet was sorely in need of reassurance.
- This solution does not offer the actual words or meanings which these letters in each case represent. But that is of secondary or even negligible importance. Vocation, particles, forms of address, terms of esteem or appreciation, sobriquets, aliases all these need have no specific meaning attached to them. Since they do not affect the sense of the message that follows. It is enough to know that they are only forms of address to Muhammad varying according to the circumstances and contents of the message. Perhaps Muhammad himself understood the words which the letters in each case represented but was too modest to repeat them to the scribes; perhaps he merely felt their appreciative import but was too sincere to replace the feeling with words. In any case this solution does away with the innumerable far-fetched conjectures each of which has been discountenanced by the exponents of others and have together contradicted the claim of the Qur'an that its contents are clear and explicit to all who have approach to it.(The message of Quran -1974-by Dr Hasim Amir Ali).
- In 1974, an Egyptian biochemist named Rashad Khalifa claimed to have discovered a mathematical code in the Qur'an based on these initials and the number 19, which is mentioned in Sura 74:30 ("the hell fire 'saqar' is guarded by 19 angels") of the Quran. According to his claims, these initials, which prefix 29 chapters of the Qur'an, occur throughout their respective chapters in multiples of nineteen. He has noted other mathematical phenomena throughout the Quran, all related to what he describes as the "mathematical miracle of the Qur'an."
- Amin Ahsan Islahi (1904-1997), a renowned exegete of the Quran, has mentioned that since Arabs once used such letters in their poetry, it was only appropriate for Quran to use that same style. He agrees with Razi and mentions that since these letters are names for Surahs, they are proper nouns. As such, they do not necessarily refer to other matters. At the same time, he cites research from Hamiduddin Farahi (1863-1930), a Quranic scholar from the Indian subcontinent, on how these letters must be appropriately chosen according to the content and theme of the surahs. Farahi links these letters back to Hebrew alphabet and suggests that those letters not only represented phonetic sounds but also had symbolic meanings, and Quran perhaps uses the same meanings when choosing the letters for surahs. For instance, in support of his opinion, he presents the letter Nun (ن), which symbolizes fish and Surah Nun mentions Prophet Younus 'companion of the fish'. Similarly, the letter Ta or Tuay (ط) represents a serpent and all the Surahs that begin with this letter mention the story of Prophet Musa and the serpents.[6]
- Western scholars have only occasionally attempted to explain them. In 1996, Keith Massey[7] proposed new evidence for an older theory that the muqatta'at the "Mystery Letters" were the initials or monograms of the scribes who originally transcribed the suras . As evidence for this, he demonstrated that these letters themselves occur in a specific order, suggesting a hierarchy of importance. This idea has not yet gained wide acceptance. Other explanations have similarly failed to satisfactorily explain these letters.[8]
- Ibn Kathir in his 'tafseer' while commenting upon these muqatta'at says: 'If Hazrat Muhammad SWA has described some meanings to these letters, then it is final and unquestionable. If Rasool Allah SWA has not explained any meanings to these letters then we should also refrain in giving any meanings to these letters and will have to believe that these are the letters from Allah SWT.
- For us as mulims and true believers it should be our firm belief that these letters the muqatta'at are revealed from Allah SWT, further neither these letters are extraneously nor carelessly introduced in Qur'an, but are based upon absolute realities. It should be particularly noted that it is neither obligatory for us to know the meanings and details of these letters nor it is a matter of shariah.
